Palace Theatre Finally Yields to Film Policy

The Palace theatre on Broadway, goal of all vaudeville actors everywhere for a generation and still a magnate for those who remember it when it was the top house for all performers, is about to give up the struggle against red ink and will go entirely to films, it is reported.

For two weeks, at least, beginning September 27, it will run a single feature policy with "Top Hat," after that reverting perhaps to double features. The attendance at the house under the new policy will decide the future, however.

Some comfort is to be left stage performers, however. Boris Morros will reinstate stage shows at the Paramount after a summer of all-film policy on October 4. And the Center, tentatively scheduled to open early next month with "The Last Days of Pompeii," probably will have a stage show.

All five of Brooklyn's downtown theatres will be operating on an all-film policy starting this week when the Fox, last of the quintet, will drop vaudeville for dual features.

Si Fabian, who operates, and Paramount and Strand in Brooklyn, as well, has decided to discontinue stage entertainment because Loew's Metropolitan and RKO's Albee are exhibiting twin bills at lower admissions. The Paramount will continue single feature programs while the Strand's dual schedule will not be disturbed.

Selznick Acquires Joyce Agency Share

Myron Selznick has acquired the entire control of the Myron Selznick-Frank Joyce, Ltd., agency in Hollywood by purchasing the fifty per cent interest held by the Frank Joyce estate from Mrs. Dora Joyce, Mr. Joyce's widow. Selznick also acquired full control of the Frank Joyce, Ltd., agency which heretofore had been the sole property of the deceased.

The combined concerns hereafter will be known as Myron Selznick, Inc., and it is said that Mrs. Joyce will receive $250,000 for the properties.

Center Theatre Reopens Early in October

With a policy of films of an "epic" and "spectacular" type, the Center theatre, sister house of the RKO Music Hall, will reopen early in October, it was announced Wednesday. For the past year it has been operated as a legitimate playhouse. John Kenneth Hyatt, associated with the Rockefeller Center, is the new managing director of the theatre.

Plans Ethiopian Feature

Paramount has closed a deal in Hollywood with T. Mechsler for six reels on the Ethiopian war situation. The reels, photographed by Mr. Mechsler, will be rushed into a feature and immediately distributed. Gayne Whitman will do the narration, from a script being written by Garrett Weston.

Resigns Tokyo Post

Siegfried S. Lindstrom has resigned as managing director of RKO Radio Pictures, Ltd., in Tokyo. No successor has been named as yet.

classic, however, was used some 16 years ago:

"I demand to see the manager at once!" She was tall, dignified and a newspaper reporter would have called her a beauty. They usually do.

The urbane, very urbane Mr. Rivington M. Bisland, home manager of the Rivoli theatre on Broadway above Longacre Square in New York, came forth into his cream and ivory waiting room forthwith, bowing profoundly—"Rivoli service, Madame."

"I have been insulted in your theatre—two men across the aisle kept making motions at me through the whole performance."

Mr. Bisland, in true de luxe management fashion, called a page boy who called an usher who called the head usher who called the assistant manager who called the house detective, and the culprits were brought to the manager's office with a jerk of their collars.

The suspected pair affected on the spot an extremely dignified poise and radiated that solemnly abstracted air that flows in the wake of the great scientific expert.

"What do you mean," etc., demanded Manager Bisland, "waving at this lady," etc.

The suspects were offended, grievously so.

"Purely a scientific matter," they explained. "You see, those Prizma color pictures—we were trying to find a separation of the colors on the screen by looking at them through the slits between our fingers, moving the hand up and down at the rate of 16 vibrations per second and they should catch the alternate images—you see—a—an analysis of light. That's it, an analysis of light."

"Why, pardon us, professors," apologized Manager Bisland, bowing profoundly. He also turned to the lady complainant.

"Purely a scientific matter, madame, purely a scientific matter."

"Purely," she replied and swept out.

George Schaefer, today Paramount's vice-president in charge of its distribution throughout the world, blushed like a June bride one day in February, 1919, when he was summoned to the New York home office of World Film and there was told that he had won a green gold watch (Ingersoll) for the performance of his New York exchange, which he managed, in securing the greatest number of bookings on "America's Answer," one of the official United States World War pictures.

Mr. Schaefer's exchange grossed 60 per cent of the possible local business. Today a 60 per center would be fired on the spot and asked how come later.

ASIDES AND INTERLUDES

The motion picture "vampire" and the screen's first "recluse" was born just 20 years ago, in the person of Theda Bara, when she signed a contract submitted to her by William Fox, who insisted upon the following stipulations:

That she would not appear any place in public unless heavily veiled; would not ride in a street car, in the subway or on the elevated, or go shopping unless heavily veiled.

Nor could Theda go to her costumer unless her features were entirely covered; or show her physical features to the public, but could only show them through the medium of Fox pictures on the screen, or by photographs supplied by William Fox.

Too, she was prohibited, for a period of three years, from taking her daily constitutional by the light of day. She had to do that at night, and then had to be veiled.

One of the first moves ever made publicly to raise the standards of motion picture advertising to secure the confidence and goodwill of the public, was Martin Quigley's shot at the 1915-16 practice of some exhibitors—("probably working under instruction of the president of a big film company")—who used displays that read something like this:

Billie Ritchie in a better motion picture than a

FIRST RUN CHAPLIN

It is a long and rocky road from those days to the New York desk of Joseph Jefferson McCarthy, in the Advertising Advisory Council, where a staff of experts inspect for objectionalities motion picture advertisements that are voluntarily submitted by the industry.

"In days of old, when knights were bold"—January, 1917, to be exact—a new picture producing plan was started by Thomas Alva Edison, Inc., in the form of Conquest Pictures, whose opening announcement indicated that they would confine their dramatic efforts merely to "the mountains, the sea, the plains and the forests." And, they added, "No anemic men and neurasthenic women will be found among the characters appearing in them."

A decade and a half ago, when Douglas Fairbanks was more contained of vim, vigor and vitality, he hit upon the idea of making his extra and supporting players chase him around the lot and to keep pace with him through a series of neck-breaking athletic feats. As an incentive Doug offered prizes of $5, $3 and $2.

It was during the filming of his "Pet of Paragonia" that Fairbanks vaulted a chandelier and chirped: "I am going to be doing this kind of stunts until I get too old. The film theatre patrons can't be neglected at any cost."

Many a distribution pioneer will remember with a chuckle the early-day "chisel" by which shootin' gallery operators sought to get motion pictures for showing without paying any rentals. "Send me some samples of your films, and I will let you know by return mail if I can use same," they would write to the exchanges, staggering their letters to various companies in the hope they would get a continuous supply.

Announcement, March 17, 1917: "The Vitagraph studios in England have been closed down until the war ends."

The announcement was made after 50 prints of Max Linder's "Max Comes Home" (Essanay) went down to the deep when the SS. Laconia was torpedoed by a German U-boat off the English coast.

Films were not "released" in those days; they were "published."

William Farnum's 1919 silent-picture contract with William Fox pickerized Connie Bennett's $15,000-a-week agreement, 10 years later, with Pathe.

Farnum got $20,526.33 for each of 38 weeks a year. This amounted to $3,420 a day, $1,140 an hour, or $190 a minute, which is 31 2/3 cents a second.

Besides, eggs and butter cost less then.

Unique was the situation created in theatres by the severe influenza epidemic of 1918, when city authorities in those places where theatres were not closed entirely, ordered exhibitors to use only alternating rows. They concluded that they would eliminate the danger of contraction in theatres if patrons were separated by an empty row. But, they did not realize that little of the contagious potentialities were avoided because patrons in the usable rows sat side by side.

There was a more serious side, however: some 10,000 theatres having been closed for from one week to two months, at a cost of $40,000,000 in admissions. In California, 60 per cent of production ceased, while in the East filming was stopped completely.

The New DeVry Theatre Sound Projector with Silent Chain Drive — Streamlined!

MARTIN QUIGLEY:

Congratulations to you and MOTION PICTURE HERALD on your twenty years of service to this industry.

Permit us also to point with pride to 22 years of service of Herman A. DeVry in making motion picture equipment for the American public. In fact two years before you started working for the motion picture industry, DeVry was on the job with a motion picture projector which served many of the smaller theatres, especially in foreign lands.

These 22 years of scientific manufacturing have brought a sureness of touch, a precision of method, and an engineering insight that have made the name of DeVry synonymous with simplification, long life, and workability.

Nowhere is DeVry originality best shown than in the New DeVry Theatre Sound Projector with Silent Chain Drive—and streamlined!

If it were not better, we wouldn't make it. Don't let the low price deceive you—superior engineering, and the cutting out of extra parts and patches makes for its great economy in production and sales.

CENSORS CAN'T KNIT AT PREVIEWS NOW

Women motion picture censors must not take their knitting when they are passing on pictures in Portland, Ore., and furthermore, they must be on the job on time.

This was the ultimatum of Robert M. Mount, chairman of the board, who said that Hollywood producers are beginning to "slip" and in the future all pictures must be watched more closely.

Judell to Make Own Melodrama Next Year

"Bread and butter melodramas," that's what the exhibitor needs, said Ben Judell, exchange manager who operates the B. N. Judell, Inc., exchanges in Chicago, Indianapolis and St. Louis, in announcing he will start a production company of his own and make not less than 18 "bread and butter melodramas" for the 1935-36 season.

Mr. Judell, who had just returned from Chicago from a nine weeks stay in Hollywood, has made definite plans for his producing venture and will leave for the Coast shortly after the first of the year to start production.

"We cannot build a stable business upon the past performances of the independent producers," he said. "For that reason I am going to produce my own pictures and sell them, as well as those of other independents, as I have been doing for the past ten years."

It is also probable that Mr. Judell will make a serial with his features.

Financial arrangements for the productions are reported completed, with production to start next summer.

Kansas City Starts New Film Broadcast

A new radio program devoted to comment on motion pictures and known as Paul Henning's "Parade of Stars" has been inaugurated in Kansas City over station KMBC. The program is on the air every Monday, Wednesday and Friday for fifteen minutes at 9:15 a.m. The sponsor is Marshall's U. S. Auto Stores, Inc.

Henning intends to comment on pictures, stars and Hollywood news, and a picture of one screen star will be given away each week to those asking for them in the six units of the sponsor chain of stores. Placards also will be distributed in the stores featuring Henning's broadcast and current first-run pictures in the Kansas City houses.

Henning also plans to interview stars passing through the city, using the station's "Newscaster" car equipped with short wave apparatus.

Nathanson Cites Gains At Winnipeg Convention

N. L. Nathanson, president of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, and J. J. Fitzgibbons, director of theatre operations, addressed a midwest convention of managers in Winnipeg last week. The company's business is showing a definite increase over boxoffice receipts last year because of better crop conditions and returning confidence, it was said.

Mr. Nathanson and Mr. Fitzgibbons will proceed to Calgary, for a similar session, then plan to go from there to Vancouver for a Pacific Coast meeting.

Warner Chicago Theatres Plan Two Months Drive

Warner Theatres in Chicago, under the direction of James Coston, will have a special selling drive during October and November with the slogan, "Bigger Pictures Now! Let's Go!" A campaign booklet for managers is being prepared by Larry Stein, publicity chief of the chain.

Prizes will be offered to those who show the best increases in their house and the scoring will be on a football basis with the winners getting places on the James Coston All-American team. At the end of the season the team having the highest score will get top prizes. A football trophy will be given to the winner in a special Chicago-Milwaukee team contest.

There are 19 managers in the Chicago group and 10 in the Milwaukee division who will take part in the drive.

Francine Larrimore Signed

Miss Francine Larrimore has been signed to a long-term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and will leave for Hollywood late next month for her first picture. The actress' last appearance on Broadway was in "Spring Song."

Fred Niblo to Resume Direction for 20th-Fox

Fred Niblo, who has been in retirement on his northern California ranch for the last few years, will return to active production to direct "The Holy Lie" for Twentieth Century-Fox. Sol Wurtzel will produce the picture, which is a translation from the play, "Die Heilige Luege," by Michaelis Stangeland.

Dr. Martin Joins Fox

Dr. Harry Martin, husband of Louella Parsons, has been appointed medical director of Twentieth Century-Fox by Darryl F. Zanuck in Hollywood. He will have offices at both the Westwood and Western Avenue lots.

Proposes Boycott On Nontheatricals

Assailing the distributors for encouraging the spread of nonthreatrical competition by supplying films to this type of account, Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, said he favored a boycott of film companies which insist on servicing these accounts and that "there is nothing exhibitors cannot accomplish by a month's boycott."

He did say, however, that on the basis of experience it would be difficult to obtain organized action of this character among exhibitors.

Nontheatrical competition, chance games and giveaways and adverse legislation are industry problems currently receiving the attention of the MPTOA, and will come up for discussion when the directors meet in New York in November to lay plans for the organization's next convention.

Of the three, Mr. Kuykendall considers unfair nontheatrical competition a major problem, second in importance to exhibitors only to the need of a voluntary trade practice agreement and arbitration machinery. Reports reaching MPTOA headquarters from many sections indicate the situation is becoming acute, said Mr. Kuykendall.

"Complaints are pouring in from exhibitors in various parts of the country regarding nontheatrical competition springing up and threatened, professional entertainment given away by advertising sponsors or given for nominal admission charges under the guise of helping some worthy cause," he said in New York last week. "Perhaps the unrestrained cutrate competition that has broken out among exhibitors may divert attention from this menace, but it seems to be developing rapidly.

"Just now it is announced that the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company at considerable expense is sending out a big show of radio stars headed by Kate Smith and Jack Miller's orchestra, presented in large public auditoriums such as the Symphony Hall in Boston and Madison Square Garden in New York, as an advertising promotion for the local A & P grocery stores, with no actual admission charged.

Madison Square Garden Rented

"This seems to be the worst sort of unfair competition to the established theatres in the community. How can any theatre compete with a free show of this caliber? The A & P stores should realize this. Unless theatre owners protest and discourage unfair competition it will ultimately mean a continuous series of free shows with professional talent every night in the week, subsidized by advertisers and putting the theatres out of business."

The presentation referred to by Mr. Kuykendall is Kate Smith's "Coffee Time" show of the air. Madison Square Garden has been rented for next Monday night at a reported price of $6,000 for its presentation as the first large sponsored commercial showing with a free admission. A & P is sending the unit to a number of key cities at an estimated cost of $75,000 for the campaign, and it has already played in Masonic Hall, Detroit, and in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington.

Asks Concerted Action

Mr. Kuykendall urged concerted action of the industry to put a stop to this competition which, he said, will divert thousands of dollars from film theatres, and recalled that exhibitor opposition last year cut short the large-scale free commercial shows of the Guy Lombardo band unit sponsored by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

Sound equipment manufacturers and equipment dealers are to blame for encouraging another type of unfair competition, continued the MPTOA executive, in selling and renting reproducers to nontheatrical sources regardless of the effect on theatres. Film performances in parks and auditoriums, at no admission charge or a nominal fee, draw as many as 2,000 or 3,000 persons in a night, he said, pointing out that they do not bear the burden of overhead, taxes and other operating expense which is charged against the exhibitor.

Public "Gamble-Minded"

Discussing another industry problem, Mr. Kuykendall continued: "Chance games and premiums are a mistake, but the American public is gamble-minded, as evidenced by the sale of 25,000,000 race horse tickets weekly. It's a rage and while it lasts the theatre owners have to meet it.

"I'm not predicting what will happen when the lure of chance games grows weak and the letdown comes, but ball parks and other amusements are competing with lotteries, so why should not the exhibitor try out Bank Night or something else that might help his business?

"The practice will cheapen pictures, of

CHICAGO

For the past few weeks the independent feature "Harmony Lane" has been offered to local circuits here for a first run in the loop. Up until last week there was none who wanted to take a chance. This was despite the fact that exhibitors in the subsequent run theatres have been clamoring for the film. Things changed though the middle of the week when Liberty came out and rated the picture with three stars. Those who had at first shown but little interest in the Stephen Foster story were in a rush to book the film and now it is a race to see who gets the indie for the loop premiere.

Holding two meetings a week the CAPA members are out to give the Windy City amusement group something in the way of a super-dinner-dance and show that will be the talk of the town for a long time to come. On October 19th the CAPA lads celebrate their first anniversary with a Mardi Gras festival based on the idea, La Nudite Paree. This gala event will be held at the Congress Hotel and tickets will be sold to a limited number of guests. Demands for tickets, which go on sale next week, are very heavy according to Lou Abramson, who is dispensing the ducats at $2.50 per copy.

Mr. Kuykendall said that in his swing around the country which he is starting early next week he will line up opposition to adverse legislation, including the Pettengill bill to outlaw block and blind booking and impose regulation, which will be reintroduced in Congress, and other such measures.

At the directors' meeting to be held following Mr. Kukendall's conferences with exhibitor groups in key cities, the date and locale of the MPTOA next annual convention will be decided. The meeting probably will be held in the winter, and while several cities are in the bidding, Cincinnati, Miami and St. Louis are the strongest contenders, he said.

Kuykendall Favors Miami

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTOA of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, and chairman of the MPTOA board for years, has been trying to get the convention for St. Louis, but Mr. Kuykendall favors Miami because many industry figures vacation there in the winter and would attend. The idea of a three-day convention boat trip on the Great Lakes out of Chicago is also liked by the MPTOA head.

While in New York Mr. Kuykendall conferred with Morris Lowenstein of Oklahoma City, who was elected MPTOA secretary to succeed Fred S. Meyer.

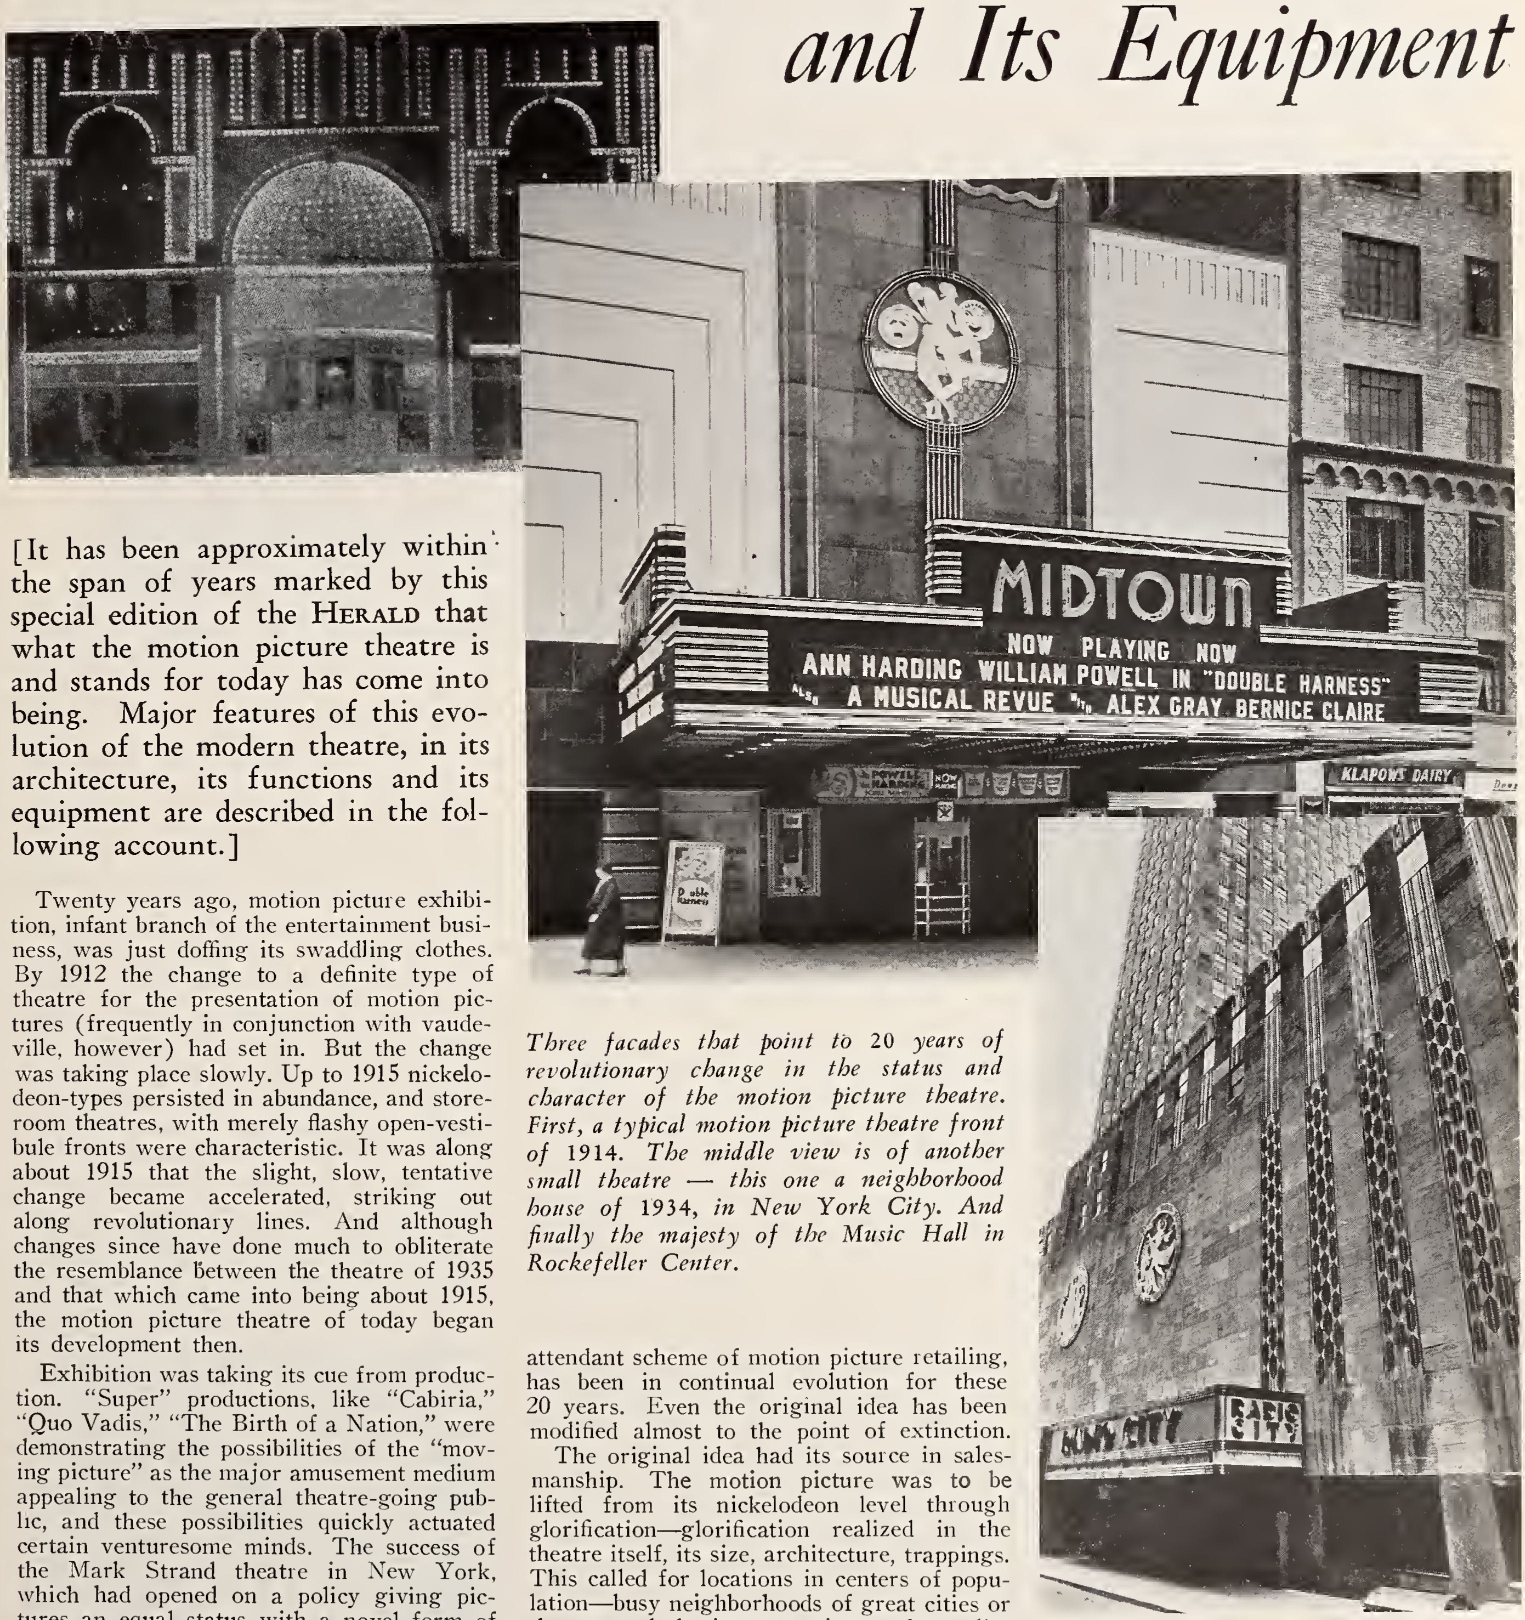
20 Years of Progress in the Theatre and Its Equipment

[It has been approximately within the span of years marked by this special edition of the HERALD that what the motion picture theatre is and stands for today has come into being. Major features of this evolution of the modern theatre, in its architecture, its functions and its equipment are described in the following account.]



MIDTOWN

RADIO CITY

Three facades that point to 20 years of revolutionary change in the status and character of the motion picture theatre. First, a typical motion picture theatre front of 1914. The middle view is of another small theatre — this one a neighborhood house of 1934, in New York City. And finally the majesty of the Music Hall in Rockefeller Center.

Twenty years ago, motion picture exhibition, infant branch of the entertainment business, was just doffing its swaddling clothes. By 1912 the change to a definite type of theatre for the presentation of motion pictures (frequently in conjunction with vaudeville, however) had set in. But the change was taking place slowly. Up to 1915 nickelodeon-types persisted in abundance, and storeroom theatres, with merely flashy open-vestibule fronts were characteristic. It was along about 1915 that the slight, slow, tentative change became accelerated, striking out along revolutionary lines. And although changes since have done much to obliterate the resemblance between the theatre of 1935 and that which came into being about 1915, the motion picture theatre of today began its development then.

Exhibition was taking its cue from production. "Super" productions, like "Cabiria," "Quo Vadis," "The Birth of a Nation," were demonstrating the possibilities of the "moving picture" as the major amusement medium appealing to the general theatre-going public, and these possibilities quickly actuated certain venturesome minds. The success of the Mark Strand theatre in New York, which had opened on a policy giving pictures an equal status with a novel form of stage entertainment, pointed the way for many established showmen and for some persons who had not been previously attracted by it. Millions began to flow into this new and quickly rising industry for the construction of elaborate theatres devoted, essentially, to the exploitation of motion pictures.

Now this kind of theatre dominates dramatic entertainment throughout the civilized world. But revolutionary in its beginnings, the motion picture theatre of today, and the attendant scheme of motion picture retailing, has been in continual evolution for these 20 years. Even the original idea has been modified almost to the point of extinction.

The original idea had its source in salesmanship. The motion picture was to be lifted from its nickelodeon level through glorification—glorification realized in the theatre itself, its size, architecture, trappings. This called for locations in centers of population—busy neighborhoods of great cities or the central business sections of smaller cities. But the little theatre around the corner and in the small town copied this new pattern as best it could.

The Theatre Architecturally

Architecturally, this new theatre of the motion picture was the theatre of the stage merely adapted, for the most part, to continuous performances, greater seating capacity and the necessity of a projection room. Decorative styles emphasized ornament (with plenty of gilt) in plaster abstractions of a kind that had long characterized the theatrical building. The period idea had not attained the importance it was to have. In pattern, this was merely "theatrical architecture." It followed closely the design of a circus bandwagon, with which, after all, the new motion picture theatre of 1915 had much in common.

Perhaps it was because of the monotony of such architecture that the period design suggested itself. At any rate, once started, history and geography became the handmaidens of the theatre architect, and the results of their researches form an inescapable part of the story of the cinema. Chinese temples, Spanish palaces, Moorish mosques and countless other buildings of numerous peoples and times were ransacked for wonders that could be translated into lobbies, foyers, auditoriums and lounges in the new world of the motion picture. Archaeologists discovered the lost civilization of the ancient Mayas, and their massive stone structures were revived, by way of plaster, in a temple of the motion picture. Conceived to glorify a new kind of dramatic entertainment, the theatre had become a show in itself.

By the middle of the 1920's all this became yet more bizarre—and, one may add, still more competitive—by the introduction of the "atmospheric theatre." Ornamental walls, ostensibly reproducing scenes and structures of a distant day or land, were erected along the interior of the auditorium, set out in rather deep relief from the structural walls, and from behind the false walls stretched the ceiling, in a heavenly vault, painted blue and pierced to emit the flickerings of electric lamps located above it. These flickerings were stars, and when a cloud-effect machine was employed the patrons found themselves massed, though winter raged in the street, beneath a Southern sky.

Although there is probably many a showman who leans toward such architectural devices, they have been definitely supplanted by those patterns which have their basis in the style variously called moderne, modernistic or simply modern.

Modern in this sense is the motion picture of today. Its architecture is tending also to take on another attribute of modernism—namely, functionalism.

Whether through the adoption of a functional approach to theatre design, or merely through adaptation of traditional methods, motion picture theatre architecture today is seeking its forms in the technical requirements of completely effective motion picture presentation. The theatre is a permanent community institution merchandising what is, despite the ephemeral character of each unit, a popular commodity. Following the forced inventories of the depression, this idea has asserted itself in a return to the residential neighborhood as an important theatre location. The result of this has been a trend toward smaller capacities, more conservative architectural styles, and emphasis on the mechanical facilities which provide for proper reproduction of the film under comfortable, healthful conditions. The motion picture theatre of 1935 is thus a far cry from its more pretentious, but undisciplined, progenitor of twenty years ago.

Mechanical Facilities

The development from 1915 to 1935 in motion picture theatre equipment may be divided into two groups—refinements and additions. At the beginning of this period projection, which is, of course, the key function of the theatre, had attained a level of development adequate to the task imposed upon it by a higher type of theatre and more exacting patronage. But certainly the effectiveness of the motion picture as a form of entertainment increased greatly as inventions brought about improved optical system, precision engineering, more efficient light sources, screens adapted to specific types of auditoriums, and so on. And, of course, it was well within these 20 years that the motion picture acquired voice.

Sound came definitely to the theatre in 1928, but it was exactly twenty years ago, in 1915, that the amusement world turned from its customary preoccupations to celebrate with song the first major achievement of that scientific device on which all theatre sound is based. Arlington in Virginia had spoken by "wireless telephone" with Eiffel Tower in Paris, and Honolulu had listened in. The erratic vacuum tube

The auditorium of the first Trans-Lux theatre, on Madison Avenue in New York, one of a new class of theatres introduced by the Trans-Lux Corporation a few years ago for the presentation of short subjects.

Do your audiences say—

“It looks like him, but . . . ?”

Motion picture photography and projection have reached a high stage of perfection, having had a great many years in which to develop. Sound is younger, however, and has moved ahead so fast that methods and equipment only a few years old cannot do justice to today’s sound tracks. Many a man and woman today sees a star on the screen, and says: “It certainly looks like him, but it doesn’t sound like him.” So customers go elsewhere, to theatres whose sound is modern and natural.

RCA Photophone equipment recreates sound as recorded according to modern standards, producing a naturalness that creates the illusion of the actual presence of the stars on the screen. It is relatively inexpensive, sold on easy terms, backed by the world’s greatest experience in recording sound, easily operated by the skilled projectionist. It repeatedly proves its ability to increase box office receipts greatly. Write for details.

50% OF THEATRE SOUND BAD!

Read what Mr. A. Lightman, former president of MPTOA, and president of the Malco circuit, said recently in Hollywood. He spoke before the Technician’s Branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences:

“There is equipment today in some of the de luxe houses which is the original equipment installed in 1927 and 1928. No provision has been made in these houses to take care of what you are doing here now. The best results cannot be obtained from such equipment. Fifty percent of the theatres today won’t get any more out of your product than just ordinary results . . . The exhibitor has an obligation to the industry to keep his equipment up to the best possible efficiency.”

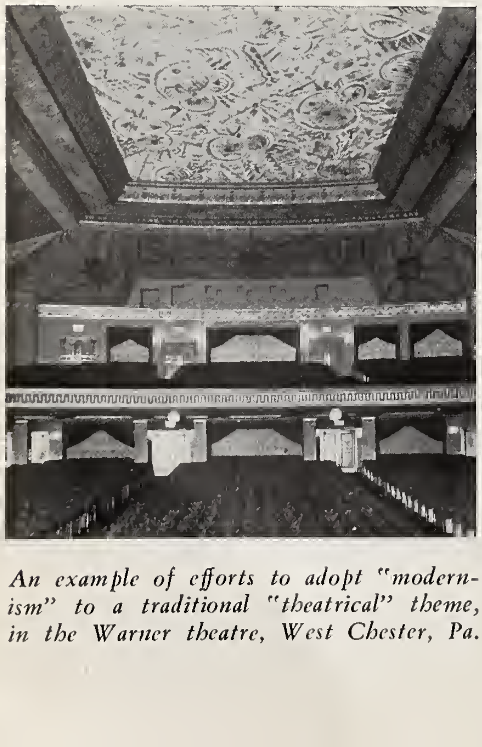
of De Forest had been developed to a dependable commercial device, and the theatre world, not knowing how much the vacuum tube would come to mean to it, sang: Hello, Hawaii, give us a kiss by wireless.

In its wealthier manifestations, that theatre of 1915 offered six turns of vaudeville and a flickering, darkening picture. In its humbler neighborhood versions, "Hello Hawaii" was rattled out aimlessly, over and over again, by absent-minded young women tinkling the world's tinniest pianos.

At the top of a dangerous vertical ladder an "operator" in a "booth" trimmed a fluttering, underpowered arc light while awaiting whistles from the audience below that should signify the picture had again slipped out of frame.

In the intervening years that arc light was strengthened, and strengthened again; automatic carbon feeds were perfected to strengthen it, and the vacuum tube, in one of its many forms, was developed to provide it with power. The projector "machine" evolved into a precision mechanism of amazing accuracy and jewelers' tolerances. Picture projection became so steady, clear and unobtrusive that the audience could forget it was looking at a picture.



An example of efforts to adopt "modernism" to a traditional "theatrical" theme, in the Warner theatre, West Chester, Pa.

But the picture business had definitely abandoned sound. Edison's experiments, made without amplification, had not won its favor.

Ten years later, in 1925, the sound track and the photoelectric cell made their bow to Broadway and drew a moment of passing attention to their unfailing synchronization of speech and lips.

In 1928, when amusement was wired for sound, finally and for all time it was the disc with its lesser need of amplification that first won favor. The sound track was handicapped by a "background" of distant Niagara combined with the rumbling of far-off trucks.

Discs were still slipping out of synchronism, almost as often as the picture of 1915 slipped out of frame, and "re-synchronizing devices" were legion. Hollywood was besieged by inventors who had patented methods of translating American dialogue into foreign speech.

Storage batteries "ran down" in the middle of the show, and entertained patrons with snappings and cracklings, and now and again with the deep hum of the charger. Sound would stop on occasion, and not even a bored young woman with a tinkling piano could conceal the awful emptiness. Moreover, the bored young woman grew obsolete with amazing rapidity; the "non-synch" had taken her place.

Slowly the "bugs" were driven out of sound; theatres operated whole weeks on end without needing a service man. The non-synch began to gather dust, preparing to follow the piano girl into oblivion. The synchronous disc went next, and the sound track came into its own. In 1931 it lost its background of rushing waters and rumbling artillery, and blossomed into noiseless recording simultaneously with the development of noiseless tubes for the photoelectric cell amplifiers.

The storage battery faded from the scene. Rectifiers using vacuum tubes took its place, and with them, rectifiers using gas-filled tubes and copper-oxide discs. The same rectifiers, grown gigantic, presently competed with the motor generator as a source of arc-lamp power.

Sound equipment grew smaller, more compact, more efficient, less expensive to install and maintain, reliable, a work-a-day element in the theatre mechanism.

It was also in this period since 1915, of course, that complete automatic control of atmospheric conditions, independently of the season or of the weather outside, was added to the facilities of the theatre, ultimately to become characteristic of the larger houses. New values in comfort also imposed new demands upon the theatre chair manufacturer, and today the theatre chair represents intensive studies in posture and audience habits. And sound eliminated the veneer chair entirely.

The equipment needs of the typical motion picture theatre of 20 years ago were few and simple. Today there are over 100 distinct classes of mechanical facilities represented in the equipment of all but the smallest houses.

A NEW CHAIR FOR A NEW ERA

HERE'S a new chair at a "used chair" price, that has all the best features of higher priced chairs. The Steelform Challenger has been designed not only for the greatest comfort and eye appeal, but also to stand up under wear and tear, to reduce insurance premiums, and to slash maintenance costs. This chair is a result of years of experimentation and research work by engineers of the John L. Cable Manufacturing Company, known throughout the world for a quarter of a century as a leading manufacturer of high quality steel furniture and other metal products—an organization constantly on the alert to give the market a better article at a more reasonable price.

The Steelform Challenger has many outstanding features, all of which are thoroughly protected by patents. The back upholstery is securely held to the steel panel back by an attractive one-piece U-shaped rim. The deep, resilient, cushion-seat combines comfort with extreme durability, and may be recovered without taking down the chair. The simple, sturdy hinge has been designed with particular attention to reducing friction and resulting wear at this point. The hinge mounts are so arranged that the chairs can be installed in any radius that your architect may suggest. Special patented anchor tubing on the standards insures a seating installation that is permanent in spite of all abuse.

These features, and many more, which are incorporated in the Steelform Challenger, give to theatre owners "a 20th century, all steel, theatre chair," offered at a price that eliminates the necessity of using recondition chairs.

In order to completely equip the well designed modern theatre, we are also introducing an extensive line of lobby and lounge chairs in the modern manner.

We invite Dealers and Circuit Buyers to write for further particulars.

A SOUND IDEA THAT GREW UP

Five years ago, the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association was just a good idea. Today it is an established institution, having reached maturity through sound and healthy growth. We have constantly held fast to the basic principle of dealer individuality plus the merchandising advantages of a national organization. Wherever you see the Independent symbol displayed, you can be assured of honest quality and honest price, unconditioned by any centralized dictation. This symbol has become a hallmark that guarantees excellence of merchandise, complete independence of policy, and efficiency of service. Association Dealers protect their patrons by handling products only of progressive manufacturers known for their stability, financial responsibility, fair and ethical sales methods, and who recognize dealer distribution as the only logical means of insuring satisfactory service to large and small theatre owners alike.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

20 YEARS OF COOPERATION

There is no reason to doubt that the growth of exploitation as we know it today was aided not inconsiderably by the trade press and it may be noted that the journals published by Martin Quigley featured from the beginning the efforts of the nation's theatremen in putting over their attractions.

In 1915 and the years immediately following, producers were concerned more with selling their pictures to the exhibitor than to the public. Of course the early endeavors of Claud Saunders, Howard Dietz and Ned Holmes and their field exploiteers did much to educate the producer as well as the exhibitor to the needs of effective promotion. The advertising missionaries did the first and very important part of the job.

But spreading the word was equally important and thus the detailed publication of these exploitations in the trade press week after week completed a major task of informing exhibitors everywhere of many box office angles obtainable in no other manner.

Today's great and all inclusive Round Table membership of showmen around the world, operating in these pages a clearing house of showmanship ideas and a meeting place of the talent that makes films into box office, is one of the outstanding products and fruits of that twenty-year-long policy of Mr. Quigley to give in his publication pages a voice and a forum to all of those who have had something to say for the industry. The Round Table is the product of the genius and labors of the showmen of its membership and they have been the while given place, space and distribution because Martin Quigley believes in showmanship.

THE SMALL TOWN MANAGER

We won't be stuck in the jailhouse for saying that everything else being equal the small town theatreman for the most part is in closer touch with community civic and social life than his big town brother-manager. This observation is confirmed by what takes place in the lesser situations and reported to this desk by members in a position to obtain authoritative closeups of such operations.

For instance, the small town article written for the issue of September seventh by Armand J. Moreau, district manager for the Mullin and Pinanski theatres in the states of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. Says Mr. Moreau:

"Worthy of mention is the fact that of 21 managers who comprise this district, four are presidents of such civic organizations such as Lions, Kiwanis and Rotary; five are past presidents; four are members of their city councils; two last year were approached to run as mayors of their towns; two have been secretaries of civic organizations and five have been active in church activities."

Skipping west to Virginia, Minnesota, there is reported by Round Tabler Charley Winchell, Minnesota Amusement Co., director of advertising, the recent appointment of Manager Harry Greenberg as president of the local junior chamber of commerce. In the same town, Manager Harry Billings of another house of the same circuit, has for the past year served as president of the senior chamber.

From Absarokee, Montana, Ted Stump, of the Elted Theatre, reports the recent inauguration, detailed on a following page of a "Movie Club" which is expected to be the social and cultural center of the town's winter program.

No doubt similar successful activities due in great part to the efforts of local theatremen are in operation in many another small town—a direct answer to detractors of the industry who view with alarm the "sinister" influence of the picture theatre upon community progress.

In some happier age, future historians and economists will perhaps emphasize the high score of lasting accomplishment rolled up by today's small town showman in adding to the civic and social advancement of his generation.

SPEAKING OF AD BUDGETS

That was a funny comic in a recent New York Sunday Herald-Tribune concerning the adventures of "Skeets" authored by Dow Walling. Seems that the youngster was running a two-cent-a-drink lemonade stand with uncertain success when being advised by an adult customer to go out after publicity, hired a flock of kids at a glass of lemonade per kid, paid in advance, to carry banners plugging his wares.

Two hours later, the customer returned, noted that all the merchandise was sold and remarked that Skeets must have made a lot of money.

Pointing to his gang, vigorously putting on the bally, Skeets replied sadly:

"I didn't make a cent. It all went into publicity."

Free Air Trips

Few weeks back we announced the 1935 Quigley Grand Awards are to be presented in Hollywood. The two winners selected by the judges from the theatremen voted the Silver and Bronze Plaques during 1935 are to be conveyed by air to the Coast where they will be given a week's reception that is to be entertainment for sure.

We are now pleased to say that arrangements have been made to transport the showmen to Hollywood and return via TWA—Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc.—the Lindbergh Line.

Luxurious Douglas Skyliners fitted with every device for safety and comfort await the winners and though it's a short trip from coast to coast by these airpullmans, it's long enough to take in such never-to-be-forgotten sights as Boulder Dam, Boulder Lake, the Grand Canyon, Lake Arrowhead and a flock of others.

Just imagine, folks, wherever you are, it's no more than overnight to Studioland for the two lucky lads who take down those Grand Awards. And it's something to look forward to, for whether or not you have ever visited the studios, it is to be a trip you will remember for the rest of your days.

There's plenty of time plus to get aboard that Grand Award Special—still time to midnight of October 5, the September deadline, to get in that September campaign. And three months additional before the gong rings for the end of the Big Race.

Paper and Merchants Aid Smith on Baby Contest

With newspaper and merchants cooperating, Elbert W. Smith, Bexley Theatre, Dover, Ohio, put over a bang up baby popularity contest. Ballots were available only at newspaper and theatre offices, paper's votes counted for ten each and the theatre fifty. First prize was $100 in cash with runners-up receiving consolation prizes, all of which were donated by the merchants.

Contest ran for six weeks with excellent newspaper breaks every day.

Merchant Features Frocks For Klingler's "Seas" Date

A tieup was arranged by Paul O. Klingler on "China Seas" at the Rialto in Lewistown, Pa., with local department store cooperating. Store featured Carol Ann Beery frocks, using stills in displays and stressing that it was the first appearance of the daughter of Wallace in a film.

Twenty-four-sheets were posted on all roads leading into Lewistown and window cards were profusely used around town, in addition to counter displays and stills.

Martin Ties Paper To Ace Pet Contest

The parade was put on at 10 in the morning of a Saturday that started the engagement of the Temple pictures. Any pet, bird or beast, was eligible for the prizes, a plaid zipper jacket for boys and a Temple dress for girls. There were dogs and cats, rats, roosters, hens, alligators, lambs and geese, the prizes going to two of the last two named species. Day after the parade the paper ran a six-column layout of photos.

Martin also secured a number of co-op ad breaks on the picture as he did for the next attraction, "Call of the Wild" tieing in Loretta Young on a fur display. Local paper also went for a nice sheet of institutional house ads, display ads plugging their running of Will Rogers' life story, the ad also carrying cuts from the picture and displays on the rest of the show.

Florist Cooperates With Bradbury on "Orchids"

In a tieup with florist, leading Atlantans received orchids as part of O. H. Bradbury's campaign at the Georgia Theatre on "Orchids to You." Small roses attached to cards with copy "lovely flowers for lovelier ladies" were distributed on streets and florist created a beautiful display for lobby and store windows. All trucks used by this merchant were bannered with theatre copy during run.

Chain druggist featured an "Orchid" sundae and offered prizes to clerk selling largest number of these sundaes. Leading ladies dress shop featured new orchid shades in their windows, with cutouts of Boles and Muir prominently displayed.

Mickey Mouse Book Offers Tie Ups

The new Mickey Mouse Magazine, which made its bow on newsstands throughout the country Sept. 25 and is published by Hal Horne, offers a swell opportunity for exhibitors to arrange tie-ups with their local news distributors for the Mickey Mouse 7th anniversary celebration.

The 42 page issue, gotten up in attractive colors, is packed with snappy cartoons of the famous Disney characters, comic stories and other novelties which are bound to appeal to both young and old.

Editorially the magazine both in text and make-up can hold its own with any class magazine of its type and is a tribute to the splendid work of Hal Horne and his staff.

George M. Cohan Sues

George M. Cohan has filed suit in the New York supreme court for $100,000 against Maurice A. Richmond and Max Mayer, in business as Paull Pioneer Music Co. Infringements are alleged on songs written prior to 1905, including "Have a Drink With Me" and "It's a Grand Old Flag."

Minnesotans Plugs "Goin' On Two" Short

From Charles Winchell, Minnesota Amusement ad head, comes suggestions from some of the managers for the explotation on the new Dionne Quint short "Goin' on Two," with an advance idea by Fred Larkin, Paramount, St. Cloud.

Fred strung a clothes line across his lobby, on one side five diapers, and on the other five pairs of pink panties. Copy in center read: "The Dionne Quintuplets have discarded these" (arrow pointing to the diapers) "for these" (arrow pointing to the panties) "because they're 'Goin' on Two,'" etc., etc.

Manager Leo Billings, Garrick, Virginia, Minn., comes along with these helps:

Contact furniture store for five baby buggies, each bannered with name of individual quint and sales copy. Dolls are to be placed in buggies which are to be wheeled by five good looking gals.

For advance, Leo likes the paper napkin idea of inserting large safety pins in each after folding in the conventional triangular manner with playdate on back. Spotted advantageously the stunt should make 'em talk.

A lobby nursery display is another Billings suggestion, with five large dolls borrowed from toy store. Dolls should be as near life size as possible and grouped as though the babies were playing on the floor with smaller toys added for atmosphere. For realism, girl dressed as nurse should sit watching the "quints." This display should be accompanied with cutouts of the quints with data as regards age, habits, etc.

Going Back Into The Pages Of Exploitation History

The following seven pages given over to examples of early day exploitation and a story on the rise of the home office "exploiteer" are among the contributions of this department to the Martin Quigley 20th Anniversary Number of Motion Picture Herald.

"Them was the days."

The story of the inauguration of Paramount's exploitation department followed by similar organizations at First National, Goldwyn, Fox, Universal and Warner are sketched by Walter Eberhardt. Actual stories and photos of campaigns put on in the twenties are reproduced. Among these are exploitations effected by managers and publicists since risen to high place in the industry.

To showmen around in the early days and also to the younger generation of theatremen, this review of representative early day exploitation should be of more than passing interest.

Whyte Clicks With 18-Team Ball League

An excellent campaign started last July and recently completed is Bill Whyte's baseball league put on by that Round Tabler at the St. Albans, St. Albans, N. Y., in which 18 teams, representing over 200 boys from eight to 16 were included.

With the aid of a popular semi-pro team business manager and local merchants interested in various of the clubs, three divisions were organized, named for James Cagney, Joe E. Brown and one, the Junior Division, latter group running from eight to 13. The two others were boys from 14 to 16.

To start, the teams, uniformed, paraded to the theatre, each carrying team banners. A theatre party was held and promoted prizes presented to teams making best appearance. Big time athletes addressed the gathering on clean sportsmanship and pictures were taken for publication in the local papers.

Whyte laid out the playing schedule for the season and bookings were sent out weekly to managers of the various teams. Scores were left at the box-office and carried in the papers under the name St. Albans Theatre League. Joe E. Brown and Jim Cagney contributed trophies, as did local stores for presentation from the stage at the end of the season. A "world series" between division winners was also put on at local park with admissions charged.

For permanent possession, trophies must be won twice and during the winter the prizes will be displayed in schools, the lobby and in prominent windows. Meetings will be held from time to time to formulate plans for next season, these meetings to be publicized in the papers to help keep up interest.

Bill says the idea has proved a distinct success. Games were held in the morning so as not to conflict with the matinees and parents expressed their pleasure over the opportunities for the children to enjoy organized sports during vacation.

The whole thing only took about two hours a week of Whyte's time and judging from his success this description should be put into the files for use by other members next ball season. It also has possibilities for football and basketball, etc.

THE EARLY DAYS OF EXPLOITATION

How Home Office Field Forces Originated; Some of the First NationwideCampaigns Described

by WALTER F. EBERHARDT

The author of this article was in the front ranks oj the early exploiteers, and sets down for the information of our readers some of the low-down on how large-scale exploitation came about and the part played in its advance by the first groups of field men sent out by the producer home offices.

Mr. Eberhardt was also associated with First National Pictures as publicist, and since 1929 has been with Western Electric, now serving as director of publicity for Erpi.

In the spring of 1920—more than 15 years ago and only a few years after the birth of the Quigley Publications—a short, stocky, ruddy hued, cherubically smiling man sat in the reception room of Famous Players-Lasky, 485 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The man was Claud Saunders, familiarly referred to today as the "Daddy of Exploitation."

He had, at times, been a producer, company manager and press impresario of the legitimate stage. He was just off a long road tour where he had seen the writing on the wall. He had seen it in dwindling audiences and disintegrating companies.

The motion picture, high transportation costs, second-rate companies and what not were killing the road. In short time the annual record of more than 250 touring companies would be only a memory. Their places would be taken by the motion picture entertainment in more than 15,000 theatres throughout the country.

But the producers and distributors of film entertainment had never gone out to sell the public on motion pictures. There was a vast, potential audience waiting to be lured in. The average exhibitor of those days either hadn't the time or the man power to do it. It was up to producers and distributors to blaze the trail.

That was the idea Saunders had to sell. While he was in the reception room—on probably his fourteenth call—a tall, gray-haired, pug-nosed man stepped out of the elevator.

It was Ned Holmes, who subsequently organized First National's exploitation staff and was its head during its national existence.

Ned came, saw . . . and took the next devator for the street again.

Saunders Goes to Work

The same day Saunders sold his idea to the tops. He was given an office on the 42nd Street side of the ninth floor between John Flinn and Jerry Beatty and told to organize his department.

He got an assistant—Walter Lindlar—and a secretary—Nan Weisberg. The writer was the press agent for the department. Subsequently John Max Rosenfeld, Jr., now motion picture critic for the Dallas Morning News, joined the department and took over those duties.

Exploitation was off to a start! A field force was engaged and the word "exploiteer" was officially coined.

Saunders' creeds were simple. Exploitation men were primarily ambassadors of good will. They had to sell creative ideas; but they had to do it in a way that established friendly relations between exhibitor and exchange manager and exploitation man. And unless exploitation definitely contributed to the box office intake it had failed to justify itself, no matter how showy it might have been.

In view of what has happened in 15 years, it is interesting to go over some of the names of the original roster.

Leon J. Bamberger, now RKO Radio sales promotion chief, was at Minneapolis. Al Boasberg, gag genius, was in Washington. Fred V. Greene, Jr., New York exhibitor, had New York. John Le Roy Johnston of Universal had Los Angeles. The well known "EMO" of the air, Eli M. Orowitz, was Philadelphia representative. Harry Royster, Paramount theatre executive, rambled around Buffalo. A-Mike Vogel, who edits this department, knew Seattle and Portland. Les Whelan, now with Fox Films, was in Denver and Oscar A. Doob, now advertising head of Loew's Theatres, was in Detroit.

These Also Were Exploiteers

Other names on the list included Rick Ricketson, now at the head of the Rocky Mountain division of Fox West Coast Theatres; John J. Friedl, general manager Minnesota Amusement Corp.; Charles Raymond, now managing director Empire Theatre, London, for Loew; John P. Goring, former lessee of the Criterion Theatre, New York, and Hal Horne, until recently United Artists' advertising manager and now publisher of the Mickey Mouse magazine.

The era of intense exploitation was too replete with incidents to repeat fully. A few outstanding examples may suffice. In Denver Les Whelan—if memory serves correctly—exploited a Houdini picture by duplicating the stunt of having a sensational underwater escape from a nailed and sealed barrel. A popular local figure, head of the life-saving station, acted the part of Houdini in the municipal swimming pool park. It had been greatly publicized that $75 would be paid to the man who could duplicate Houdini's feat. The lifesaver volunteered and did it. He was paid the money publicly.

Was there a gag to it? Of course. Whelan's report, with a volume of press clippings concluded with—forgive me, Les, if you see this—"later on he met us in our office and returned 50 of the 75 dollars according to our arrangement."

Possibly the most effective campaign put over by the department as a whole was the nationwide "Anti-Speed" campaign in connection with Wallace Reid's "Too Much Speed." Civic officials, automobile clubs and newspapers in 25 large cities took up the cudgels, giving the theatres playing the picture a publicity that could not have been bought for millions.

Meanwhile, over at First National, Ned Holmes was putting out his staff. Among the names that occur to the writer are Ed McNamee, now with National Screen, Jack Pegler, prominent advertising agency executive, Allan Glenn, now in Dallas, and Hal Olver.

Exploitation at Universal was represented by Nat Rothstein and Joe Weil, at Fox by Al Selig and at United Artists by Charlie Moyer, to mention a few.

At Goldwyn pictures, Howard Dietz, then advertising director, sponsored an exploitation department under Eddie Bonns, now at Universal, and among the early Dietz exploiteers were Norman Pyle, Charlie Deardorf, Bill Robson and Billy Ferguson, now MGM exploitation director.

Warner Brothers were represented among others by Eddie Bonns, Bert Adler, now with Tower Magazines, and A. P. Waxman, now GB ad head.

With the increasing prosperity of the advancing '20s the big specials came in and provided the opportunity for exploitation on a scale never before known.

Many effective campaigns were put out. One of the most effective, lasting and far-reaching was that conducted by John C. Flinn over a period of years on "The Covered Wagon."

A tribe of Arapahoe Indians was transported from Wyoming to New York for the opening. Eventually they traveled to London also. By the time a print was shipped from Los Angeles to New York fan interest was at fever heat. Day by day telegrams announced the progress of the print across the continent by train, comparing the trip to the laborious journey of the Covered Wagon pioneers. The telegrams were printed and eagerly read.

For the first time a real book store window campaign was initiated. Fifth Avenue store windows were opened up to motion picture exploitation, setting a precedent.

Tied in With Governors

The national safety campaign promoted on the silent version of "Manslaughter" may also be counted as another high mark scored by the exploiteers and "drive carefully, you may commit manslaughter" became a familiar warning in newspaper and posting campaigns sponsored by cooperating civic clubs and automobile associations.

Special showings before governors and legislators at State capitals, special "weeks" of one kind or another and a host of other exploitations used today and adapted by advertisers in other branches of industry are credited to these exploitation pioneers.

McCORMICK SAID IT YEARS AGO

Dignity with a Kick in It

By S. Barret McCormick

Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

"DIGNITY," said the advertising man of the Mastodon as he erased the words "A virile story of the early west" from his layout sheet and substituted the line Silent Marley. He was hell with a 44 but he loved with a heart that was 22 karat. "Dignity is only valuable when we forget we've got it."

Every advertiser wants dignity in his copy but it takes more than a Prince Albert and a silk hat to make an imposing figure. A clothing dummy properly draped looks like a gentleman, but it takes red blood and eyes that see humanity and a soul that we don't see but feel to make us forget the clothes and want to grasp the hand of the distinguished one.

In amusement advertising what we need is DIGNITY—PLUS. The plus in the case being white gloves with a punch enclosed. Or dignity with a kick.

Of all the kinds of merchandise upon the market, none equals amusement merchandise for the diversity of methods required in its selling. Each subject is in itself a distinct sales problem, and as a result no matter how firmly established an advertising policy may be in each separate attraction it must carry some distinguishing mark whereby the public can see a new personality behind the shell of the word Entertainment.

One can look at a dinner menu all day and not feel a gastronomic pang, but when the waiter whispers, "That so and so is very delicious today, the favorite dish prepared by their famous chef, and oh la la it melts in your mouth," we most always undergo a change of interest. The menu has lost none of its dignity, it has simply been glorified by imagination and good salesmanship.

So in amusement advertising, it is the human touch that really counts. It's the thing that strikes our hearts, either on the most gentle note or plays on the strings of our cruder emotions that affects us. It is not undignified to refer to Abraham Lincoln as "Honest Abe," nor is it uncouth to say "Over the top and give 'em

Every advertiser has a favored means of exploitation that he does not devote to "any old" picture. He has some especial stunt, or some unusually effective scheme, that he reserves for the production that he believes deserves it. And the production that wins this place wins at the same time a sincere commendation from the exhibitor.

Pete Smith Steers Isle of Lost Ships

Being told to go and get it for The Isle of Lost Ships, Pete Smith cheerfully answered "Aye, aye, sir"; this being a nautical drama, touched his forelock as they do in Pinafore and proceeded to give Los Angeles one complete revolution.

Of course Pete had to pick on the navy. No exploiteer ever overlooks this bet, and Pete aimed high. He presented Admiral Eberle with a print for the use of the flagship, and was careful to do this three days in advance, so it would do some good when the papers wrote it up. He also told the Admiral that any man in naval uniform could hold out a quarter when he came to plank down his money at the Kinema box office, and that gave a bunch of sailors and marines at every showing.

Then Pete tied up the Cinderella dance emporium to an Isle of Lost Ships Night, and they carried signs on two sides of their corner building for a week, and played up the night in all their newspaper work. There was a treasure hunt with $25 parked in various parts of the hall, and a "storm dance" so successful that it had to be repeated until the musical score was worn out. The Cinderella has some movie night each week.

For this the lights were dimmed, blowers were turned on the dancers, the wind machine whistled and the lightning flashed. They had everything but the rain.

Chambers Abandons Usual Style In "Beloved Cheater" Campai…

Stanley Chambers, managing director of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kans., has won wide recognition for his generally high advertising standards and especially for his peculiarly individual ability in the science of layout. There are few advertisements in any field that compare with the Chambers product for readability and simplicity. There are none that maintain a high standard more consistently.

But style is style, and even Shakespeare becomes tedious to the too devoted reader. It is excellent steady diet, but occasional refreshment lends it added charm.

Mr Chambers is too close a student of mankind not to realize that his established style of advertisement can become less effectual and lose its edge, if maintained without interruption over too long a period. Accordingly, and wisely, he occasionally makes a change that gives Wichita readers the necessary refreshment, bringing them back to the standardized Chambers style ready to apply themselves more earnestly to its perusal.

When "The Beloved Cheater" was booked for a run at the Palace, Chambers deemed it wise to stage one of his periodical changes of pace. The occasion was fitting.

Lew Cody, whose previous villainies had attracted considerable attention, had been promoted to stardom. The reception that his picture was to be accorded was naturally somewhat doubtful. It was as reasonable to suppose that the public would acclaim it a success as a failure.

Frisco Theatres Join To Beat Ad Opposition

Advertising opopsition is no less been, no less serious, and no less important than actual box office competition. Your newspaper location is no less a matter of concern than your street location. Yet your voice in the matter carries considerably less weight. Luckily, there are more ways than one of governing the situation.

The advertisements Eugene A. Roth and Jack A. Partington employ for the California, Imperial and Portola theatres, San Francisco, Cal., have been mentioned in this department before for their excellent qualities. All good, they have been regarded as strictly competing

ST. LOUIS' LOSS IS DETROIT'S GAIN

When Louis K. Sidney, formerly managing director of the Kings, Pershing, Juanita, Shenandoah, Grand-Florissant and Lindell theatres, St. Louis, took over the management of William Fox's Washington theatre, Detroit, that city gained a newspaper advertising man of the highest order. Readers of this department, familiar with his past work, will be interested in comparing it with his Detroit product.

"River's End" Contest Tries Keith Managers

Contests and exploitation are closely associated in the trade mind. Every week a new angle is developed by some enterprising exhibitor. In each of these there is a distinct value. But a contest between theatre managers, an exploitation contest, with a cash prize as the winner's reward, is a distinctly new and unique enterprise.

When "The River's End," a First National attraction, played a week at Keith's Prospect theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., Harry Crull, the manager, was told that the picture would be exhibited later at Keith's Green Point theatre, and that the manager who did the best advertising and showed the best results would be given a monetary reward.

Accordingly, Mr. Crull went to work with a will. He employed four men, attired them as members of the Northwest Mounted Police, mounted them upon steeds and sent them through the neighborhood.

His lobby was decorated more lavishly than before in the history of the house. His artist went into the stores of the community, painting mirrors, placing cards, taking advantage of every opportun

Exploitation Man Gets Public School Support

George E. DeKruif, exploitation representative of the Robertson-Cole Chicago branch, has discovered that it is not impossible to interest school heads in a given motion picture attraction. He has discovered further, that it is not only possible but highly profitable.

The newest series of Martin Johnson travel pictures was the feature in the interests of which Mr. DeKruif made his campaign, a campaign which was admittedly something of an experiment which will doubtless become an es-

Letters of White Said Adam's Rib

John Once-Upon-a-Time Max Rosenfield of Paramount Exploitation Department, has been golemiug again. This time he tells how four men climbed a culm bank "under a rain of red-hot ore and sparks" and painted the words "Adam's Rib" on a clum bank, adding that "the story of this exploitation reads like the charge of the Light Brigade, the storming of Bunker Hill or the Battle of the Alamo. Into the annals of advertising it goes with Stanley's search for Livingstone and Harry Eagle' expedition to the summit of Mt. Washington."

Outside of that Max is normal

The stunt was pulled in Shamokin, Pa., by Boyd Chamberlin, of the Victoria Theatre, Vernon Grey, Paramounteer, and two bucket carriers. They went to a culm bank on a hill outside the town and whitewashed the letters large enough to be seen from all over Shamokin. It was a nice stunt, even if a culm bank is merely a heap of discarded coal with devil a spark or a drop of molten ore.

The best way to work this stunt is to spray the letters on with a compressed air garden sprayer, but you have to have a ground against which the white will show up distinctly, and this coal heap, of course, was ideal for that purpose.

Branham's Success Wins Him Management of Splendid Majestic Theatre in Detroit

CHARLES G. BRANHAM of Minneapolis is the new manager of the Majestic theatre, Detroit, succeeding M. W McGee, who resigned some weeks ago but who has remained at the post pending the selection of his successor. The Majestic is the finest theatre in Detroit and owned by a stock company.

For over a year Mr. Branham has been manager of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, and attracted country-wide attention by the success he made of the house as long as it was independent. It is said that he was considered the greatest success as a manager known in the section for years. When the Strand was purchased by Finkelstein and Rubin it became one of the syndicate and so lost its individuality, and it was expected at the time that Mr. Branham would not remain, yet he did so as manager of the Strand and publicity manager for another one of the syndicate houses.

In taking over the Majestic, the friends of Mr. Branham expect him to make good from the start, but he is going to have fast pace to follow in that set by Mr. M who is another of the leading man country. The Majestic is all the facili with

RICK AND POLICE TALK IT OVER

Good Old Stunt Retains All of its Stiff Punch

You can't beat the old-timers. Charles B. Raymond pulled an old-timer in St. Louis lately, and found that it was still the goods.

Raymond is exploitation man for Paramount in that district and he wanted something for "Forbidden Fruit." He happened to think of the old barrel stunt. He remembered that curiosity was responsible for "Forbidden Fruit" in the first place, and figured that it would work again.

He bought an empty barrel and a nice red apple. He took a noticeable bite of the apple and put the remainder at t bottom of the barrel, then he put the ter on the sidewalk in front of the M tie Theatre, East St. Louis.

Nineteen out of every twenty passed the house looked in the bar grinned, for the fruit was labeled " Apple." Just that, but with "F Fruit" plastered all over the h answer was obvious. The only "A look back into the beginnin and a lot of men seemed to thi would find Eve at the bottom

What Next?

In Richmond, Va., Ken Findley, manager of the Broadway theatre, lost his bet with Jack Pegler, of the Mayflower Film Corp., that there weren't 15,000 children with Irish surnames in the city. He offered a free admission to every youngster whose name savored of the Celtic and they came in such numbers that the only line he could draw was the color line. He still believes some of them misrepresented—but he finds consolation in a front page news story.

New Letter Head Each Week Helps

Using a specially printed envelope for heralds or programs, or using one for two weeks to boom a coming attraction is not new, but a new letter head each week for all newspaper correspondence is a refinement of intensive work.

Ed. Olmstead, who is press agent for Herschel Stuart, at the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, gets a new batch of letter heads each week. They are printed in red on cheap manila copy paper, and cost only $3 a week. The stock is used for all correspondence and for all press copy, and Herschel writes that it is well worth its cost as special advertising. It sells the dramatic editor the idea of the coming attractions. Just now Herschel is centering upon the Paramount Super-six. It is generally a single column ad from the press book, built up with type to fill the column. It leaves plenty of room for writing and it undoubtedly packs a moral effect.

Coffin Stunt Builds Up C. L. Yearsley's Graveyard

Most exhibitors recall the idea devised by C. L. Yearsley, of the First National, of offering a prize to anyone who would sleep in a graveyard to advertise "The Greatest Question." It made a lot of talk everywhere and a lot of money where it could be tried.

E. Metzger, of the Strand, Creston, Ia., is always on the lookout for novelties and for "The Splendid Hazzard" the Alan Dwan-First National release, he revamped the Yearsley idea.

He utilized an undertaker's shop and displayed a coffin covered in black crepe. The window was draped wholly in blac and a white lettered sign read:

"The Management of the Strand Theatre offers $20 to any colored person who will dare

...Majestic theatre, Jackso On the Farm," at which time, acco records were broken.

Another Record for "Down on the Farm"

The exhibitor-reported history of "Down On the Farm," Mack Sennett's production distributed by United Artists, reads as if written by the advertising man assigned the duty of advertising the attraction to exhibitors. It is an almos unbroken series of box office records and such in large measure because t picture is typically an exploitation f ture.

There is nothing remarkable, then, in the statement that W. S. McLaren, manager of the Majestic theatre, Jackson, Mich., broke his house record recently with "Down On the Farm." Many would register greater surprise if it were recorded that he did not break it, especially after the above reproduction is examined.

Here, as throughout America, exhibitorial initiative was put to the task of making the picture pay, and here, again, the picture's unquestionable advertising qualities brought results.

There is room in the market for an unlimited supply of pictures of that type. It is absolutely impossible to make too many of them.

Stimulating in their effect upon exploitation as a science, stimulating in their effect upon the public, as recorded by the box office, they are of infinite value to the industry.

The common aim of producers, as set forth in this department last week, should be to create productions that can be exhibited, by reason of their presentation and exploitation qualities, to the greatest possible number of people.

In this direction lies advancement, improvement, bettered conditions, and a general prosperity for the industry as a whole and every member as an individual.

Freak Stunt Brings Business in Peoria

Daniel Roche, Chicago exploitation manager for Famous Players-Lasky, broke several supposedly well-established precedents recently in Peoria, Ill., incidentally putting "Male and Female" over to good results at the Majestic theatre.

"They say" you can't make light of native institutions.

"They say" comic exploitation doesn't get results.

"They say" there must be definite connection between stunt and picture.

But Mr. Roche took the town pet, a monkey, placed him in a cage in a prominent window, plastered the cage with "Male and Female" posters, worried not about the connection, permitted the monkey to tear down the posters—and the citizenry to laugh itself into the idea of going to the Majestic to see the picture.

All of which proves—nothing.

Another man might not have succeeded.

In another city the plan might have been disregarded.

At another place the citizens might have laughed the picture out of consideration.

But it worked in Peoria.

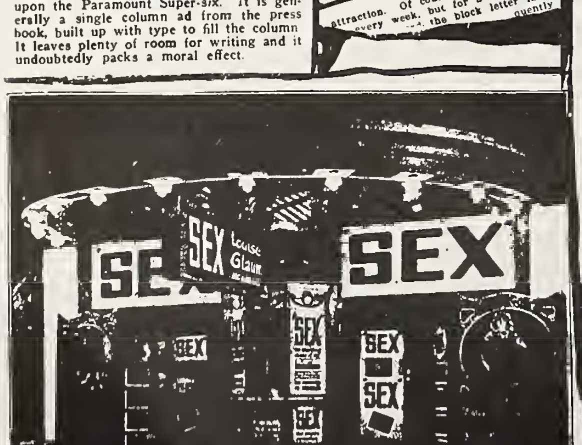
Made It Help

Frank Newman, who owns a bunch of theatres in Kansas City, is a believer in the quotation "Sweet are the uses of adversity." Just as he was all puffed up at the way they were coming to the Royal to see Adam's Rib, a burglar souped the safe and made a haul.

First Newman called up the police and then he rang for the newspapers to tell them that the discriminating burglar had wisely selected the period of his greatest receipts. It did not bring the money back, but it was good advertising for the Rib, and they did a bigger business the rest of the week with a police dog lashed to the safe.



H. A. Albright, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Mont., believes in keeping some single phrase constantly in the public eye. In this lobby display the title of the picture is used

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

AT the Rivoli this week there is presented the most remarkable and most brilliant setting of entire bill around a feature that we have ever known, for it is done with a skill that shows Rothapfel at his best. And though he had just weathered through an attack of the "Flu" he found the opportunity to make the presentation one of novelty.

It is with such a bill as this that there should be no program. There is so much more enjoyment when one does not even anticipate what is going to happen, and that is one of the pleasures of the Rialto and Rivoli for even with a program in front of you you never know the interpretation that is going to be placed on a number. But you can be sure of one thing and that is the atmosphere will be created and maintained.

Now with the exception of the Animated everything on this bill hinges right on the feature, Norma Talmadge of Wetona," treatment

WE'LL MISS HIM

Rothapfel Has Been One of the Features of this Department

IN another part of this issue you have probably already read the announcement that after the 1st of February S. L. Rothapfel will no longer be managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli, his resignation taking effect on that day.

So the heading on this page can appear but three times more. It will be like parting with an old friend, for "Seeing the Rialto With Rothapfel" was made a regular feature of this department shortly after the launching of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. For nearly a year and a half it has been greeting you regular.

The moral of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" might be applied to the exhibitor in his exploitation. It is human to look far afield for that which lies close at hand.

James Carrier, exploitation representative of the Selznick Pictures Corporation in Cincinnati, O., has made arrangements with the forty-two piece town band at Maysville, Ky., to participate in parades exploiting Selznick attractions exhibited at theatres in the Ohio territory.

The "opry house" used the town band frequently in the days before the screen had developed to its present state.

MEMORIAL DAY

Governor Coolidge of Massachusetts and Myron T. Herrick, former American ambassador to France, have suggested that all American theatre men arrange for exhibition on Memorial Day of pictures showing the graves of American soldiers who gave their lives in the war.

The idea is splendid.

There is not a doubt that every genuine American exhibitor will go into the work seriously and prepare a program that is suitable for the occasion in every respect.

Too much stress cannot be put upon the importance of identifying the theatre with work of this nature. Too much effort cannot be expended upon elaboration of the skeleton idea presented. There is no limit to the possibilities presented.

"Miracle Man" Return Effectively Exploited

A big picture of today is not always a big picture tomorrow, but in the case of "The Miracle Man" there is every reason to believe that it will be one of the big pictures of all time. It is well, therefore, that exhibitors read the following account of its return engagement at one theatre, as return engagements properly conducted are big money events.

Issiah Codney, who for years has lived on a small houseboat on the Mississippi River, and earns his living by various means, appeared on the levee and announced himself as a divine healer.

His sermons attracted attention and enterprising reporter played him up New Orleans newspapers as "The Miracle Man."

The Saenger Amusement Company deemed the opportunity too good to miss. They arranged their booking schedule hastily to accommodate the occasion and booked the picture of that name for the psychologically correct dates.

The picture had been widely exploited and played for a lengthy engagement in November, 1919. It was returned for a four-day run. It is reported that every day saw turnaway business. The moral is too obvious to be drawn.

A genuine "miracle man" aided the Saengers in exploiting a return engagement of George Loane Tucker's masterpiece.

Well Put.

E. P. Cox, of the Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, gives a new twist to the old war tax announcement. Others have found that you help the Government when you pay the tax, but Mr. Coe puts it—

Mr. Coe works another good idea. He runs a calendar underline, and when he has an open date he merely writes "Not booked" instead of announcing "Great surprise" or some similar rot. It gives the impression that he books with care, and it does not get the goat of the intelligent part of the patronage. He does not cry "Wolf" until he sees what it is Getting in With the Town.

The Theater Wilbert, Plaquemine, La., was only opened this year, but it has been hustling right along. Lately, Lionel Delacroix donated the house to the Thursday Music Club for an organ recital by a New Orleans organist, thereby winning the attention of the town to the fact that the organ in the house was a superior instrument, bringing out many who do not usually attend picture performances, and getting himself solid with the club and their friends. The club got out a 32-page program that is as much an advertisement for the house as it was a source of revenue to the club. It is good work along the right lines, but we can't see a five-part feature being run through in 50 minutes even if there was an otherwise long pr

Spreading Comfort To Millions

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN PRESENTS—

Beat the Season

From now on exploitation editors will be watching for stories of managers who "through great effort" bannered the elephants in some circus parade. And the exploitation men will just laugh, knowing that "selling the elephants" is one of the regular jobs of the contractor.

But the Allen Theatre, Akron, Ohio, beat the season. The Shriners were holding an indoor circus and Eddie Carrier, Goldwynner, bought a banner. He also bannered the backs of twenty cars on an omnibus route and put out four sidewalk mats, using a patented linoleum which a store supplied free of cost.

Cards giving the number of the police and fire calls were hung to each public telephone and there was a lot of window work done.

Franklin Gives Splendid Example of the Way To Celebrate the Holidays in a Picture House

How to put the "Christmassy" atmosphere into the theatre during the Yuletide season is strikingly illustrated at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, this week, where Manager Harold B. Franklin has put forth his best with the result that all Buffalo is talking about the decorations and the musical settings given the feature picture, which is "The Hell Cat," featuring Geraldine Farrar.

One senses the holiday atmosphere the moment he enters the Hippodrome doors and steps into the lobby of the theatre, for there on all sides and overhead he sees hanging in graceful clusters and strands, evergreens and holly wreaths, and just to the right at the bottom of the escalator, a large Christmas tree has been erected, brilliantly lighted with small incandescent bulbs and decorated with attractive Yuletide fittings.

The interior of the big house is also filled with the decorations appropriate to the season, holly wreaths and red poinsetta predominating, but in the stage setting one finds the biggest feature of the whole Yuletide theme, and this is undoubtedly the best of the timely and seasonal variety that Mr. Franklin has so far presented for the divertisement of his patrons. This setting is a huge Christmas card visualized, showing Santa Claus in life size dipping

Raffles Stunt Worked for Selznick Picture

J. Meyer Schine, of the Schine Company, Gloversville, N. Y., hooked the Herald to a Raffles stunt for Selznick's "The Man Who Lost Himself," with ten dollars for the first to greet the estray and five dollars for the next three.

The $25 in prizes brought in several hundred dollars worth of newspaper publicity, made the paper friendly, and brought in a lot of additional business to the house. It's an old stunt, but it works like a lumberyard fire in a small town, and even the cities will fall for the idea three or four times a year. It makes an excellent hook-up for this Faversham title.

Bettered His Props by Getting Real Article

Paul G. Noble, of the Liberty, Portland, Oregon, wanted an old fashioned rail fence for his prologue to "Peaceful Valley" and instead of letting his property man spend several days painting up some rails, he loaded "props" onto a car and sent him out of town to buy a few sections of fence from some farm.

It cost less than tricked stuff and was more convincing than the best of the painted stuff could possibly be. Then he borrowed a haystack from a local feed store and some wood from a coal yard and he had the setting for a house landscape drop that served as the backing for a male trio who sang a prologue of rural songs.

The trouble with most prologues is that they cost more than they are worth, but Mr. Noble works for novelty and gets his over at comparatively small cost.

Grauman's Pullman Act Is High Class Feature

A presentation feature that serves the purpose of a prologue without seeming to have been improvised for that purpose, putting the audience into the properly receptive frame of mind without apparent design, is of double value. It has the value of the prologue, plus the value of the independent stage number. Such a feature was recently staged at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles.

Sid Grauman took his patrons on a very pleasant journey. That is, he took them at the rate of about 2,300 at each performance on a delightful Pullman car excursion which lasted some twenty minutes. Using the multiplication table, Grauman's playing to 46 shows a week, folks got aboard the Sid Grauman Special.

Had Inspectors Puzzled About This Big Display

When is a sign not a sign? That is what is bothering the building inspectors of what will be Warren G. Harding's home town after March 4.

When W. R. Ferguson, Goldwyn's traveling exploitation man, got to Washington to help Loew's Columbia put over "Earthbound," he had the idea of using a large metal globe. Several machine shops told Ferguson that it could not be done and refused to consider the job, but finally the exploitationist located an old German mechanic who runs a sort of private trade school for skilled mechanics, defraying the expenses out of his own pocket.

Took Two Trials

Ferguson presented it to him as a nice problem for his prize pupils and on that basis the job was undertaken. The first globe was a failure, but Ferguson persuaded him to try again and he got a seven-foot globe that was revolved by a motor. This was painted to represent the earth's surface and was placed on top of the marquise of the Columbia.

Straightaway the building inspectors wanted to know what he meant by building an advertising sign without a permit. Ferguson said it was not an advertising sign but a geographical exhibit. The inspectors retired to think it over and no decision had been reached by the end of the run, so the illuminated globe whirled away all the week with beneficial results.

Ferguson also got special front page readers in the Post and used the billboards and newspaper columns to the limit.

Lila Lee Made Business in Pre-Christmas Week

Technically Lila Lee has been enjoying a vacation at her home in Chicago, but Oscar A. Doob, of the Chicago Paramount office, gummed things all up. He bent the attentive ear to some managers who complained that the people who were doing their Christmas shopping early were not shopping for theatre tickets. Then he hunted up Miss Lee.

As a result she was booked over a circuit of personal appearances, and to justify his cruelty in taking Miss Lee from the home fireside Doob shoots in some pictures of the crowd in front of A. Siegfried's Bijou Theatre, Decatur, when the Bijou broke its "Humoresque" record with "Behold My Wife" on December 20.

Couldn't Use Flash

The wind blew the flash powder out of the pan and the photographer tried from a three minute time exposure. The crowd could not keep still that long, but there was enough on the plate to show what could be done even so close to Christmas. She even got crowds for a Chicago house on Christmas Eve and the day before, some even leaving the tree untrimmed to go down to the Central.

It worked so well that Doob is figuring on persuading the home office to ship the entire personnel of the Lasky lot to Chicago just before Christmas next year so that all the Paramount clients can make some extra money for stocking fillings in the dead days just before the celebration of the Christmas holiday season.

Griffith Himself Stages Prologue for "Greatest Thing in Life" in Los Angeles

PREMIER of "The Greatest Thing in Life," Monday, December 16th, was a "first night" that may be described as Griffithesque. The ovation given the producer following the appearance of the subtitle, "The End," was as enthusiastic, if not more so, than any previous ones this producer has experienced in Los Angeles. For eight minutes the applause and calls continued from the audience of three thousand at Clune's Auditorium.

This presentation, the second of this picture in the country (this film having been first shown in Milwaukee), was personally supervised by Mr. Griffith and his studio staff. The film is preceded by an original prologue by Mr. Griffith, titled "Voices," which creates an atmosphere for the film.

The prologue opens with a dark stage, which is slowly brightened. Out of the hazy background comes a voice:

"The Greatest Thing in Life—what is the greatest thing in life?"

Second voice: "I haven't the slightest idea."

First voice: "The greatest thing in life is—is—is (soft music) wait—wait—wait, here come the singers and dancers, they know what life is. Light hearts of the world—music, dancing, wine, women, life itself—that is the greatest thing in life."

Bank Aids Theatre In Unusual Exploitation

Every exhibitor that effects a new tie-up, a more intimate relationship between hitherto unrelated bodies, does the motion picture industry a genuine service. In opening up new avenues for exploitation the exhibitor is furthering his own cause and the cause of his profession.

"The Virgin of Stamboul" Priscilla Dean's Universal-Jewel production, was shown at the Ansonia theatre Butte Mont., to the biggest business that the atre has experienced. A new tie-up, and a promising one was one of the reasons for the big patronage.

Paul De Mordaunt, manager of the Ansonia, with H. Elliott Stuckel, publicity manager for the Butte branch of Universal, arranged with the Silver Bow National Bank for vault space in which to keep the print while the picture was in engagement.

Policemen were assigned to the guarding of the film on its way to and from the bank.

A bonding company bonded every employe through whose hands the print was passed during its stay in Butte.

The whole affair was conducted with an air of seriousness which gave the impression that the $500,000 value advertised was the value of this particular print alone.

The business mentioned was one of the results.

Another result was the linking of names, theatre with bank, and such an association of ideas is mighty import... to the theatre.

Teaser Ad. Campaign Got Newspaper Score on Stunt

Usually it is bad medicine to get a newspaper down on a theatre, but W. E. Drumbar, of the Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, made a lot of capital of a teaser campaign and won out in the end, though he got the editorial goat—a whole herd of them.

Mr. Drumbar printed the First National plan book teaser ads for "Go and Get It" in the Sunday paper. These were merely cuts of the ape man with sundry mysterious warnings below. It looked all right and the newspaper was glad to get the business.

But about the time the dear public began to read the Sunday edition the newspaper office became the scene of activity. The crime wave was more or less prevalent in Knoxville, as elsewhere, and every depredation was blamed on the ape man and people even called up on the long distance to tell the editor how the monster had swiped a pie or swiped a couple of chickens. Along in the afternoon it became monotonous and the advertising manager was so sour on Monday that he refused to take the same order for the Monday afternoon edition.

Drumbar waited until near press time and the advertising manager was out, and he slipped them over on the counter clerk. Once more the telephones got sore throats ...e telephone clerks, and Tuesday ...nel came out with a savage editorial ...ology for the "unfortunate inci...it called it.

STAR'S APPEARANCE IN CLEVELAND BLOCKS TRAFFIC

WallaceReid HERE IN PERSON SUNDAY

... in the ...

Bill Danziger, Chicago Paramounteer, dropped in on La Porte, Ind., recently and put over Adam's Rib at the Central Theatre, and started in to help the advertising man of the Argus sell a co-operative page.

It was not a very good day for soliciting and came 5:45 with one space still unsold. On the sidewalk a baker was skidding the dirt into the gutter preparatory to calling it a day and going home. He was too busy to talk advertising. He had that sidewalk to sweep.

Bill grabbed the broom. "I'll do the sweeping," he offered. "That will give you time to talk to the Argus man."

The canny baker did not surrender until Bill had made a good job of the sidewalk—outside of getting the goats of some feminine pedestrians with his clouds of dust. Then he stood and lanced the blisters he had acquired through the unwonted exercise while the baker signed on the dotted line. The page was filled.

Hatch's Playdate Box

Getting away from the use of slides with playdates on them flashed on the screen during trailer, Willard Hatch, artist, Hayward Theatre, Hayward, Cal., has placed a box below the screen in front of the bottom mask and covered it with black cambric. In back of the cambric are six compartments which may be lit separately from a control board off-stage. In each compartment is a slot allowing for entrance of cutout snipes. Thus, Willard says he is able to arrange his playdates any way he chooses and that it is an improvement over the old method. Box runs entire length of screen.

Stump Organizing Social "Movie Club"

Tuesday being a "dark" night for the Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont., Ted Stump has organized what he terms a "Movie Club," membership composed of 50 married local couples to meet at the theatre every third Tuesday evening beginning in October and ending in April.

Feature of the meetings will be the exhibition of pictures not usually suitable for general showings and members are to have the opportunity at each meeting to chose the picture they would like to see at the next. In addition, a lunch will be served.

Admission to the theatre on those nights will be by membership card only with the public excluded and the attendance will be limited to 50 couples. The social angle is not to be neglected, as Ted intends putting on "kid" and "hard times" parties, etc., in connection with the pictures.

Total cost per couple is $10 paid in advance for 10 meetings to cover regular admissions and cost of the lunch. Each member will have the privilege af bringing one extra couple to each meeting providing Stump is advised a day in advance. Guest couples will be charged one dollar.

In the general letter sent out by Ted with the above information he wrote that when the quota of 50 couples was reached further applications were to be placed on file and that he expects the Club meetings to be the social highlight of the winter.

He recommends his idea, and a sound one it is, to other small town managers seeking for some profitable way of keeping their houses open on a "dark" night of the week.

EDITORIAL

Most active is A. Milo DeHaven, circuit Supervising Director for Chakeres Theatres, not only in working with and encouraging the circuit managers but also in building up prestige for his outfit in the various towns where the corporation is represented.

Local opinion is not to be discounted in any theatre operation and therefore we are pleased to quote from a letter to DeHaven from the Chamber of Commerce executives of Greenville, Ohio, on how that city feels toward the conduct of the Chakeres Theatre and theatremen.

Dear Mr. DeHaven:

I wish to thank as well as welcome you into the Greenville Chamber of Commerce. . . . I want you to take full advantage of our services and feel free to call upon the writer at any time he can be of service to you or your organization.

It is common for one in your position to hear the things that are bad. I will try to reverse this practice by telling you a few of the many nice things that I have heard about you and the State Theatre, which we are beginning to know as an institution in our community.

There is not a scintilla of doubt in my mind that you have, through hard work and effort, done a world of good for your firm since you have been here. The comments of the past as compared to the favorable utterances of the present, present such a contrast which would in itself erase any doubt in my mind as to the improvement effected. A good indication that our people are finally awakening to the fact that you are giving them the very highest quality of entertainment, is borne out in several complimentary remarks made by prominent individuals at two recent meetings.

The splendid treatment of the public by your employees and the general atmosphere of the house are important improvements making their appearance since you have been here. The many remarks emanating from the business men of the city is a favorable sign and the growing good will and appreciation for what your institution means to the community as expressed by our merchants, is additional evidence of the results of your efforts.

Mayor's Proclamation in "Fuzzy's" Lobby

Now It's O'Knight And Also McTotman

Well and weel, begorra and begob, have ye all heard tell av those two famous Irishers, Fuzzy O'Knight and Jimmy McTotman, who went completely Hibernian to put over their showings of "Irish in Us."

Fuzzy, who goes by the more recognizable handle of R. E. Knight at the Fairmont, Fairmont, West Va., wanted to do a little differently, so he got after the Mayor, who obligingly proclaimed the opening day of the picture as "Irish Day." Proclamation was run of course by the newspapers and also planted by Fuzzy (see photo) in his lobby. American Legion participated by hanging flags to help celebrate the day.

The dailies especially tied in with a lot of giggles by labeling this Round Tabler as "O'Knight" and designated him thusly in all the stories.

Shamrocks were distributed by two Irish lassies and special Celtic programs were put on with local stations. Irish Songs also had their turn at two local radio jamborees. Fuzzy says sensational because never used locally in this manner was the hotel card stunt.

Irish jaunting car was put out as street bally and green flowers promoted for lobby from local greenhouses. And of course, restaurants and lunch rooms served Irish stew. Different angle of kids' drawing contest was to confine entries to Irish youngsters, over 700 participating. Irish stunts tilted the amusement as regular meeting of Knight's Kiddie Club and Fuzzy endeavored to be different even on payday by paying house off in silver dollars.

Erie Polish Language Paper Runs Irish Story for Jim

And farther north, in Erie, Pa., there was another 'Irisher," Manager Jimmy Totman, at the Warner Theatre, who, with the help of his assistant, Bob Bowman, promoted the leading local Irish group to put on an Irish Day Picnic on the opening day of "Irish in Us."

First gun was a newspaper tieup, an "Irish Man" contest wherein photos of prominent Erie Irishmen were made up into cuts with those of Cagney and O'Brien and used in a jumble contest. Also planted newspaper contest to award tickets to those bringing in an original Irish newspaper.

But the standout of course came about when Jim had the local Polish language paper run a gratis ad on the Irish picnic. League of Nations stuff, eh, what?

To build up attendance at the picnic, the committee furnished Totman with the services of 22 beribboned girls who distributed shamrock heralds on the main streets. And Cagney and O'Brien of course sent their best wishes by wire, which was run by the newspapers and read to the crowd at the picnic by Congressman Fitzgerald of that district.

Special preview for the picnic committee the night before spread lots of fine word-of-mouth. Theatre donated Cagney and O'Brien trophies for sports events at the gathering, banners were placed upon speakers' stand and other points of vantage.

The picnic was of course the feature of the campaign but Totman says by concentrating on the Irish angle and staying away from the fight slant he rounded up a compaign that brought smiling results.

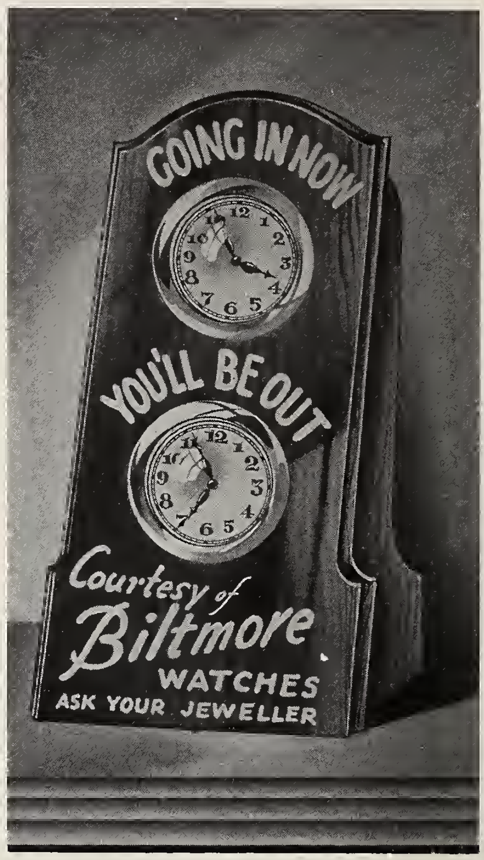
Barr Distributes Lucky Number Bag for "Gondolier"

Stan Barr, Warner's Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., had paper bags imprinted for "Broadway Gondolier"; each bag carried a number and the various merchants who distributed the bags posted five numbers on the windows of their stores, to those customers receiving one of the lucky numbered bags, tickets to see Dick Powell were given. In addition to the goodwill obtained by the distribution of the bags, Stan received the further break of having each store carry theatre copy on their windows and customers carrying theatre ad into homes.

Theatre organist featured song hits with spot announcements briefly stating entertainment value. Music stores carried window displays of sheet music and plugged picture tunes.



Clock Ideas Answer "What Time Does—?"

Above is sketch of the boxoffice clock used by Manager Dan Krendel, at the Tivoli, Toronto, Can., to inform patrons at a glance how long the show takes and the exact time they can expect to be out. Upper clocks show the correct time with lower set back the length of the show, very handy on bills running up to three hours and more.

Below is reproduced Manager Sam Norman's lobby board at the Roosevelt, Flushing, L. I., another smart time-table idea. It's a grooved five-ply board bound with stainless steel and celluloid embossed letters with double prongs. Board is lined with black cloth inserted in the grooves.

Both ideas save a lot of time for cashier and doormen and are aces for patrons backward about asking questions.

On "Love Me Forever" at the College Theatre, Bethlehem, Pa., Hal Longenbach tied in with five and ten clerks distributing theatre heralds and contest was run in which employees having largest number of sales received passes to picture. Laundry also cooperated by inserting these heralds in all packages leaving store.

Hal contacted local business school and for a few passes, girls addressed postcards with picture message to theatre's mailing list. Life-savers in imprinted bags carrying cut of Grace Moore were distributed, copy reading "two sweet hits," etc. Letters were mailed to music schools, women's clubs and musical societies recommending the picture.

Mike located a farmer boy who had a horse and buggy, obtained a bride for him and with tin cans, ribbons, wilted flowers, rice, etc., the bridal party toured the city streets. Signs were tacked on to wagon reading "Just Married," "Regent never disappoints" and picture title and playdates.

Church Aids Winstanley

A reported first time for an official church endorsement of a picture in his town was secured by B. W. Winstanley, Paramount Theatre, Peekskill, N. Y., for "The Irish in Us." Winstanley contacted the priest of the Catholic church there and stressed the idea of the typical Irish family story. Priest commented on the picture at all masses and advised all to see it. He also arranged for Italian priest to make announcements to his parishioners.

Ballteam Parades for Glazer on "Alibi Ike"

Promoting a local baseball team in uniform to march through streets with their backs bannered after having witnessed a preview of "Alibi Ike" was one of the highlights of Marty Glazer, publicity director's campaign on that date. Heading parade was midget carrying placard (see photo). Window was secured in department store tying up picture with baseball uniforms and equipment, stills from picture were spotted.

Stories were released to all sporting editors calling attention to fact that 25 big league players took part in producing the picture, including former members of the Boston Red Sox.

Barron Crashes Ball Ground on "Alibi Ike"

Nothing like crashing a ball game, and that's what Bill Barron, Kenyon Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., did on "Alibi Ike" when he dressed a fellow in baseball uniform, with picture copy on breast and back, and sent him out on the field between games of double header, where he emitted typical Joe Brown yells. Pie Traynor, manager of Pittsburgh Pirates, and Honus Wagner, famous coach, clowned around with the bally man to amusement of fans.

Another stunt Bill used was a picket man in front of theatre, sign informing all that employees of the Kenyon Theatre were striking because they couldn't stand all the laughs in the picture. Special compo board front was constructed with large cutouts of Brown and oversized baseball.

Bill Burke Executes Smart New Show Program

In an endeavor to do it somewhat differently, Bill Burke, assistant to Phil Manes at the Lindley Theatre, Philadelphia, created a nice bit of copy in a program to sell the new show season. Layout was four pages, about six and a half wide by ten in size, with front cover stepped on the foldover, leaving back nearly an inch wider.

Program was then folded in two lengthwise, top fold again stepped with lead copy on first fold and border copy running down the edges of the inside stepped pages. When opened front page carried theatre sig cut and "present" copy with inside pages and back given over to current and coming attractions. Inside pages additionally were bordered with flock of stars inside of which were head cuts of various players.

FOR A QUARTER OF A CENTURY

General Register Corporation has been the leading producer of ticket machines for the theatre. For the same period of time, exhibitors have inquired, "Is it a Gold Seal?" as though to ask, "Is it genuine?" And in the future, it is not a boastful claim that any major improvements will come from the drafting boards of General Register engineers. In design, construction, and performance, the Genister Gold Seal remains unequalled.

Resemblance Contest Staged By Boucher for "Karenina"

One of the highlights of Frank Boucher's "Anna Karenina" campaign at the Paramount Theatre, Lynchburg, Va., was tieup with leading department store in which they featured a new Garbo hairdress. Theatre offered cash prize to girl whose hairdress and profile most closely resembled the new Garbo, the girl, however, had to have her hair dressed in beauty salon of cooperating store. Store plugged offer in ads which included cut of Garbo.

As an added attraction a Hollywood cookbook was given to each lady visiting store's tearoom.

With the opening of the four colleges nearby, Frank sent letters to all freshmen welcoming them to Lynchburg and particularly the Paramount by enclosing pass for coming week's attraction.

Attractive Programs By Cohen and Burke

Some mighty attractive trick programs are being gotten out by Artie Cohen, Lindley Theatre, Philadelphia, aided by his assistant, Bill Burke. One program carried on its cover a large brigantine plowing through the waters with its sails drawing full. Superimposed across the boat was copy "a shipload of entertainment, a cargo of thrills, drama, adventure," etc., etc.

Another herald done in dark blue and white for "Caliente" has a trick fold, outside shows Del Rio in costume with the words "Viene sobre a verme alcuna vez," or, as the boys explain, it's Spanish for "come up and see me some time, in," etc.

Levy Sends Billet Doux On "The Conquerors"

Woolf Levy, Cameo Cinema, Durban, South Africa, wrote letters on nice pink note paper signed with a girl's name and made a date to meet the recipient at the theatre to see "The Conquerors." Woolf says this is a stunt that hasn't been used much there and clicked for him.

Recently when the city was holding its annual race meeting, he advertised that he would present a whip to the successful jockey and a gift to the trainer of the winning horse. Stunt received nice publicity breaks. In his spare time Woolf is organizing a children's dancing class and has started an inter-city relay race for which he expects to donate przes.

Paper Gives "Sanders" Tickets for Campbell

Newspaper tied up with Bob Campbell, Fox Palace Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa, on "Sanders of the River," running large theatre ad and offering a guest ticket to each person paying their "past due bills" in the classified section.

Cards were distributed on street attached to which was bright new penny to partly repay recipient for time required to read theatre message. Bob also laid a trail of lime down the principal streets, all of which led to theatre where he had pasted a six sheet in front of house. By permitting druggist to put his ad on back cover of program, merchant paid for offer of one free ticket to each person presenting the theatre program intact at boxoffice.

Crites Constructs Carnival Booth for "Alibi Ike"

Arlie Crites, Rig Theatre, Borger, Texas, for his "Alibi Ike" engagement built a typical carnival booth in the entrance to vacant building in center of town. Booth contained five-foot head of Brown painted with unusually large mouth. Baseballs were distributed and onlookers invited to stand a certain distance from mouth, each person entitled to one "toss" and for those who clicked tickets were awarded. Stunt provided plenty of merriment and critics report it more than paid for itself

Mike announcement in store plugged picture and playdates and Arlie reports that out of a few thousand people entering the booth to take a sock at Joe, a comparatively small number rated ducats.

Harris Promotes Bus For "Sanders" Bally

Jimmy Harris, assistant at Loew's State, St. Louis, for his "Sanders of the River" date, promoted a bus which was bannered with 24 sheets and bordered with palm leaves (see photo). "Natives" were recruited from the negro population and with war-paint, bearing shields and spears uttered guttural sounds and beat tom-toms while riding town.

Jimmy says the largest cloth banner ever erected there, measuring 48 feet long by 12 feet high covered the fronts of two vacant stores adjoining theatre and to enter theatre itself patrons had to pass beneath palm thatched entrances, entire box-office was also covered with palms.

Tie-up with Western Union brought window display in all branches with copy "in the jungle, the jungle drum is the telegraph, but in civilization, man relies on," etc., etc.

Harding Constructs Peep Box for "Alibi Ike"

A 22 by 28 foot peep box was constructed by Lyle Harding, Regent Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., for his "Alibi Ike" date. When the curious stepped up for a looksee their eyes lit on three baseball bats painted red and card with copy reading "he's battier than ever." Stunt brought plenty of laughs.

Tieup with store brought distribution of red cards pasted to which were peanuts with gag line, "If you think this is a nut, you ought to see," etc., Theatre and store ad was carried below. Attractive girls dressed in baseball uniforms gaveaway nuts on streets. Girl's salary was also paid for by store. Members of newspaper kid club were invited to attend show as guests of Lyle Harding, children marched to theatre headed by drum and fife corps (see photo), police escort was provided.

STARS OVER BROADWAY

Warner

In the combination of story content, personalities presented, spectacular production effects, music and dancing, this feature seems to have plenty that makes for interest creating exploitation. The story, adapted from "Thin Air" by Mildred Cram which appeared serially in Cosmopolitan Magazine, is a drama of the private lives of those unseen persons whose voices are heard over the radio waves and those who are responsible for creating these colorful figures. Accompanying this basic drama is a heart warming love story.

Essentially it is the story of a visionary promoter, Pat O'Brien, who discovers a singing sensation. Unwilling to wait until the boy is fully developed, he rushes him into the hectic glamour of radio-broadcasting, night club singing. With success comes the inevitable break, precipitated by a woman, and the boy drops as quickly as he skyrocketed. The girl who caused the trouble also has a grand voice, and is ambitious for fame. O'Brien, knowing its cost, discourages her. The dispirited girl is injured, an occurrence that returns O'Brien to typical character and as he arranges to have the boy sent to Europe to complete his musical education, he is content to have the girl.

Jean Muir is opposite O'Brien. The picture introduces two famous radio personalities, James Melton, who plays the protege role, and Jane Froman. More familiar screen names in the supporting cast are Frank McHugh, William Ricciardi, Marie Welson, Eddie Conrad and Frank Fay.

Additional to the showmanship worth of story content and personalities are the production values which present several songs by Harry Warren and Al Dubin and dance numbers staged by Busby Berkeley and Bobby Connolly. Production is being directed by William Keighley, maker of "Special Agent" and "G Men."

THE MELODY LINGERS ON

Reliance

Despite meaning easily read into title, this is not a musical picture. To be sure, that element has a function, but at the most it is only a pleasing contrast to the production's basic theme. Essentially it is a moving human interest drama. It's the story of a love frustrated by the tragedy of war and then the story of a mother's sacrificing struggle to be near the child of her last night in the world romance, her efforts to influence his life, the tragedies and disappointments she encounters and her final triumph when she hears him singing the grand operatic music on the same stage in La Scala Opera House where when she first heard his father singing it the flame of love was kindled in her soul.

The picture is adapted from a novel by Lowell Brentano with screen play by Ralph Block and Philip Dunne. It is being directed by David Burton.

Josephine Hutchinson, featured in several Warner pictures, occupies the leading role. Opposite her, playing a dual role, is George Houston, noted concert stage, radio and operatic singer, making his screen debut. In looks, personality and potential screen adaptability, he looms as a promising screen figure. Principal supporting players include John Halliday, currently in "Dark Angel"; Mona Barrie, Helen Westley, Laura Hope Crews, David Scot, Walter Kingsford and Ferdinand Gottschalk. Minor players are characteristic of the Italian locale.

The kind of enduring mother love and sacrifice that this story embraces is not new, but it is of the type that in previous pictures has demonstrated its entertainment and showmanship value. Naturally serious and of the kind that plays upon the more tender emotions, it promises to be an attraction of absorbing in-

THE MILKY WAY

Paramount

The material of which this production is being spun seems to be more suitable to the talent and personality of its star, Harold Lloyd, than anything that has been provided for him in several years. It essentially is of the type that, in earlier pictures, established him as one of the screen's most universally popular favorites.

The picture, adapted from a recently successful stage play of the same title, is to be given sensational production values. The Dionne quintuplets may be picturized in it. It's about a young fellow, currently a milkman, shy and bashful, who, during the period of youth, was only able to learn how to duck. Becoming embroiled in a fracas with a champion pug, he accidentally creates a situation which makes him a prize fighter.

To the entertainment-showmanship worth of the story and production must be added the box office value of the supporting names. To be seen supporting Lloyd, last in "Catspaw," are Adolphe Menjou, recently in "Broadway Gondolier," Verree Teasdale, Helen Mack, William Gargan, Dorothy Wilson, currently in "In Old Kentucky," George Barbier and Lionel Stander.

The comedy showmanship significance of the picture is accentuated by the director chosen to handle it. Leo McCarey made several Marx Brothers features, "Roman Scandals," and more lately "Ruggles of Red Gap."

EAST OF JAVA

Universal

Adapted from the novel, "Tiger Island," written by Gouverneur Morris, this is a thrill packed yarn of shipwreck on the typhoon-swept Indian Ocean and wild danger in a steaming beast-infested tropical island jungle. Featuring Charles Bickford, who has made his greatest entertainment reputation in similarly volatile thrill melodramas, it is packed to the hilt in story content and production values with the maximum amount of elements that call for screeches and screams.

A story of men and a woman who must fight for their lives against the raging elements, the seething desires of their own baser natures and the terrorizing menace of hunger maddened animals, it is action from start to finish. While melodrama prevails, it is not, however, without a unique comedy contrast.

As it is being produced, it is making no pretense to being anything other than what it actually is. Evidence of that is seen not only in the choice of the star, who has risen to a new popularity on account of his work in "Farmer Takes a Wife," but also in the selection of the director, George Melford, who has specialized in graphic thrill pictures, as is indicated by such pictures as "Java Head," "Flame of the Yukon" and "East of Borneo."

There being undeniably different showmanship availability in the character of the production, there is also unusual unique interest creating quality in the cast personnel. It includes Elizabeth Young, seen recently in "There's Always Tomorrow"; Leslie Fenton, lately in "Men Without Names" and "Murder in the Fleet"; Frank Albertson, currently in "Alice Adams," Seigfried Rumann, Clarence Muse, Ivan Simpson, Ray Turner and Torben Meyer.

edy, it merges two kinds of entertainment—the sophistication of the bluebloods and the amazement of a couple of slap-happy pugs in finding themselves in circumstances they never had envisioned. Hired to train a socialite whose ambition it is to sock his no-good wastrel brother-in-law, they create a riot in 400 circles, help their protege realize his ambition, expose the villain, win a fight for themselves and also a couple of girls.

The quality of story content, which will be amply embellished by proper production values assuring correct atmosphere, suggest unique and lively showmanship. This potentiality is furthered by the worth of the players presented. Lee Tracy and Roscoe Karns will be seen as the pugs. Kent Taylor is the aristocratic hero and Gordon Westcott the conniving villain. The two girls, who with Tracy and Karns account for the comedy and romance, are Grace Bradley and Florence Lake. Supporting players included are Gail Patrick, G. P. Huntley, Jr., Billy Lee, Ferdinand Munier, Akim Tamiroff and Sarah Edwards.

The story is an original by James Gleason and Richard Taber, with screen play by Sam Hellman, Frances Martin and Eddie Moran. Direction is by James Cruze.

Promising to be fast and furious fun, commercializing of the picture necessitates a brand of showmanship that will accentuate that entertainment quality. While much of the action concerns prize fighting, care should be taken that that element is not allowed to dominate over the principal motivating theme—domestic comedy drama, very familiar to ordinary folk, but hardly looked for in the lives of the denizens of the upper social strata.

SYLVIA SCARLET

Radio

Because of the success of "Alice Adams," Katharine Hepburn, who has the title role in this picture, is the showmanship feature which will receive the most intensive exploitation attention. Again occupying a high place in public esteem, this production, because of her, is bound to be the beneficiary of wide popular reaction.

The story, a dramatic romance in character, is one that lends itself readily to Miss Hepburn's particular talents and personality. Based upon a popular novel of the same title, the locale is England presently timed. With her father and dressed as a boy, Miss Hepburn joins another small time crook and embarks upon a career of petty thievery. One adventure taking a disastrous turn, the three make their intended victim one of their party and they become a group of roaming troubadours, entertaining hinterland crowds. This brings her in contact with a young artist. When it is discovered that she is not a girl, romance that has a conflicting contrast is developed. The anti-climax brings the death of her father, the elopement of her artist friend's sweetheart with her erstwhile partner, and romantic happiness for Miss Hepburn.

The cast supporting Miss Hepburn is of exceptional interest. It presents Brian Aherne, currently in "I Live My Life," as the artist. Edmund Gwenn, introduced to screen fans in "The Bishop Misbehaves," is her father, and Cary Grant, soon to be seen in "The Last Outpost," is the petty smuggler-crook. The Role of Aherne's deserting inamorata is played by Natalie Paley. Supporting players include Dennie Moore, Mrs. Pat Campbell, E. E. Clive, Olaf Hytten, Mae Beatty, Colin Campbell and several less known performers.

Direction is by George Cukor, who made "David Copperfield" and previously handled Miss Hepburn in "Little Women" and "A Bill of Divorcement."

ENEMY OF MAN

Warner

A production that is historical in character, this picture treads a path widely divergent from the usual biographical formula. It's the factual story of Dr. Louis Pasteur, famous French scientist, whose then amazing and unorthodox adventures in chemical experiment completely revolutionized the practice of medicine and laid the first fundamentals of preventative healing and curing as they are modernly established. The story, likewise, which cues the title, is a story of war. It is absorbingly different in that it deals with a vital dramatic subject—man's fight against his greatest enemy, disease.

Such pictures as "Arrowsmith," "Life Begins" and even the romantically colored "The White Parade," having effectively pioneered the way for this kind of entertainment, "Enemy of Man" tells a character drama story just as differently thrilling as is the atmospheric accompaniment. The vein of human interest that permeates it is one potentially promising of making a deep impression. It's the story of Pasteur, first exponent of clean sterilization in surgery, who brought down upon his head the wrath of contemporary medical practitioners. A story of heart break and disappointment but eventual personal triumph, it tells of his success in antiseptic treatment of mothers at childbirth, his success in eradicating anthrax and his final great contribution, the discovery of an antitoxin for rabies. Substantiating this is a heart appealing love story concerning Pasteur's personal life and the romance of his daughter with a young doctor who believed in the great medical science trail-blazer.

The production boasts supplementary exploitation features as worthy from a commercial standpoint as the theme. Paul Muni plays the role of Dr. Pasteur. Josephine Hutchinson, currently in "The Melody Lingers On," is his wife, and Anita Louise, now in "Here's to Romance," his daughter. They, with Donald Woods, carry the principal story threads. In support, picturizing some of the famous figures of the time, the later years of the past century, will be seen Henry O'Neill, Raymond Brown, Fritz Leiber, Porter Hall, Halliwell Hobbes as Dr. Lister, another name that has conjured to this day in the field of medical sterilization; Dickie Moore, Niles Welch, and Walter Kingsford and Iphigenie Cahtiglioni as the last emperor and empress of France.

The picture is being directed by William Dieterle, sure to be a talked about personality at the time this picture is released on account of "Midsummer Night's Dream," and also one who has demonstrated outstanding ability to handle pictures of this type.

THE NEW FRONTIER

Republic

This is a story of how law and order was brought to the new west. Not a western in the strict interpretation of that term, it is an outdoor, action-packed adventure yarn which carries a charming romantic contrast to its vibrant drama.

The story is an original screen play by Robert Emmett and is being directed by Carl Pierson. It features John Wayne, star of many Monogram action pictures, in the kind of role that should not only please his many fans but also be of more than usual interest to theatre patrons who ordinarily evince but little interest in this character of entertainment. In the story, the town of Frontier is established to be the home of honest, industrious, patriotic and religious pioneers. The unsavory element, however, quickly gets hold of things, until Wayne, forming an association with a regenerated old bandit friend, and inspired by the minister leader of the right-thinking citizens, cleans up the outlaws in a sensational battle in the dark.

Though romantic love interest is of but little significance, there is more than the necessary quota with which to interest feminine patrons as the love angle is handled by Wayne and Muriel Evans. While the story content is the natural dominating exploitation asset, the worth of the supporting cast should not be overlooked. Included in the cast are Murdock MacQuarrie, Allan Cavan, Mary McClaren, Warner Richmond, Alfred Bridge, Sam Flint and Earl Dwire.

BAD BOY

20th Century-Fox

Though written by Vina Delmar, author of "Bad Girl," and starring James Dunn, who leaped to screen prominence in that picture, "Bad Boy" is an entirely new story and in no wise a sequel to the earlier production. Being spun of the same human entertainment quality, blending the values of the heart appeal of young love, infectious comedy and thrilling drama, here the story is presented from the boy's angle rather than the girl's.

It's the story of a modern boy; not a bad boy, but one who through force of circumstances has been given an unsavory character. Habituate of pool rooms, associate of petty gamblers, he meets a girl, falls in love with her, only to have paternal objections blast their roseate dream. Meeting clandestinely, the girl inspires him to make a real struggle to become a worthwhile member of society. Married, secretly and under assumed names, their lot is such as to stimulate the maximum amount of audience sympathy as one discouragement after another piles up on the young couple. In the end there is a break that should have everybody cheering as the bad boy comes into his own to prove the girl's faith in him.

Dunn is in the title role, and Dorothy Wilson, now appearing in "In Old Kentucky," is the girl. Louize Fazenda will be seen in the role of Dunn's understanding landlady, with John Wray and Beulah Bondi as Miss Wilson's parents. Supporting players include Victor Kilian, Luis Alberni, and Allen Vincent, who is Dunn's romantic rival.

Direction is by John Blystone, who handled several Will Rogers pictures. The screen play is by Allan Rivkin.

CAPTAIN BLOOD

Warner

Swashbuckling adventure on the high seas under the black flag of piracy is the keynote of this production. It is based on Rafael Sabatini's novel of the same title, one of the most thrilling of the myriad tales of the colorful 17th Century sea rovers, subjects which in fact, fiction and picture have convincingly demonstrated their entertainment worth.

Being produced on a lavish and extensive scale, no effort has been minimized in obtaining authenticity in tremendous settings and costuming properly reflecting the time of its happening. Great fleets of massive, heavy-batteried sailing vessels have been constructed, and parts of forts, buildings and cities of the old and new world have been completely detailed. Unusual care was taken in the selection of the featured players and the principal supporting cast members.

Briefly, without consideration of the tremendous production features, it's the story of Michael Blood. A young doctor, innocent of conspiracy, is convicted of conniving in revolution. Practically sold into slavery, transported to the Hell on English plantations in the tropical West Indies, he escapes captivity, captures a pirate ship, and turns buccaneer himself. The world his enemy, he ravages ships of countrymen and enemy alike. War breaking out between England and France, he first saves the girl who, holding him her bondsman, also loves him; then defeats the French fleet. This act restores him to freedom, makes him governor of the island on which he knew only torture. Saved from death, he takes the girl on common ground and extends the hand of friendship to the man who had made him the object of his vicious cruelty.

Errol Flynn, seen in minor parts in several Warner pictures, has the role of Captain Blood. Olivia de Haviland, also a minor player previously, but starred in "Midsummer Night's Dream," has the principal feminine role. The extensive supporting cast includes a host of known screen names, listing Robert Barratt, Lionel Atwill, Henry Stephenson, Ross Alexander, Forrester Harvey, Guy Kibbee, David Torrence, Frank McGlynn, Sr., Pedro de Cordoba, Mary Forbes, Ivan Simpson, Jessie Ralph, Donald Mack and Hobart Cavanaugh, among many others.

HIS NIGHT OUT

Universal

Comedy, the kind of mixed up farcical foolishness that sets the picture's star, Edward Everett Horton, is the entertainment and exploitation essence of this production. The yarn is an original by Charles Christensen, with screen play by Doris Malloy and Harry Clork, who, in addition to having collaborated on many features, have just completed "The Milky Way," Harold Lloyd's forthcoming show. Direction is by William Nigh, recently credited with the Zasu Pitts-Hugh O'Connell farce, "She Gets Her Man."

The entertainment quality of the story has definite commercial value. It has Horton in a typical role, and old wonanish purchasing agent for a chain drug company. Browbeaten by the owner, Robert McWade, also in a typical irascible role, he believes he is suffering from a mortal ailment and decides he is living on borrowed time. Bent on a grand splurge, he withdraws money, goes on a spree with stenographer Irene Hervey and light of his love. When bonds belonging to McWade are stolen, he is considered the thief. Ensues a grand mixup with a load of gangsters presided over by Jack LaRue, as a result of which Horton recovers the bonds, rounds up the crooks, after a series of wild carryings on, all of which have a sock comedy twist, and proves himself a hero that makes him forget all about his physical troubles.

Entertainment character of the production being somewhat similar to that of his recent Fox feature, "$10 Raise," it seems to be potentially of the caliber that audiences will take to themselves quickly, and requiring only the proper application of the right kind of showmanship to create plenty of attention.

A NIGHT AT THE OPERA

MGM

At last the Marx Brothers are in motion pictures. Not that the three who appear here have not been in them before, or that this one has been so long in preparation. But here, and it is of unique showmanship value, the Brothers are in a picture that has a plot, something not in their gag, hokum, insane without rhyme or reason comedy of previous features from "Cocoanuts" to "Duck Soup." For them, it's new and revolutionary, and, also unlike their former efforts, the title emphatically cues and practically tells the story.

What "A Night at the Opera" means as a showmanship feature is not to be found in a mere listing of the cast, credits and brief synopsis. The story behind the picture is more illustrative.

Of importance is the fact that the picture is an Irving Thalberg production and has been sent through the mill with all the care and attention to detail for which he is noted. Producer of many serious pictures, it must be remembered that he was the maker of "Caught Short," that did much to start Marie Dressler on the road to fame and proved a box office bonanza.

The story is by the ace humorists George Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind. Kaufman did "Cocoanuts" and collaborated on such features as "Dinner at Eight" and "Once in a Lifetime." Both collaborated on the stage hits "Of Thee I Sing" and "Let 'Em Eat Cake." It is being directed by Sam Wood, who is credited with scores of successful comedies.

Before a foot of film was shot, the material was taken out, with the Marxes featured, on a legitimate stage tour up and down the Pacific Coast. As a result its substance was given a preview public test in the crucible of audience opinion. Then work was started in the studio, but not until it was certain that the picture's entertainment had been systematically planned.

For story purposes, the comedy contrast being easily imagined. The locales are Italy, an ocean liner and a New York opera house. In them are blended the audience and showmanship appeal of comedy, romantic love interest and that of operatic music from "I Pagliacci" and "Il Travatore" and a modern composition, "Alone," by Arthur Freed and Nacio Herb Brown.

The trio, constituting themselves self-appointed managers, take over the destinies of a pair of unknown songbirds, Kitty Carlisle and Allan Jones, who made his debut in "Reckless." Picking on Walter King, whose frantic jealousy almost wrecks the romance between Miss Carlisle and Jones, who are their meal ticket, they make hash of the performance in the opera, appearing one minute on the stage, next in the orchestra pit and then among the audience as candy butchers. They create a panic, which becomes real when fire breaks out, but taking the center of stage for merry mad moments of farcical foolishness they quiet audience fears with their crazy antics.

In addition to names mentioned, the feature will also present Siegfried Rumann, Margaret Dumont, who was leading lady in the stage version of "Cocoanuts," Edward Keane, Robert Emmett O'Connor and Lorraine Bridges.

ploitation. Dealing with the influence of the government C.C.C. camps and the manner in which they not only assay but actually succeed in effecting the physical and mental regeneration of thousands of boys caught in the vortex of financial chaos, it is a newsy, action-packed drama of real life that promises to be unusual entertainment.

While a note of realism keys the character of the production, the necessity for theatrical contrasts in drama, romantic love interest and spectacular thrill are not being ignored. It deals with two young fellows. One decides to join the C.C.C. service because he believes that through it he can make something of himself. Another joins him, going along because he has no other place to go. Both are rebellious to the semi-military discipline, qualities all to be shown in production values. The service succeeds in making men of both, but woven in is an appealing story of romantic conflict and sacrifice as well as personal heroism in a forest fire.

Joe Morrison and Paul Kelly are the two central characters. Rosalind Keith, seen in "'Annapolis Farewell," is the girl about whom the love interest and conflict centers. Featured in the supporting cast are Chic Sale, William Frawley, Baby LeRoy, Dean Jagger and David Holt. Minor parts are assigned to Gloria White, Florence Nash, Oscar Polk, Allan Cavan and Irving Bacon.

The story, the title of which has more than ordinary showmanship value, is a screen original by Arthur Lake and Sherman Rogers. Direction is by Edward Cline.

COLLEGIATE

Though the title might create the impression, this production is decidedly not a rah-rah football picture. Rather, with its cast featuring a number of Paramount's front running comedy stars, it's a novel, frolicsome farce.

Adapted from Alice Duer Miller's popular and widely read story, "Charm School," the screeen play is by Walter DeLeon and Francis Martin, with Ralph Murphy, who served similarly on "MacFadden's Flats" and "Men Without Names," directing. The music and lyrics, which feature a glamorous and eyefilling bevy of singing dancing girls, are by Richard Whiting and Harry Revel and Sam Coslow and Mack Gordon.

In idea, closely following the text of the published original and lavishly mounted in production values, the yarn has Jack Oakie, currently in "Big Broadcast of 1936," as a red hot Broadway playboy, inheriting a girl's school. Without a dime, but with his trusted pals, Lynne Overman, a butler, and Ned Sparks, a publicity man whose main job is keeping publicity out of the papers, and with Joe Penner, a rich dumb cluck tagging along, he goes to take charge. The school turns out to be an old fashioned seminary for girls. Hiring Peggy Hopkins Joyce to be charm teacher, the quartet turn the academy into an ultra modern institution. With Sparks' sensational publicity campaign blazing the way, the quartet specialize in teaching singing, dancing, the arts of makeup and make-love, and all the sports indoor and outdoor. The education works for everybody as romance grabs Oakie in the person of Frances Langford and Penner can't get away from Betty Grable.

The assurance that this production is something refreshingly new in the line of fun and mirth naturally looms as the angle to allure patron attention.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY

MGM

Seemingly destined to be one of the most important in the industry's history, this production commands the most understanding showmanship attention. The title graphically and completely conveys the whole idea of the story. It is a great adventure story—actual historic fact, truth stranger than the wildest dreams of fiction—and in all the thrilling annals of the sea there is no more fascinating yarn spun than that which is here related. A subject that has engrossed the interests of historians and writers of popular imaginative fiction, it deals with a mutiny which changed the naval history of an empire, founded a new race that is still extant, and as it blends fact with theatrical liberties encompasses every element of general appeal that has any entertainment or showmanship value.

There are three thrilling chapters in the story. The storm wracked voyage of HMS Bounty from England to Tahiti; the fear-maddened crew further terrorized by the vicious cruelties of a harsh taskmaster, Lieutenant Bligh. The landing and the glorious days as the crew mingle with the natives. The start of the return voyage. The crew, the memory of idyllic days fresh in mind, rebelling against Bligh's tyranny. Bligh, Byam and a few loyal supporters set adrift in an open boat. The mutineers under Christian returning to Tahiti, picking up a number of native men and women, sail endlessly seeking refuge, until they come to Pitcairn Island. Years pass, a new race is created, as the Bounty is destroyed to shut off forever any possibility of escape. Byam and Bligh succeeded in returning to England with Byam to be tried for mutiny, only to denounce Bligh, whose exposure results in his restoration to the King's naval service.

Long in the making, a fact that bespeaks the care and effort exerted to assure authenticity in every detail, MGM's purse strings were pulled wide open, but for every penny spent full value has been returned. Evidence of this is found in the strength of the cast, the selection of the director and the knowledge that the picture is an Irving Thalberg production.

as the prime mutineer, Christian, and Franchot Tone as Byam. There is no outstanding feminine name in the cast although Spring Byington is seen as Tone's mother. Two native girls, Mamo Clark and Maria Castaneda, account for the romantic love interest with Gable and the others at Tahiti and Pitcairn Island. The supporting cast lists Herbert Mundin, Eddie Quillan, Dudley Digges, Donald Crisp, Henry Stephenson, Francis Lister, Ian Wolfe, Ivan Simpson, DeWitt Jennings, Stanley Fields, Wallace Clark, Vernon Downing and Dick Winslow. Additionally there are hundreds of native South Sea Islands men and women as well as British officials and personalities.

The picture was directed by Frank Lloyd, whom showmen know as one of the ace directors, and one needs but recall such features as "The Sea Hawk" and the more recent "Cavalcade" to appreciate what he stands for.

LOVE SONG
(Tentative Title)

Radio

In theme this is a charming love story. For its substantiating production quality, with Lily Pons, noted diva, in the leading role, it incorporates the value of operatic music. For quick exploitation availability, it presents a personality, Henry Fonda, who in two pictures, the current "Farmer Takes a Wife" and the forthcoming "Way Down East," has leaped to popular favor. It supports these qualities with a choice cast which includes Eric Blore, now in "Top Hat"; Osgood Perkins, Lucien Littlefield, Esther Dale, Paul Porcasi, Lucille Ball and Scott Beckett. Furthering these factors the picture is being directed by John Cromwell, maker of such features as "The Silver Cord," "Ann Vickers," "Of Human Bondage" and more recently "Village Tale" and "Jalna."

A great love serves as the story's motivating plot. Localed in Paris, Miss Pons, a promising singer, runs away to escape the monotony of endless practice. At a carnival she meets an ambitious but unsuccessful composer. He is amazed to awake next morning and find they are married. Despite her promise he insists upon supporting her and descends to plebian tasks to accomplish this. Through an accident, Miss Pons meets a noted impresario, and parting from her unable-to-understand husband, her singing makes her the operatic toast of Europe. With his wife gone, Fonda loses all ambition. But she, still believing that there is merit to his operatic composition, rearranges it as a musical comedy which upon presentation in London makes the unsuspecting Fonda the more famous of the two. The result is Miss Pons' retirement from the stage to become a dutiful wife.

While capitalizing operatic music, which previous pictures have popularized as an entertainment feature, that is not the production's sole exploitation asset. The character of the story, together with the fanfare that should mark Lily Pons' screen debut, plus the pull that Fonda's name has, should readily blend themselves into publicity to create an interest for the pictures.

THE GREAT IMPERSONATION

Universal

The title being aptly appropriate, the production is adapted from one of the most popular of E. Phillips Oppenheim's many novels of romance and intrigue. Colorful and absorbing from start to finish, it deals exclusively in enthralling entertainment elements. Factually it is the story, cleverly premised and developed, of a great impersonation. Its locales are German East Africa and London; the time immediately prior to and in the early days of the World War. The screen play is by Lieut. Frank Wead, a credit that cues its character, and Eve Greene. Direction is by Alan Crosland.

The story, with Edmund Lowe assuming a dual role, is that of a British explorer who, bearing a striking resemblance to a renegade German, is presumably murdered. Returning to his own English home, supposedly in true personal identity but actually the agent of a German munitions ring, bent on laying England impotent upon the outbreak of war, he encounters a series of hair-raising adventures, the entertainment-exploitation quality of which is evident. In the climax, with danger threatening his domestic life as well as the life of his country, he emerges in true identity as an English hero.

Choice of Lowe for the dual lead role keys the production's name value cast. This features Valerie Hobson as the wife who almost but not quite recognizes him until the climax. Vera Engels, Lumsden Hare, Marjorie Gateson, Henry Mollison, Henry Kolker, Leonard Mudie, Brandon Hurst, Murray Kinnell, Charles Waldren and Esther Dale.

Though there is an atmosphere of war menace, particularly in the later part, the show is not a war picture. Rather, it is a unique mystery drama, chock full of all the tricky elements.

Warner Opening Houses In New Haven Territory

Three closed Warner theatres in the New Haven territory will be reopened by September 20th. The Broadway, Norwich, a subsequent-run house, will resume operation under the direction of Angelo Sette, who was connected with the Roger Sherman in New Haven for four years. Agreement Sought On Beecroft Houses

An agreement for administration of the Beecroft theatre properties is to be sought by attorneys at Madison, Wis., for interested groups at an early conference.

Further testimony on reorganization plans of the Beecroft Building Company, owner of the Orpheum, Strand and Parkway, all at Madison, is to be presented, and steps considered necessary to give the houses an earning capacity sufficient to take care of outstanding bonds will be discussed.

It has been intimated that a change of management of the theatres, now operated by the Ashley Theatre Company, may be asked. Testimony at earlier hearings have disclosed that the company and its officers received $50,967 in profits and salaries in 1934, while auditors' reports showed the Ashley company to have received a net profit of $33,912 during the same year.

Total value of the three houses is placed at $765,000, while the sum due bondholders of the Beecroft Company totals $1,191,673, or $426,673 above the appraisal figures.

Canadian Circuit Takes Universal, Warner Films

The Famous Players-Canadian Corporation of Toronto has closed two important product deals that will supply the circuit's houses with a large part of its product for the coming year. The entire lineups of both Universal and Warner Brothers have been contracted for showing in the 187 theatres operated by the corporation in 80 cities. James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Universal, closed the deal for his company, while N. L. Nathanson, president of the Canadian corporation, represented the circuit. Andy W. Smith, Jr., acted for Warners in signing the houses for the entire output of features and shorts of the Warner Brothers, First National and Cosmopolitan production units.

Studio Club Formed By Radio's Employees

"The RKO Studio Club" has been formed by employees of the RKO Radio Studios in Hollywood, to foster social activity and to provide a plan for social welfare among the company's 2,500 employees on the west coast.

A board of governors, with a representative from each department, was recently elected at a meeting of the organization attended by over 1,000 members.

USC Adds Film Courses

The University of southern California will include courses in cinematography in its curriculum starting this fall, according to university heads. Actors, writers and studio technicians now employed in Hollywood will aid the faculty in giving the courses which will include lectures on camera technique, sound recording, dramatic expression and music in motion pictures. Actual production of student films also is planned.

Lansing Holden Signed

Lansing C. Holden, noted architect, painter and etcher, has been signed by Pioneer Pictures as a color director, to work on the two color pictures the company will produce this year under Merian C. Cooper.

Moranz Making 26 Cartoons

Moranz Associates, Inc., has completed the first of a new series of 26 animated cartoons to be titled "Celebrities on Parade," each of which will feature a number of well known personages. Charles G. Whitehead and George Orth, associated with Moranz, said the concern also had completed seven of a series of 13 cartoons in color.

Gets Finance Post

Joseph Sloane, of the Philadelphia law firm of Wolf, Bloch and Shore, who has represented Warner Bros. on code cases and other legal matters, has been appointed senior counsel of the Department of Revenue of Pennsylvania, with jurisdiction of the amusement tax division. The appointment has aroused considerable comment in Philadelphia independent circles because of Mr. Sloane's circuit contacts and since he will have the power to investigate all theatre business. Mr. Sloane resigned from the law firm.

Editors to Get Credit

In the future Edward Small, president of Reliance Pictures, will give his film editors screen credit. He made this decision in acknowledgment of the work of Grant Whytock, chief film editor at Reliance, who worked on the set of "Red Salute" with Director Sidney Lanfield, who reduced the footage before scenes were shot.

Sees Theatre Gains In Argentine Field

Theatre business in the Argentine is expected to show a decided improvement next season as compared to the period just passed, according to Monroe Isen, Universal manager in the South American country, now in New York for conferences with N. L. Manheim, Universal foreign sales manager.

The 20 to 25 per cent loss in theatre business this season will largely be regained, in his opinion, with crops moving, farmers getting cash and more money in circulation. Mr. Isen will be in New York until October 12.

CHICAGO NOTES

The Louis-Baer fight pictures opened at the Palace Thursday with "Top Hat," now in the fourth week.

Nate Gross, reporter on the Chicago American, scored a swell scoop when he corralled Elaine Barrie and by telling his rival reporters she was a new "sobbie" on the American, got an exclusive story and pictures.

Ray Coffin, of Des Moines, spent several days here last week attending to Affiliated Enterprises affairs.

Week after week there's one lad in the loop that clicks with a grand performance. That chap is Mark Fisher of the Oriental who is one emsee that knows how to pace a show and keep everyone happy. Mark's songs usually rate as much applause as the headliners and that is plenty.

Thirteen Essaness houses formerly gave away dishes and kitchenware. Now the number is down to three with chances that the policy will be dropped by all of them within thirty days. Cash awards for Bank Night and Screeno caused the change.

Bill Koch, manager of the Tiffin, is the only manager who runs a house with the lobby done in a "dash of lavender." It looks veddy, veddy pretty.

Emil Stern, Clyde Eckhardt, and J. M. Lansinger are a few Chicagoans who were New York visitors the past week.

Shaindel Kalish, local dramatic actress whose work here has been of the sensational nature, leaves soon for Hollywood to start for Universal. Her husband, Charles Freeman, will get a dialogue director's job at Universal 'tis reported.

Ann Hausman, after just recovering from a sprained elbow while cycling, is again on the casualty list. This time Ann is nursing an injured knee. Which probably accounts for this:

FOR SALE: Lady's bicycle, badly bent. Call A. H., care of Allied of Ill.

"Jalna," the John Cromwell Radio production, has just finished three weeks' loop run at the World theatre.

Modernization of the Avon and Clifford theatres got under way this week. Houses will be opened by Essaness in about 60 days.

Norma Shearer, who went through here with husband Irving Thalberg the other day, told us that she was in the East three weeks and out of that time spent only six days in New York City. The rest of the time was "weekending in the country." Her next trip, she states, will be spent entirely in the city. She says she lives in the "country" in California and that's why she wants to spend her time in the city when she goes East.

Hodges Garnett Manager

Tay Garnett has appointed Douglas Hodges general manager of the recently formed Tay Garnett Productions in Hollywood. Mr. Hodges has been handling publicity for Mr. Garnett and will accompany the director on his trip to the Orient to make background scenes for future productions.

W. H. Parsons Dead

William Henry Parsons, militant crusader against obscenity and vice, died suddenly late last week of a heart attack at Rye, N. Y., at the home of his sister, Mrs. David S. Cowles. He was 76 years old. For the past twenty-three years Mr. Parsons served as an officer of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, acting as treasurer from 1912 to 1930 and holding the office of president from 1930 until his death. Obscene plays, motion pictures and books were constantly the targets of the society's efforts under Mr. Parson's leadership.

Rankins' New Theatre Described in Booklet

Harland Rankin has announced the completion of his new Plaza theatre, Tilbury, Ont., in a most effective and novel fashion. He has drawn up a small booklet titled "1934 Souvenir of Tilbury and Its New Theatre."

The booklet concerns itself chiefly with the history and development of Tilbury and contains many pages of advertisements contributed by leading merchants.

How the new theatre was made possible, how the name was chosen, what type pictures will be played, features of the new house and finally a dissertation on sound equipment, are all told in prominent pages.

The new house will be of Spanish design, inside and out, and will seat 450 persons. The building is of fire-proof construction and has several added features such as a sound-proof box for mothers "to take their naturally fidgety and noisesome children and enjoy the show without annoying any of the patrons."

Manchuria Imports And Receipts Increase

by CHIKUSHI TANI

Tokyo Correspondent

Manchurian film imports and box-office receipts are on the increase, reports indicate. Since the Chinese Eastern Railway was taken over from the Russians by the Manchurian Government the Japanese population along the line has increased steadily. This is especially true of the educated Japanese.

Audiences have shown marked gains during the past two years in Dairen, Mukden, Shintsing and Harbin, the rise amounting to about 20 per cent.

The popularity of film types is practically the same as in Japan—musicals with jazz songs and dance music. No Japanese films have been produced to fill this need, so all of the current supply is imported.

Gessner, instructor in English at the university, will be in charge. Sidney Howard will be the first lecturer, with a talk on "The Differences Between Writing a Screen Play and a Stage Play."

WLS TO MAKE FILM OF RADIO BARN DANCE

Station Officials Engage Riesner to Direct; Exhibitors Await Decision on Nontheatrical Places

A motion picture enterprise which may be the forerunner to something new in the production field gets underway in Chicago this month when radio station WLS starts to make a feature picture based on its WLS Barn Dance Radio Show.

A private company has been formed to produce this feature on a comprehensive scale. Burridge Butler, Earl Kurtze, and Glenn Snyder, officials of the radio station, are the company officials who will handle distribution as well as production.

After negotiations with major companies fell through, the WLS concern decided to bring a company of technicians from Hollywood to make the picture. Charles "Chuck" Riesner has been engaged as director, and the others of the technical crew are understood to be persons who have been associated with him.

The WLS Barn Dance has been playing at the Eighth Street theatre here every Saturday night for the last three years. This week marks the 180th consecutive performance, in this house. The group has been a favorite in midwest radio circles for more than five years and in that time has played to more than six million persons at various times the station has sent out five road companies for personal appearances, making up the units out of the 80 members of the Barn Dance cast.

Want Non-Theatrical Showings

The reason the WLS group is not making the picture in cooperation with a major studio was that they would be prohibited by the film company from exhibiting the picture in non-theatrical places. Because of the large following the radio group has in small communities, by exhibiting the picture in places with larger seating capacities than the 300 to 500 seat theatres they figure the gross would be greatly increased. Another important factor was that the percentage they could demand from theatres was much smaller than if they showed the film under other auspices. Deals pending for the picture, which goes into production September 30, call for at least 50 per cent of the gross, a price that theatre men would not and in most cases could not afford to pay.

Many middlewest small towns have large auditoriums in schools or other public buildings. With tieups with the Farm Bureaus or 4H Clubs these halls, WLS officials believe, could be filled to capacity.

In the larger cities playing of the picture in theatres is desired by the Barn Dance promoters. Many of the larger theatres in this territory have booked the stage attraction and have done a large business. Such circuits as Great States have found the rustic entertainers a big draw. Probabilities are that the feature will be shown in these houses, being spot booked in on desirable dates.

$10,200 in a Day at Fair

In Springfield, Ill., at the State Fair the group grossed $10,200 in one day and turned at least 1,800 persons away. In St. Louis at the National Dairy Show the attraction took in $10,000 in the 16,000-seat amphitheatre.

The cast for the picture will be chosen from among 60 entertainers in the Barn Dance group, with stellar roles for such featured artists as Uncle Ezra, Lulu Belle, Buzz Buzzington, Maple City Four, Spareribs and the Hoosier Hot Shots.

A story with a strictly rural background has been chosen, and the picture will be made in and around Chicago. The studios of Atlas Film company will be used for the interior scenes.

Just what, if any, protest the small town theatre men will make to the showing of the film when it is finished is problematical. Many whose houses were too small to be booked for the stage attraction objected when the show was presented in their towns in opposition to them, and they may go even farther when it appears as a film.

British Lion to Increase Capital

Details of the expected reconstruction of British Lion Film Corporation, Ltd., in London, include an increase of capital from £210,000 to £750,000 and the addition to the board of N. L. Nathanson, head of Famous Players Canadian and Regal, and Andrew P. Holt, once chairman of the Standard Film Co., Ltd., the holding company which sold control of Provincial Cinematograph Theatre, Ltd., to Gaumont British.

The scheme involves the rearrangement of the capital into 1,250,000 preference shares of 10/- value and 2,500,000 ordinaries of 1/-. There is also provision for £300,000 convertible six per cent debenture stock.

Messrs. Smith, Nathanson and Holt are to provide £150,000 in debentures and £25,000 in ordinaries. The offer to existing shareholders, which is expected to provide the further working capital needed, is that the present preferred ordinaries (value 12/6) will be converted into seven and one-half per cent non-cumulative participating preference shares of 10/- value, on the basis of five new shares for four old, with an option to subscribe for one ordinary share, at par, for each preference share held. The present deferred shares, market value 4d, will be exchanged into preference at the rate of 30 old shares for one new and will carry an option of buying new ordinaries at the rate of three to each preference held.

No dividend is to be paid for the current year. Accounts show a profit of £14,891 against £5,801, but all moneys are needed, say the directors, to finance new developments, of which the chief is the addition of a new stage at the beaconsfield studio to enable three pictures to be produced at the same time, and the marketing of the Republic product fixed by Mr. Smith during his recent visit to New York.

Lin Bonner Dead; Coast Publicist

Lin Bonner, veteran newspaperman and well known in publicity in Hollywood, died there last week of pneumonia.

Fifty-one years old at his death, he was news editor of Daily Variety, but his experience over a considerable number of years included posts on the New York World-Telegram and the New York American. Mr. Bonner was with First National in 1920-22 as editor of Contract, that company's house organ, and was one time director of publicity and advertising for Preferred Pictures.

His widow, Mrs. Nan Olsen Bonner, and three sisters survive.

Reliance Pictures Joins the MPPDA

At the quarterly meeting of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, held in New York last week, the application of Reliance Pictures, Inc., for membership in the association was submitted and accepted. Harry M. Goetz, president of Reliance, will represent his company in the association.

Reliance was organized in 1932 and its productions are released through United Artists.

Thornton Fisher Signed

Thornton Fisher, sports writer and cartoonist, and radio commentator has been signed as announcer for several sports subjects to be made for Educational Pictures, some of which he also will assist in the production.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Ambassador

FIGHTING TROOPER, THE: Kermit Maynard—These James Oliver Curwood are pretty good, but they just don't mean a thing at the box office. Running time, 55 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Chesterfield

FORGOTTEN: June Clyde, Lee Kohlmer, William Collier, Jr.—Here is a picture that you better not play. Did not satisfy at all. Played on double bill and it almost ruined the show.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

First Division

RAINBOW'S END: Hoot Gibson—A good story with plenty of comedy relief. This last series of Westerns starring Hoot Gibson is well liked by my patrons. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 21-31.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

SUNSET RANGE: Hoot Gibson—As good as most westerns. Some comedy throughout and action in the last reel.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

First National

BABBITT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—This is a pleasing and entertaining bill. Did fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—One of the funniest pictures ever made by any comedian, and about the best Joe has made to date, though all of them are extra good entertainment. This town likes Joe E. Brown's pictures. Played September 1-2.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien—This did a fair midweek business against medicine show competition.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—We opened our new theatre with this picture to big business and gave 100 per cent satisfaction to all. I have never seen a more entertaining picture in my life. Everything in the picture was great entertainment. Played August 28-29.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—Personally enjoyed this picture. A fine story, good cast, with Josephine Hutchinson as the wife of O'Brien exceptionally well cast. Story appeared serially in leading newspapers, which helped to put it over. Pleased majority of fans with no complaints from anyone. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 18-20.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—Plenty of people have read this story. Not many came to see it. Those that did praised it for being the first to follow a book. Poor gross; those that saw it liked it. Just no attraction to public. Played September 8-10.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering, farmer patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—Not as bad as expected. Many said they liked it better than the "Circus Clown." I consider this Brown's poorest picture, but it still is good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

WOMAN IN RED, THE: Barbara Stanwyck—Fair program picture. Nothing extra.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Fox

CARAVAN: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes—If this had been made shorter and snappier it would have been much better. The story is pleasing and the music is tuneful.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland—A weak story marred this picture. Since the death of the author, Fox is evidently writing this material in the studios and are not doing a very good job of it, if this is a sample. Too bad, for these pictures have been popular.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Shirley's best to date. Pleased just about 100 per cent. Supporting cast grand.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebold, Iowa. General patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Still a top draw and many thought it her best picture. Seems like she is getting a little self conscious. Please, Fox, don't let this happen if you can possibly prevent it. Good supporting cast, too. Played August 23-24.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Broke all records for any Temple picture we have ever had. This one is the best. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 29-31.—R. B. Garvin, Whiteway Theatre, Fredonia, Kan. Rural and small patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Her best to date. Never thought she would make a better one than "Bright Eyes" but she has. Business great. Pleased 100 per cent.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—It might be a grand picture from production standpoint, but from the box office it is one grand flop.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Here's a picture that pleased all and drew considerable extra business on a midweek showing. Gaynor will come back if Fox will be fair with her and give her some more like this. Fonda also very good. The story was interesting. Running time, 90 minutes.—Played September 4-5.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Just a picture. Gaynor has hit bottom or else it takes a partner to make her. This partner didn't do it. Poor patronage and not liked by those that came. Played September 1-3.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—A wonderful title for a small town. Picture gave fair satisfaction, some patrons complaining too slow. Drew the best business of any Janet Gaynor picture in this town in years. Tbis star is not overly popular here. Pleased the old timers more than the young people. Running time, 90 minutes. September 15-17.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: George White, Alice Faye, James Dunn—Pleased a fair crowd on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien—Not the type of picture that O'Brien fans like to see him in. Didn't go over so hot.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien—A good picture that drew a good crowd but pleased only about 60 per cent. Business considerably off as to what it is when George O'Brien appears in a western. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 4-5.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter—Played it weekend to above average crowd. It's a poor aeroplane picture in my estimation, but it did business and seemed to satisfy.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LADIES LOVE DANGER: Gilbert Roland, Mona Barrie—Was agreeably surprised as we found this picture to be much better than we were expecting. This is a mystery story that we would class as better than the average program picture. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 27-28.—Earl D. Massey, Texas Theatre, Killeen, Texas. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—Best business of the year. Played August 22-23.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT FORTY: Will Rogers—There seemed to be a feeling of reverence when we played Will Roger's "Life Begins at Forty." We did better than normal business. Of course, the audiences were pleased. Played September 4-5.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore, Bill Robinson—Perfect entertainment for anyone. America's little sweetheart has a real dramatic part in this and handles it like a veteran; in fact, you forget she's acting.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ORCHIDS TO YOU: John Boles, Jean Muir—Lavish backgrounds, good acting and an appealing story. It especially pleased the ladies. This production is pleasing to the eye and is good entertainment. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 1-3.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—Very pretty show with some fine music. Dixie Lee very good. Played September 1-2.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—My best Saturday for the summer on this.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SILK HAT KID: Lew Ayres, Mae Clark—Saw this in Omaha and consider it good. Plenty of action and comedy. Can be played any day.—John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Neb. Small town patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—One of the first on the new group. Better than expected. Plenty of comedy of the sharpers who do not find the picking so good at a home coming celebration. Can be used any day. Played September 11.—John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Neb. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—This drew rather well with the ladies, and permitted them to cry to their heart's content.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Mascot

BEHIND THE GREEN LIGHTS: Norman Foster, Judith Allen, Sidney Blackmer—Very good picture with general appeal. Second night good business. Blackmer exceptionally good in this and had good supporting cast. Running time, 62 minutes.—Fred J. Case, La Belle Theatre, La Balle, Fla. General patronage.

MGM

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Just fair. Had this been cut down it would have been better.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

CASINO MURDER CASE, THE: Paul Lukas, Alison Skipworth, Donald Cook—An extra good mystery story. Very fine acting by the whole cast. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—This picture was a little old, but did an average business. Second night better than the first. Would call it an extra good program picture but no special. Don't feel bad if you haven't played it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—A swell show liked by everyone and the biggest business in months. Played August 22-24.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Another programmer that slipped in and drew extra business. Can't see why, personally. Not much story and the "happy ending" was obvious from the middle of the picture. However, it drew extra tickets and that's what its purpose is to showmen. Played September 11-12.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering, farming patronage.

MAD LOVE: Peter Lorre, Frances Drake—The producers must have been mad to even attempt such a piece as this. This is certainly a black eye for MGM, whose slogan is "Always Good Pictures." Of course, MGM pictures are, as a rule, good, wholesome entertainment. However, when this major producing firm puts out a bloomer, they become specialists. "Mad Love" is the picture that makes a manager want to hide from view when the cash customers leave the theatre. To have to face an audience on a bank night after subjecting intelligent people to sit through "Mad Love" is enough to turn one's hair gray. "Mad Love" will do more harm to the industry than a thousand ministers of good-will can undo or hope to undo. "Mad Love" is the type of picture that brought about censorship.—William A. Levee, Suffolk Theatre, Riverhead, L. I., N. Y. General patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Charlie Ruggles, Franchot Tone—This pleased the Sunday patrons to perfection. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 8-9.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT: Franchot Tone, Una Merkel—This is a splendid comedy drama. Story entertaining and comedy funny and clean. Great program picture, I say. Played September 10-11.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Leslie Howard. Fredric March—They came back again. They saw it and they liked it. It is just one of those kind that will never die. We repeat on one picture a week and this did as much as any we have had. It is one swell show even yesterday, today and tomorrow.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—A very fine picture that pleased 100 per cent and did better than average business. Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 8-9.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery—Excellent airplane picture that gave very good satisfaction and made a little money. We played this rather old, but it seems as if good pictures don't get old. This picture was suited 100 per cent for Wallace Beery. If you have not played this picture you are missing a good bet. Running time, 89 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Monogram

CHEERS OF THE CROWD: Russell Hopton, Irene Ware—This is a very fine program picture. Entertaining every minute. Lots of favorable comments.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney—We played this to a good crowd Sunday midnight. A good clean college picture, making a nice change.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HONEYMOON LIMITED: Neil Hamilton—Just another program picture with no names and consequently no drawing power. Nice story but that is about all that can be said about it. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 21-22.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Norman Foster, Charlotte Henry—Very well liked by our patrons. Did extra business on it but not enough to justify the price paid. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness.—Although this did not draw as well as "Girl of the Limberlost," my patrons thought it the better picture of the two. Both features drew well and gave universal satisfaction. In fifteen years in pictures I have never been disappointed by the drawing power of a Gene Straton Porter story. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 25-27.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

ACCENT ON YOUTH: Herbert Marshall, Sylvia Sidney—A picture that ought to draw well in big spots. Did not do much here. Personally, I enjoyed it but people wouldn't come out. Those that did see it were satisfied with it. Trailer showed it was a class picture and that kept them away. Played September 6-7.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Sir Guy Standing, Tom Brown—Excellent. Regardless of what your personal idea is, the patrons will like it even if it does not carry a love interest.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan—A real action picture which was very instructive. Lots of action and comedy. Our people liked it and came out to see it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye, Patsy Kelly, Frances Langford—A perfectly made picture; moves along at an interesting pace and delivers to the paying customers a very fine evening's entertainment. There are many interesting broadcast programs in it and a well sustained story that makes it more than okay.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—Here's a good amateur night story with scads of good singing and plenty of wisecracking by Patsy Kelly; in fact, this Kelly girl just about stole the show. Played September 11-12.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—Here's a surprise. At least it slipped upon me. Drew exceptionally well, three times average midweek gross. A honey and well liked by everyone. Not a kick and plenty of good comments. Second night better than first. That is sure music to me. I couldn't see anything exceptional to it but it was more than enjoyable and paid good returns. That's the point. Played September 4-5.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—We were disappointed in our attendance for "The Gilded Lily," which we consider an exceptionally good production. Played September 11-12.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—Didn't see this. Am just as well satisfied. General reports from the patrons was that it was typical Mae West in spite of the fact that Paramount advertising said it was to be different and we advertised it as such. You just can't change Mae. She'll always have that swagger and we will be glad when Paramount ceases to think she would be top allocation. Running time, 71 minutes. Played August 25-26.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: Burns and Allen—Silly? Yes, but the dear public likes it and they turn out to see these stars.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle Nice little light comedy. Bing is acting better (from a dramatic standpoint) than he used to do, and seems to be growing more popular with my people.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Cesar Romero—This is a real good comedy. Mystery football picture. Played in the right season to the right box office crowd. Book it for Fall.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—Our people didn't seem to care much for this picture. As a rule a singer seems to be a poor actor. Joe Morrison sang well but our folks want action, not love. Did only ordinary business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields—Of course, it is hard to shoot to a plane set by "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and this one does not barely reach that proportion. However, most folks like the picture and Fields makes 'em laugh as usual, and it brings in the paying customers.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett—This is a swell picture, with a pleasing romantic story, catchy music and good comedy. It clicked on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PARIS IN SPRING: Mary Ellis, Tullio Carminati—Somehow or other this picture was a complete flop. Patrons made no remarks either way but next two nights showed what they must have said about it. It may please if you haven't anything else to run, but why waste perfectly good playing time on something that will not please when the market is full of real box office attractions. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 1-3.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott—Not as good as others by this author. Drew only average business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 6-7.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Charles "Chic" Sale—This saved my life on county fair week.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—One of the finest entertainment pictures of any season.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHANGHAI: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young—Just a program picture. Draggy and at times uninteresting. No comments and fair patronage. Played September 13.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering, farming patronage.

THIS WOMAN IS MINE: Gregory Ratoff—This Woman is Mine and as far as I am concerned he can keep her. Too bad the lions didn't get her at the start of the picture and save another bad taste in the mouth. Why Paramount booked these two pictures for me on Paramount Week is a mystery. They proved to be the two worst received this year. No more Paramount weeks for me. Our weakest week. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 4-5.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Played this two days after national release date. As far as I could find out, we played it first in Arkansas. At least, ahead of the three biggest cities of the state. Billed it as first showing in Arkansas and the fact it went over as Crosby's best yet. It drew much extra business. Biggest opening in three months. Satisfying to patrons. Played September 15-17.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering, farming patronage.

VIRGINIAN, THE: Gary Cooper—This picture drew well on both Friday and Saturday. Had a nice crowd on Saturday in pouring down rain; in fact, one of our best Saturdays. People wanted to see it and did turn out. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 6.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—Drew well and gave general satisfaction. Played August 29-30.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—This was a good Saturday bill.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Thetare, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katherine Hepburn—A good show and a good cast but it didn't seem to be much of a box office tonic. Running time, 99 minutes. Played September 8-10.—R. B. Garvin, Whiteway Theatre, Fredonia, Kan. Rural and small town patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix—The finest western I have shown on my screen this year. With good crops and increased prices for farm products, country patronage is increasing. And how they like a good western! More business on "The Arizonian" and greater satisfaction than such higher priced pictures as "No More Ladies" and "Dante's Inferno." Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 12-14.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame, Preston Foster—Excellent entertainment for young and old and for every day of the week. Miss Grahame and Mr. Foster are doing some very good acting. Dix is a little miscast but gets away with his part in pretty good shape. RKO is giving us very good pictures. Just keep the good work up. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—Poorest Sunday, Monday, Tuesday business in several months. Too bad they wasted good color on such trash. Picture was not liked by anyone. RKO got all the money. If you have to buy it don't pay any good cash for it. Miriam Hopkins was very good but there was too much the same. Played September 8-10.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—Why, oh why, was it necessary to use such a story on the first new color picture. The prize flop of the year. If the producers would have used this color on a Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers picture what a hit this color would have made. Don't worry about your patrons knowing it is bad before you show it. They will know it all right.—Russell Armentrout, Clarke Theatre, Lousiana, Mo. General patronage.

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer—This is the type of a story we like to see Hepburn in. Played out of place on Friday-Saturday but it held up with our regular patronage on these dates. Running time, 79 minutes. Played September 6-7.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—I played this after "Roberta" and found that these stars will draw even if the picture is old. Good audience response. Wonderful dancing and music. Best Saturday night receipts for five months, when "College Rhythm" was played. There are several CCC Camps near here and they like this type of picture. Played September 7-8.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—Why do they have to spoil a picture with that you-chase-me-and-I'll-chase-you stuff in the last couple of reels? The music and the comedy were fine in the first part of the picture but when they turned it into a slapstick chase at the close, it was ruined. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable—This picture proved to be real box office. It went over swell with the younger set, as it is a college picture. George Barbier is fast becoming my favorite star for making faces and he makes quite a few in this one. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 6-7.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Good picture. Personally did not care as much for it as I thought I would. Didn't draw so well for me. Maybe one reason it didn't hit the right spot for me was Ginger Rogers. She's good and all my patrons seem to like her, but I don't care for her so much. Received many very good comments on this picture. Randolph Scott is good in his part. I'm looking forward to seeing him in "She." Hope RKO will let me use "Top Hat" before it gets too old. That's one of my greatest problems, getting pictures early. RKO has always been pretty good about letting me have them, though. Running time, 12 reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Gingers Rogers, Irene Dunne—Was dubious about running this picture at this late date but many of the customers had seen it three times previously and some came the second night. Astaire and Rogers are, of course, exceptionally good, but the oftener you see the picture the more you think of Irene Dunne. "Roberta" is still good for a repeat. —Fred J. Case, La Belle Theatre, La Belle, Fla. General patronage.

STRANGERS ALL: May Robson—This picture followed Mae West in "Goin' to Town" and, say, what a different Mae. Let's have more May Robsons and less Mae Wests. Played August 28-29.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

State Rights

United Artists

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS: Jack Buchanan, Lili Damita—This picture is made in England and released by United Artists. It is absolutely the best English picture I have ever seen as far as sound, photography and acting goes. I was surprised as to how well known the story was. Did a swell business and pleased almost 100 per cent. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 3.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young —This picture broke all existing house records for us. An excellent picture with a great small town appeal. It outgrossed any picture we have had here by 25 per cent. Played September 1-2.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Very good picture of its kind, but it did not draw at the box office. Patrons in a small town just don't care for this type of picture. It lost money. Running time, 106 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor—Played this picture late. Saw it in Omaha last spring and decided to buy it, book it, and play it. Made up a special window card in regular show print style, promised the patrons a real honest to goodness show and outgrossed any picture new or old to play in this theatre. I am a great admirer of Eddie Cantor myself and he made a lot of new fans here. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 22-24.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

SCARFACE: Paul Muni, George Raft—This is a reissue. It pleased very much but did not make anything on it. If you play this and George Raft is popular in your town (be is here) be sure and mention his name. He is not mentioned in the advertising nor the trailer, but he plays an important part, worth advertising. I wish some company would buy "The Black Pirate" from United Artists and re-issue it. "Scarface" is not released by United Artists. I got in from Goodrow Attractions in New Orleans.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

THUNDER IN THE EAST: Charles Boyer, Merle Oberon—A war picture of strife in the East. Boyer and Oberon do a bang-up job with the picture but it is my opinion that it was a foreign produced picture that United Artists picked up. The recording is a little foggy, although it is W. E. recording. It is doubtful if it will do average business in the small towns. The locale is laid in Japan. Business very much down the second day of run. The fault is that the picture takes too long to tell the story. It drags very badly. Battle scenes are confused in photoing, so that you don't know what it is all about.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Universal

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—My people found this very entertaining. Sullavan is fine in a comedy role.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert—Repeat

M. A. LIGHTMAN, PRES. & GEN'L MGR.

On this one and get the surprise of your life. If your town is five thousand population, remember you didn't show to that many people the first time you had it. Not by a long ways, and you still have several thousand good prospects left that will give you good business. Other companies may have made just as good a picture but not any better.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Lyle Talbot, Heather Angel—I find that Universal has below average draw for me, but this one went over fine. Good at the box office. Played September 4-5.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Douglass Montgomery, Anita Louise—A very fine comedy drama. The star is great and all the cast. Gave splendid satisfaction. Played September 5.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady—A good little program comedy picture that gave satisfaction. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RAVEN, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—A shocker all right and pleased the Saturday crowds. Saturday's about the same always where serial is running, so can't tell if the picture had extra draw. It filled Saturday date perfectly for us. Played September 14.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering, farming patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones—Wish Universal would reissue three or four of Tom Mix's last westerns.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SHE GETS HER MAN: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—One of the best comedy dramas we have played in many a day. Chuck full of entertainment and laughs.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones, Noel Francis—This story differs a little from the ordinary western. It did a good Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Frances Drake, Henry Hull—Very good to less than normal business. Played September 7.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

Warners

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Adolphe Menjou—One of the best musical pictures we ever played. Has everything to make good entertainment. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction here. Played September 8-9.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—We did a fair business on this show and it really deserves more patronage than we had. Powell does some real singing. Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 11-14.—R. B. Garvin, Whiteway Theatre, Fredonia, Kan. Rural and small town patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID, THE: James Cagney—Good lively Saturday bill.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—Plenty of action and a mighty nice little picture that pleased our Friday and Saturday night fans. Kay Francis popular here. George Brent does excellent work as foreman of monster bridge construction, which provides a number of thrills to round out the picture. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 30.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

DAMAGED LOVE: June Colyer—I put off playing this picture as long as I could. Although I did only average business it was considered a great benefit to the community.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HELL FIRE AUSTIN: Ken Maynard—Here is a Tiffany western that can't be beat. Old but good print and it sure pleased.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Amity

GERMANY: Will Rogers—Pretty good one-reeler of its kind. Tinney sounds very much like Rogers. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Educational

ALLEZ OOP: Buster Keaton—Buster has been making some pretty good comedies lately. This was above average, we believe. At least it wasn't ridiculous.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BIG PALOOKA, THE: Harry Gribbon, Vernon Dent, Andy Clyde—Another of the old Mack Sennett comedies. It sure got the laughs here on Saturday night. The last crack that Gribbon made at the end of the comedy got more laughs than anything in many months. The preacher asked him if the girl's father was present to give her away, and Gribbon said: "Who do you think the old man with the gun is, Buffalo Bill?" It's old stuff, but it made the farmers laugh on Saturday and if it's good enough for them it's fine for me. Good print from Goodrow in New Orleans, La. Running time, two reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

DAME SHY: Tuxedo Comedies—A good comedy. Some music and dancing. Running time, two reels.—John Cosner, Sun theatre, Sergent, Neb. Small town patronage.

HARLEM HARMONY: Treasure Chest—Good singing reel enjoyed by all. Running time, nine minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

poorest of these. Running time, 8 minutes.—John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Neb. Small town patronage.

MOTH AND THE SPIDER, THE: Paul Terry-Toons—A good cartoon comedy.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ONE RUN ELMER: Buster Keaton—Another good comedy. Buster as a ball player. Ran this during a ball tournament and had plenty of laughs. Running time, two reels.—John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Neb. Small town patronage.

RADIO RASCALS: Songs and Comedy Hits—Cabin Kids, Hill Billies. A peach of a musical short. The Cabin Kids are plenty good. Needed one more song by Hill Billies to make it perfect. Running time, 9 minutes.—John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Neb. Small town patronage.

MGM

CHAIN LETTER DIMES: Oddities—Interesting and amusing. Brought many laughs.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

CHINESE NIGHTINGALE: Happy Harmonies—Good. Well liked and interesting.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES: No. 2—So goofy, this was really funny.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LOST CHICK, THE: Happy Harmonies—Excellent. As good as the Silly Symphonies with the exception of "Three Little Pigs" and "Big Bad Wolf," but don't cost near as much. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MEMORIES AND MELODIES: Musical Revues—Interesting and pleasing. Color beautiful in bringing out costumes.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

MIKE FRIGHT: Our Gang—If you haven't played this one, then date it at your earliest convenience. Some said it was the best comedy they had ever seen. Running time, 2 reels.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

OLD PIONEER, THE: Happy Harmonies Series—This is one of the best cartoons I have ever seen. The kids went for it in a big way, staying to see it twice. A nice bit of color work, too. Running time, 1 reel.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE HORSE FARMERS: Todd-Kelly—Another good one from this team. Kept the audience in an uproar. Running time, 2 reels.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE: Charles Chase—The funniest Chase comedy I ever saw. Kept the crowd roaring. Some stayed to see it twice to catch all the cracks. A dandy and plenty funny.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

SPRUCIN' UP: Our Gang—Another good, funny Gang comedy. Patrons like them plenty and this one is among the best they've made.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP AND GRAMPY: Betty Boop Cartoon—This is the best Boop cartoon yet. And "Grampy" stole the show from her. Extra well liked.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

BROADWAY HEADLIGHTS: Paramount Varieties—Another good musical short. Running time, 9 minutes.—John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Neb. Small town patronage.

FEMININE RHYTHM: Ina Ray Hutton and Her Melodears—Girl college orchestra that goes to town in a single reel.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

I LIKE MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Eton Boys—Real short musical for a weekend and western lovers. Should be played with westerns.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

make things interesting. Running time, two reels.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

PICKLED PEPPERS: Blonde and Red Head Series—Little better than average comedy, but this isn't saying much. Unless comedies predominate in music these days there isn't a good one in a corload. Running time, 21 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PICNIC PANIC: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—Beautiful subject. Color is getting to be wonderful. So many short subjects are being made in color. Why not more features? Running time, 9 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BAND CONCERT: Mickey Mouse—Well, color helps Mickey Mouse 60 per cent. Popeye has been more popular lately but from the comment on this color-Mickey, believe he will gain it back. By far the best Mickey Mouse we've ever used and we've used them all to date.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

MICKEY'S PAL PLUTO: Mickey Mouse—Old but good. The United Artists exchange in Dallas gives out perfect prints on the old Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphony cartoons. Running time, one reel.—H. G Crawford, Palace Theatre, Palno, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

TORTOISE AND THE HARE, THE: Silly Symphony—This is one of the best of these color cartoons.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

ROMANCE OF THE WEST: Dorothy Dare, Phil Regan—This was grand. Never saw any more beautiful colored photography. And there was a story with plenty of comedy. Best two-reel subject we have played in months.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN HOLLAND: Dorothy Dare, Felix Knight—A splendid short subject. The music is very good, the dancing is interesting and the color tints are beautiful. Many patrons told me how much they liked it and this is something unusual for a short. Running time, 16 minutes.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

Serials

Super-Serial Productions

LOST CITY, THE: William Boyd, Kane Richmond, Claudia Dell—On second chapter. Can't tell much about this yet, but am afraid it's not so good. Three reels to first chapter.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Universal

CALL OF THE SAVAGE: Noah Beery, Jr.—Played the last episode this week, to my great relief. It's a noisy, tiresome thing, with no drawing power.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROARING WEST: Buck Jones. Chapter Number Four—Have withheld reporting on this serial until it run four chapters. I thought "Red Rider," "Gordon of Ghost City" and "Rustlers of Red Dog" were the tops in serials. But here's one I believe better. It's pulling more and more rural patronage each week and causing plenty of favorable talk about town. That's getting them in. Plays every Saturday.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Lumbering-farming patronage.

ROARING WEST: Buck Jones—We have so far played nine chapters of this serial and it is not going over for us. It seems as if it is too rough for the ladies. I think 15 chapters is too long for any serial. Eight or ten weeks is plenty long for any of them.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Patricia Farr, Noah Beery, Jr.—Just finished this. It proved to be a very good serial here. I see that Universal isn't putting Maurice Murphy in the new "Tailspin Tommy" serial which they are now making. Wonder why? He was liked fine here. Grant Withers and William Desmond are in this serial. They are old favorites of mine. Always glad to see them. I wish some company would make a western with Grant Withers. I believe he would be good. He's liked there by all the children. Hope the new "Tailspin" goes over as well as this one did.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

London Films Plans Wider Use of Color

Following the opening of the Technicolor Laboratory at the new Denham Studio, London, which will be ready either in March or April, London Films will make most of its productions in color, Etienne Pallos, general studio manager, revealed in New York prior to his sailing for home last Thursday on the Berengaria following a visit to Hollywood.

"While I was on the coast I saw one of the most wonderful travel films in Technicolor. It was a film made in Japan. We are sold on color," he said.

The new Denham Studios will have five large stages, Mr. Pallos said. There are also three hundred acres of land available for outdoor scenes.

For the 1935-36 season his company plans six features and it is hoped that next year this number will be increased by at least two.

Negotiations are under way to bring over to London four or five American director-producers, Mr. Pallos declared, but their names will not be revealed until contracts have been actually signed.

Alexander Korda, head of London Films, Sir Connop Guthrie and Maurice D. Silverstone, accompanied Mr. Pallos on his return trip to England.

Stuart's Russian Film Ready for Early Release

Charles E. Stuart's production, "My Five Years in Russia," has been changed to "Soviet Russia Thru the Eyes of an American."

This is the only American-made Russian film ever brought out of Russia photographed by an American engineer who spent many years in the country.

Norman Brokenshire does the narration of the film and the action is accompanied by appropriate Russian music and folk songs.

The Imperial Distributing Corporation will release the picture shortly as a feature as well as in short subject form.

Rumania Fund Grows

The Rumanian Cinematograph Fund, which was launched in May, 1934, through establishment of a tax of 10 lei, has grown to approximately $116,666, according to reports to the Department of Commerce by Consul General Harold D. Clum in Bucharest. No official figures have been released however. Although strong attacks have been made against this fund by the press, its abolition appears unlikely, said the consul.

NBC Studio Ready Soon

National Broadcasting Company's coast studio, which is nearing completion on the RKO Radio lot in Hollywood, will be ready for opening on November 1, Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of the broadcasting company, has announced. The opening ceremonies will be simple and without the usual fanfare, he said.

John Goring to Produce

John Goring, who formerly operated the Criterion, New York, has returned to the East from Hollywood to confer on his plans to produce six features for the independent market.

Theatres Resume Newspaper Ads

Suburban theatres in St. Louis have settled their argument with the Star-Times over advertising costs, part of which are paid by using the newspaper's advertisements on the screen. The St. Louis Amusement Company's nineteen houses and fifty other suburban theatres have resumed the use of space.

Olympic in Deal with Monarch

Olympic Pictures Corporation has completed a deal with Nat Lefton of Monarch Pictures Corporation of Pittsburgh for distribution of eight of its pictures in the Western Pennsylvania and Kentucky territory.

Arliss to Make No More In America, Says Press

George Arliss has decided to make no more pictures in America, according to the London Daily Herald. The newspaper said the decision was probably due to the fact that Mr. Arliss has to pay double income tax if he alternates in his work between London and Hollywood. He starts a new British film next month.

Sonotone Opens Coast Office

Sonotone Corporation has established a new administrative office in the Brockman Building, Los Angeles, to handle increasing business in 13 western states. Frank J. Roemer, vice president and director of Sonotone, will be in charge.

United Artists Films Ready for Release

Of the feature pictures to be released through United Artists during the current season, five have been completed, six are in the last stages of production and seven are now being prepared for the cameras. They involve the work of Charles Chaplin, Samuel Goldwyn, David O. Selznick, Alexander Korda and Edward Small of Reliance Pictures.

Mr. Goldwyn's "The Dark Angel" has already been released and the Reliance feature, "Red Salute" is also before the public. Mr. Goldwyn has also completed "Barbary Coast" and Mr. Korda's "The Man Who Could Work Miracles" has also been finished.

Mr. Chaplin's first film in four years, "Modern Times," has been cut and edited and will be released next month.

"Navy Born," a Goldwyn production, and "The Melody Lingers On," being made by Reliance, are among the latest from Hollywood. In London, Mr. Korda has "Things to Come," "The Ghost Goes West," "Conquest of the Air" and "Elephant Boy" nearly finished.

"Shoot the Chutes," "Splendor," "Dodsworth," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "The Last of the Mohicans," "Revolt in the Desert" and "Cyrano de Bergerac" are the remaining features that will be ready for United Artists release this season.

Warners Turn Over Two Newark Houses

Warner Bros. this week dropped the American and Cameo theatres in Newark from its circuit and M. Eskin, operator of the Stamford, Stamford, Conn., will take charge of them in the future. This makes the third house in Newark which the major circuit has released in the last few days, the Mosque having been returned to the Prudential Insurance Company last week.

Sonotone President Predicts Sales Gain

Dr. Hugo Lieber, president of Sonotone Corporation, has written to all stockholders that the company is on the "threshold of greater scientific achievements, of greater sales and of greater profits." The letter was incident to the registration of a new preferred issue of stock with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Current liabilities of the company have been reduced more than $43,000, Dr. Lieber says, and a Federal Reserve loan due in 1937 will be paid soon.

Acquire Two Houses

The Gordon and Lockwood circuit of New England has taken over the operation of two houses in Waterville, Me., the Opera House being transferred from the M. & P. chain to their ownership along with the State, formerly operated by H. H. Paul.

TALKING SERIALS AGAIN

EVERY now and then some experienced showman remembers with longing those days when serial pictures were an outstanding aid to the manager in maintaining the continuity of his box office patronage. There were amazing profits in "The Million Dollar Mystery" and the endless escapades of Helen Holmes and Pearl White.

Something, several things, happened to the serials, seemingly all at once. Features abruptly rose to dominance. Motor cars made screen patrons flitting shoppers, just as the rise of bigger theatres upset the exhibition map. Serials depreciated in quality as they increased in quantity. Along came "Gloria's Romance," tremendously over-sold into one of the industry's most signal failures. The serial era was over, and the "chapter play" has lived along since in obscurity with only occasionally such a flare of success as "The Indians Are Coming."

The other day the manager for a big eastern district of a large circuit brought the serial into discussion at a meeting of twenty-five managers. From that discussion came the suggestion that today well made stories in six installments would be found keyed to today's market for a considerable number of houses and give the box office an instrument calculated to "keep them coming."

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE

FOR months now there has been in several quarters a grand pother about double bills, given more recently some added fervor by the adoption of the double bill policy with the demise of vaudeville in the big circuits of metropolitan New York.

After all the motion picture art will probably not suffer from association with itself on double bills any more than it did as a component of a show presenting trained seals, trapeze performers and balancing acts.

Meanwhile with Hollywood's studio spokesmen crying aloud and inspiring pieces in the papers about the destructive influence of double bills, the theatre arms of their same companies have been busy adopting the policy, east and west.

The fact is that the ultimate consumers know nothing and care nothing about what the industry calls double billing. The audience goes to see a long show or a short one, two feature dramas, or just a lot of film, to kill an evening. And rarely does the exhibitor double billing really buy two features. More commonly he buys a feature and then books a filler which is of feature length. The only test of the process and policy is the box office test.

All manner of argument is available. Idealists may contend that properly the picture show should consist of one single production, an artistic unit, one story for one evening for one admission. That is the policy of the ancient and sacred dramatic stage—but, mark you, a stage that never did reach the masses and the brackets of buying power which support the screen.

No criticism is commonly had for the accepted and long established orthodoxy of the bill consisting of feature, newsreel, cartoon comedy and sports or adventure short. Yet that is obviously vaudeville, despite the fact that the variety show is all film.

It is true enough, too, that double billing has offered some exceedingly bad programming, but that is not inherent in the system. Just as bad programming can and is achieved on the orthodox old line policies where filler shorts are bought by the bundle and tossed in to fill screen time.

Also, anent the double bill, the long show for the money and all of its implications, one can observe some manifestations in other fields. Red Book Magazine, and more recently Cosmopolitan, present in addition to a standard magazine content also a full length novel in each issue, and at the old price. Today less than a thousand dollars will buy you more, better, faster transportation in motor cars than three thousand dollars would only a few years ago. Twenty-five dollars will buy a woman a more modish gown from the shop today than the dressmaker produced for four times the price two decades ago.

Substantially every machine duplicated product, armed for distribution by repetitive processes, except the motion picture, has reduced cost and increased grosses by increased consumption. We have a public constantly educated in getting its money's worth.

The motion picture problem is not how many pictures are on the bill. The question is, "Is it a good show—especially, is it a good show for the money?" And it does not matter whether it takes one picture or six. Interest in the screen creating the desire to lay down money at the box office is all that matters. That's the business.

ON THE WAY

OUT of the confusions of a few weeks past emerges First Division Exchanges, Inc., with its First International Pictures affiliations, with an ambitious program of some thirty pictures with titles and casts considerably more pretentious than before, and this week comes the declaration that half of the new season's product is complete.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Victory in St. Louis

Effecting a saving of $30,000 a year, St. Louis theatre owners were victorious in their battle against a 100 per cent increase in advertising rates which local newspapers attempted to enforce. Peace terms were written after the city's entire exhibitor front lined up against the newspapers as one. See page 12.

Remaking 29 Hits

Marking a definite trend toward remakes of old favorites, producers list 29 film romances and adventures to be released in new versions this season and next. MGM leads with nine reproductions, while one or more are announced by Radio, Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal, United Artists, Warner and GB Productions.

Interesting items are that it is planned to refilm "The Birth of a Nation," the greatest money picture in history, and that another of David Wark Griffith's classics, "Broken Blossoms," is to be done by Twickenham studios in London. The story is on page 13.

QP Anniversary

Martin Quigley's 20th anniversary in motion picture journalism was memorialized at a testimonial luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York last week. Many were the tributes, from within and without the industry. Who spoke and what was said and who was there is told on page 17.

Up to Company

At a committee meeting held last week in the office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America it was decided to request each of the major film distributing companies to make a formal approval or rejection of a proposal to change the length of all motion picture reels to 2,000 feet. The companies will be requested to indicate their decision in the matter by November 1st.

The meeting, held under the chairmanship of J. S. MacLeod, MGM, was attended by representatives of each of the major distributing companies, and by Homer Tasker, president, Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Gordon S. Mitchell, a member of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and Arthur S. Dickinson, MPPDA.

The committee also decided to request the Academy Research Council to postpone the industry wide adoption of the 2,000 foot reel from January 1st, the date previously set, to April 1, 1936.

A national survey conducted by the Film Boards of Trade regarding exhibitor and projectionist reaction to the proposed change was presented by Mr. Dickinson, who also discussed fire and insurance laws and regulations which might affect the change.

Golden Silence

British exhibitors are getting all a-dither again over the radio problem, now that the time for the annual Royal Command Variety Performance is drawing near.

Last year the British Broadcasting Corporation refused to pay more than 500 pounds ($2,500, roughly) for air rights, but to hints that the Variety Artistes' Federation would keep the benefit show off the air for a consideration above the $2,500 the entertainment interests turned a cold and deaf ear.

Their hearing became quite acute, however, when England stayed home to hear the broadcast, at a loss of up to half a million dollars in theatre receipts. Exhibitors are now reported to be talking in terms of a $5,000 offer to silence the microphone.

This and other news developments from London appear on page 46.

After the Pinkest

Convinced that the attacks on the screen and the attempt to dictate by Red and pacifist elements will not cease until the higher-ups directing the youthful demonstrators are prevented from continuing their activities, film attorneys this week were preparing to take action designed to put an effective stop to the campaign.

New York's Broadway became the arena for the agitators last Saturday when the Rivoli, opening with "Red Salute," was the scene of a protest demonstration. The story is on page 16.

Poor's Applauds

Poor's, financial publisher in Wall Street, this week complimented the motion picture for effecting drastic capital reorganizations, citing the capital contraction for five large corporations from the $409,055,000 fixed charge issues after expansion in the pre-depression era, to $257,398,000 fixed charge issues now existing.

Other financial developments included Pathe's report of a $1,326,924 net income for the first nine months of 1935.

Little Enthusiasm

Detailing the plan of procedure under which voluntary fair practice provisions and labor agreements can be preserved under the skeletonized NRA, the White House on Monday issued a statement which was met with little enthusiasm by industry as a whole and by the motion picture industry in New York in particular.

The reason: the new arrangements offer no material gains, and motion picture observers pointed to the fact that no immunity is granted from prosecution of collective acts under the antitrust laws. See page 30.

Allied's Producer

Allied States sponsorship of a new independent producing company is reported to have been practically agreed upon, and the national leaders say an "important announcement" can be looked for shortly. The Allied leadership favors a tieup with a producer as a "defensive measure." A similar plan was afoot two years ago, but failed for lack of support.

For details of this and other exhibitor organization activities, turn to page 35.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Radio Murders!

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers this week again told its old story of how radio murdered music by overplaying song hits, causing a short life for sheet music sales. They cited some 85 hits that were played 1,255,669 times just by NBC and Columbia, and listed their individual song sales in sheet music. The record is reproduced on page 25.

Code-ing the Writers

The special producer-writer committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences last week dutifully turned in its proposed new basic agreement and writer-producer code of practice, and this week, as a result, is the target of the Screen Writers' Guild, which charges the pact is nothing more than "a bunch of empty promises."

The Academy claims that the agreement makes some 19 "major improvements" in the working conditions of writers and more equitably adjusts the practices governing the relations of studios and writers.

Writing employment will be on a basis of written contract. A simplified plagiarism warranty will be adopted, establishing that the writer assumes responsibility only for the originality of his work. A free option within a 30-day limit will be extended to employed writers, and broad authority will be delegated to an Academy committee of writers for the enforcement of the agreement. Complete text appears on page 53.

Schwartz Sues

A suit for $500,000 has been filed in the Manhattan supreme court by Saul Rogers, in behalf of Master Arts Products, Inc., and Isadore Schwartz against National Screen Service and American Display Corporation. A preliminary injunction is sought to prevent competition of these two companies with Master Arts.

Summonses in the suit have been served on Herman Robbins and Sam Dembow, Jr., of NSS, and on Charles L. Casanave, head of American Display.

Mr. Schwartz alleges that several years ago he sold Advance Trailer Corporation, then engaged in the trailer and general advertisement business, to National Screen, and that National Screen took over the trailer end of the business and organized Master Arts to continue the advertising side of the enterprise. He was engaged as general manager under a contract for five years at $600 per week, he says, and agreed to stay out of the advertising and accessories business himself.

Two years later, he says, he bought Master Arts for $30,000 and gave up his contract, at the same time signing a contract preventing National Screen from engaging in the advertising and accessories business. Since then, he asserts, National Screen has financed the American Display Corporation.

Patent Hearing

With Will H. Hays, John E. Otterson, Adolph Zukor, Al Lichtman, Nicholas M. Schenck, Louis Nizer, George Quigley, R. H. Cochrane and other leaders of the motion picture industry already under subpoenas, the stage was set this week for the beginning on October 15th of the Sirovich Congressional poolings of patents. The hearings, originally scheduled to start in New York this week, were postponed as an accommodation to some of the witnesses who could not conveniently appear at this time.

Advising the committee on motion picture phases of the proposed investigation will be David G. Berger, acting as special counsel. They have been investigating for months the books of the large film corporations and those operating theatres have been requested to supply information on the cost of theatre reproducers and the like.

Improvement

An indication of the manner in which theatre corporations of Canada are effecting improvement in their financial position despite decreased revenue is found in the annual statement of Confederation Amusements, Ltd., just issued in Toronto.

Gross revenue for the past fiscal year was $427,603, as compared with $49,086 for the previous twelve months, while the net loss was $3,311, as against $3,645. During the year mortgages were cut $19,600, to $159,500, and, in the last three years, mortgage obligations have been lowered by $53,000. Current liabilities have been cut from $96,788 to $60,393 during the last fiscal year with current assets slightly lower at $38,989, compared with $40,333 one year ago.

The company sold $25,500 worth of first bonds which had originally been issued in 1931 primarily for the erection of the Chateau theatre in Montreal, but were not disposed of at that time because of unfavorable market conditions.

Confederation Amusement operates six theatres with an aggregate seating capacity of 7,000.

Trial Underway

The Government's conspiracy case against eight corporations and six individuals finally came to trial in United States district court in St. Louis on Wednesday, after defense counsel vigorously but vainly attempted to delay the action until the March session of court.

Judge George H. Moore ruled that the absence because of illness of Abel Carey Thomas, Warner legal head, would not seriously interfere with the proceedings, and, overruling the request that the equity case be heard first, ordered the trial to proceed without further delay. See page 31.

Tax Reduced

The Cabinet in Rome has decreed that the tax on sound films with Italian dialogue over 1,000 meters (3,280 feet) in length, made and recorded abroad, shall be extended to films of any length.

The minimum tax of 25,000 lire (about $2,000) applied previously to the longer pictures is reduced according to length to a minimum of 15,000 lire (about $1,200).

Hardy Perennial

It's off-ag'in, on-ag'in in Mexico's film strikes. A little more than a day after they had reached an agreement with the Government to postpone withdrawal from the country until October 15 to permit study of the tax situation by a mixed committee all the white collar workers walked out on strike, but by the end of a day the ranks of the strikers were thinning.

The strike became effective at noon of September 27 after a long period of negotiations conducted with the assistance of the Federal Labor Department.

The strikers are demanding pay increases of from 10 to 25 per cent from Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO, Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal and Warner.

Theatres, it is said, have a two-weeks supply of film.

Deal Is Off

Negotiations between Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the Twickenham Studios of London, England, whereby MGM would release all the Twickenham product in England have been called off, according to Arthur Loew, head of MGM's foreign activities. "We couldn't agree on terms," Mr. Loew said.

ST. LOUIS THEATRES WIN 'WAR' OVER AD RATES, SAVING $30,000 A YEAR

Refusal to Pay Equivalent of 100 Per Cent Increase for Advertising Brings Restoration of Former Arrangement

The value of organized effort on the part of motion picture theatre owners in concertedly fighting an issue affecting them in common was again demonstrated in St. Louis in an advertising rate "war" which the owners and managers waged against the city's newspapers, the successful conclusion of which resulted in an annual saving of some $30,000. They had refused to pay what practically amounted to a 100 per cent increase in advertising newspaper rates.

The principal targets were the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and the Star-Times, the two local afternoon daily newspapers. The theatrical opposition forces were led by Fred Wehrenberg, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois.

Some weeks ago the newspapers informed the theatre owners that the papers would discontinue the running of advertising slides in the theatres in conjunction with ads placed in the papers. At the same time the exhibitors were informed that the three-line minimum requirement would be raised to a five-line minimum. The allowances for the advertising slides carried in the theatres were $4, $5 and $6 a week, depending on the amount of newspaper advertising used. The advertising rates of the newspapers were 26 cents a line in the Star-Times and 40 cents in the Post-Dispatch.

The theatre owners, led by Mr. Wehrenberg, refused to stand for the doubling of their net advertising costs and it was decided that the theatres could get along with only one newspaper. The majority of the houses picked the Post-Dispatch as their sole medium in the daily field. While that paper's rate per line was 40 cents, compared with the 26-cent rate of the Star-Times, its circulation is 45 per cent greater than that of its afternoon competitor and 31 per cent greater than that of the Globe-Democrat, morning publication.

Old Arrangement Restored

As a result, the Star-Times lost practically all of its advertising from the subsequent-run houses, including the group ad of the St. Louis Amusement Company, operating 19 houses. This situation prevailed until the Star-Times reached peace terms with the theatres. Its first proposal was a 20 per cent reduction in rates. But when that information reached the Post-Dispatch the management of that publication decided to go all the way and again restored completely the old arrangement under which the $4 to $6 week allowance for the paper's theatre slides is made, and the Star-Times then had to go along on the same basis.

It was clear cut victory for the owners, but it is agreed that it could not have been accomplished had not the owners stood by their guns, advertising in only one newspaper until the rates were brought down again.

Subsequent-Runs Return

During the week of September 17th it is understood the Star-Times carried the subsequent-run theatre advertising free of cost. The Post-Dispatch made its reduction in rates retroactive to September 14th. Now both the Star-Times and the Post-Dispatch carry advertisements for the following subsequent-run houses: St. Louis Amusement Company's group of 19, and the Avalon, Empress, Ritz, Uptown, Arcade Airdrome, Bridge, Cardinal, Cindrella, Columbia, Compton, Fairy, Hollywood, Ivanhoe, King Bee, Kirkwood, Lexington, Macklind, Marquette, Melba, Melvin, Michigan, Ashland, Baden, O'Fallon, Lee, Queens Bremen, Salisbury, New White Way, Ozark, Palm, Pauline, Plymouth, Powhattan, Princess, Red Wing, Rivoli, Robin Roxy, Shady Oak, Studio, Temple, Virginia, Wellston, Yale. The Post-Dispatch in addition carried the Irma ad which did not appear in the Star-Times.

Theatres using the Star-Times and not the Post-Dispatch were the Easton. Lemay, Maryland, Montgomery, New Shenandoah, Peerless, Senate and Webster. Figuring the saving at $4 per week for the houses using only one paper and $8 for those appearing in both afternoon papers reveals the amount saved through the exhibitor' refusal to accept the doubling of their advertising costs at approximately $30,000 a year.

DENVER OWNERS FIGHT REVIEWING SYSTEM

The star system of establishing, in the opinion of a critic, the quality of motion pictures was protested by members of the Denver Theatre Managers' Association and a conference was arranged with Charles B. McCabe, publisher, and Alberta Pike, dramatic critic of the Rocky-Mountain News, a Scripps-Howard newspaper.

Mr. McCabe responded with the declaration that "it is not the intention of the newspaper to foster a system not constructive to the theatres." He said a survey will be made in a door-to-door canvass of readers for opinions.

Mr. McCabe further promised to turn over the questionnaire to the managers' association and indicated that if the matter warranted the system would be modified.

Ickes Order May Halt Park Filming

Use of the national parks for motion picture locations may be foregone in the future by producers as a result of a demand by Secretary of the Interior Ickes that companies using the parks make a "voluntary" contribution to the National Parks Trust Fund.

Some months ago the use of Sequoia National Park by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the filming of "Sequoia" resulted in complaints that the unit had done much damage. A week ago MGM made a contribution of $5,000 to the National Park Trust Fund and this amount, it was said, was sufficient to cover the damage and leave a balance.

Two studios planning to make pictures in parks, one in Yellowstone and the other in Yosemite, were told, it is reported, that they may do so only if they make a "voluntary" contribution of $3,000 each to the trust fund, which would work as a rental at the rate of $1,500 per week. As this would be in addition to heavy expenditures for transportation of horses, food and other needs of the troupe, the companies have refused to make the contributions.

National Park officials are said not to be in sympathy with Secretary Ickes' idea of collecting for the use of the parks.

Forum Indorses Equity Meetings

The Actors' Forum, socalled Actors' Equity opposition group, will support the informal meetings sponsored by the Equity administrator, it was decided at a Forum meeting early this week.

This decision came as a surprise to observers, as the official informal meetings were understood to be designed to put the Forum out of operation by providing an opportunity for discussion of problems to replace the Forum's sessions.

The Forum will continue to meet, however, and a Forum spokesman said that the new informal meetings will probably be for discussion only, while the Forum considers its gatherings have the additional advantage of being able to institute action. The pay-for-rehearsals plan, the cuts board and similar rulings of the association were first adopted by the Forum before being passed by the Council, it was pointed out.

It was suggested at the Forum meeting that at the new informal sessions a chairman be elected from the floor to preside and that subjects for discussion be brought up from the floor in addition to a prepared agenda.

The first of the informal official meetings will be held late this week at the Hotel Astor with Frank Gillmore, president, presiding.

REMAKING OF 29 HITS POINTS TO NEW TREND

Studios Turn to Sound Versioning of Productions That Brought Grosses Never Approached in Recent Years

Transcribing one-time film successes to the screen, the large companies are preparing an imposing roster of remakes for current season release and are planning new versions of others for 1936-37, with no less than 29 motion picture hits of another day definitely set.

MGM has scheduled the largest number with nine of its present season's productions down as remakes. RKO Radio and Paramount will each have five. Four have been announced by Universal, three by Twentieth Century-Fox, while United Artists, Warner and GB Productions schedule one each. And there may be more.

The program is incomplete with respect to all the remakes that can be expected during 1935-36 because production programs are not as yet conclusive at some of the companies and because independent producers, sensing the definite appeal of old favorites, are squaring away for sound versions of silent screen classics. In this category are listed "The Birth of a Nation" and "Broken Blossoms."

Among the more important vehicles being reproduced are "Way Down East," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Oliver Twist," "Peter Ibbetson," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "The Three Musketeers," "Captain Blood," "Bunker Bean" and "The Light That Failed."

Public Reaction Tested

The interest that prompts the return of well remembered films is akin to the audience affection which greets stage revivals—the appeal of well told stories of romance and adventure, types of dramatic material which are perennially popular. And basically there is the fact that some of the old films were huge grossers, achieving figures that never have even been approached in recent years.

The industry last year obtained a test of public reaction to remakes of old thrillers which proved even more appealing as talking pictures, and the success of such vehicles "David Copperfield," "The Masquerader," "Les Miserables" and "Ruggles of Red Gap" foreshadowed wide public acceptance and development of the vogue.

Three Griffith Successes

In only two instances are this year's remakes given new titles. "Anna Karenina" in the original film version was called "Love," but currently it is being released under the title of the Tolstoy classic. "Without Regrets" was known as "Interference" when made in the early days of sound.

The production values then and now are subject to comparison on the basis of cast, the addition or improvement of sound, developments in technique, as well as story elements which might need revamping in the light of requirements or to command present day audience attention.

Three of David Wark Griffith's outstanding successes—"The Birth of a Nation," "Way Down East" and "Broken Blossoms" —are to be seen in 1935-36 versions.

A remake of the Civil War film is planned by Harry E. Aitken, president of the onetime Triangle Film Corporation, who had a large part in the success of the first version's distribution and still owns it. Produced in 1914, the classic was reissued several years ago with a synchronized score, and it still is making the rounds of the crossroads theatres. It cost $110,000 to produce and grossed more than $10,000,000 during three seasons of roadshowing, and for that period alone—1915-1918 —the net profits to the owners were something over $4,000,000, which makes it the greatest box office performer of all time. Mr. Aitken said he expected to have the new production completed in the spring.

Griffith's "Way Down East" was another record maker, returning a net of $1,357,000 in the nine months it was roadshown at $2 top by J. J. McCarthy, now heading the advertising Council of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Mr. McCarthy also handled the roadshows of "The Birth of a Nation." Later, in 1920, "Way Down East" was taken over by United Artists for general release. The current version was Winfield Sheehan's final production for Fox.

"Broken Blossoms" Rights Sold

"Broken Blossoms" is scheduled for remake at the Twickenham studios in London, with an English cast. Mr. Griffith was to have directed the new version of his memorable film, but differences arose over production methods and he finally sold his rights to the English company. It was hailed as the first definitely artistic film when brought out in 1919.

The remakes scheduled to date for release or production this year are:

"Burlesque," which was produced as an early talking picture with Hal Skelly and Nancy Carroll, may be made again by Paramount, it is reported from the West Coast. Twentieth Century-Fox has three or four additional remakes under consideration.

New Story; Old Background

In presenting "The Last Days of Pompeii," RKO Radio is making clear to audiences that only the background of the Bulwer Lytton novel is used and that the story is primarily a new one. It has been done twice before, once by a foreign company, and in its current version is a Merian C. Cooper spectacle. It is down for a Radio City opening in New York this month and will be released generally shortly thereafter. Preston Foster, Basil Rathbone and Dorothy Wilson are in the present cast.

Films made again after a lapse of years often vary considerably from the original, the concession being to audience taste and requirements. This was the case with "In Old Kentucky," the last Will Rogers release. When produced by MGM in 1927, with James Murray and Helen Costello, it followed closely the old Charles T. Dazey melodrama which swept the boards for many years before it became a film, and a highly profitable one. The present Twentieth Century-Fox laugh vehicle bears only a slight resemblance to the original.

The Priest in "Hunchback"

Republic is making a film titled "My Old Kentucky Home," which has no affinity to the previous items by that name, at least one of which was of feature length. There were also several short subjects under that title.

The trade is awaiting word on how Universal will treat the part of the priest in the forthcoming production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." The circumstances surrounding that role in the old production were unusual, including as it did Brandon Hurst as Jehan (the evil side of the priest) and Nigel de Brulier as Dom Claude (the good side). The Victor Hugo work is on the interdict of the Roman Catholic Church, and by dividing the character of the priest in two parts Universal was able, for the first time, to select a book banned by the Church and make a film of it which the Church approved.

The picture was one of the big money makers of its day, grossing some $1,500,000. Among others in the cast were Ernest Torrence, Norman Kerry, Raymond Hatton, Tully Marshall, Kate Lester, Eulalie Jensen and Gladys Brockwell.

Radio City Center Returns to All-Film Under J. K. Hyatt

With the termination of the record run of "The Great Waltz," the Center theatre, smaller of the two theatres of Radio City in New York, returned to its original film policy this week with the showing of "Here's to Romance," the Twentieth Century-Fox picture in which the Metropolitan Opera tenor, Nino Martini, makes his picture debut.

The film opened with a special preview Wednesday night for an invited audience of prominent people from the stage, screen, radio and opera circles. Social leaders, prominent business men, editors of Manhattan's leading newspapers and government officials were also in the audience.

The theatre is being operated by the same staff inaugurated for the run of "The Great Waltz." John Kenneth Hyatt is the managing director; Sidney Goldman, house manager; Louis Lotito, treasurer; John Dayton, controller, and Murray Martin, director of advertising and publicity.

Mr. Hyatt graduated from Annapolis in 1924 and served six years in the navy, resigning in 1930 to enter the Harvard Law School. In 1932 he became treasurer of the 1236 Sixth Avenue Corporation, which produced "The Great Waltz." He then joined the firm of Todd, Robertson, Todd, builders of the Center theatre, two years later, and became manager of the house.

"Here's to Romance" is scheduled for an indefinite run at the theatre, to be followed by RKO Radio's "The Last Days of Pompeii."

Three New York Film Cases Won on Default

United Artists and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have won three cases before the New York Film Board arbitration committee because of the failure of defendants to put in an appearance when the cases were heard.

The United Artists cases were against the New United, Brooklyn, for $280 on an alleged breach of contract, and against the Uark, Stapleton, S. I., for $50 on the same complaint. The MGM case was against the Casino, Richmond Hill, for $27.90, allegedly due on a contract.

Fight Double Bill In West Cleveland

A verbal agreement among exhibitors of the West Side in Cleveland to prevent introduction of double features is now being worked out by owners of theatres in that section. Whether such an agreement can be satisfactorily maintained, with East Side theatres playing duals, is subject for controversy. Single features, as a policy, went out in Cleveland last July upon the expiration of the single feature agreement, unanimously odopted by the members of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association.

A number of Flint, Michigan, exhibitors, dissatisfied with the results of an agreement entered into about a year ago to do away with double bills except on one change a week, and disgruntled because of the recent opening of the new Rialto by Schreiber, Smilay & London of Detroit, which is playing double bills two changes a week and vaudeville on the third, are expected to kick over the agreement at its expiration within the next few weeks.

Chicago exhibitors are proud of the fact that the town is still on a single feature basis, according to James Coston, Warner operating head in Chicago. He said the public does not want duals and theatres owners have educated patrons along single feature lines. Mr. Coston declared that theatre business in Chicago is the best since 1929 and theatres are playing to more persons than since the stock market crash.

Broadway Visions Big SRO Year

The Broadway theatrical season now well on its way promises great things as the result of an almost tangible surge of optimism in the theatre district, based upon concrete indications that the boom days of the show business are here again. Proof that showmen are not amiss in their optimism was supplied by the recent opening of the Shubert musical "At Home Abroad," at the Winter Garden Theatre. On the opening night $8.80 was asked and received for all of the 1,000 seats in the orchestra except 110 which were given to critics and others.

"All box office records have been broken at the Winter Garden," according to C. P. Greneker, veteran Broadway press agent, who said that another big Shubert musical will soon open in New York. The encouraging reception given the new theatre season led Arthur Hopkins, for example, to ask $5.50 for orchestra seats of "Paths of Glory," the play based on a successful war novel, at the Plymouth Theatre. Not more than 100 of the 637 orchestra tickets were complimentary.

Conditions in New York are reflected in other parts of the country. Show business in Boston is reported to be 30 per cent better this year than last season. In Chicago, "Tobacco Road" and "Three Men on a Horse" have been doing phenomenal business.

RKO Gains Helping RCA Profit Outlook

RCA may pay a $5 dividend on its B stock as a result of the improved earnings this year, according to the Wall Street Journal, and there is also a possibility of reducing the accumulated deficit in dividends on this stock, it is further stated.

Contributing to the bright outlook, according to the writer, are the improved earnings of RKO, now in the process of reorganization. RCA holds 84 per cent, or $9,786,000 worth of RKO debentures, and these are now earning interest. The company also has 1,259,468 shares of RKO, a total investment of about $15,000,000, upon which it has not been getting any return.

Field Museum to Show Free Films to Children

Stephen C. Simms, director of the Field Museum, Chicago, has announced that on Saturday mornings during October and November, nine programs of free films will be shown to children.

The James Nelson and Anna Louis Raymond foundation is presenting the 34 reels of film, which will be of an educational nature, dealing primarily with history, travel and zoology. The pictures will be shown in the James Simpson auditorium of the museum and will accommodate several thousand children.

FILM INTERESTS ANSWER RIOTS WITH LEGAL MOVES AGAINST REDS

Attorneys Prepare to Seek Criminal Prosecutions of Higher-Ups and Injunctions to Stop Attacks on Screen

The attack on the screen by Red-dominated organizations, which for the last several months has been confined in New York to neighborhood houses, last Saturday took a new and intensified turn in a riotous demonstration against "Red Salute" on Broadway. At the same time, film interests were preparing to move against the instigators in legal actions seeking both criminal prosecutions of the higher-ups and a sweeping injunction to put a stop to the campaign.

The film attorneys, who said action would be taken in a week or two through the district attorney's office or the New York supreme court, or both, are convinced that the courts will uphold their contention that the campaign is unlawful, unjustified and that it has caused much harm to legitimate film and theatre enterprise.

Decision of the attorneys to initiate action, in collaboration with the authorities, against the American League Against War and Fascism, its officers and members, as well as subsidiary and affiliated groups, results from weeks of research into the statutes of the state of New York applicable to the situation.

Sentences Light or Suspended

It is recognized that the numerous arrests of youthful pickets and rioters have done little to discourage the activity because for the most part magistrates have meted out light sentences and sometimes sentences are suspended. Therefore, the legal advisers of the Hearst and other film interests are aiming to bring the leaders to an accounting, and the penal code may be invoked against them on the ground of conspiracy.

The extent of the attempted dictation to the motion picture industry is evident in reports from the field that a crusade against Hearst Metrotone News on the part of radicals and pacifist elements was under way on the West Coast and other sections, and in other recent occurrences.

While the attention of the "united front" groups has been diverted somewhat in demonstrating against Italy's designs on Ethiopia, picketing and boycott of theatres continues in the Brooklyn and Bronx sections of metropolitan New York, and demonstrations during the showing of newsreels and some features are frequent. Hearst News is the chief target, in reprisal against Hearst publications' stand on the Communist question, but Pathe and Paramount newsreels are also sharing the Reds' displeasure, and the Communist press is clamoring for an organized protest against "March of Time."

The campaign reached Broadway for the first time on Saturday when mass picketing by 30 youthful radicals in front of the Rivoli theatre caused a turnout of police who arrested 19, including six girls. Two young men, one of them Joseph P. Lash, executive secretary of the Student League for Industrial Democracy and editor of The Student Outlook, were ejected from the theatre by the police, who said they had created a disturbance. These two were held for disorderly conduct, while the others, mainly high school and college students ranging in age from 17 to 23, were charged with unlawful assembly. Magistrate William Clapp on Monday continued the cases to October 9, the demonstrators being released on bail. A police guard was stationed at the theatre

Anti-Pink

The Constitutional Protective League, composed of members of the Reserve Officers Association of the United States and of the American Legion, has arranged in cooperation with the Motion Picture Guild of America to distribute films reflecting the life and history of this country, in a move to combat the efforts of Soviet Russia in spreading Red propaganda.

The films will be shown in private and public schools, to parent and teacher organizations and civic and community groups throughout the country. Well known screen players will be featured, according to the announcements. Plans for the new movement were revealed by James E. Campbell, executive vice-president of the League, when in St.Louis for the American Legion convention.

The picketing started shortly after "Red Salute" (Reliance-United Artists), which satires college radicalism, opened at the Rivoli, and the demonstration drew a curious but orderly throng of several thousand which blocked the Broadway traffic. The marching students carried banners calling for a boycott of the theatre and reading, "Students Want Peace—United Artists Wants War." Those entering the Rivoli were handed leaflets signed by the National Student League and the Student League for Industrial Democracy calling the film an "insult" to students and saying this was only one of a series of films they were protesting, and demanding the withdrawal of "Red Salute" from the Rivoli and other theatres where it is scheduled.

John Wright, manager of the theatre, and Monroe Greenthal, advertising and publicity director for United Artists, said they had received threatening letters in the mail in advance of the opening. Business continued far in excess of normal, however, they said.

A similar demonstration at the RKO Palace in Cincinnati on Friday, at the opening of "Red Salute," resulted in the arrest of three demonstrators acting under the auspices of the local branch of the American League Against War and Fascism.

Radicals Spread Fight Against Hearst to Other Newsreels; Demonstrations at "Red Salute" Bring Arrests

For weeks the Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist Party of America, has been agitating for just such demonstrations when "Red Salute" opened at key city theatres, declaring that "should the storm of protest be sufficiently strong, the film industry would not dare attempt another . . . this picture may well turn out to be the crucial one in the struggle." It called on sympathizers to "begin our fight at once, bombard the producers and theatre managers with protests; organize and smash it" (meaning the film).

Demonstrations are being prepared for pictures now in production when they open key city runs. The Red press in this connection lists MGM's "Riff-Raff" and Warner's "Frisco Kid," because it glorifies the "Vigilantes" of the Barbary Coast, and is inciting the Maritime Federation and affiliated unions in the far West, as well as other "labor unions, liberals, anti-Fascists and Communists to wire or postcard vigorous protests to the producers in Hollywood." Also on the Red protest list are projected films under the titles of "Offside," supposedly a Univeral film, and "Mob Rule," described as an MGM vehicle. Both companies denied pictures under those titles are being made, although Universal owns the "Offside" book.

Two pickets protesting Hearst Metrotone News were arrested at Loew's Paradise in the Bronx section of New York, while an anti-Hearst rally was in progress across the street. Both are members of the American League Against War and Fascism.

Sinclair Attacks League

Despite the protestations of officials of the American League that it is not Communist, Upton Sinclair, head of the EPIC movement and former Socialist who ran for governor of California as a Democrat, charges the League is a "camouflage organization" which pretends not to be Communist but works secretly for Communist ends and Communist propaganda.

The announced showing of Soviet films in two cities recently was prevented by police action. In Detroit "Youth of Maxim," scheduled to be exhibited at the Detroit Institute of Arts by the Cinema Guild, was banned in a last minute order by the police censor, Joseph Koller.

In Zanesville, Ohio, a squad of 15 police swooped down upon C. Robert Peters, representative of the Garrison Film Company of Cleveland, and ordered him to leave the city at once, together with the Soviet film, "The Road to Life," as he was preparing to show it at the Eagles' Temple under the auspices of the Zanesville Film and Photo League.

ALL INDUSTRY REPRESENTED AT AMPA LUNCHEON ON QUIGLEY ANNIVERSARY

Exhibitors from Many Sections, Executives of Production and Distribution from Hollywood to New York Attend

Picture Industry Pays Tribute To Martin Quigley in Resolution

In tribute to "Martin Quigley and his publications," and his contributions to the motion picture industry, a resolution prepared impromptu and in pencil by Will H. Hays on a menu of Jack Dempsey's restaurant and recited by Mr. Hays as the expression of the industry, was greeted at the testimonial luncheon with a demonstration of approval and adopted by a unanimous and rising vote. The resolution reads:

We delight in paying tribute to the guest of honor

Because Martin Quigley and his publications have been, for two decades, a symbol of what is right and decent in all branches of the industry;

Because during all that time he has devoted his life to aiding, as well as recording, the growth and development of the art and industry;

Because he was among those first to realize the value of motion pictures and vision their influence;

Because he has always directed his efforts that they might be of service to the industry and the public alike;

Because his contributions, his unfailing interest and his sturdy insistence upon the best standards of entertainment and high ideals of public service have been of constant benefit;

Because his service to the industry has gone far beyond the extent to which his duty as the publisher of a trade journal might carry him and have extended to the most far-reaching consequences, unrecorded and frequently unknown except to a few—which is the essence of service of quality;

Because his own character and personality exemplify the splendid things for which he has always stood; and

Because he knows the full meaning of friendship and we are proud to call him friend.

An all-industry attendance crowded to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers luncheon in honor of Martin Quigley and his twentieth anniversary in the publication of the Herald in service of the motion picture, held in New York Wednesday of last week.

The 331 who gathered about the tables and overflowed the supper room of Jack Dempsey's restaurant included exhibitors from many sections of the country and executives of production and distribution from Hollywood to New York.

Lichtman Is Toastmaster

Al Lichtman, president of United Artists, introduced by Gordon S. White, president of the AMPA, was toastmaster, and Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was the principal speaker in behalf of the industry.

Opening the festivities, Mr. White told the gathering that "we in the advertising and publicity field, above all others, should appreciate what Martin Quigley has done." The large attendance, he said, was "a true reflection of the respect and recognition he has won from the lovers and supporters of the screen who keep their eyes on its progress."

Philip L. Thomson, president of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, and saying he represented also the Western Electric Company and Electrical Research Products, Inc., brought greetings from 1,500 publishers and 300 advertisers and advertising agencies to "a publisher who is not afraid to have anyone know the facts of his business and for whom we have the finest regards."

Terry Ramsaye, editor of Motion Picture Herald, introduced by Mr. Lichtman as "the foremost historian of the motion picture industry," spoke briefly, as did Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity of MGM.

"To be able to steer a course through the conflicts of the industry and keep the friendship of everyone, as Martin Quigley has done, and still smile and be considered a fine man—that is a real achievement," Mr. Dietz said.

Edgar Hoover Lauds Industry

After congratulating the guest of honor, C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the MPPDA, introduced J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who extended his felicitation to Mr. Quigley and complimented the industry on its treatment of law enforcement agencies on the screen.

Mr. Hays, the next speaker, began: "Very seriously, but very inadequately, I want to pay my tribute to a man who has performed a great service for this industry.

"We cannot cover the 20-year performance of anybody in 20 minutes. Twenty years in the life of this business is an epoch. There has been no more valuable or serviceable individual in this industry than Mr. Quigley. His work represents 20 years of heart beats, 20 years of right mental processes; 20 years of highly motivated activity and unselfish service. I know of none who has contributed more than Mr. Quigley in fostering the development and growth of the industry. He is the symbol of all that is right and decent in the industry."

Cites Exploitation's High Plane

Mr. Hays prefaced his remarks with a tribute to the AMPA "for its cooperation in meeting the challenge of the opportunity to make the exploitation worthy of the product." Referring to this later, the MPPDA head said, "Present exploitation has reached a plane not hitherto believed possible, and Mr. Quigley has been an invaluable aid in bringing this about."

Acknowledging the accolade, Mr. Quigley said:

"I will not attempt to give you a real expression of my appreciation. For 20 years I have been giving expression to what I have believed were the responsibilities of the business and what I have felt were its opportunities, and I know you are familiar with my views.

"It is an axiom among editors the world over that a community or a trade gets the kind of press it deserves. Before it expresses itself to the trade a trade paper should abide by certain reasonable standards.

"When I entered this industry I believed, as I believe now, that the mass character of its entertainment imposed upon it certain responsibilities. I did not believe it was just another form of entertainment, or a carnival show brought under a permanent roof. I believed then, and I know now, that the motion picture is one of the greatest influences in modern life.

"If we have done things of value in our publications, it is because the industry's leading factors through their collaboration have made it possible for us to achieve the ideals we believed in. Everything we have been able to do for the advancement of these ideas and ideals has been possible because the industry was willing to have it that way.

"There is a constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press, as you know, but with the trade press everyone knows this guarantee is theoretical rather than practical. Its freedom is due to the willingness of the leading factors in the industry to have it that way. At no time during the two decades that I have been a publisher has any factor in the industry undertaken to turn our publications to any selfish purpose.

"I hope for continuing opportunities to give expression to the kind of service I wish to perform."

Congratulatory Messages

Among the congratulatory messages received by Mr. Quigley from those unable to attend were those of Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board, Paramount; Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of RKO; Felix F. Feist, general sales manager, MGM; Clyde Eckhardt, Chicago district manager, Twentieth Century-Fox; Sydney S. Cohen, former president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; James Loughborough of the theatre division of the Federal Housing Administration; Jack Alicoate, publisher, The Film Daily, and Elias S. Sugarman, The Billboard.

Mr. Lichtman introduced these executives: E. W. Hammons, Harry M. Warner, Jules Brulatour, Ned E. Depinet, David Bernstein, Dr. A. H. Giannini, Hal Roach, Jack Cohn, R. H. Cochrane, John C. Flinn and Gene Buck, head of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

A feature of the testimonial was the presentation to Mr. Quigley, "in recognition of his 20 years of illustrious service to the motion picture industry," of an illuminated register bearing the signatures of guests who have been in the industry 20 years or more. G-MEN FILMS HELPED THE LAW, SAYS HOOVER

"The 'G-men' cycle did much to bring about a greater respect for law enforcement in the eyes of the public," said J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice, in speaking at the testimonial luncheon to Martin Quigley last week in New York.

"In our fight on crime, we consider three elements vital in molding public opinion: the press, films and the radio.

"I don't know of any one that has been as clean as motion pictures in presenting a picture of law enforcement institutions. Not a word of sedition or subversive to our institutions has appeared on the screen. We are grateful to the motion picture industry for presenting a picture of what we as law enforcement officers are trying to."

Essaness Deal Ends Loew Tilt

Loew's invasion of the theatre operating field in Chicago has completely faded as a result of a deal consummated with the Essaness circuit whereby the Sheridan, recently taken over by Loew's from an independent exhibitor, and the proposed Oak Park will be operated by Essaness. The independent circuit also has signed for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product during the coming season.

Under the terms of the deal Essaness immediately takes over the Sheridan under a long-term lease and will operate the Oak Park when the theatre is completed next year. The Oak Park lease is for twenty years.

The decision to enter the Chicago theatre field was made by Loew's some months ago when MGM and a number of independent circuits were unable to come to terms on product deals. The independents banded together in a stand against the distributor's percentage terms.

This season, however, MGM instituted a flexible selling policy to meet local conditions. Details were given sales forces at the various regional meetings, following which several minor deals were closed with independents in Chicago. Loew's, meanwhile, continued with its building plans and was prepared to carry them out when a truce was declared.

ASCAP CHARGES RADIO WITH 'MURDER OF MUSIC'; NEW EXHIBITOR PACTS

85 Leading Melodies of a Year Used 1,255,669 Times on the Air Over Two Networks, Declares Society; Fees Too Low

The radio again is charged with the murder of music. The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers this week retold to the nation, through the press, its woeful tale of drastically reduced income suffered by composer and publisher members as a result of the overplaying of melodies on the air, causing a short life to sheet music.

ASCAP, however, said nothing about the effect on the appearance of some 345 songs in 118 feature motion pictures in the last season and to date this season. But the Society did cite the radio for playing 1,255,669 times the 85 leading tunes of 1934 over just two principal networks—National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System.

Meanwhile music licensing agreements between exhibitors and the American Society expired at midnight Tuesday, but renewed themselves automatically, as they do unless terminated by either party. Through them exhibitors, for a fee, obtain the right to perform in their theatres the copyrighted music of ASCAP members.

No Cancellation, Says Mills

Edwin C. Mills, the Society's general manager, reported there was not a "single instance of cancellation of existing contracts between the Society and exhibitors this year. They were negitiated last year after conferences between a national exhibitors' committee and ASCAP officials resulted in a compromise of new licensing payment schedules that the Society attempted to enforce, at an increase, said exhibitors, of as much as 1,000 per cent over old rates.

ASCAP's report charging radio with "murdering music" is cited in substantiation of its contention that "radio must pay for the performance of music a sum sufficient to compensate for some of the losses in sheet music sales." The report shows that in some instances the sales of sheet music on "hit" songs is one-fourth that prior to large scale national broadcasting.

"Love in Bloom"

"Murder of Music" by radio was accomplished in 1934 when the 85 leading tunes of the year were played a total of 1,255,669 times by just the two principal networks, according to the Societies annual survey, newly completed.

This survey, made from program logs submitted by the NBC and CBS chains and used by the Society as one of the points in the classification of its members, disclosed that "Love in Bloom," from the film "She Loves Me Not," by Leo Robin and Ralph Rainger, was most performed over the air, with a total of 24,374 renditions emanating from 674 key broadcasts. At its peak the song was performed an average of 10 times a day by the two networks.

The sheet music sale of "Love in Bloom" reached huge proportions, for these days, with a sale to date of close to 500,000 copies; before radio, a song of equal popularity sold nearly 2,000,000 copies, said ASCAP. The average song hit of those days sold 1,156,000 sheets; the contemporary average, with radio shortening the sales period from 16 months to 3 months, is about 229,000. "Ramona" in 1927 sold 1,750,000 copies of sheet music.

"All I Do Is Dream of You," from "Sadie McKee," by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed, was second, with 23,910 performances. The sheet music sale of this hit was about 240,000 copies.

"Carioca" Third

"Carioca," "Flying Down to Rio," by Vincent Youmans, Gus Kahn and Edward Eliscu, third on the list with 23,754 broadcasts, was far under par in sheet music sales, with less than 100,000 copies disposed of, although the song was hummed, whistled, sung and performed in every part of the Continent.

"The Very Thought of You," by Ray Noble, fourth in point of performance, with 23,604 credits, sold about 60,000.

"For All We Know," by J. Fred Coots and Samuel M. Lewis, was another popular song that received 23,408 broadcasts during the year, and grossed less than 100,000 copies in sheet sales.

The Society's survey was made from 37,629 typical programs using 24,055 different musical compositions. Only 85 of these were performed 10,000 times or better on the two networks that year, and these took up 16 per cent of the total broadcasts of music.

Shakespeare Now World Issue with 'Dream' in Debut

It took exactly 319 years to make William Shakespeare an international motion picture issue, and that day has finally arrived.

From his native England comes a rumbling that his staid ol' brother Britons are about to engage in a patriotic attempt to rescue the noted poet and dramatist from Hollywood. Basil Dean, himself a motion picture producer of warm mother-country patriotism, screamed to the press that his "blood boiled" when he heard that Hollywood was going Shakespearean. For the record, Warners, not Hollywood are Shakespearean-bent.

Beats England to Market

That the producing and distributing corporation headed by Harry M. Warner beat Shakespeare's native England to market with "A Midsummer Night's Dream" after 300 years appears to have been taken sullenly by Mr. Dean, who declared "It is about time England had something to do with bringing our national poet to the talkies."

Also, the fact that certain popular motion picture players—"G Man" James Cagney, wide-mouth baseball player Joe E. Brown, and Frank McHugh, a comic Irishman, among the many—have been introduced into the cast of the classic, has caused the Washington (D. C.) Evening Star to bemoan that "their enthusiasts will come to see Shakespeare in order to see them."

Regardless the three Warner brothers continue merrily to enlist the support of high society, educators of great note and the literary world for the Broadway opening on October 9th of the first Shakespearean venture in talkers, the while they ask, "What have they done to Shakespeare?"

The English Speaking Union of New York, John W. Davis, president, has purchased for benefit purposes the entire seating capacity of the Broadway Hollywood theatre, to be sold at $11 a ticket, for the world premiere of Max Reinhardt's production of Warner Brothers' version of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Reinhardt Honor Guest

Professor Max Reinhardt will be guest of honor at the Union's benefit performance. He arrived in New York this week from Genoa to supervise personally the complete mechanical re-equipment and redecoration of the Hollywood theatre. He will participate as acoustical, visual and mechanical supervisor and even stage a complete dress rehearsal, in itself an unusual piece of Broadway showmanship for the motion picture. They're spending $10,000 just to beautify the theatre.

The new "Multiscope," a camera device which Professor Reinhardt developed with studio technicians, will "throw" the Nijinska ballets and woodland scenes upon the screen with what is promised to be "a third dimensional effect."

The world premiere will be held simultaneously with others in London, Paris, Vienna, Amsterdam, Sydney and Manila.

Max Reinhardt will participate also in the National Broadcasting Company's countrywide "Midsummer Night's Dream" program from both New York and Hollywood on Saturday.

The Shakespeare Association of America, through its president, Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach, distinguished Shakespearean scholar, congratulated the Warners on this the first of their "cycle" of Shakespearean photoplays. The felicitations were written to Will H. Hays, as leader of the industry.

And a Committee for the Advancement of the Screen is encouraging the attendance at the showing of important leaders in the social, civic and cultural life.

Commendation for the effort came also from the National Operatic and Dramatic Association, one of the leading cultural organizations in Great Britain; from Arnold F. Haskell, biographer of Nijinsky and Diaghileff, author of "Balletomania"; Professor J. Isaacs, leading English Shakespearean authority, of King's College, London, and from Dr. G. B. Harrison, another authority on Shakespeare.

Grosset and Dunlap, publishers, are marketing a special edition of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The press and the radio are daily tying in on other ballyhoo and Warners will have spent $1,500,000 on production and merchandising costs together by the time of next Wednesday's premiere.

Films Not Crime Influence: Moley

Defense of the motion picture against critics who charge that the film criminally influences or otherwise prompts persons to act against society was undertaken this week by Raymond Moley, former head Roosevelt "brain truster," and now editor of the magazine Today, at the conference on crime held by Governor Herbert Lehman at Albany's Chancellors' Hall.

"Children and adults are questioned as to whether they saw movies before they committed a crime," Professor Moley explained. "The investigation usually yields an affirmative answer. Consequently the conclusion is hurriedly and unfairly drawn that crime is caused by movies."

"With respect to this," he added, "I should like to suggest that the opposite might be proved just as easily. Ask every Boy Scout and Girl Scout whether he or she saw a movie before he or she did a particularly gracious or generous or brave act. The answer will probably be in the affirmative.

"We fail to recognize the fact that newspapers, the drama and movies, when they fulfill their true purpose, not only embody a representation of human life, but they embody the artistic or interpretative conceptions of those who seek to explain, not reform, human life.

"It is a difficult task that is before those who are engaged in improving the drama, either on the stage or on the screen—and some of them are doing magnificently well. I commend to you what Mr. Will Hays and his organization is doing in this connection," he added.

AMPA's Guests This Week

1,737 Licenses Granted in N. Y. By Censor Board

Nine motion pictures, the identities of which were not divulged, were not permitted public exhibition in New York State by the censor board in 1934-35. This number is insignificant in its comparison with the 1,737 licenses granted.

There were 225 pictures from which eliminations were ordered, 1,512 receiving approval without elimination. Only 33 silent pictures were presented to the board.

Some 24,881 licenses were granted for duplicate prints for showing in this state.

Approximately 1,868 eliminations were ordered from the 225 pictures cut, classed as follows: Scenes eliminated, 1,352; sub-titles or dialogue eliminated, 516.

The grounds upon which the eliminations were made were as follows: Indecent, 604; inhuman, 136; tending to incite to crime, 436; immoral or tending to corrupt morals, 628; sacrilegious, 64.

The films from which eliminations were made were classified by the board as follows: Dramas, 130; comedies, 42; comedy dramas, 17; serials, 8; educationals, 4; cartoons, 1; scenics, 12; novelty, 1; miscellaneous, 10, for a total of 225. A total of 8,745 reels were examined.

Twenty formal requests for re-examination by the director of the division were made by applicants, and five appeals to the State Board of Regents. Twelve pictures were rejected in toto, of which three were thereafter revised and licensed.

The censorship since its inception in 1921 has netted some $1,866,180 to the state, on the basis of a 14-year gross income of $2,917,810, charged against which there were expenses for the period totaling $1,051,630.

Net revenue to the state for 1934-35 was $177,415, from average gross of $238,612.

The director of the censorship division, Irwin Esmond, in his report to the Board of Education, requested additional reviewers.

Pictures reviewed emanated from Germany, England, Spain, Russia, France, Hungary, China, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Sweden, Ukrainia and Norway.

Wampas Organization Decides to Disband

The Wampas (Western Associated Motion Picture Advertisers) came to an end Tuesday night following a meeting of 40 members who were unable to suggest a workable plan to revive interest. The assets probably will be distributed among the approximately 65 active members.

The organization started 15 years ago and at one time was one of the strongest of its kind in the industry. For years the selection of the Wampas Baby Stars was an annual event.

Sales Tax Hearing Adjourned

A hearing on objections of United Artists and Universal to the application of the New York City sales tax to film rentals in New York was adjourned indefinitely to permit the film companies to gather additional data for their opposition.

VOLUNTARY AGREEMENT PROCEDURE OUTLINED

But Distributors Say Roosevelt's New Plan Offers No Inducement Toward Code

Paving the way for adoption by industries of voluntary codes and clarifying the atmosphere which had beclouded the procedure under which such agreements were expected to be submitted, President Roosevelt on Monday authorized a White House statement detailing the plan of procedure under the skeletonized NRA. Observers called it the President's opening gun in his campaign for new NRA regulations at the next session of Congress.

The statement invited business and industry to preserve NRA fair practice and labor agreements by subscribing to voluntary agreements. Under the provisions outlined the Federal Trade Commission and the NRA, under the guidance of Major George L. Berry, NRA Division Administrator and recently appointed Coordinator for Industrial Cooperation, will supervise.

Immunity from the anti-trust laws—a point about which film distributors are much concerned in any voluntary code discussion—would be guaranteed to firms joining the agreements covering labor practice and certain limited fair trade stipulations. A broader range of fair trade practices would be granted to industries willing to take their chance on anti-trust law prosecution.

Meanwhile the motion picture industry is marking time, and with few exceptions interest in the field in a plan of self-government remains passive, although Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is conferring with exhibitor units on a local tribunal plan.

The MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware is reported to be taking steps to bring about arbitration.

Don Thornburg, exhibitor of Marshalltown, Ia., said he is pressing his conspiracy action against members of the onetime motion picture Code Authority, despite the fact that board no longer exists. Mr. Thornburg, who was a frequent litigant before the Des Moines board, said there may be a hearing soon on his action claiming that Columbia and Universal stopped his film service at the order of the Code Authority.

In detailing the provisions for voluntary code procedure, the President divided the arrangements into three distinct categories:

1. Agreements covering only labor standards—guaranteed collective bargaining, minimum wages, maximum hours and prohibition of child labor. In order to assure antitrust law immunity, such agreements must be approved by the NRA and the President, and must contain a provision similar to the bitterly contested Section 7a of the original recovery act.

2. Agreements not to engage in certain types of unfair trade practices. If these practices offend against existing law, such agreements will carry with them immunity from antitrust law prosecution. However, if the practices are not specifically forbidden by laws now on the statute books, no guaranty of immunity can be given.

3. Agreements covering only fair-trade practices approved by the Federal Trade Commission under its existing trade practice conference procedure. Such agreements which may cover almost as wide a range of trade practices as the old NRA codes, theoretically do not carry immunity. However, since the Federal Trade Commission is the initiator of prosecutions under the antitrust laws, it is assumed that it would hesitate to attack an agreement it had itself sanctioned.

Sees Little to Gain

"It has never been contended that the antitrust laws prohibit industrial agreement on labor standards or that they conflict with other trade practice acts," was the comment of the New York Herald-Tribune on Tuesday. "Hence, except for the fact that the Federal Trade Commission's stamp of approval on an agreement would tend to hold off prosecutions by the Department of Justice, it would appear that employers would have nothing material to gain from availing themselves of the voluntary code provisions of the extended NRA.

"The White House statement was read as much for its implications, however, as for its direct commitments. In one part, for instance, it seemed to suggest that, if industries go along with the Administration on the basis now laid down, the President might be willing to drop his plan to seek permanent NRA legislation in the coming session of Congress."

Procedure Outlined

The White House announcement outlined the procedure of submitting and accepting voluntary agreements as follows:

1. All proposed agreements for voluntary industrial cooperation are to be filed with the Federal Trade Commission. Labor provisions and trade practice agreements shall appear under separate titles.
2. The Trade Commission shall refer the labor provisions to the NRA, which will confer with a labor advisory unit and an industrial advisory unit, and hold open hearings to decide whether to approve them. That decision will go back to the Federal Trade Commission.
3. After the President approves the labor provisions, the Federal Trade Commission shall make an order approving the trade practice provisions, which it will have examined in the meantime. The Federal Trade Commission will have physical custody of voluntary agreements.

Authority to Commission

Monday's announcement followed up an executive order by which the President passed to the trade commission his authority over voluntary codes.

Major Berry, the new coordinator, will have almost complete control of what remains of the NRA.

OFFERS NOTHING, SAY DISTRIBUTORS

Film distribution leaders in New York regard the detailed plan of procedure outlined by the White House as offering "nothing" in the way of an inducement to industry, and especially the motion picture industry, to proceed with the formulation of a voluntary code.

That view is based on the fact that the provisions grant no immunity from prosecution of concerted acts under the antitrust laws or from conspiracy litigation or treble damages collectable under the antitrust laws.

"If we finally do adopt a voluntary code, we would be better off if we didn't get the Government in on it, as it would result in Government meddling in something it knows nothing about," was the way one informed observer put it.

Stock Holdings of Film Men Shifted

Changes in stock holdings of film company officials during August, as reported by the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington include:

Acquisition direct of 24 shares and of 1,156 shares of Columbia Pictures common through a voting trust by a stock dividend by Harry Cohn, who held 1,019 shares at the end of the month direct and 47,457 shares through the voting trust, as previously reported.

Through White, Weld & Company, Harold B. Clark acquired 2,100 six per cent convertible Fox Film debentures, holding 9,700 at the close of the month.

Reports on Warner Brothers disclosed that Albert Warner had acquired 823,667 six per cent optional convertible debentures through a liquidation dividend, holding 1,565,333 at the end of the month. He also held 239,520 debentures through his holding company A, while his holding company B reported disposition of 823,667 debentures. H. M. Warner acquired 823,667 debentures from his holding company B; and at the end of the month held 1,602,233.

Reports on the holdings of officials at the end of August showed Albert Warner to have 63,260 shares of Warner common and 10,618 $3 cumulative preferred, direct, and 5,988 shares of common through holding company A and 4,786 shares of preferred through holding company B. H. M. Warner held 67,460 shares of common and 10,618 preferred direct, 2,115 shares of common through holding company A and 4,786 preferred through holding company B.

Harold B. Clark reported holdings of 201 shares of Fox A common.

TESTIMONY UNDERWAY IN ST. LOUIS ANTITRUST TRIAL; JURY SELECTED

Government Denies Request for Further Continuance Due to Illness of Abel Carey Thomas; Equity Suit in Abeyance

Testimony in the Government's antitrust suit against eight distributing and producing corporations and six individual defendants, executives of these companies, all charged with conspiracy in depriving three theatres of first-run product, is under way before a jury in the United States district court in St. Louis, after an unsuccessful attempt by defense counsel to delay the case until next March.

Insistent several times in the past for an immediate trial on the indictments pending against the defendants since last January, the Government emerged victorious from preliminary skirmishes in which the court overruled demurrers and denied the request to continue the action because of the serious illness of Abel Carey Thomas, secretary and general counsel of Warner Bros., described by Warner counsel as "an indispensable witness."

Other court actions of a different nature but also involving exhibitor-distributor relations were being threatened by the Independent Theatre Owners in New York this week, while a federal investigation of film purchases was sought in Nebraska, and a decision is awaited from the federal court in a move to compel service to 10-cent theatres in Minneapolis.

St. Louis Jury Selected

Meanwhile, over the protest of counsel for the 14 defendants who insisted the court's determination to proceed without delay took them by surprise, the St. Louis conspiracy trial actually started on Wednesday with the selection of a jury. The Government, represented by Russell G. Hardy, special assistant United States attorney general, launched its presentation immediately afterward, expecting to complete its case in four days. Defense attorneys have announced they will take about four weeks, and the trial is expected to require at least six weeks.

Judge George H. Moore on Monday consented to a 24-hour continuance by agreement of counsel to permit the defense to complete a last-minute marshaling of its case. Defense counsel had anticipated the equity case on the Government's petition for an injunction would proceed prior to the opening of the restraint of trade action, but Judge Moore passed the equity suit until after the criminal case is completed.

Charge Political Move

Executives on trial are Harry M. Warner, president of Warner; Herman Starr, Warner treasurer and vice-president; Gradwell L. Sears, Warner sales executive; George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager of Paramount Pictures, and Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing. Mr. Thomas, who is also a defendant, is ill in New York, and the court granted a severance for him on the Government's request so the trial could proceed immediately.

Corporate defendants are Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Vitaphone Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.; Paramount Distributing Corporation and RKO Distributing Corporation.

At the same time New York home office distributing circles again were charging that the prosecution was a political move, with Warner Bros. the chief target, and despite Government denials distribution executives held to the belief that this trial is a test case with respect to the major companies.

Department of Justice counsel has said that the result may have an important bearing on product buying and booking throughout the country, and from St. Louis came word that the Government was preparing to place on the stand independent exhibitors, especially those who have a grievance against the large distributors. Don Thornburg, Marshalltown, Ia., exhibitor, himself a plaintiff in court actions against distributors, announced in St. Louis he planned to offer his services as a Government witness in the present trial.

New Fight for Delay Fails

When the case was called on Monday, an imposing array of defense counsel, headed by former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, for Warner, fought hard and long to delay the trial, and the arguments were frequently bitter and served to emphasize the ill feeling between opposing counsel. Warner attorneys submitted affidavits from three New York physicians who had examined Mr. Thomas and found him unable to attend the trial. One doctor said the Warner legal head may be able to testify in two or three months, but Government counsel brought expert medical testimony to show that according to Mr. Thomas' symptoms he will never be able to testify either in court or by deposition, and that to force him to do so would shorten his life.

"It appears," Mr. Hardy said, "that the defense attorneys are trying to continue the case until Mr. Thomas dies and his death would be put forward as a reason for never holding the trial."

To which former Senator Reed replied: "Then why don't you dismiss the indictment against him?"

Cites Continuances

In making his ruling, Judge Moore said there had been several continuances in the case, and that it appeared that other defendants could tell what had occurred in conferences in which Mr. Thomas took part, with respect to the negotiations for product for the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres in St. Louis. Judge Moore also held the defense affidavit supporting the continuance request did not properly detail the testimony Mr. Thomas would give for the defense.

Attorneys for the defense then began to argue that inasmuch as the Department of Justice had gone to extraordinary lengths on several occasions to press the equity proceedings for an injunction on the ground that delay in the criminal case was causing the alleged victim of the socalled conspiracy to be "bled white," the court should hear the injunction matter first. The equity case had been continued from September 10 when the death of Senator Reed's sister called him out of town.

The Government has called Carl E. Milliken, Frederick I. Herron of the Hays office and certain of the organization's records. It also has summoned Skouras Super Theatres Corporation and Samuel B. Jeffries, secretary, for corporation records.

New York Independents Authorize Counsel to Sue on Forcing of Shorts and Withholding of Product on 1934-35 Contract

The trial called to St. Louis a large number of film and theatre men from New York and elsewhere, as defendants and witnesses for the Government or the defense. A large battery of defense attorneys from New York is on hand.

The criminal offense charged is a misdemeanor, punishable upon conviction by a maximum penalty of one year in jail or $5,000 fine, or both.

Independents to Sue

Meanwhile in New York the Independent Theatre Owners Association authorized Milton C. Weisman, its attorney, to file suits against major distributors for alleged forcing of shorts and for withholding films due on the 1934-35 contract. The exhibitors are complaining that exchanges are releasing inferior pictures while holding better product due last year for release this season or for selling on 1935-36 pacts.

William Youngclaus, Lincoln, Neb., exhibitor, has requested a federal investigation into his booking difficulties at the Empress, Grand Island, Neb., and with attorneys has conferred on the matter with United States Senators Norris of Nebraska and Nye of North Dakota. Mr. Nye is understood to have expressed himself as sympathetic.

The United States supreme court may get the fight instituted by operators of 10-cent theatres in the Twin Cities for product from major companies, in which a decision is due from Federal Judge Gunnar Nordbye, who heard the case in district court in Minneapolis.

Defense counsel denied any conspiracy existed between the companies or with the Publix Northwest circuit, and informed the court that if they were compelled to service low admission theatres it would disrupt exhibition by causing an increase in dime houses. Complainants are the Benz Bros., owners of the Palace and Lyceum, Minneapolis, and Dale & Montgomery, operating the Garrick, St. Paul.

Paramount Alone to Be Probed by SEC

No film companies other than Paramount will be studied by the federal Securities and Exchange Commission in its investigation of reorganizations which some months ago brought to light details of profit made by members of protective committees and others. It was explained that while there were several mergers in the picture industry, the investigation was of general nature and it was felt that a study of one case would be sufficient to disclose conditions.

Issuance by the SEC of regulations granting temporary relaxation of requirements to holding companies will have no bearing on the Twentieth Century-Fox situation, it was said by officials of the commission. It was explained that the new regulations apply to holding companies in the utility field only.

Court Disapproval Expected on 50% Fox Met Purchase

Virtual admission by Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres Corporation, that the company is insolvent by several million dollars, together with strenuous creditor opposition, is expected to have a bearing on the decision of Judge Martin B. Manton in the United States circuit court of appeals in New York in considering whether Fox Theatres should be compelled to acquire a half interest in the reorganized Fox Metropolitan Playhouses. Attorneys say indications are the purchase will not be allowed.

Other Fox Theatres developments were that applications for fees for services in the Fox "Met" reorganization would probably aggregate $867,011 or more, and, in St. Louis, receivers asked the United States district court to dismiss the suit brought by minority bondholders to reorganize the Theatre Realty Company, owner of the Fox theatre property, under the amended bankruptcy act.

Judge Manton postponed to October 8 a preliminary hearing on arguments whether 50 per cent of the Metropolitan Playhouses stock should be purchased by Fox Theatres for $275,000, as sought by a stockholders' protective committee.

Mr. Weisman, however, was given an opportunity to say that the $30,000,000 in claims against Fox Theatres would probably be reduced to about $4,500,000, and that including this figure the total liabilities would be between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 as against assets of something more than $2,000,000. He said the expected recovery of $7,500,000 from William Fox in current litigation would probably not materialize, and it therefore could not be considered an asset. Mr. Fox recently made a statement in court that he was without funds, according to reports.

It is understood Joseph M. Schenck, head of Metropolitan Playhouses, has offered $1,500,000 for the half interest on behalf of United Artists Theatres, and if the Fox Theatres acquisition is prohibited, it is expected the Schenck offer will be accepted.

Reduction by the court in the requested fees for service in the Fox Met reorganization is expected to bring the total to within the $500,000 appropriated for such expenses. Irving Trust Company, which has received $25,000, asked a final allowance of $75,000 for services as receiver and trustee.

Attorneys for Mr. Fox have completed the presentation of their side of the case in the hearings on the $1,000,000 suit of the Chicago Title & Trust Company involving a redemption claim of Roxy Theatre stock, before Referee Sol M. Stroock.

Edmond Koeln, one of the two circuit court receivers for the Theatre Realty Company, Harry Greenman, president of the company, eight individual bondholders and a bondholders' protective committee which claims to have deposits of $3,142,100 of $4,500,000 outstanding bonds, are seeking dismissal of the minority bondholders' action to reorganize the St. Louis company under the new laws. It is contended that the required two-thirds of the creditors would not vote for a minority plan, and that two-thirds of the bondholders have already worked out a reorganization plan which will insure all creditors eventual opportunity to recover their investment. The bankruptcy petition will be heard on October 18 in the United States district court.

Difficulties between Paramount and Fox West Coast, understood to have revolved around percentage terms and flat rentals for the subsequent runs, were declared to have been straightened out. FWC has been playing no Paramount product and the circuit has fallen behind on releases.

Fox Intermountain Agency Corporation, Fox Midwest Agency Corporation, Fox Wisconsin Agency Corporation and National Agency Corporation have been chartered at Wilmington, Del., as operating concerns for units in the new National Theatres setup. Inter-Mountain Theatres, Inc., new unit resulting from the reorganization of Fox Rocky Mountain Theatres, Denver, has been chartered at Dover, Del., while Fox Inter-Mountain Theatres Corporation changed its name to Fox Mid-Central Corporation, New York.

Fox Intermountain has acquired the International Amusement Company, consisting of three houses, and has taken over the State, Boulder, Col., from Silver State Theatre Company. The acquisitions make a total of 63 for the circuit.

H. J. Fitzgerald, operating head of Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, has returned to Milwaukee after clearing up disputed points in a five-year contract with National Theatres in New York conferences. Rick Ricketson has reached an agreement on his pact.

Japanese Planning Educational Shorts

by CHIKUSHI TANI
Tokyo Correspondent

Government control of film production is to be extended to the making of shorts for educational purposes and for the delineation of various phases of Japanese life. The first shorts will be designed to insure "clean elections."

One picture, finished early in August, is a three-reeler called "This One Vote," and was made with the cooperation of the Photo Chemical Laboratories, large producer. It will be used between now and next May, when an election is to be held for the House of Representatives.

Educational, foreign and communications offices are all cooperating with the producers in the new film control.

One-reelers planned by the foreign office include: "The Present Day Japan," "Children's Japan," "Women of Japan," "Japan for Student's Life," "Japan, the Nation of Sport," "Japan Rural Life," "Japan for Amusement," "National Defense of Japan," "Japan in Sciences and Art" and "Japanese Features."

The Communications office has also decided to produce a feature length picture to be called "On the Wings of Wireless."

Gabe Yorke Resigns Post At 20th Century-Fox

Gabe Yorke has resigned from the studio Twentieth Century-Fox publicity department, effective October 15. Since Harry Brand recently took over the studio publicity department Mr. Yorke has been handling the department's exploitation division.

Mr. Yorke, a graduate of Columbia University and a former member of the university's faculty of political science, served as a reporter on the Brooklyn Eagle, Morning Chronicle, London, and as a book reviewer for Forum Magazine. For one season he was with Miller Bros.' 101 Ranch, then advertising manager for the Broadway Roxy Theatre, in charge of publicity, and became advertising manager of Fox Films.

Theatre Pace Set By San Francisco

San Francisco and its environs is now in the midst of theatre activity such as it has not experienced for some time. If all the present plans are carried out this year should prove one of the most eventful in the history of San Francisco amusement circles.

With the exception of the reopening two weeks ago of the United Artists theatre practically all the activity concerns subsequent run houses. Legitimate theatres, also, are showing signs of renewed life, especially burlesque. The Capitol was reopened with burlesque some six weeks ago by S. S. Millard and proved so successful that the Minsky house, which was dark for months, is also in full operation again.

Recently Phil Frease, who operates theatres in Redwood City and Vacaville, entered the suburbs of Albany, near Berkeley, and built the Albany. The house proved successful as a second run from the start. Borg and Peters, who are operating several houses in the bay region, have also been successful with their new theatre in Salinas.

The Coliseum theatre, which several months ago suffered a $30,000 fire, has been remodeled and reopened by the Sam Levin interests. Mr. Levin, who formerly managed the house, has resigned to devote his time to the construction of a new theatre in Alameda in association with George Oppen. They will have opposition in Alameda, however, because the Nasser brothers have reopened the dark Strand in that town.

Outside the city too, but still nearby, Dan Tocchini has opened his Empire theatre at Santa Rosa and in the adjacent San Mateo county Harry Leven has re-opened the Bay Shore.

In the meantime in San Francisco proper, Aaron Goldberg, who operates five small houses on Market Street, is negotiating with Dan and Abe Markowitz for the purchase of the Pompeii theatre next to the United Artists, which, if the deal goes through, will give him an additional house on the same street.

Herman Schwartz is remodeling the old Princess which he purchased from the San Francisco Bank for a sum reported to be $50,000.

Reports are current that both the United Artists and the Golden Gate, the latter under the direction of RKO, are looking for "continuation" houses as the Fox West Coast group have in the St. Francis.

Across the bay in Vallejo another highly competitive situation has developed with Fox West Coast predominating. At the moment FWC runs the Vallejo and Fox Virginia, with Lou Traeger operating the Valmar. J. M. Gould is building a new 900-seat house in the same town but this move has been answered by the FWC group with plans for the re-opening of their dark "protection" house, the Strand, which has been kept on the shelf for just such a situation.

W. A. Brady, Jr., Dies In Bungalow Fire

William A. Brady, Jr., theatrical producer and a member of one of Broadway's "First Families," was burned to death late last week in a fire that destroyed the bungalow of Elise Chisolm, press agent, at Colts Neck, near Freehold, N. J.

Mr. Brady, who was 35, was a half-brother of Alice Brady and the husband of Katherine Alexander.

Mr. Brady had long been active on Broadway and in 1931 he produced his first show on his own, "Little Women." The next year he presented "We Are No Longer Children" and later "Too Many Boats."

Independents Act to Prevent Fox Milwaukee Zoning

Clearance and zoning continues a point of controversy in a number of cities, and Milwaukee this week was added to the centers where independent exhibitors are disturbed over circuit protection. Disputes are still raging in New York, Chicago and Kansas City.

Learning that Fox and MGM have agreed to contracts submitted by H. J. Fitzgerald, operating head of Fox theatres in Wisconsin, which call for more extensive protection, a committee of five members of the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin has been empowered to take any necessary steps, including legal action, to prevent the Fox demands.

Registered letters have been sent to all Milwaukee branch managers, with copies sent to the general sales managers, requesting that the committee be given a hearing on clearance and zoning before any new product deals are made in accordance with the Fox circuit's plans.

The schedule submitted by Mr. Fitzgerald also claims protection for his Milwaukee houses over all theatres in Milwaukee county, Waukesha, Oconomowoc, Port Washington, Pewaukee, Hartland, Menominee Falls, West Bend, East Troy and Racine.

RKO was seeking postponement of the trial in the suit filed against that circuit and Twentieth Century-Fox by Skouras Theatres Corporation alleging that a 10-year franchise and protection agreement was breached when the film company sold day and date runs to RKO in New York. The action is slated for the supreme court before Justice Albert Cohen. Skouras recently obtained a temporary injunction enjoining RKO's 81st Street Theatre from playing Fox product day and date with Skouras' Nemo and Riverside.

Meetings in Chicago

In Chicago meetings are under way with a view to a settlement of the clearance problem created by M. & K. demands for additional seven days' clearance between "C" week of release and first general run. It is understood B. & K. is receiving clearance in contracts with some companies, and independents claim this is illegal and are talking about taking the matter to court and also a boycott of Paramount films if a satisfactory settlement is not reached. The independents say moving the schedule ahead one week in "A" or "B" classification is no solution. Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, when in Chicago the other said the local situation is "healthier" than most situations.

Distributor approaches in Kansas City to independent exhibitors indicate Fox Midwest has purchased a "mild" form of protection, consisting largely of prior runs in some zones, and where zones have been established they do not appear to be very definitely marked out.

W. D. Fulton, operator of five independent houses, pointed out this form of protection would not be particularly disadvantageous to the independent, but it will mean he must bid for protection or prior run against his own competition. While opinion is divided, Jay Means, until recently head of the ITO, can't see that any undue advantage will accrue to the buyer of protection. Over 90 per cent of the independents, however, have indicated opposition to zoning, one reason being that the resultant competitive bidding would increase film rentals.

The shift of Loew's Orpheum, downtown house, to day and date with Loew's State is having no effect on clearance in Boston, according to the local MGM exchange. Protection is being figured as in the past 30 days from the opening at the State.

NEW PRODUCING UNIT TO GET ALLIED BACKING

Plans for Independent Company with Exhibitor Sponsorship Reported Nearing Completion

Reviving a move that was under way two years ago, but never carried to completion, Allied States Association is sponsoring the formation of an independent producing company, and while the national officers will not comment other than to say "an important announcement" can be expected shortly, it is understood the plans are nearing completion.

Allied officials are extremely secretive about the new organization, but it was learned that during the Allied of New Jersey Convention in Atlantic City last month, some of the national leaders went over the various details in that connection. At that convention Abram F. Myers, general counsel, urged exhibitors to encourage new production and to engage in production as "a defensive measure."

A similar arrangement was practically closed with an independent producing company about two years ago, but the promised support from member exhibitors failed to materialize.

Mr. Myers made a special trip from Washington last week to confer in New York with Allied directors and other interests on the new film company, and to discuss various other organizational affairs. It was agreed informally to adopt the "American Picture Day" giveaway promotion of historic photos. Among those attending were Sidney E. Samuelson, national president and head of New Jersey Allied; Aaron Saperstein, Chicago; Al Steffes, Minneapolis; Charles H. Olive, Washington; H. M. Richey, Detroit; Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh; A. K. Howard, Boston, and Alex Schrieber.

While Washington is favored for the 1936 Allied convention, the decision as to time and place will be made when the board meets in January, when officers also will be elected.

Regional Conventions Set

Activity was noted from various exhibitor organizations in the field, and several annual conventions have been set.

Members of the Connecticut MPTO at a meeting in New Haven complained they had been forced to "bicycle" prints at the eleventh hour because of the continued print shortage. Previous demands for an increase in prints have gone unheeded.

Demand for delivery of "Top Hat" as a 1934-35 release is being made by several exhibitor groups, among them the Connecticut MPTO, the Ohio ITO at Columbus, and Allied in Chicago, claiming that only two of the three Astaire films contracted for had been delivered under last year's pacts. Ohio independents are being urged to notify RKO by registered letter that they expect to play "Top Hat."

The Ohio ITO is asking exhibitors to share playing time with independent producers, declaring "it is absolutely essential for the future welfare of the independent exhibitor that the independent producer be kept in business."

Better Prints Asked

Improvement in print quality and the elimination of oil and dirt from prints is asked in letters sent to all sales managers and exchanges by Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois. Mr. Wehrenberg complained the lighting is inadequate.

Independents in Pittsburgh are meeting to consider admission price increases, with Eli Goldstein of the Paramount leading the move.

The Allied of Michigan annual convention at the Leland Hotel, Detroit, October 21-23, will be addressed by Rep. Samuel B. Pettengill, sponsor of the block booking measure bearing his name. H. M. Richey, the unit's general manager, is inviting civic and welfare leaders to hear the discussion. National Allied Leaders will attend the three-day session.

The semi-annual convention of the MPTO of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee has been advanced to October 13-14, in order to have Ed Kuykendall, national president, as a speaker. The meeting will be in the Chisca Hotel, Memphis.

Texas Allied Meets October 21

Allied of Texas will hold its annual convention in San Antonio, October 21-22, announced A. H. Cole, president.

Directors and members of the KMTA will confer in Kansas City on October 11 with Mr. Kuykendall, who is holding similar sessions with exhibitors in other cities on current problems. Independent exhibitors in Kansas City are sounding out sentiment for a possible reorganization of the ITO, following officers' resignations.

The next monthly meeting of New Jersey Allied will be held October 24 at Newton, N. J., home of Mr. Samuelson, president.

Northwest Allied has scheduled its third annual Bowery Movie Ball, October 25, in Portland.

Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, Inc., is moving its quarters to 20 Shawmut street, Boston.

Tobis Film Plans To Release Thirty

Tobis Cinema Film, A. G., of which Fritz Mainz, until recently production manager of Europa-Filmverleih A.G., has been appointed managing director in Berlin, has changed its trade mark to Tobis Cinema, and in the future will be officially known by that title.

During the season of 1935-36, Tobis Cinema will release approximately 30 German pictures from the various production centers in London, Berlin, Paris, Prague, Vienna and Madrid.

‘O’Shaughnessey’s Boy’

(MGM-Goldstone)

Circus Drama

Two things usually considered quite risky in screen entertainment are incorporated in this picture. Presented in exploitation with the same degree of force and power that they are in the film, it is not impossible that they may become the dominating showmanship assets. “O’Shaughnessey’s Boy” is a circus picture, reflecting in substantiating production values all the peculiar glamor, color and thrill of all phases of circus life. Its motivating story is father and son conflict. In this, none of the many old familiar angles has been omitted. Additionally, several that are distinctively new have been included. Love interest, usually deemed indispensable whether it pertains to clinching hugs and kisses or not, is completely ignored. In place of this, however, is a gripping, heart-warming human interest love story. Showmanship which, in acknowledging this condition, endeavors to create a publicity campaign that will give the public the proper slant and understanding, should bring the best results.

The basic story is simple and powerful. Windy is an ace tiger trainer. His toddling son (Spanky MacFarland) thinks he’s the grandest guy on earth. His wife, given some little cause but mainly egged on by vicious-minded sister Martha, develops an aversion that finally impels her to desert him, taking the boy along. His nerve shattered, Windy loses control of the tigers, and is mauled and maimed. Wanting his boy more than anything else in the world, he spends years searching all over the country. One day, practically forced back into the circus, he learns from Hastings that his wife is dead and the boy is in military school and that he has permission to have him with him for a while.

The boy Stubby (now Jackie Cooper) has nothing but hatred for his father. Compelled to be a soldier and obey orders, he goes along with the circus. No kindness that Windy can conceive can break down the rigid barrier erected by Stubby. But one night, aboard train, as Stubby in going to bed finds his mother’s picture in a beautiful frame, he talks with and finally calls Windy “pop.” That one word completely restores Windy’s confidence; he wants to do the great act over again. Demonstrating his mastery over the tigers, he starts practising, with Stubby close by encouraging him.

Comes Aunt Martha to claim the child. But the boy doesn’t want to go. Windy makes the plea of a desperate father which, when coldly received by Martha, so inflames the trainer that he socks her and dashes out to meet his call. In the cage, mentally harassed by what has happened, fearing what might happen to Stubby, things break badly. For a few suspense-packed minutes it seems that the tiger again will attack his trainer. At the crisis, with the circus audience in near panic, Jack appears at his usual place at the steel bars to shout encouragement. That’s all Windy needs. He makes his beasts do their stunt and wins Stubby to him forever.

By its very nature the story of this picture is an exploitation feature. Smart showmanship which capitalizes the condition previously pointed out will do much for it. From the circus atmosphere production background, the fact that it can be given a carnival flag-waving, calliope tooting ballyhoo campaign is evident. With Beery and Cooper there are two names bound to command patron attention, in addition to the best worths of all assets properly amalgamated. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

Barbary Coast

(United Artists-Goldwyn)

Romantic Drama

An absorbing tale of romance and melodrama, told against the background of rough, tough San Francisco in the colorful, exciting early gold rush days, constitute the story and production values, which give this feature unique and powerful entertainent and exploitation worth. More a piece of attention-holding fiction than it is historical, it’s chock full of the Hecht-MacArthur sock and savor. At the same time, two well known incidents of San Francisco history—the start of the first newspaper and the organization of the Vigilantes—finely substantiates the show’s more imaginative character. In the last-named phase, the story (featuring the most noted) puts the modern gangster and his henchman in costume, and turning back the clock more than 75 years, combines two mediums of entertainment and showmanship interest, preserving and embellishing the thrill, excitement and suspense in the action drama quality of both.

The yarn wastes no time getting started, or does it hesitate in moving from one vivid chapter to another. There’s a thrill to the arrival of Mary Rutledge, first white “lady” ever to come to ’Frisco. A bit of comedy drama arises as she, befriended by Colonel Cobb, is victimized by Old Atrocity. Heart-break ensues as rough men tell her that the man she came to marry is dead, killed by Louis Chamalis. Comes a pulse quickening sock as Chamalis and Mary meet and Mary becomes Swan, the alluring come-on of the roulette tables. There are the melodrama of murder, the comedy of the racketeer controlled barroom court and the thrill as one realizes that the vigilantes are coming into existence. Then more gangsterism, Chamalis muzzling Cobb’s paper, prevented from destroying it by Swan. More killings follow and the supporters of law and order are powerless against the armed might of Chamalis and his mob. Through it all is an air of romantic conflict as Swan rebuffs Louis’ every effort to make love.

Then comes a switch to real romantic love interest as Swan and Carmichael, the poem-reading miner, meet. A few hours of happiness and they part, Carmichael to leave for the East, Swan back to the sordid world to which her imagination had permitted her to escape momentarily. But James, not sailing, comes to Chamalis and loses his fortune at cold-hearted Swan’s table. Chamalis, feeling that Swan is in love with someone else but not knowing whom, is going mad with jealousy. After more killings, Knuckles, Louis’ number one bodyguard, is the first strung up. Chamalis determines to fight; Swan and James flee; Louis and his mob chase them over the fog-shrouded harbor. Carmichael is wounded and captured. Then the climax. Chamalis, knowing that his day is ended, gives Swan and Carmichael to each other as he trudges off with the Vigilantes.

In all ways, “Barbary Coast” is finely balanced material, presented in such a way that it holds unusual attention for almost every class of theatre goer. It features Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson and Joel McCrea in glove-fitting roles. In Walter Brennan it presents a cackling comedian with a big wallop. It’s a picture that blends the story telling ability of Hecht and MacArthur, an action melodrama with a legitimate love story, and the Goldwyn flair for spectacular production details.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Little America

(Paramount)

Travel Drama

This production is the pictorial record, concentrating on the more dramatic highlights of showman adventurer Richard E. Byrd’s second Antarctic expedition into Little America, romantically described as “Capital of the Unknown.” It deals in incidents and events which, although made popularly familiar via radio broadcasts and running published accounts during the time the expedition was isolated in the frozen south, assume a more thrilling and dramatic aspect as they appear in authentic picturization.

In an introductory preliminary Mr. Byrd explains the reason for the trip, a purely scientific fact-finding expedition, the results of which will add to the world’s store of knowledge. There follows the loading of the boats at Norfolk, the 15,000-mile trip down the Atlantic and across the Pacific and the approach to the Great Ice Barrier. Ensue the hazards encountered in unloading the supplies, the finding and digging out of "Little America," and the party settling down for its long stay. Some of the more thrilling incidents are the digging out of the plane in which Byrd flew over the South Pole; the starting out of the various scientific parties, via airplane, tractor, dog team and afoot, in which the crackup of the plane is a highlight. Then is shown a Byrd lead plane trip over the mountains, sight of the tractor party and the discovery of new land. There's Byrd's dramatic self-imposed isolation into which a web of theatric drama is woven as sequences show how civilization kept in touch with the adventurers and the anxiety that grew when practically all contact was lost with Byrd. Follows the arrival of the party at his lonely outpost, an actual bit of real drama when Byrd's emaciated features reveal the tortures he underwent. The picture concludes with the final farewell to Little America.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

I Live My Life

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

The character of the story, a comedy romance, who's in it and what those names mean at the box office, the novel and sensationally unique action climax, together with lavish class production, are this picture's showmanship assets. These values, intelligently understood and applied, should establish it as an audience interesting attraction equal to any of the current outstanding pictures.

"I Live My Life" is by no means a perfect picture, yet it is that kind of feature into which alert showmen can sink their teeth and come up with a sparkling campaign. At first glance, the title is not so hot. But when it is understood in relation to the plot and its development, it is one to engage exploitation attention. The cast stars Joan Crawford in a glove fitting role. It supports her with a group of players, Brian Aherne, Frank Morgan, Aline MacMahon, Eric Blore, Fred Keating, Jessie Ralph, Arthur Treacher, Frank Conroy and Etienne Girardot, each one of whom is a principal and all of whom have an acknowledged box-office worth. It is directed by W. S. Van Dyke, responsible for some of the screen's finest entertainment.

As the picture starts, it concentrates on dialogue almost to the total exclusion of smash action. Basically, first localed in Grecian ruins, it's an adventure in love between a play girl Park Avenuite, Kay, and Terry, a serious minded archeologist. The idea is one of those neither-can-get-along-with-or-without-each-other affairs, which has its comedy contrast in the jittery antics of Kay's father, Bentley. The condition prevails even when the picture moves to New York and Terry comes in search of the girl who had given him a phoney name during their two days of bliss in idyllic Greece.

But when the show moves in to Mrs. Gage's Connecticut home, it takes on its true character —a farcical and exciting comedy. Having adequately rated Kay's snobbish socialite intimates, Terry proceeds to do what nobody has ever dared do before, bawl the hide off the fearsome old tycooness, a feat that comes like a boxer rallying in the last couple of rounds to win the decision, completedly changing the show's complexion.

Even though Terry has established himself, he can't get along with or without Kay. It provokes Kay and eventually Bentley to go on a furniture-smashing rampage that has all the side-splitting thrill of slapstick. It sets the stage for the unexpected finale. Terry agrees to let Kay save her face by deserting him at the altar. With the church packed, he smugly awaits the disappointment that everybody will think tragic. He's amazed when the organ starts playing the wedding march and down the aisle on the scared-to-death Bentley's arm comes Kay with her bridal attendants. His shock is nothing to that which the audience gets as the minister asks if there's anybody present who knows any reason why this couple should not be joined in wedlock and Terry yells that he does and then proceeds to voice his reasons. But in the climax Kay out-talks him, the service goes through, and the pair embark for Greece, with Kay not caring whether Terry digs ditches or ancient statues out of the ground as long as she can be with him.

As smart editing certainly will remedy the conditions in the early parts of the picture that detract from its value as showmanship and entertainment, the picture requires only the right understanding on the part of exhibitors to create a favorable popular reaction. The material with which to work is there. Their adaptation rests on whatever essentials have the best local appeal.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Iceland Fisherman

(Pecheurs D'Islande)

(Du World)

Drama

Adapted for the screen from Pierre Loti's novel, "Pecheurs d'Islande," published in 1886, this French dialogue picture, with adequate English titles superimposed, reflects the period and customs of that era on the Breton coast and tells the simple but sincere tale of fishermen, their hardships and their resignation to suffering, and even death. The picture is expertly photographed and the scenes of the sea, both calm and stormy, are especially well done. Somberness is the keynote of the production, with very little comedy.

The performances of the principals are of value, although Marguerite Weintenberger as Gaud Mevel overacts at times. Besides Miss Weintenberger the cast includes Yvette Guilbert, excellent in the role of a grandmother, and Thomy Bourdelle, as a fisherman. While tragedy is dominant and the simplicity of the people is at all times evident, the picture is never morbid but is a moving story with a good deal of suspense, that lifts the production out of mediocrity and makes it interesting.

The theme is that of a girl of a fairly prosperous family, who returns to the little Breton village of her birth after many years in Paris, and falls in love with a poor and reticent fisherman. When he fails to respond the girl takes the bit in her own teeth and proposes marriage to the fisherman. He rejects the proposal because of their different strata of society. When the family lose their money and the girl becomes impoverished the fisherman marries her.

The honeymoon is a week before the fisherman is to sail for the Iceland islands on the regular fishing trip. On their last night together the fisherman relieves the girl's fears that he married her out of pity by telling her that he believed himself unworthy of her. The fishing boat sails and never returns, the picture implying but not showing the wreck. The girl is heartbroken and, according to the code of these simple people, dresses in her mourning garments and goes to the church to join the community in their prayers over the crew of the wrecked ship.—Mooney, New York.

Distributed by Du World. Produced and directed by Pierre Guerlais. Photographed by Roger Hubert. Music by Guy Ropartz. Art director, Hugues Laurent. Adapted from the novel of the same name by Pierre Loti. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, September 20, 1935. General audience classification.

The Private Secretary

(Twickenham-British)

Farce

This very famous stage farce—a stand-by for many years for its author, the late Sir Charles Hawtrey—in film form is substantially unchanged either in presentation or appeal; audiences are offered a sequence of burlesque situations and as central figure a caricature clergyman of the ultra-innocent type which was a pre-war tradition. It is the broadest of broad humor and Edward Everett Horton, in his first British film, has a distinctly new line of business to put over as the clergyman; sometimes it gets very close to slapstick.

Douglas Cattermole, a gay young man about town, expecting a visit from a rich Anglo-Indian uncle and afraid of his creditors, plots with a friend to pose as the private secretary of the uncle. The real secretary, an innocent country clergyman, is persuaded that he must wait in Cattermole's London rooms until his employer summons him. There he is discovered by the Anglo-Indian uncle, who is disgusted to find that his nephew is so completely different from the young man of spirit he expected.

In the meantime, at the Marsland country house, Douglas has fallen in love with his "employer's" pretty daughter Edith, who discourages him from disclosing his real identity by confiding to him her aversion to the ne'er-do-well Cattermole whom her father wants her to marry. When Cattermole senior turns up he announces that the proposed match is off; he has seen his nephew and thinks him a milksop.

In London, the clergyman is pestered by Cattermole's creditors and finally decides to fly to Marsland's country house. Intercepted by Douglas and his friend, he is persuaded to conceal himself in order to avoid the furious Anglo-Indian and has an uncomfortable time, which reaches its climax when he makes an unexpected appearance during a spiritualistic seance arranged by a credulous feminine relative of Marsland. Cattermole junior confesses to his real identity and is hailed with delight by his uncle and the girl.

The selling angles are the fame of the original and the name of Edward Everett Horton. Among individual situations the best stunt possibilities are undoubtedly offered by the episode of the seance.—Allan, London.

Heart's Desire

Musical Romance

Richard Tauber's magnificent voice is exploited here skilfully and, there is every reason to think, with even better box office effect than in "April Blossoms." His numbers are partly operatic and partly from a ballad repertory, so that as a musical it has a double-edged appeal. The modern story and the range of settings, including Vienna beer garden, drawing room and operatic stage, will be appreciated by a wider public than would be drawn by a purely serious musical appeal.

Joseph Steidler, popular singer in a Viennese beer garden, is "discovered" by an English society girl who carries him to London where, under the skilled management of Manager Florian, he is prepared for his operatic debut. In love with the English girl, he discovers half way through the performance that she is engaged to another man. His singing of a tragic aria obtains for him a great success, but he abandons his career and returns to Vienna and the pianist there who loves him.

The transformation of the somewhat uncouth singer into a polished man of the world provides good incidental humor, to which Paul Graetz as the manager contributes notably. All the cast are adequate and sound values and settings are both good.

Tauber is, of course, the selling value and the point of importance is to put over the story as presenting him in modern dress and in a setting enabling him to purvey popular romantic numbers as well as opera. It is safe to say that all the "April Blossoms" admirers will enjoy this, and a lot of other music lovers who found the earlier picture just a bit superior.—Allan London.

Swedenhielms

(Scandinavian)

Comedy

Based on the Nobel prize play by Hjalmar Bergman, this Swedish all-dialogue comedy is entertaining but confines its appeal to those who understand the Scandinavian tongue. While the appeal is limited and the picture lacks in scenic picturization, the technique, construction and photography are well done.

Some of Sweden's outstanding performers are in the cast, Gösta Ekman plays the role of Swedenhielms, Karin Swanström the ever busy housekeeper, and Tutta Rolf is Swedenhielms' daughter. In support are others less known but turning in likable performances.

The Swedenhielms' household consists of five members, Swedenhielms, a widower, with two sons and a daughter and the housekeeper, who cares for the entire family and who is regarded more as a member of the family than its housekeeper. Swedenhielms, a scientist of note and a candidate for the Nobel prize, is so wrapped up in his work that he depends upon the housekeeper to see that the family is fed, never considering where the money is to come from.

Swedenhielms is awarded the prize and he awaits the day when he will receive the award from the King's hand. A shadow, in the person of the money lender who accosts Swedenhielms with unpaid accounts all signed with his signature, looms on the otherwise peaceful and contented household. Swedenhielms, believing his youngest son has forged his father's name and knowing a scandal is imminent, decides to refuse the award.

In a fit of anger Swedenhielms accuses his son of forgery but the son, dumbfounded, refuses to deny the accusation, thinking his brother is the guilty one. Things are straightened out, however, when the housekeeper owns to the crime, thereby saving the family name and permitting the scientist to accept the Nobel prize.—Mooney, New York.

The Goose and the Gander

(Warner)

Comedy

This is essentially a comedy whose humor springs from the embarrassing situations in which the principal characters find themselves. It is a highly sophisticated piece, of the bedroom farce type. At the same time it offers excellent exploitation possibilities as well as entertainment value.

Kay Francis, George Brent, Genevieve Tobin, John Eldredge, Claire Dodd, Ralph Forbes, Spencer Charters and Helen Lowell round out the featured section of the cast. Showmen, billing Miss Francis singly or with the group, should be able to prepare satisfactory campaigns, particularly in combination with the story idea.

Director Alfred E. Green has allowed Miss Francis ample opportunity to display her ability in handling light comedy and she, instead of merely strutting about in peacock fashion modeling the latest Hollywood or Parisian gown, turns in a most convincing performance not only as a mannequin, but as an actress. Her running mate, Brent, already has shown what he can do with light roles and in this picture he strengthens that reputation.

The film, however, really won't stand very close analysis because the dialogue falls flat quite often and the production values are not great, and it is only lifted out of mediocrity by the performances of Miss Francis and Brent.

As the title suggests, Georgianna sets out to prove to Betty Summers the significance of the proverb, "What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander," after Betty has stolen Georgianna's husband and the two meet for the first time, although unknowingly, at a fashionable beach casino.

In the meantime, Georgianna has met Bob McNear and after deciding she highly approves of him she discovers he is the particular boyfriend of the second Mrs. Summers. This increases her determination to teach a lesson, so she arranges for all the parties concerned to spend the night at her lodge in the mountains.

Two crooks, who have robbed several guests of the casino including the first and second Mrs. Summers, also became entangled in the plot and arrive at the lodge at the same time.

When McNear discovers who his hostess is his ardor for Betty, which already has started to cool, becomes absolutely frigid and he breaks with her completely to try and win Georgianna. The crooks, suspecting they are being followed by the police, then hide the jewels in Georgianna's room and her Aunt Julia finds them.

The police finally arrive after the principals in the farce have spent many uncomfortable moments and evoked many a laugh with their actions. By a ruse the real crooks escape and McNear and Georgianna are arrested. At the police station, however, all is cleared up and Betty and Ralph Summers patch up their differences, the thieves are locked up, and a justice of the peace takes care of McNear and Georgianna.—Baehler, New York.

His Family Tree

(RKO Radio)

Comedy Drama

This production has a foundation likely to appeal chiefly to patrons of Irish American descent but it is suitable for all comedy material. The story centers around an Irish saloon keeper who, failing to hear from his son, a prominent politician in a small town in Iowa, comes to America. The politician's wire regards the saloon keeper with disfavor and succeeds in convincing him to avoid his son and keep his identity a secret. The politician, now running for mayor, years ago changed his name to one of more "class" at the insistence of his wife. When his opponents discover this they discredit the saloon keeper's son. Through the efforts of the Irish saloon keeper the son is returned to favor and elected mayor.

Where he is known, James Barton, star of the long-run stage play "Tobacco Road," and the lead in this picture, can be exploited. Besides Mr. Barton the cast includes Margaret Callahan, Addison Randall, Maureen Delany, William Harrigan and Marjorie Gateson. The comedy situations and the predominantly Irish cast are good material for selling the picture.

Failing to hear from his son in America, Murphy (James Barton), former "Bosun," closes his saloon in Ireland and embarks for America. His arrival in Central City, Iowa, is inopportune, as his son (Harrigan) is running for mayor after having changed his name from Murphy to Murfree. Mrs. Murfree, responsible for the change of name, has invented ancestors in Tennessee and has caused to be placed over the fireplace a portrait of an old gentleman, passing him off as her husband's father. She pleads with her father-in-law to keep his identity a secret and insure the election of Murfree, to which Barton agrees. Barton makes friends rapidly in the fourth ward, the Irish district, but these friends turn on him when he professes to be a friend of the name-changing Murfree family. The fourth warders, under the leadership of the widow Oulihan, announce they will vote for Murfree's opponent, the incumbent, a fat, lazy and indifferent mayor who holds his job by adroit politics.

Barton, with his winning personality, returns to favor with the fourth ward and they now plan to vote for Murfree. On the night of the crucial debate between Murfree and the mayor, Barton is kidnaped. The mayor accuses Murfree of kicking his father out of the Murfree home. Murfree denies this accusation but he can't produce Barton to refute it. Barton in the meantime by the clever combination of a "Bosun" whistle and a telephone, summons aid from his friends in the fourth ward, who, coming to his rescue, free him. Barton shows up at the debate, declaring himself for his son.

Two Sinners

(Republic)

Drama

This is an ultra modern, absorbing drama of every-day life, adapted for the screen from the novel, "Two Black Sheep," from the pen of Warwick Deeping.

Showmen should have no trouble expressing themselves in the handling of this picture, for it abounds in exploitation possibilities. The story already has appeared in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan Magazine, and the author, Warwick Deeping, should be quite familiar to many a person because of his "Sorrel and Son," as well as other and more recent best sellers. This fact, along with the cast and the entire background of the film, should prove strong pegs on which exploitation campaigns can be hung.

The background is postwar England and France. In this setting Otto Kruger, Martha Sleeper, Cora Sue Collins and Ferdinand Munier tell the story of a man and a woman who, after suffering unjustly from the world's criticism, finally attain happiness because of their true love for each other and their mutual self-sacrifice.

The cast names are well known and the direction of Arthur Lubin keeps the action moving continuously. The photography and production values are first rate.

Fifteen years in prison have left Henry Vane almost unchanged. His experience has mellowed him, undoubtedly aged him a bit and made him a bit more distinguished, but he still remains the polished English gentleman.

His income is sufficient to support him more than comfortably and he hopes to resume his normal course of living. But Vane is a sensitive man and he sees a deliberate attempt to slight him on the part of his club members and a coolness on the part of his former friends.

Paralleling Vane's London experiences after his release is the story of Elsie Summerstone, a young woman whose sweet disposition is hidden under an unattractive plainness. Elsie, desperate for work, takes the position of governess for little Sally Pym, neglected daughter of the gay, man-crazy and high-living Mrs. Pym. She accompanies the Pym family, including Monte, Mrs. Pym's wealthy but old escort, to the south of France, where she encounters Vane.

Striking up a friendship with little Sally, Henry grows to know her governess better and their romance starts, although it is overshadowed by the constant menace of his prison record.

Without a thought for her child, Mrs. Pym leaves to spend a weekend with Monte at a nearby resort and refuses to return when she learns, after a search by Vane, that her child has broken her arm in a fall. The accident brings Vane and Elsie closer together and he realizes he can't offer her marriage until he tells her of his past. She is horrified and leaves him.

Learning that her mother is dangerously ill, Elsie asks for her wages to return to England and is paid with a check she can't cash. As she substitutes the check for cash from Mrs. Pym's bag she is discovered. Mrs. Pym accuses her of theft and she is taken to jail and sentenced to prison. Vane is convinced of her innocence, however, and strives for her release. In the meantime, Mrs. Pym is killed in an accident and Vane adopts little Sally. He finally obtains Elsie's pardon and she realizes she loves him.—BAEHLER, New York.

Freckles

Dramatic Romance

Homespun dramatic romance with all the homely elements of the soil and Gene Stratton-Porter, this picture faithfully presents the novel in a simple, sincere and moving story. It is drama not lacking in comedy and photographed in an atmosphere of rustic locales known to the hosts of Porter readers that make this picture, thoroughly likeable and entertaining. A simple and understandable story that is concerned chiefly with human emotions, the picture is one for the entire family.

A widely known story and an appealing title present the exhibitor with two assets of worthwhile exploitation value. Selling the story strongly in a dignified but expressive campaign should reach the younger element, most of whom have heard of but never read the Porter books. The fact that it is a family picture is a point to be stressed strongly in the selling campaign.

The struggle of a young boy, alone in the world, parentless and the product of an orphanage institution, in his endeavor to support himself and be a useful member of society is the theme of the picture. Young, untried but a willing and wholesome boy, his attainment of this end is never in doubt, which doesn't in the least detract from the nature of the story. Tom Brown as the homeless boy turns in an outstanding performance. Little Virginia Weidler is another whose acting is of the highest order in her characterization of Laurie Lou.

Worn and weary after trampling many miles, Freckles arrives at the McLean lumber camp in Indiana, looking for work. He meets Laurie Lou and Mary Ardon (Carol Stone), school teacher, who, taking an instant liking to Freckles, succeeds in having him taken on as a guard of the McLean timber. Freckles, in his first night as guard is accosted by a lumber thief who warns the boy to make himself scarce. Frightened by the man and in a cold sweat from encountering the animals and birds, infesting the woods, Freckles encounters Laurie Lou, whose merriment at Freckles' discomfiture restores him to normalcy and relieves him of his fear of the night and the forest.

Freckles' and Mary's friendship blossoms into a romance. Her admiration for Freckles increases when he risks his life to save Laurie Lou from a falling tree. But Freckles' like is not all glory for he fails in his first attempt to capture a timber thief. He repays that failure with interest, however, when he thwarts a gang of bank robbers, who have taken Laurie Lou prisoner. Johnny Green & Orchestra

Good Musical

Johnny Green has arrived at a summer resort a day ahead of his men and is greatly disturbed by the lethargy which has captured the guests. He decides to bring them to life by playing a piano solo and when the people begin to show interest in his music his band arrives and all join in the music. Marjorie Logan and Johnny Farrell are the vocalists. Several of Green's own compositions are played and the reel ends as he performs at the piano. Where Green is known because of his radio work this short subject should do particularly well, but it has enough entertainment to please anywhere. Running time, 9 minutes.

Featuring the Radio Ramblers and their impersonations of various radio stars, this short subject should thoroughly entertain audiences where the setting is not a handicap. The three Ramblers are on a hiking trip when they arrive at Nutville, where the sane are placed in a "sane asylum" and the insane roam at large. In order to convince the keepers and doctors that they have lost their minds, the boys pretend they are different personalities such as Kate Smith, Joe Penner, Morton Downey, the Marx brothers and others, giving grand imitations of each. In the end they are released and declared "insane." Running time, 9 minutes.

BRITONS ACT TO KEEP VARIETY SHOW OFF AIR

Exhibitors Remember How England Stayed Home To Tune In On Benefit Performance

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

The radio broadcast of the Royal Command Variety Performance last year hit a staggering blow to the box office in every place of amusement in the United Kingdom. British exhibitors are considering whether, through the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, they can prevent an air program of this year's performance—a big social function attended by the King and Queen.

The situation is unusual. The proceeds of the performance, in which all the leading variety stars participate, go to the charitable funds of the Variety Artists' Federation. Last year there was a big controversy before the show went on the air, the British Broadcasting Corporation refusing to pay more than £500 ($2,500) as a fee. Suggestions that, for a bigger fee, the Federation would keep the show off the air were turned down by entertainment interests. After the event they admitted to a blunder; the broadcast kept all England at home and the loss of takings to kinemas alone was estimated variously at £30,000 to £100,000.

This year the VAF-BBC difference of opinion has revived and there have been threats that unless the last year's fee of £500 is very substantially increased, there will be no broadcast. Seeing their opportunity, exhibitors through the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, have established contact with George Black of the Palladium (a GB-General Theatre hall) where the performance is held, with a view to arranging for a donation to the VAF funds on strict condition that no broadcast is permitted. A £1,000 offer is being mentioned.

G-B Looks to U. S.

The annual report of Gaumont-British Corporation, Ltd., says, regarding the American branch opened a year ago, that it is "now firmly established and a steadily increasing business is being built up from which a considerable revenue is anticipated in the near future."

As already announced, G-B is paying 7 per cent for the year on the ordinaries out of a net profit of £720,483 ($3,602,000). The full figures show the following interesting details:

£160,000 4½ First Mortgage Debentures were issued during the year, bringing the total issue to £5,160,000. The balance of £1,340,000 of the authorized amount has been issued to the bankers to secure advances but the 1934 sinking fund has been used to redeem £51,500 of the stock, leaving the outstanding balance of £5,108,500, apart from the bank holding.

Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., controlled by the Corporation, made £23,019 more profit than in 1934 and paid 15 per cent.

Denman Picture Houses, Ltd., made £11,402 more and paid 2½ per cent.

The General Theatres reconstruction plan, embodying a continuance of G-B control, has, it is pointed out, been sanctioned by the Court, but an appeal has been lodged by dissenting shareholders.

Expectations of open warfare between the Kinematograph Renters Society and the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association on the booking circuits controversy have so far not been realized, chiefly because the KRS has made no move since the formal announcement of policy which caused so much consternation in exhibiting circles, but it is still a general belief that the lull will be duly followed by a storm of first-class dimensions.

Special meetings of the KRS Council arranged for last week were postponed at the last moment, partly because important members were out of town but partly also, it is generally believed, because distributors have to take into consideration several new factors of the situation, of which the possibility of legal action by G-B and the CEA is not the least important.

Tough Winter Ahead

Aside from the special case of the Gaumont-H & G deal, trade interest still is mainly centered on the exact attitude the KRS will take toward existing arrangements which, under its own definition of booking circuits, undoubtedly belong in that category. If "henceforth" is either explicitly or by implication prefaced to the KRS threat of action, the general controversy which at present threatens may simmer down to a specific dispute between the Society and Gaumont-British, and that is dependent on the KRS taking exception to the H & G purchase, which is not an official certainty. If an investigation of all booking arrangements is planned by the KRS there will be a very bitter controversy, from which the biggest gainers may well be the lawyers.

The CEA Council has a tough winter in front of it. Apart from the big issue with the KRS—with which it has also a standing controversy on rentals—it has a quota policy to operate which will bring it into contact, and possibly into conflict, with the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, with which it must try to arrive at an agreed policy regarding Films Act revisions for the Board of Trade.

Asking the Public

Yet another angle on the problem of the "redundant" theatre. Applicants for new licenses who have been faced with opposition from existing theatres have heretofore had to rely upon general argument based on the more or less disputed facts of the local situation. At Sevenoaks, Kent, last week, the promoters of a £30,000 project produced to the urban district council proof that they had conducted a post card referendum of the district and that of 537 replies received 436 were in favor of a new theatre. This left to the opposition only the general argument that the neighborhood was adequately seated.

No decision was reached immediately in this specific case but if the referendum policy is generally adopted, it seems that the CEA will frequently have difficulty in making effective its opposition to new halls. The only real argument against "overbuilding" is strictly that the local public do not want any more theatres. If new enterprises can provide proof that these theatres will be welcomed by local patrons, and if some of the existing halls are demonstrably out-of-date, it seems that the "redundancy" campaign will receive another setback. It had a heavy blow in the decision of the Ministry of Health that an existing theatre, in order to obtain protection from competition, must be capable of modernization. As to the percentage of British theatres in urgent need of modernization, the comments of American visitors are usually more forceful than complimentary.

An extension of the policy of conciliation between organized labor and the industry is foreshadowed in a plan for a Film Council, embodying all grades of employers and employees in theatre and studio, put forward by A. M. Wall, the general secretary of the London Trades Council, who played a big part in the recent wages agreement with London exhibitors.

The Wall idea is that the Council should standardize conditions of work and payment in all grades of the industry and issue "white cards" to employers and employees, both of whom would be subject to disciplinary action in the event of default. In support is the National Association of Theatrical Employees, which recently has been working hard to unionize studio labor rates, and the Association of Cine-Technicians.

There is no mention, in connection with the new plan, of the Electrical Trades Union, a very militant body, with a large membership of studio electricians and theatre projectionists, which dissented from the London agreement and recently came into conflict with British International Pictures at Elmstree.

Critics and Proprietors

Radio Pictures, Ltd., seems to have scored the publicity scoop of the week. In a recent issue of the Daily Express the film feature contained a top two-column feature with the four line heading: "Katharine Hepburn. Lord Beaverbrook's Opinion." The matter thus captioned was a letter to the editor signed "Beaverbrook" in which the proprietor of the Express and Evening Standard said: "I have seen the film "Break of Hearts." I found it a wholesome and delightful entertainment and quite as good a picture as anything done by Katharine Hepburn. . . . I saw the film because of the marked difference of opinion exhibited by the film critics of the Daily Express, Sunday Express and Evening Standard. The Evening Standard critic takes the view that the film offers excellent entertainment, while the critics of the Daily Express and Sunday Express dismiss it as a hackneyed and commonplace story. . . .

"In my opinion, the critics of the Daily Express and Sunday Express are mistaken and I claim the right to say so. For, while I would not attempt to trammel the liberty of those distinguished critics to give their unbiased views, I reserve to myself the liberty of dissent. The public, I am convinced, will share my opinion."

Film distributors, meanwhile, share a hope that Express and Standard criticisms will continue to differ and that my Lord Beaverbrook will pursue his policy of chastening the erring ones—without, of course, in any way influencing their liberty to state, though not in splash leader form, their candid, honest, and uninfluenced views of any picture.

PROTESTS CHECKMATE POLITICAL MOVE TO SEIZE FRENCH INDUSTRY

Mario Roustan, Minister of National Education, Listens To Film Executives and Halts Effort to Take Over Receipts

by PIERRE AUTRE
Paris Correspondent

It was a deep sensation in the French cinema circles when it became known recently that the Government was ready to publish a decret loi (decree having the power of a law) which would regulate the industry. (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, September 7 issue.)

Nobody knew just what was to be the nature of this decree, which would have been issued by the Minister of National Education, Mario Roustan, after a long study made by the Commission Interministerielle du Cinema, whose membership, incidentally, is not representative of the industry.

The Paris evening newspaper Paris-Soir was the first to publish information concerning the forthcoming decree.

Paragraphs of the decree—if they were really applied—would have an effect of no less than revolutionizing the entire business.

Here are highlights of the story published by Paris-Soir:

Film producers could not make pictures without having a special "card" (license) which would be granted under official agreement.

No picture could be made if the producer (or the producing company) did not obtain at least 60 per cent of the estimated cost in cash.

Distributors would not be allowed to interfere in the picture production, even with financial assistance. Drastic action would be taken in case of violation.

A central national independent organization would be formed to collect film rentals from the exhibitors. The organization, called "Cinema Fund," would turn over the proceeds to the distributors and the producers, that is, all elements that contributed to the making and showing of the picture.

Motion picture theatres would be obliged to show a quota of French pictures, at least 20 per cent, and quarterly.

It is easy to understand what a flurry this report caused throughout the film market. All national newspapers and trade publications carried lengthy comment.

Prepared by Commission

The proposed decree had been prepared by the Interministerial Film Commission, the president of which is Georges Lecomte. For several months this commission had been working on the decree. This commission had called representatives of all cinema groups and had listened to everyone. But apparently it did not give much consideration to the suggestions made by members of the industry. Prominent members of the Commission, Grunbaum-Ballin, state counsellor; M. Huysman, director of Beaux Arts; M. Petsche, member of Parliament, president of the Cinema Commission of the Chamber of Deputies, and others, who know little about the motion picture business, but would like to make the French cinema a state-controlled organization, were the actual authors of the proposed decree.

They had hoped that the decree would be adopted at the ministers' meeting on August 28 and be signed at once by the President of the Republic, to be published the next day in the "Journal Officiel."

Then it would have been too late for the industry to protest, as the decree would have the power of law.

But the trade organizations had been secretly informed of the intended coup and before the industry at large and the press were aware of the fact, drastic intervention was made to M. Roustan to stop the coming decree. So the proposal was not submitted at the August 28 session of the departmental ministers.

American Companies Protest

As soon as the main articles of the proposed decree became known, the French branches of American companies protested against the measures, which would have restricted their activities in France.

It was pointed out that the movement had been undertaken despite the beginning of Franco-American negotiations for a commercial treaty in Washington, and that the decree would force the American companies out of business in France.

A central national independent organization was to be formed, according to the proposed decree, to collect film rentals from exhibitors. After paying its own expenses, and possibly financing French production, the organization would turn over what was left to the distributors. The distributors would be considered merely brokers whose only function would be to help with publicity. American companies would not be able to collect money for the sale of their own films, but would be legally forced to permit this new outside organization to handle their money.

The present quota on American films would be replaced, if the decree were issued, by a more drastic quota, in so far as American interests are concerned, requiring French cinemas to show a high percentage of French films.

One publication added that there would also be additional heavy duties or taxes on American films.

This represents, of course, only the American point of view. The decree would similarly affect all other foreign pictures.

Meeting immediate and unanimous opposition of the industry, M. Roustan decided to postpone the decree and consult all the leading members of the industry. In a week he received and listened to one hundred individuals—producers, distributors, exhibitors, printers, journalists—all of whom gave him their own suggestions, many of them contradictory.

Federation Within Business Proposes to Set Up Four Subsidiary Groups with André Debrie As General President

The young Comité du Film, headed by Georges Loureau, representing more than three-fourths of the cinema houses and film distributors in France and most of the independent film producers here, was the first to protest against the proposed decree, complaining especially because its members had not been consulted about the revolutionary changes proposed.

Rejects State Interference

If those interviewed by M. Roustan were not unanimous in protest against each article of the decree, they did all agree in opposing the principle of the interference of the State in the business, and it would be direct interference, indeed, were film rentals collected from exhibitors by a State organization.

The industry maintains that it is able to take care of its own reorganization and its own reforms. The industry wants its own rules and its own statute, and does not want them set up by individuals outside the business.

L'Ecran, official trade publication of the Exhibitors' Association, which is in close agreement with the American companies, shows how the collecting organization would operate. It would take over authors' and producers' copyrights. It really would be directed by the authors' organization, which would have about 12 members on the board compared with three members of the Government and three producers assigned by the Minister.

All the pictures would have to be rented on the percentage basis; any other kind of rental, including fixed price, would be forbidden.

The collecting organization would be allowed to take out all it would need for its administration expenses, as well as for all projects to develop the cinema art.

It is easy to understand how such a decree would have affected the industry, which is grateful to M. Roustan for halting the move and turning to the industry for suggestions.

The decree would have meant the complete ruin of the independent distributors and producers, who work in narrow contact and yet produce the best French pictures. It would have been the direct road to a State industry, whereunder everyone would have been an employee of the State, chosen not for his ability but for his political color.

The first effect of the threatened State control has been to provide a common basis of cooperation for all members of the industry, even those who had been at outs, as, for instance, the American companies and the Exhibitors' Association on the one side, and the old Chambre Syndicale on the other.

FEDERATION TO UNITE ALL GROUPS

All have seen the deep and real danger of the proposed decree, which was the result of a political combination managed by the Socialist Party, in agreement with all the Left Workers' Syndicate, to take over the French film industry. All the private concerns would have been killed off for the benefit of trusts with politicians pulling the strings.

Federation Being Formed

Now the Comité du Film, founded three months ago and including producers, distributors and exhibitors, and the Chambre Syndicale representing the technical men and equipment makers, such as printers and manufacturers of cameras and projectors, have been deliberating for a week over a plan to establish a National Federation of the French Cinema, which would make its own statute and regulations.

This Federation, the formation of which will be accomplished in a few days, will include four groups, all independent but acting closely together on all matters of general interest.

These four sections, or syndicates, will be:

Equipment and technical section, including printers, apparatus makers, laboratory owners. The president of this group is expected to be André Debrie, the well-known camera manufacturer.

Production Section, including all film producers. The president may be Felix Ganders.

Distributors Section, including all distributors, American and French, the president will be Georges Loureau, director of the French branch of Tobis Pictures.

Exhibitors Section, whose president will be, as before, Raymond Lussiez, the best friend here of the American concerns.

The president of the Federation, chosen by the four sections, will be changed every year and will be chosen successively in each section. The first will be Andé Debrie of the Equipment Section, who will be in a strategic position to effect a strong organization.

Charles Delac, who for ten years was president of the Chambre Syndicale, will be appointed honorary president of the Federation.

The coup of the State to take in its hands the French industry, though it did not succeed, nevertheless showed that a speedy reorganization is necessary.

It may be that the help of the Government is necessary in some matters, but the Federation will limit such assistance to specific cases. The State must not interfere as organizer or financial agent. It will be asked to reduce taxes, especially on the best French and foreign pictures, and to make easier the sale of the best French productions in the foreign countries.

Decision will have to be taken in agreement between the Government and the Federation concerning the future of the GFFA (Gaumont), and Pathé Natan concerns. These two companies, which at one time were the main ones in France, have been inactive — Gaumont for two years, Pathé Natan for six months.

If the Federation succeeds in its objectives, there will be no more Chambre Syndicale, no more Comité du Film, no more organizations operating at cross-purposes, but one single, strong organization working in the interest of the whole industry.

GFFA and Pathé-Natan

GFFA (Gaumont) and Pathé-Natan have now practically vanished from the market. (The situation was explained in Motion Picture Herald, issue of August 10.)

At GFFA the first general shareholders' meeting in four years was held September 2nd, to approve the accounts of the 1931 year.

On December 31st, losses were 1,290,-246 francs ($86,016) but because of the 1930 profit of 857,822 francs ($57,188), the loss for the period was reduced to 432,423 francs ($28,828).

The new board has limited activities of the company to retaining the assets which are still important: a circuit of 30 theatres, the Paris and Nice studios, which are rented to independent producers, all the ground which is owned by the company. There is no more GFFA production. Distribution activities include the weekly France-Gaumont newsreels, some documentary pictures, one or two foreign dubbed picture, and all the pictures of 1930 through 1933.

Pathé-Natan Status

The Pathé-Natan concern is under a judiciary director, M. Pioton. All the activities of the company, which would require financial expenditure, such as Production, are stopped. The Joinville and Francoeur Studios are open, and are rented to independent producers.

The theatres circuit also is functioning. It is reported that some of the theatres may be sold separately. There are no more Pathé-Natan pictures to distribute. The distributing company, Pathé Consortium Cinéma, is now entirely separated from Pathé-Natan. This concern, which has at its head Jean-Simon Cerf, will distribute for Mr. Worms, the banker who intervened to avert bankruptcy proceedings, the last four pictures produced by Pathé-Natan. These four are "Justin de Marseille," "Le Bonheur," which had been shown in the first-runs, and "L'Ecole de Cocottes" and "L'Equipage," which have not been exhibited.

U. S. Companies' Aid Reported

M. Dirler, who led the fight against Natan supported by the Nationalist morning newspaper Le Jour, is seeking control of Pathé-Natan. It is reported that behind M. Dirler are the American companies, and particularly MGM, which is trying to get the deluxe Pathé-Natan Theatre of the Champs Elysées, the Marignan. Bernard Natan and his brother Emile are said to be interested in a new production concern, Monopole Film S. A., whose production chief is M. Gargour, who at one time had a similar post at the Natan studios. A picture in English and French versions, "Le Rouge et le Noir ("Red and Black"), from Stendhal's novel, will be produced by this concern.

40 Films in Two Months

In spite of the Gaumont and Pathé-Natan situation, French production is constantly improving.

Forty French pictures were produced in July and August, all by independents.

Some look to be important pictures, such as "La Bandera," directed by Julien Duvivier; "Happy Days," directed by Marc Allegret; "The Heroic Kermess," a Tobias production directed by Jacques Feyder; "Veille D'Armes," directed by Marcel Lherbier; "Fanfare D'Amour," directed by Richard Pottier; "Tarass Boulba," directed by Alexis Granowsky, and two pictures made in French and British versions: "Koenigsmark," directed by Maurice Tourneur, with Elissa Landi, John Lodge and Pierre Fresnay. Fresnay speaks excellent English, while Elissa Landi and John Lodge speak French like the French natives. In the British version of the other picture made in both versions, "La Vie Parisienne," directed by Robert Siodmak, are Max Dearly, Conchita Montenegro and Neil Hamilton. "Koenigsmark" was started by Leonce Perret, who had worked in the United States for a long time. When M. Perret died, Tourneur succeeded him.

MGM Out of Madeline Cinema

After 10 years of operation of the Paris first-run Madeleine Cinema, MGM was obliged to leave the theatre this month when it reverted to GFFA (Gaumont), the owner.

In 1925, MGM, which had no theatre of its own in Paris, leased from Gaumont for 10 years the Madeleine Cinema, which is well situated on the Paris "Grands Boulevards," near the Madeleine Church.

In this decade all the best MGM pictures were shown first-run at the Madeleine. Among the pictures which were the most successful were these: in the silent days, "He Who Gets Slapped" (Lon Chaney), "The Merry Widow" (Mae Murray), "The Torrent" (Greta Garbo), "Tell It to the Marines," "Ben Hur," which was shown for 16 months without interruption, and "The Big Parade."

The Madeleine Cinema was the first Paris cinema to show an American sound picture when in November, 1928, it started "White Shadows of the South Seas," which stayed in this cinema six months.

The Madeleine was also the first to show in Paris a 100 per cent talking picture, with "Broadway Melody" in November, 1929. Afterwards, this cinema exhibited the French versions of MGM pictures made in Hollywood, such as "The Big House," which had a tremendous success.

When MGM stopped making French versions in Hollywood, the Madeleine Cinema was showing dubbed versions of MGM American pictures. The best successes were "Trader Horn" and "Tarzan." About two years ago MGM changed its policy by showing at the Madeleine the original versions in English dialogue with French sub-titles, such as "Eskimo," "Fra Diavolo," "Viva Villa" and "Hell Below."

Since the beginning of this year original versions and dubbed pictures had been alternately shown. The last big success of the Madeleine was "Sequoia," which was looked upon in France as one of the best American pictures of the last year.

Lease Renewal Refused

The lease expired August 31 and GFFA refused to renew it, preferring to exhibit for itself in this 800-seat theatre, the fourth money-maker in Paris.

The GFFA policy is to show French pictures. The first started September 5, "Les Yeux Noirs" ("Dark Eyes"), starring Simone Simon, new Fox star, and Harry Baur, French comedian.

MGM now is looking for another first-run theatre in Paris. It had tried to get a new big cinema on the Champs Elysées. This went into construction two years ago, but was dropped.

Report has it that MGM may take over operation of the Pathé-Natan Marignan Cinema, on the Champs Elysées, a two-year-old cinema of 2,000 seats and one of the most modern in Paris. If this arrangement was made, MGM would show in this cinema the original versions of its pictures with a run of two weeks for the program pictures, and no more than four or five weeks for the outstanding pictures.

Brussels Exhibition

From September 26 to October 17 an International Cinema Festival will be held at the Brussels Exposition. All the producing countries are to show their best pictures in competition, in four classifications: film with a story (drama, comedy, comical), documentaries, cartoons and "fantasies." Pictures will be shown in their original speaking versions, with French subtitles.

A "Grand Prix du Roi" was to have been awarded by Leopold III to the best picture of the first group, whatever its country of origin. The death of Queen Astrid cancelled his direct participation, but the award will be made.

Other prizes will include a Government award, another by the Town Council of Brussels, and an Alberteum prize for the best documentary picture.

The Festival Organization includes a board whose president is Karl Vincent, former president of the Belgian Cinema Press Association. Many eminent Belgians are assisting in the festival.

Performances are to be in the Alberteum Hall.

Pictures announced to be shown include:

ENGLAND: "Escape Me Never," "Sanders of the River," "Joss House."

U. S. A.: "The Scoundrel," "Becky Sharp," "The Informer," "The Farmer Takes a Wife," "Dante's Inferno," "Diamond Jim," "David Copperfield," "Naughty Marietta," and perhaps "Anna Karenina" and "China Seas."

BELGIUM: "Terres Brules," "Cap au Sud," and "Le Trois Mats Mercator."

FRANCE: The Government is sending official pictures and independent producers some films such as "Les Yeux Noirs," "L'Equipage," "Justin de Marseille," "Dora Nelson."

GERMANY, SWITZERLAND, SWEDEN, RUSSIA and JAPAN will show their latest outstanding pictures.

Swiss Board Planned

The Department Federal de l'Interieur of the Swiss Government is working to create a Swiss Office of the Industry, which will be a special Swiss Federal Board, to supervise all matters concerning the cinema and will undertake national production.

There is no official cinema organization in Switzerland at present.

Pooling Deals for Year Completed

Major and independent circuits have concluded all their pooling deals for the 1935-36 season, unless unforeseen developments occur, according to statements of various theatre executives.

Negotiations for joint theatre operations usually begin at the end of the season and generally are put into effect around September 1, which officially marks the debut of the new theatre year.

At the same time, a number of interests have called off various operating deals which have been on for a year or more.

Fox theatre units, including Skouras Theatres Corporation, took the lead in the number of deals closed recently. The largest pool was between Evergreen States and John Hamrick in Portland and Seattle. The parent company is Cascade Theatres Corporation, of which Frank L. Newman, Sr., is president; John Hamrick, vice-president; John P. Garvin, Clarence Innis, Alfred Shermanski, Mr. Hamrick and Mr. Newman directors. Mr. Hamrick is the general manager of the Seattle group of seven houses, while Al Finkelstein is in charge of the nine theatres in Portland.

Skouras-Warner Pool

George Skouras, on September 6, began a pooling arrangement with Warner in New Jersey. Involved in the deal are three Skouras houses and four of Warners. Hackensack, Elizabeth and Jersey City theatres in both circuits were included.

On October 1, Fox Midwest again started individual operation of the Granada, Kansas City, while Grubel Brothers also took back the Electra. The circuits operated the houses on a joint basis.

Mort Shea of Feiber and Shea recently combined bookings for the Midland, Grand and Auditorium in Newark, Ohio. The new operating company for the three houses is the Newark Amusement Company.

RKO, which on September 1 withdrew its Hillstreet, Los Angeles, from a Warner pool and then made a deal with Alexander Pantages for the Pantages theatre, some time ago effected a three-way operating pact for the Keith's, Paramount and Eckles in Syracuse. RKO has Keith's and the Paramount while Meyer Schine has the Eckles. The circuits will operate the theatres jointly. A deal has also been hanging fire for the Warners' Strand, which was pooled with RKO last year.

Eight-Year Tieup Ends

Loew's and Wilmer and Vincent last month ended an eight-year joint working tieup in Norfolk and Richmond, Va. Loew now operates the theatres in each town bearing the circuit name while Wilmer and Vincent have the Norva and Grandy in Norfolk and the Strand in Richmond. Negotiations between RKO and Loew's to combine operations in Union City and North Bergen, N. J., fell through after Loew stockholders turned down the proposition.

There were also several other independent pooling deals effected during the past few months. Likewise there have been discussions centering about booking combines, some of which have materialized and some of which remain to be settled one way or another. The Independent Exhibitor Protective Association in Philadelphia has a combine still in the air with definite action scheduled shortly.

Although preliminary details were set about a year ago, Skouras and Century circuits have yet to settle the interchangeability of the management of 15 theatres affected in a Long Island pool. This is scheduled for early this month after several delays.

At Paramount, Loew and RKO headquarters executives state no further pooling deals are planned.

Milton C. Weisman is continuing his efforts to line up New York independent exhibitors for a new circuit. Sixty or 70 theatres have pledged to join the Independent Theatre Circuit, Inc., and have sent in their checks, but elections of officers have been postponed until Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association, joins with his 43 houses.

Gets European Product

Jean H. Lenauer, head of the recently formed Lenauer International Films, Inc., has acquired the American distribution rights to several European features, including "Atalanta," "Le Vieux Chateaux," "Pompeii et Heraculaneum" and "Isola de Capri," travelogues; "Selenophon Magazine," a pictorial review of Austria and several scientific subjects.

THE CUTTING ROOM

FORCED LANDING

Republic

Mystery and murder under unusual conditions and in unusual situations is the tune to which this story moves. The yarn is an original by William Boehnel and M. Helprin, with screen play by Scott Darling. Direction is by Melville Brown.

Unique in character and development, the story, however, consists of familiar and tried out entertainment values. The novel manner in which the tale gets under way endows it with a novel color that makes anticipating exactly what is going to happen a difficult proposition. At the same time it sets the stage for much fast and furious action in which the elements of suspense and mystery are permitted wide scope.

A kidnaper is released from prison after completion of sentence. He boards a plane in Los Angeles bound for New York. His fellow passengers are the boy he kidnaped years ago, who is eloping with his sweetheart; a passé screen star; a banker who is very reticent as to why he is making the trip; a Department of Justice operative, and one of the criminal's old accomplices.

Following a fierce storm which causes a forced landing at an isolated spot, the kidnaper is mysteriously killed. Under the G-man's investigation all are suspects, and as their identities are established as well as possible motives each might have for committing the crime, another equally baffling murder takes place. The finale is a dramatic denouement which leads to discovery of the killer, restoration of the long lost ransom money, prevention of a bank robbery and happiness to the eloping lovers.

The cast is composed entirely of wellknown screen names. Appearing in the various roles are Kane Richmond and Toby Wing as the sweethearts; Esther Ralston as the screen star; Onslow Stevens as the investigator and Bradley Page as the kidnaper. Supporting characters include Eddie Nugent, Barbara Pepper, Willard Robertson, Lionel Belmore and Ralf Harolde.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION

Universal

In basic idea this story is seriously toned dramatic romance. Modernly timed, localed in New York and Paris, it does, however, include an unusual amount of situation and action comedy, and while concentrating on a series of finely developed dramatic incidents, it introduces an atmosphere of psychological spiritualism that gives the entire production a unique appeal. Briefly it's a story of a tragedy that turned a great happiness into a thing of bitterness. A young wastrel is the innocent cause of a noted doctor's death. His wife and friends look upon him almost as a murderer. Coming to appreciate his status, through association with some of the doctor's friends, he endeavors to adapt the doctor's psychology of living to his own life. In an effort to befriend the widow, he is the cause of her becoming blind. Determined to atone for the two tragedies, he engages specialists to attend the blinded woman. Unsuccessful, he sends her to Paris under the pretext that her husband provided for the expense. Follow days of happiness, until the unfortunate woman disappears. Living in hope, the wastrel studies medicine, and years later, again finding his lost love, he performs a miraculous operation that restores her sight.

The production is based on a published novel by Lloyd C. Douglas. The screen play is by George O'Neil, Sarah Y. Mason and Victor Heerman. Direction is by John M. Stahl, whose forte is this type of material.

Irene Dunne and Robert Taylor, currently appearing in "Broadway Melody of 1936," are featured in the leading roles. Principal supporting parts are handled by Charles Butterworth, Betty Furness, Henry Armetta and Ralph Morgan. The list of minor players is exceedingly lengthy; it presents such personalities as Sara Haden, Gilbert Emery, Arthur Hoyt, Cora Sue Collins, Beryl Mercer, Arthur Treacher, Maidel Turner and Sidney Bracey.

THANKS A MILLION

Here are only a few of the assets provided showmen to exploit this picture. The title is of good commercial value with which much can be done. There is a host of known names, gathered from stage, screen and radio. They establish the production's character—a musical. These factors are evident. There's one not so evident but equally important, if not more so. There's a solid, substantial and completely different motivating story behind the musical atmosphere, one that completely gets away from previous general backstage formula and tackles a timely and topical new subject. The story of "Thanks a Million" is comedy, dealing in politics. It tells of a band and a crooner brought in as a new kind of ballyhoo for a political campaign. It tells of the candidate going haywire and the crooner, substituting in his place, being elected governor. It has an actual counterpart in the case of a band leader who was elected to a high post in a Pacific Coast state a short time ago. The comedy takes place under an aura of charming music festooned with troops of gorgeous singing-dancing chorus girls.

Being directed by Roy Del Ruth, who just finished "Broadway Melody of 1936," the show is adapted from a story by Melville Crossman with screen play by Nunnally Johnson. Music and lyrics are by Gus Kahn and Arthur Johnston.

The cast features Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Fred Allen of vaudeville, musical comedy and "Town Hall" radio fame, Patsy Kelly, Raymond Walburn, Benny Baker, Andre Tombes, Alan Dinehart, Paul Harvey and Edwin Maxwell in the straight story sequences. It surrounds them with Paul Whiteman and his band, with Ramona, Rubinoff and his violin, Yacht Club Boys, the Radio Rogues and many other specialty performers.

THE MAN WHO BROKE THE BANK AT MONTE CARLO

20th Century-Fox

To be among the first of the Darryl F. Zanuck personally produced pictures to be released by this recently reorganized company, it can be expected that everything possible in the way of potential entertainment worth and showmanship availability will be incorporated in this production in order to make the most favorable popular impression.

The title is long, but it packs a suggestion of much that is intriguing and thrilling. It tells the story of a man who with little in his pockets walks into the famous casino, breaks the bank and comes out with a trunk full of money. From adventuring in gambling he turns to adventuring in love and what happens gives reason for one of the most glamorous, modern, semi-sophisticated comedy romances to have come to the screen.

The picture is adapted from a wellknown stage play. The screen play is by Howard Ellis Smith and Nunnally Johnson. Special musical numbers were composed by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby. The production is being directed by Stephen Roberts, who recently did "Star of Midnight" and "Alice Adams."

Ronald Colman, last in "Clive of India" and soon to be seen in "A Tale of Two Cities," is the star and hero. Joan Bennett is the lady he trusted and loved. Colin Clive, who was with Colman in "Clive of India," is the villain; Nigel Bruce, seen in "Becky Sharp" and "Scarlet Pimpernel," provides the comedy. Supporting players include Montague Love, Frank Reicher, Lionel Pape, Ferdinand Gottschalk and Charles Fallon.

The showmanship basis of this production, with due regard to the strength of cast names, is an emotion common to all, that is, the day dream idea of winning a fabulous fortune that will permit one to do anything he desires. This alone gives it a particular local showmanship appeal basis seldom found in the ordinary screen attraction.

Take Over Davidge Business

The International Cinema, Inc., in Hollywood has taken over the major portion of the business of the closed Roy Davidge Laboratories. International is headed by George P. Regan, former San Francisco industrialist, and is in charge of H. T. James, A. J. Guerin, A. C. Snyder and Bonar Russell, all of whom are well known laboratory men.

Negro Cast for Lubitsch

Ernst Lubitsch will soon produce an all-negro operetta in Hollywood to be called "The Chocolate Princess." Mr. Lubitsch conceived the story idea personally, and the film will be on the order of his "Love Parade." Paramount claims this as the first operetta with an all-colored cast.

New Hirliman Company

George Hirliman has announced in Hollywood that in addition to his Regal Pictures Company he has arranged with Boston capital to finance another company, Pacific Productions, which will make eight features of the G-Man type.

Warners Sign Lew King

Lew King has been signed by Warner Bros. in Hollywood to direct a series of western features starring Dick Foran. The series already has started and "Desert Schooners" will be King's first assignment.

INDUSTRY'S FIXED CHARGES REDUCED FROM $409,055,000 TO $257,398,000

Leading Companies Placed in Strongest Position in Years by Drastic Reorganizing of Capital, Say Analysts

Financial news of the motion picture this week centered around the following:

1. Drastic capital reorganizations were cited as placing the leading companies in the strongest position they have occupied for years, resulting in capital contraction for five corporations from the $409,055,000 fixed charge issues after expansion during the pre-depression era, to $257,398,000 fixed charge issues now existing.

2. Warners funded debt was shown in a Dow, Jones recapitulation as having been cut $20,000,000 in four years.

3. Pathe's net income for the first nine months of 1935 was reported at $1,326,924.

Citing the drastic capital reorganizations which are placing the leading motion picture companies "in the strongest position they have occupied for years," a new survey of the industry by Poor's financial publishing company, brought the observation that "The essential character of this form of amusement has been demonstrated by increasing theatre attendance under depression conditions; in the fall and winter of 1934, when more than 10,000,000 adults were unemployed, 80,000,000 weekly paid admissions were recorded by motion picture theatres.

"Few industries," it was said, "rivaled the motion picture business in its open-handed theatre-ownership program of the boom years. Fixed-charge obligations, including subsidiary company preferred stocks, of the 'Big Five' increased 23 per cent or from $121,846,000 to $409,055,000 during the expansion period.

Cites New Blood

"The collapse in motion picture securities during the depression years furnished an opportunity for new blood to acquire control of three large units at a nominal cost. Thus, Fox Films, Paramount and Radio-Keith-Orpheum have passed from the hands of the original owners into those newly interested in the industry, but with demonstrated business acumen.

"Chase National Bank is still the largest Fox stockholder, but Atlas Corporation and a British group have an important voice in the management. John E. Otterson, formerly chief executive of American Telephone & Telegraph's sound film division, has become president of Paramount. Radio Corporation of America and the Rockefeller family are now the largest stockholders of Radio-Keith-Orpheum," said Poor's, which added:

"Drastic financial reorganzations are placing most major motion picture companies on a sounder footing than seen in years. The leading companies are enjoying the most satisfactory earnings since 1930. Attractive pictures and improved public purchasing power have brought the public flocking to the theatres. Moreover, broad business recovery should make possible a moderate increase in admission prices over the next year or two.

Warner Brothers was singled out by Dow, Jones, Wall Street publishers, in pointing to two factors that are carrying the hope of better earnings this year: "The Pennsylvania Legislature has authorized a referendum at the November election on Sunday shows. The other factor is the most imposing list of new film productions that the company has had in some years.

"Warner's most important theatre-owning subsidiary, the Stanley Company" was cited as having "upwards of 130 theatres in Pennsylvania cities. Box office receipts will be added to substantially by an extra day in the profitable week-end business if the voters decide in favor of Sunday movies. This alone might easily make the difference between a loss and a profit to the theatres."

Warner, Dow, Jones observed, "is one of the most important theatre owners in the country and in recent years almost all amusement profits, when earned, have come from films and not from theatres which have been barely breaking even. A recovery in attendance, now apparently under way, which might bring the theatres of the industry back on a paying basis again would be of notable help, therefore, to Warner.

Current Improvement Shown

"While current business is showing improvement the statement for the three months to August 31 will probably set forth a loss.

"In the 99 weeks ended May 25 operating income was $4,688,493. After deducting $4,309,313 interest requirements for the period, there was a balance of $371,592, or $3.60 a share for the 103,107 shares of $3.85 preferred. Although operations for the remainder of the fiscal year probably detracted some from this showing, results for the 12 months to August 31, last, were nevertheless the best that Warner has enjoyed since 1930.

"Warner is the only one of the major companies that carried on a widespread expansion program during the boom that has not been through financial reorganization. (Loew's did little or no theatre buying during the boom days.)

"Warner was able to avoid reorganization during the bad years by keeping its cash intake and outgo on an even level.

"The management met the stringent times by cutting overhead wherever possible and reducing expenditures for films to a level commensurate with available cash income. Fortunately the cash intake of an amusement business is large so that even at the bottom of the depression Warner was able to find funds to meet its interest requirements. As a matter of fact, interest has nearly always been covered although substantial operating deficits after deducting property depreciation charges have been shown," the report continued.

Leases Readjusted

Leases were readjusted wherever possible as well as subsidiary funded debt. Over the past five years substantial reduction has been made in funded debt and the current asset position has been materially improved. Receipt of $2,500,000 cash and $1,300,000 notes from Western Electric in settlement of a patent suit was an important factor in building up cash position.

Warner's six per cent debentures were reduced to $33,845,000 as of the end of August, 1934, from $42,838,000 in 1930. Other funded debt was cut in the same period to $52,642,000 from $62,735,000. At the peak in 1930, funded debt totalled slightly over $105,000,000 and as of May 31, 1935, was $85,212,000, a decline of $20,000,000. This does not of course represent a corresponding cash expenditure since many of the bonds were acquired at a discount.

"Warner has $5,670,885 (103,107 shares) of $3.85 preferred, with $12.51 a share acruals, and 3,801,345 shares of common outstanding. Although preferred dividends are currently being almost earned, no dividend payments are likely for the time being on account of the large profit and loss deficit that has been incurred," concluded Dow, Jones.

Pathe's Profit

Report of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and subsidiaries (now Pathe Film Corporation) for the period from Dec. 30, 1934 to Aug. 15, 1935, shows profit of $1,326,924, including $1,441,471 profit on sale of 14% of the capital stock of du Pont Film Manufacturing Corp. and after deducting taxes, depreciation, interest, provision for possible loss on loans and advances, provision for reorganization expenses, loss on sale of story rights and scenarios, etc.

The report states that capital surplus has been charged with $1,009,328 representing the difference between the cost of du Pont Film stock sold and the value placed thereon by the board of directors in 1931.

Operating deficit as of August 15, last, after crediting the account with the above profit of $1,326,924 and after charging the account with $82,003 premium and cost of redeeming bonds called May 1, 1935, amounted to $5,171,020 as compared with a deficit of $6,415,941 on December 30, 1934.

Consolidated income account for 33 weeks ended August 15, 1935, follows: Net sales $400,595; operating expenses $346,053; depreciation $11,397; profit from laboratory operations $43,145; income from other operations (after depreciation) $31,262; total $74,407; selling, administrative and general expenses $90,053; loss from operations $15,646; other income (including $147,000 dividends received from du Pont Film Manufacturing Corp.) $165,332; profit $149,686; interest on funded debt $69,757; provision for possible loss on loans and advances $80,000; loss $71; profit on sale of 14% of capital stock of du Pont Film Manufacturing Corp., based on cost, $1,441,471; profit $1,441,400; provision for reorganization expenses, etc., $114,476; balance carried to deficit account $1,326,924.

Three Stockholders' Actions

Charging that mismanagement and stock manipulations had caused a loss of $80,000,000 in the value of the capital stock of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., since 1928, Adolph Greenberg, a minority stockholder, last week filed an action in supreme court in New York against officers and directors of the corporation and three brokerage houses for an accounting and restitution.

A flat denial to all charges in the lengthy complaint was entered by the defendants who are:

Harry M. Warner, president; Albert Warner, vice president; Jack L. Warner, Abel Carey Thomas, secretary and general counsel; the estate of the late Moe Mark, a director; the corporation itself; the members of the brokerage firm of Goldman, Sachs and Company; the members of the firm of McClure, Jones and Company, and Renraw, Inc., which is controlled by the three Warners.

The complaint charges that the officers and directors of the picture corporation paid prices far in excess of the true value when, in carrying out a $125,000 expansion program in 1928-1929, they purchased theater chains, radio corporations and music publishing houses.

"By these unconscionable and improper forms of nepotism," Mr. Greenberg complains, "the defendant directors and officers converted an $18,000,000 profit in 1928 to a $1,655,618 loss in 1932."

The complaint further alleges that the individual defendants formed a pool on January 1, 1928, and by manipulating the stock market kited the price of the corporation's stock from $15 a share to about $132 a share "so as to enable them to sell to stockholders and the public the stocks which they had or were to acquire."

Asks Accounting

A second stockholders' action alleging mismanagement and squandering of funds was filed in the same court later in the week by Joseph Weintraub. Also named as defendants were the three Warner brothers, Harry, Albert and Jack; Harold Bareford, Waddill Catchings, Stanleigh Friedman, Sam E. Morris, Henry Rudkins, Abel Carey Thomas, Morris Wolf and Renraw, Inc.

The Weintraub petition asked for an accounting, the removal of the directors and for an appointment of receivers. In his petition he charges that the defendants as directors had under their control the total assets of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., including the subsidiaries, of more than $225,000,000 in 1930 and more than $180,000,000 in 1932.

"The defendants committed willful acts of mismanagement and waste as a result of which the corporate defendant suffered great loss of money," according to Weintraub's complaint. He further charges that "Renraw, Inc., was organized as a conduit through which the funds of the corporate defendant might be drawn into the pockets of the individual defendants. As a means of accomplishing this purpose another agreement was entered into with Renraw, on September 1, 1928, by which the services of the Warners were engaged by the corporate defendant at an excessive salary and pursuant thereto a large block of stock of approximately a market value of $15,000,000 was delivered to the defendant Warners. All this was done without any real consideration whatever."

Points to Pooling Profits

Mr. Weintraub also charged that the defendants made over $10,000,000 in pooling operations. He further attacked a number of transactions similar to those previously enumerated in a like action brought by Adolph Greenberg, another stockholder. Mr. Weintraub's petition also states that "by these improper acts the individual defendants converted an $18,000,000 profit in 1929 to a loss of almost $2,000,000 in 1932."

Counsel for Weintraub made three motions before Justice Edward F. Dore to strike out the various defenses set up by the defendants. In their answer the defendants denied all of the allegations of Weintraub's complaint and further explained that all agreements entered into were proper and legal and made with the unanimous ratification of the majority of the stockholders.

On this motion and on a similar motion made on behalf of Greenberg to strike out some of the defenses, Justice Dore reserved decision.

Still a third stockholders' suit in which charges of mismanagement and squandering and wasting of funds are alleged was filed in the New York Supreme Court by Harris Pepper.

The plaintiff set forth that he was the holder of 125 shares of common stock and that he intends to include as defendants in the suit past and present directors. Pepper asserted that the assets of Warner, including over 175 subsidiaries, have dropped between 1929 and 1934 from $230,000,000 to less than $160,000,000.

Besides the three Warner brothers, the following were named as defendants by Pepper: Waddill Catchings, Henry A. Rudkin, Abel Carey Thomas, Stanleigh P. Friedman, Morris Wolf, Sam E. Morris, Samuel Carlisle, Hyman Fabian, Walter Sachs, Irving D. Rossheim, Harold S. Bareford, Charles S. Guggenheim and Renraw, Inc.

"Harris Pepper is listed as the holder of 125 shares of stock. His action and others filed will face trial. It will be too bad for them all," said Mr. Friedman Tuesday in commenting on the latest action.

Exhibitor's Suit Startles Argentine

by N. BRUSKI

Buenos Aires Correspondent

Argentine show business has been shaken these last days by a development that caused an enormous sensation, as much because of the event itself as of the personalities involved.

The case in question is a suit instituted by a former exhibitor in this market against the Argentine Film Distributors Association, in which the association is accused of being an unlawful organization extortion combine.

"ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY"

I think the Motion Picture Herald is absolutely necessary for any exhibitor, large or small, as it gives information about pictures and the industry that have helped me many times in making my decisions, as well as keeping me posted on what is going on in the industry, as it was all new to me when I started three years ago. I wouldn't be without it.

The Argentine Film Distributors Association is a society formed by film distributing companies and is at present composed of the following members: United Artists, Columbia, Fox, MGM, Paramount, Radiolux (RKO's local distributor), Universal, Warner, Cinematográfica Terra (UFA distributor) and Julio Joly (Gaumont and Pathé-Natan distributor). All these distributing houses rent out American films, with the exception of the last two mentioned, which carry only European productions. This association also in some way maintains relations with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

According to what is gathered from the information obtained from the court in which the case is filed, the plaintiff, Hector Bini, says that until a few months ago he was the owner of two buildings situated in the city of Buenos Aires, constructed especially for projecting films and named Cine Goyena and Cine Argentino.

The first of these buildings had been leased to different exhibitors, some time ago, for a rent ranging from $700 to $2,000 Argentine pesos monthly. However, during the last few years and due to the film depression in this country, the owner made an important reduction in the price and it so happened that in the year 1934 the firm of Grand & Canavessi took charge of the showhouse for a rental which did not reach half of the amount which was normal in other times. Some time later the tenants abandoned the theatre.

Tenants Refused Product

Subsequently, the owner let the building to Humberto Ruffolo, who, upon effecting the bookings, discovered that the former enterprise had signed with various film renting companies, members of the Argentine Film Distributors Association, rental contracts for films and that upon leaving owed money to the various companies. He then visited the representatives of other distributors, with whom no previous connection had existed with the former tenants and was informed that the "Cine Goyena" would have no more films from American producers unless the pending balances left by the previous tenant were paid up, this statement having been confirmed by the Association.

Some time later, another exhibitor was interested in taking over the house, but discovered an identical situation that hindered the rental of films which, as in the case of Mr. Ruffolo, were systematically denied, although he offered to pay cash in advance, and was told that while the theatre was in debt it would continue dark. This difficulty caused the cancellation of the least contract.

The owner, finding it impossible to obtain a tenant due to these difficulties, could not meet the payment of a $70,000 mortgage falling due on the building and in view of which default the building was auctioned off for $90,243. The building, according to the proprietor's statement, was valued at $200,000.

SCREEN GUILD LEVELS ITS GUNS AT ACADEMY'S WRITER-PRODUCER PACT

Calls Revised Code a Device to Bolster "Impotent Organization Created and Controlled by Producers"

Completion last week of one year's effort by a producer-writers' Academy committee in drafting a new basic agreement and code of practice to govern the relations between these two production divisions was followed over the weekend by a vigorous denunciation of the document by the Screen Writers' Guild in Hollywood.

Urging that measures be taken to assure that the improved conditions be extended to all motion picture screen writers whose contracts are executed in California, and declaring that "these recommendations have the full concurrence of both committees toward the objective of establishing conditions so manifestly equitable and practical that they will serve as the solid foundation for continued harmonious relationships between all reasonable-minded writers and production executives," the committee of the Academy received the challenge from the Screen Guild that the Guild members will fight for a Guild shop.

Summarized, the "major improvements" proposed by the Academy's revised writer-producer code are as follows:

1. Producing companies will be uniformly committed for a period of at least two years to a comprehensive basic agreement guaranteeing favorable terms on the general conditions important to the work and professional standing of screen writers.

2. Writing employment, including week-to-week employment, will be on the basis of written contract.

3. A simplified plagiarism warranty will be adopted in standard form in all signatory studios, clearly establishing that the writer assumes responsibility only for the originality of his own work.

4. A free option within a 30-day limit will be extended to all employed writers, including those under term contract, for revision of their existing contracts to secure the benefit of the more favorable terms of the new Academy agreement.

5. Broad authority will be granted to an Academy Committee consisting solely of writers for the administration and enforcement of the agreement.

Week's Time in Lay-Offs

6. When studios have lay-off options in term contracts, the writer will be entitled to advance notice and to receive at least a week's consecutive time in any such lay-off.

7. The contingent, speculation or approval basis of payment for screen writing will continue to be outlawed as it was in the original Academy Code and the principle of payment on delivery of free-lance work done for a specified aggregate compensation is reaffirmed and strengthened.

8. The guarantee in the present Academy Code of a week's notice to free-lance writers after ten weeks' work at less than $500 per week will be continued under the new agreement.

9. Writers will be entitled to be informed as to what other writers are also working on the same material.

10. The wording "Screen Play by" will be made standard practice as part of an improved procedure for determining screen credits based on the experience of three years' administration of the credit clauses in the original Academy Code of Practice.

Screen Play Credit

11. Credit for the screen play will not be divided among more than three names on the screen.

12. Producers and Directors will not be permitted to take screen credit for collaboration on the writing of the screen play. (This clause conditional on vote of Branches.)

13. The screen play achievement will be given more emphasis in the arrangement of title cards. Credit for the screen play will be given on a card containing no other credits except that of the source material, or on a card alone, or with the director's credit, or on the main picture title.

14. The principle of the original Academy Code will be maintained and clarified as to the right of the contributing writers to designate the screen credits by unanimous agreement.

15. A percentage basis for guiding writers and producers in determining screen play credits has been included in the new agreement with the purpose of making screen credit a more accurate index to the importance of the creative work done by the individual writer.

16. The established Academy Credits Bulletin will be maintained under the new agreement to provide a permanent record of writing achievements, including both screen credits and credits for other valuable contributions to the photoplay authorship.

17. A specific procedure of notices to be given by the studios will guarantee contributing writers advance information as to proposed credits and provide opportunity for protest or agreement.

18. In contracts under the new agreement a specific clause will prevent any writer from claiming more than his share of the credit for writing done in collaboration.

19. A committee composed entirely of writers will have final authority to correct the official records in the event of error or unfairness in the assignment of credits by the producer.

Up to Academy Branches

Pursuant to the Academy procedure the committee recommendations are now to be referred to its respective branches for endorsement prior to submission to the Academy board of governors and to the producing companies for adoption. It will also be necessary to submit to the directors' branch the specific clause which affects the membership of that branch.

The committee called particular attention to the proposal that writers now employed be permitted to obtain changes in their present written or verbal contracts. "Such an option is highly unusual in revising general industry practices," the committee said, adding: "It should be noted that while an adjustment committee composed entirely of writers is given broad powers in the administration and enforcement of the agreement, no compulsory arbitration clause for individual controversies has been included. In the Academy's eight years of practical experience," the committee continued, "both the advantages and the limitations of arbitration have been observed."

Academy Committee Points to Proposal That Writers Now Employed Be Permitted to Obtain Contract Changes

It was the committee's opinion that the new requirements of written, legally enforceable contracts plus the present provisions for voluntary arbitration through the conciliation committee of the Academy constitute "the most effective machinery which it is now possible to apply generally in the industry for the fair settlement of individual controversies between writers and producers.

Distinction between Clauses

"We would also like to point out that distinction between clauses in the revised agreement designed to prevent abuses or possible unfairness in writer-studio relationships and provisions such as that for determination of credits which represent an effort toward better handling of what is admittedly a continuing problem," they said. "We do not feel that this credits system is perfect, but we do feel that it represents the best that has so far been designed." It is based upon the Academy's experience in administering the credits clause of the original writer-producer agreement "and it is hoped that the amended procedure will result in as close to general satisfaction as is possible in view of the necessity of applying general rules to such highly complex and individual problems as those involved in credit determination."

Acting for the producers were Irving Thalberg, Samuel J. Briskin, Henry Herzbrun, Hal Wallis, Sol Wurtzel and Benjamin B. Kahane, and for the writers were Howard J. Green, John Balderston, Howard Estabrook, Joseph Moncure March, Carey Wilson and Waldemar Young. The chairmen were Mr. Thalberg and Mr. Green.

Meanwhile the Screen Writers' Guild branded the revised code as an obvious device to bolster up "an impotent organization created and controlled by the producers." Leading the Guild's attack is Ernest Pascal, as president. It was said that the pact is an effort to trick writers into accepting a few miserable crumbs instead of an honest loaf."

They decided to call the Guild's executive committee into session to map a course of attack.

"What writers want and intend getting is a Guild shop, not a bunch of empty promises, pacts contributed by producers and destined to be abrogated at their slightest inconvenience," the Guild added. "No writer who has any respect for himself or hope for his own future in the industry will condone this effort on the part of a mere handful of producer-minded writers to stifle the efforts of 800 Guild members," Mr. Pascal predicted.

In answer, the Academy pointed out that many of the Guild's membership are unemployed while the Academy's writer members are all working.

The Guild indicated it will appeal to the National Labor Relations Board against the pact and will mail a critical analysis of the terms of the agreement to its members. Guild members charge the pact violates several sections of the Wagner labor law, although the general feeling in the Academy is that the Wagner law has no bearing on the writer-producer agreement.

The revision and submission of the code to the industry launched the first important drive to oppose the Writers' Guild effort to force producer recognition of the Guild and its membership. The pact is for a five-year term.

The complete text of the basic agreement and revised code of practice, amending and superseding the code of practice adopted on April 21, 1932, follows:

Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences

As a result of a series of conferences had by committees representing the Writers and Producers Branches of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the persons, firms and corporations engaged in the business of producing photoplays whose names are hereto subscribed or who from time to time hereafter may become signatories hereto, do hereby severally agree with the Academy and with each other as follows:

Section 1. The effective date of this basic agreement shall be ...., 1935.

Section 2. This basic agreement shall continue from the effective date for a term of five years; provided, however, that the same may be amended at any time during such term with the joint consent of a majority of the signatories then participating herein and active as producers of photoplays and with the consent of the Executive Committee of the Writers Branch of the Academy. From and after the end of the second year, any signatory may withdraw by service of at least thirty (30) days notice in writing on the Academy and on all signatories then participating herein and active as producers of motion pictures, in which event this basic agreement shall nevertheless continue in full force and effect as to signatories not so withdrawing. From and after the end of the second year this basic agreement may be terminated as to all signatories by the Executive Committee of the Writers Branch of the Academy at any time upon service of thirty (30) days notice in writing to be given in like manner as the notice hereinabove provided for. The Executive Committee of the Writers Branch in any instance shall exercise the authority herein conferred only in conformity with and subject to the rules and by-laws of the Academy.

Section 3. From and after the effective date each signatory agrees that upon the employment in California of any writer such writer shall be tendered within a reasonable length of time a written contract setting forth the terms of the employment, which contract shall contain nothing contradictory to this basic agreement. However, this basic agreement shall not nor is it intended to cover contracts to write or to purchase original stories, the employment of writers on a royalty or profit-sharing basis, nor the employment of directors, story editors, supervisors, composers, lyricists or other employees whose participation in writing may be incidental to their bona fide employment in other capacities. The provisions of this basic agreement shall not apply with reference to any contract executed outside of California unless such contract expressly provides that it is subject to such provisions.

Conditions under Lay-Offs

Section 4. In any contract in which an option is granted the producer to lay off the writer without pay (other than on account of illness, default of the writer and like causes), any lay-off (except the last during the contract period) must be for a minimum of seven days and at least five days notice in writing in advance shall be given to the writer unless such writer voluntarily accepts a shorter notice. The provisions of this section are not intended to apply to suspension and/or lay-off in the event of interference and/or curtailment of production activities by reason of strikes, casualties and other causes ordinarily included in the so-called "force major" or "strike and unavoidable casualty" clauses in employment contracts.

Section 5. The following minimum provisions of this section 5 shall relate solely to free-lance writers who are employed to write an adaptation or treatment, a screen play or both an adaptation or treatment and a scren play for a specified aggregate compensation. None of the provisions of this section relate to free-lance writers who are employed on a week-to-week basis.

A. No signatory producer shall agree with a writer that the writer shall write on speculation, or that payment shall be contingent upon the acceptance or approval of the producer, except that this does not limit the writing and submission of original stories on speculation.

B. Upon the delivery of the completed adaptation or treatment a specified amount shall be paid to the writer. Should the producer desire the writer to make changes in the completed adaptation or treatment, it must notify the writer of such changes within one week after the delivery to it of the completed adaptation or treatment. Thereupon the writer shall make such reasonable changes as may have been required by the producer, without the payment of any further compensation.

C. Within a specified number of days after the delivery of the completed adaptation or treatment, or if the writer is required to make reasonable changes in the completed adaptation or treatment then within a specified number of days after the completion of such reasonable changes, the producer shall have the right to exercise an option to employ the writer to write a first draft of the screen play. Upon the delivery of the first draft of the screen play a specified amount shall be paid to the writer. Should the producer desire the writer to make changes in the first draft of the screen play, it must notify the writer of such changes within ten days after the delivery to it of the first draft of the screen play. Thereupon the writer shall make such reasonable changes as may have been required by the producer, without the payment of any further compensation.

D. Within a specified number of days after the delivery of the first draft of the screen play, or if the writer is required to make reasonable changes in the first draft of the screen play; then within a specified number of days after the completion of such reasonable changes, the producer shall have the right to exercise an option to employ the writer to write a final screen play. Should the producer desire the writer to make changes in the final screen play as submitted, it must notify the writer of such changes within two weeks after the delivery of the final screen play and thereupon the writer shall make such reasonable changes as may be required by the producer. A specified amount shall be paid to the writer when the final screen play, including such reasonable changes as may have been required by the producer, has been delivered to the producr, but such payment shall not be contingent upon the acceptance or approval of the producer.

E. The specified amounts to be paid under the provisions of subdivisions B to D, both inclusive, of this section 5 need not be equal amounts, but are to be mutually agreed upon and specified before the execution of the employment contract. Likewise the specified number of days referred to in subdivisions C and D of this section 5, constituting the period of time within which the respective options therein referred to may be exercised, need not be equal but are to be mutually agreed upon and specified before the execution of the employment contract.

F. The terms "adaptation or treatment," "first draft of screen play" and "final screen play" as used in section 5 hereof are hereby respectively defined as follows:

Adaptation or Treatment: A complete story outline indicating character development in, and action of, each sequence.

First Draft of Screen Play: The first complete draft of any script, in continuity form including full dialogue.

Final Screen Play: A completed revision of the screen play, in substantial accordance with the instructions of the producer.

Section 6. During the thirty-day period following the date upon which any producer becomes signatory to this agreement such producer agrees that any writer whose work is covered by this basic agreement and who is in its employ in California at the time will have the option of changing such of the applicable conditions of his employment as are inconsistent with this basic agreement so as to conform to the applicable provisions of this basic agreement, such option, however, to be effective only when such employee within said thirty-day period has executed a valid and proper amendment to his existing contract of employment, the form of such amendment to be approved by both the writer and the producer.

Section 7. If any week-to-week contract is delivered by any producer to any writer in California and if the same is executed without alteration by the writer and is so returned to the producer by noon of the next succeeding business day after its delivery to the writer, it shall then constitute the contract between the parties even though not executed by the producer. If not so returned it shall not constitute a contract until and unless executed by both the writer and the producer.

Adjustment Committee Proposed

Section 8. The signatories recommend the establishment of and agree to extend all reasonable cooperation to a Writers Adjustment Committee from the Writers Branch of the Academy, which committee shall have the general responsibility of supervising and administering this basic agreement. The member of the committee should serve for such periods of time as may be recommended by the executive committee of the Writers Branch but no member of the committee should be permitted to pass upon anything directly affecting his own interests. The Adjustment Committee shall have authority to investigate on its own motion any question as to the full enforcement of the letter and spirit of this basic agreement, providing that the producer concerned in any instance shall be first informed of the purpose of such investigation.

Section 9. Each of the signatories agrees that at any time and from time to time, upon the request of any writer, such signatory will notify such writer as to the names of all other writers then employed by such signatory in California who are working at the time such request is made on the same material upon which the writer making the request is engaged, irrespective of whether such writers are working in collaboration or independently.

Section 10. Any free-lance writer who has worked for a producer on a week-to-week basis for a period of not less than ten consecutive weeks at a salary of $500.00 per week or less, shall be required to give and shall be entitled to receive not less than one week's notice prior to the termination of his employment. The ten week period referred to shall be exclusive of any prior period of guaranteed term employment. This clause is intended for the benefit of all writers employed on a week-to-week basis rendering services in California and regardless of whether such contracts contain this clause.

Section 11. Substantially the following article shall be incorporated in all contracts of employment executed in California and the writer shall not be required to make any wider warranties:

"The writer agrees and warrants that except as provided in the next sentence hereof all material composed and/or submitted by the writer hereunder for or to the producer shall be wholly original with the writer and shall not infringe upon or violate the right of privacy of, or constitute a libel or slander against or violate any common law rights or any other rights of any person, firm or corporation. The same agreements and warranties are made by the writer with reference to any and all material, incidents, treatment, character and action which the writer may add to or interpolate in any material assigned to him by the producer for preparation, but are not made with respect to violations or infringements contained in the material so assigned to the writer by the producer. The writer agrees that all material composed, submitted, added and/or interpolated by the writer hereunder shall automatically become the property of the producer who, for this purpose, shall be deemed the author thereof, the writer acting entirely as the producer's employee. The writer further agrees to execute and deliver to the producer in connection with all such material a certificate in substantially the following form:

"'I hereby certify that I wrote the manuscript hereto attached, as an employee of (name of producer) pursuant to an agreement dated the ......day of........, 193...., in performance of my duties thereunder, and in the regular course of my employment and that said (name of producer) is the author thereof and entitled to the copyright therein and thereto, with the right to make such changes therein and such uses thereof as it may determine as such author.

"'IN WITNESS WHEREOF I have hereto set my hand this ...... day of ......, 193....'"

Conditions for Credits

Section 12. The signatories agree that credits for screen authorship (including adaptation, continuity, scenario, dialogue, added dialogue, gagging and work of like nature but excluding credits for the original material) shall be given pursuant to the terms and in the manner prescribed by the following provisions:

A. Screen credit for the screen authorship of a feature-length photoplay shall be worded "Screen Play by" or "Screen Play——" and no other wording shall be used.

B. Except in unusual cases, screen credit for the screen play shall not be shared by more than two writers and in no case shall the names of more than three be used. The intention and spirit of the credits provision being to emphasize the prestige and importance of the screen play achievement, the one, two or at most three writers chiefly responsible for the completed work shall be the only screen writers to receive screen credit.

C. The only exception to the foregoing shall be:

(1) Musicals.

(2) Pictures on which one writer (or a team) writes both the original story and screen play. In this case the credit may be worded "By," "Original Story and Screen Play by," or "Original Screen Play by."

(3) For the purposes of the credits provisions of this basic agreement, an established writing team, recognized and employed as such, shall be deemed one writer.

D. For the purpose of this basic agreement and of determining credits the term "screen play" shall mean the completed shooting script with individual scenes, full dialogue and camera set-ups, together with such prior treatment, basic adaptation, continuity, scenario, dialogue, added dialogue or gagging as shall be used in and represent substantial contributions to the completed script.

E. No director or production executive shall be entitled to share in the screen authorship screen credit unless such director or executive does the screen writing entirely without the collaboration of any other writer. With regard to directors the foregoing shall be effective only upon condition that it is approved by the Directors Branch of the Academy.

F. When more than one writer has substantilaly contributed to the screen authorship of a photoplay, then all such writers shall have the right to agree unanimously among themselves as to which one or two or in exceptional cases three of them shall receive credit on the screen for the authorship of the screen play. If at any time during the course of production all such writers so agree, then the producer shall not be obligated to issue the noices specified in paragraphs J through P of this section.

G. The producer shall have the right to determine in which one of the following places the Screen Play credit shall appear on the screen:

(1) On the main title card of the photoplay.

(2) On the same title card on which the name of the director appears, in which case, except for the name of the director, the screen play credit shall appear at the top of the title card and in type materially larger than that used for anything else on the card.

(3) On a title card on which credits are given only for the screen play.

(4) On a title card on which credits are given only for the screen play and for the original or source of material. In such case the credit to the screen play writers shall appear at the top of such title card and in type materially larger than that used to display the names of the author or authors of the original material.

Basis of Assignment of Credits

H. While it is recognized that creative achievement is not susceptible to exact mathematical determination, the following shall constitute the basis of assignment of screen authorship credits and shall guide both producers and writers in the determination of such credits:

(1) A writer whose contribution is judged by the producer to represent more than 10% of the value of the completed screen play shall be considered a substantial contributor. As a substantial contributor he shall be entitled to participate in the procedure for determination of screen credits and shall be listed in the Bulletin of Screen Achievement Records.

(2) A writer whose contribution represents more than 25% of the value of the completed screen play shall be entitled to screen credit.

(3) In the exceptional case that no two writers contribute more than 50% of the value of the completed screen play, the screen credit shall be shared by the two or three writers whose work represent the greatest aggregate value.

(4) When screen credit is shared by two or three writers their names shall be listed in the order of the relative value of their contributions.

I. The screen credits and also the work of writers making substantial contributions but not receiving screen credit shall be recognized in a Bulletin of Screen Achievement Records to be published periodically by the Academy. Each signatory producer agrees to extend all reasonable cooperation to make such Bulletin accurate and complete, and shall in a conscientious manner determine, furnish to the Academy and authorize publication of data covering the nature and importance of the work of contributing writers. Each writer signing a contract including the provisions of this basic agreement for the determination of credits also thereby authorizes the publication of such data with regard to his work.

J. Before the screen credits for screen authorship are finally determined the producer shall send a written notice to each writer who has substantially contributed to the screen play. This notice shall state the producer's choice of credits on a tentative basis, together with the names of the other substantial contributors and their addresses last known to the producer.

K. The producer shall make reasonable efforts in good faith to communicate with such writers. The notice specified in the foregoing paragraph may be sent by telegraph to writers outside of the Los Angeles area or by telegram, messenger or special delivery mail to writers in such area. No notice need be sent to writers outside of the United States or writers who have not filed a forwarding address with the producer or with the office of the Academy.

L. The producer shall keep the final determination of screen credits open until a time specified in the notice by the producer, but such time shall be not earlier than 6 p. m. of the next business day following dispatch of the notice above specified. If by the time specified a written notice of objection to the tentative credits or request to read the script has not been delivered to the producer from any of the writers concerned, the tentative credits shall become final.

M. However, if a protest or request to read the script is received by the producer from any writer concerned within the time specified in subdivision L hereof, the studio shall withhold final determination of credits until a time to be specified by the producer, which time shall be not earlier than 48 hours after the expiration time specified for the first notice mentioned in the foregoing paragraphs.

N. Upon receipt of a protest or request to read the script the producer shall make at least one copy of the script available for reading at its studio and shall forward by messenger two copies to the Academy office, which copies shall be returned to the studio within a reasonable time thereafter. The producer shall also notify by telegraph the writer or writers tentatively designated by the producer to receive credit, informing them of the new time set for final determination.

Final Determination

O. If, within the time limit set for final determination of credits, exclusive of any writer or writers waiving claim to screen credit, all of the writers entitled to notice have unanimously designated to the producer in writing the names of the one or two or in exceptional cases three writers to whom screen play credit shall be given, the producer shall accept such designation. If such designation is not so communicated to the producer by such writers the producer may make the tentative credits final or change them as the producer sees fit within the requirements as to wording and limitation of names.

P. Any or all of the notices specified in the foregoing paragraphs may be sent by the producer to the Academy office for forwarding to the writer concerned and delivery of the notice to the Academy office together with such information as to addresses as the producer may have shall relieve the producer of further responsibility for transmission of the notice. Similarly, notices by writers may be delivered to the Academy office for forwarding to the producer, and for the purpose of receiving such forwarded notices the producer shall hold the final determination of credits open for at least one hour after the specified time limits.

Q. In the event that after the screen credits are determined as hereinabove provided, material changes are made in the script or photoplay which in the opinion of the producer justify a revision in the screen credits, then the procedure for determining such revised credits shall be the same as that provided for the original determination of credits.

R. In the event that any writer who has to any degree participated in the authorship of the screen play shall desire to further protest any credits after they have been determined according to the foregoing procedure, such writer may file an appeal with the Writers Adjustment Committee. This committee shall make such investigations and conduct such hearings as may seem advisable to it. However, in such further review of established credits, the burden of proving error or unfairness shall be upon the writer filing the appeal and the decision of the Writers Adjustment Committee shall be final. No writer who has had opportunity to protest during the procedure for the determination of the credits and has not made such a protest shall be entitled to file an appeal later. Such appeal shall also be subject to the provisions of subdivision S of this section.

S. The findings of the Writers Adjustment Committee shall be published in the Academy Bulletin in such manner as the Committee may determine but any findings of the Committee to the effect that credits have been improperly allocated on the screen shall not obligate the producer to change the same, nor shall any appeal regarding credits hinder or delay the use of the screen credits previously determined. No writer or producer shall be entitled to collect damages as a result of any finding of the Committee with regard to credits. In signing anv contract incorporating by reference or otherwise all or part of this basic agreement, any writer or producer specifically waives all rights or claims under the laws of libel or slander with regard to proceedings before the Writers Adjustment Committee and any full and fair publication of the findings of such Committee.

T. No writer shall claim credit for any participation in the screen authorship of any photoplay for which the credits are to be determined by the procedure herein provided for prior to the time when such credits have in fact actually been so determined and no writer shall claim credits contrary to such determination.

U. From and after the effective date of this basic agreement every contract executed in California by any signatory hereto with any writer whose employment is within the terms of this basic agreement shall contain, among other things, the provisions hereinabove in this section set forth. Should any writer refuse to accept such provisions, the same may be omitted but in no event shall any such contract contain any contrary provisions as to determination of credits, or any commitment that the writer shall receive credits except subject to the provisions of this section. If by reason of conflicting provisions in contracts executed prior to the effective date of this basic agreement, or in contracts executed outside of California, it is impossible to comply in every instance, with the provisions of this section, the signatories shall not be considered in bad faith or in default. The incorporation of the provisions of this section in contracts may be by reference, in which event such reference shall be substantially in the following form:

"Section 12 of the Writer-Producer Basic Agreement and Revised Code of Practice approved by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, ..., 1935, is hereby referred to and by such reference incorporated herein and made a part of this agreement with the same effect as though the provisions of said section were set forth herein in detail, it being agreed that should the producer cease to be a party to said basic agreement at any time pursuant to the provisions of Section 2, the provisions of Section 12 shall no longer be deemed to be part of this contract."

Section 13. This basic agreement may be executed in any number of counter-parts with the same force and effect as though all of the parties who executed any such counter-part had executed this instrument. The signing of this instrument or any counter-part hereof by any producer and the delivery of the same so signed to the Secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences shall be deemed to be and shall be due and proper execution of this basic agreement.

Operator Wages Start Dissension

Dissension within exhibitor ranks over the new basic operator wage scale broke out at the meeting of major and independent circuit heads last week, indicating that some of the unaffiliated theatre heads may forsake the circuits in their negotiations and inaugurate a scale of their own with Local 306, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes.

Objection to Secrecy

The disruption is said to have taken place when a Skouras representative objected to the secrecy in the negotiations carried on by the circuits. He is also said to have taken exception to a move made by Joseph Plunkett on a deal for Allied operators at the Astor theatre.

Hopes for a conclusion of negotiations with Local 306 on the new wage scale were voiced by theatre executives this week, however, as they were continuing the discussion with union leaders.

It was stated that efforts would be made to complete a classification of theatres as to size and prevailing admissions first, after which negotiations for the new scales for each classification would be opened.

Up to now, a scale of $1.86 an hour has been agreed upon for the RKO and Loew houses. The negotiators are more concerned at present with scales for theatres other than the two major circuits.

Merger Move Slow

Efforts to merge Local 306 with Allied Motion Picture Operators and Empire State Operators, on the other hand, are still proceeding at a slow pace. Century Circuit and Springer and Cocalis, the two independent chains which have ten year contracts with Empire, are said to be still mulling over the merger plans, but are reluctant to approve the amalgamation unless certain concessions are made.

Springer and Cocalis some time ago were successful in obtaining a court order against Empire's merging with another union. Century's contract, signed two years ago, has a clause which prohibits the union from joining with any other. While the two circuits have not turned deaf ears to a merger at this time, it is said no approval will be given unless satisfactory terms can be arranged with similar provisions in present pacts.

The Paramount theatre on Broadway will still remain without stage shows because of its difficulties with the musician's union. It was originally planned to resume the stage shows this week but Boris Morros, managing director of the house, said that at the present stage of negotiations it will be impossible to plan on them until October 18.

Decisions in the Field

Meanwhile, in the field, action was taken at several centers on contracts with unions. In Kansas City Felix Snow, IATSE divisional representative, has negotiated for renewal of the stage hands' contract with Tulsa, Okla., theatres for one year. The operators' contract has already been renewed and negotiations are nearly concluded for a new deal with Fox Midwest at Springfield, Mo.

In Biloxi, Miss., and in nearby Gulfport picketing is threatened as a result of labor controversies. Stage Employes' Local 14 are asking the Saenger-Paramount houses for a signed contract for an additional day's pay for Sunday, claiming they work seven days for six days' pay.

In Cleveland, first-run union wage contracts have been concluded with all unions. An increase of seven and one-half per cent has been granted to operators in a two-year agreement. Stage hands accepted a $5 per week increase for one year. The musicians' scale remains the same as last year with no guaranteed playing time, with a reduction of $5 per man per week in the event that they are employed 40 weeks during the year.

Subsequent run theatres previously had closed with the operators on a 7½ per cent increase basis.

Paramount Names Studio Officers

Paramount this week named a new studio executive slate, effected new partnership agreements in exhibition with Wilby and Kincey, took over complete operation from a partner of 75 Minnesota theatres from a working on other new partnership arrangements with existing operators.

With Watterson Rothacker's election as vice-president of Paramount Productions, the Hollywood studio personnel has been augmented by the appointment of George L. Bagnall, former Fox treasurer, as studio treasurer, and the naming of G. A. Rasdall, formerly with Bell Telephone, as head of the new personnel department. A. C. Martin continues as studio comptroller, but Mel Shauer will assume special duties formerly assigned to Irving Talbot in the music department.

John E. Otterson, president, was continuing his investigation of the Hollywood operation, and will probably return to New York next week.

Paramount theatre partnership arrangements were extended with the Wilby and Kincey and Lucas and Jenkins groups to July 1, 1936, and expected to be set up any day are arrangements with Louis Dent, of Salt Lake; George Trendle, Detroit, and Robert O'Donnell, of Dallas.

The 75 theatres taken over in Minnesota from a partnership which the company had with Hamm and Charles were acquired when the arrangement expired.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

SEE TWO-REELERS WANE UNDER DOUBLE BILLS
HUNT FOR UNUSUAL LOCALES IS AT HEIGHT
WRITERS' GUILD TO FIGHT PRODUCER PACT
TWELVE PICTURES START, EIGHT FINISHED

CURRENT signs in Hollywood indicate that the days of the two-reel comedy are fast drawing to a close as new conditions of exhibition call for subjects of 10 minutes or less in the short feature realm. While the most of the major studios have announced two-reel product for the year, the tendency has been to rush production on those announced, and hold off plans for future productions. Thus, with the new season scarcely two months old, MGM already has completed more than 60 per cent of its short program, Hal Roach has completed half of his, Warners' Coast studios have finished five out of 12, and all others have started rapidly on their way. At the current rate, all studios will have completed their programs by January.

The reason given for this activity is that the market for pictures which play from 18 to 25 minutes has been all but killed by the wide swing of double featuring. With two full length pictures and a newsreel on one program, there is room only for a nine-minute subject in most theatres. Any two-reel picture must be of a caliber to compete with a feature to gain attention from exhibitors. Pictures such as "The March of Time," the MGM miniatures, an oddity such as Warners' "Keystone Hotel," may be of sufficient importance to force their way into any program, but the average two-reel comedy, they say, will be passed up for a one-reel cartoon, or some other subject which can be shown in less than 10 minutes.

Those who recall that Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Wallace Beery, Harry Langdon, Slim Summerville, Gloria Swanson and other stars learned their art in the Sennett, Roach, and Christie schools of two-reel slapstick, will be chief mourners if this type picture takes its final curtain. While it is true that most of the players who now star as two-reel comedians, such as Laurel and Hardy, Todd-Kelly, Charlie Chase and others are capable of holding interest throughout a full-length feature, a training ground for the development of talent to carry on for artists such as Chaplin, Lloyd and Beery would be missing.—MORRIS.

Hunting the Unusual

The search for the new and unusual background is at its height. In the coming year exhibitors may expect to offer little known corners of the whole wide world as exploitation angles to customers, and audiences will be taking vicarious trips from the Antarctic to Ethiopia.

Tay Garnett, sensing this new trend well in advance, is preparing to leave Hollywood in November for a round-the-world tour to obtain backgrounds for six pictures. They will be filmed in the Malay States, the lesser known islands of the South Seas, India and possibly near the Suez Canal. Paramount is rushing out a film made recently in Ethiopia. The same company soon will release Admiral Byrd's second picture of the venture to Little America.

MGM's "Typee," for which camera crew and cast spent months in the South Seas, will offer the appeal of authentic reproduction of those lands of eternal summer.

Warners' "Anthony Adverse" wanders all over the face of the globe from the Mediterrean to the Gold Coast to the sun-beaten plains of Mexico. The same company is building a replica of the famous Port Royal, swallowed by the sea more than a century ago when it was a chief port of call for pirates of the Spanish Main. It will be seen in "Captain Blood." MGM brings back to bustling life the narrow cobbled streets of the time of the French Revolution in "A Tale of Two Cities" and the splendor of medieval Italy for "Romeo and Juliet." RKO-Radio already has "The Last Days of Pompeii" ready for release. Twentieth Century-Fox will go to the Klondike for a sequel to "The Call of the Wild." The romantic color of early California will play an important part in "Ramona" at the same studio.

And Warner travels all the way to fairyland for "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and to a homely familiar heaven for Marc Connolly's interpretation of Negro religion in the deep South, "Green Pastures."—MILLER.

News Flashes

The Academy's revised producer-writer working agreement came off the presses and will be studied by film company heads. Simultaneously the Screen Writer's Guild opened up with an attack against the new pact, stating its intentions to put up a strong fight for Guild shop. The Guild will file a protest with the National Labor Relations Board, it was announced. Protest will be on the ground that the new Academy pact contains certain violations of the Wagner bill. . . . George L. Bagnall, for many years treasurer for Fox studios, has been signed for a similar post by Paramount. G. A. Rasdall, formerly with Bell Telephone Company, has been named head of the personnel department, a newly created office. . . . Henry Duffy, who has purchased American stage and screen rights to the Margaret Kennedy play, "Autumn," will pick a Hollywood cast, play the piece locally and then take the entire cast to New York for presentation there. . . . Charles Bickford is recuperating at the Hollywood hospital from wounds received from a lion while doing scenes in Universal's "East of Java." The actor has only two days to finish the picture, but will be laid up for three weeks.—WATT.

In "Thanks a Million" Dick Powell will be seen with Ann Dvorak, Fred Allen, Patsy Kelly, Paul Whiteman, a host of radio night club favorites, Raymond Walburn, Paul Harvey, Edwin Maxwell, Alan Dinehart and Russell Hicks. Roy Del Ruth directed. "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" features Ronald Colman with Joan Bennett, Nigel Bruce, Colin Clive, Montagu Love, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Charles Coleman, Torven Meyer, Leonard Snegoff, John Pecora and Sam Ash. WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

SHOT IN THE DARK, A: Charles Starrett, Marion Shilling—Just fair murder-mystery. No extra draw. Played September 20.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

First National

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni—Why not try Muni in a picture where he talks English? My patrons complained that they could not understand him. Very little comedy relief in this. Audience very bored, despite good acting. Business terrible. Running time, 97 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—All seemed to think it the best picture he has made. Perfect entertainment if you like comedy. Played September 19-20.—Frank A. Finker, New Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—The best Joe E. Brown picture ever made. Did tremendous business and everyone went home laughing and trying to tumble. Talk hasn't subsided yet on this one. Give us more like this, Joe. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 6.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL FROM TENTH AVENUE, THE: Bette Davis, Ian Hunter—Very good picture that pleased my patrons and that is all I ask. Alison Skipworth is very good. Bette Davis is quite popular and the entire cast gives a good performance. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Aug. 31-Sept. 1.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—One swell picture. Many remarked that it was Cagney and O'Brien's best picture.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Olivia de Havilland—It's a swell show, the kind your patrons will go for in a big way. It has the same snappy dialogue so typical of Cagney-O'Brien pictures, Mary Gordon as "Ma O'Hara," a lovable Irish character, Frank McHugh with his humorous antics and Olivia de Havilland, who seems to be clicking. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 13.—O. T. Kirby, Palace Theatre, Roxboro, N. C. Small town patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Frank McHugh, Mary Gordon—Either my patrons liked this one or they had all kissed the Blarney stone for I received lots of favorable comments on this one. James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Frank McHugh and Mary Gordon in a story that will please the Irish and the rest of the League of Nations. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 18-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland, "Pat" Paterson—The best of the Charlie Chan pictures to date. Business about average. Running time, 7 reels. Played September 11-12.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Double-billed it with Universal's "Straight from the Heart," which was not so good. Will Rogers as usual held the spotlight. Like all the Rogers pictures, it was in a class by itself. Will Rogers can never be replaced. Fox, exhibitors, and the entire nation lose their "top hand."—D. M. Reardon, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

COWBOY MILLIONAIRE: George O'Brien—From a Western dude ranch to London, with rapid fire entertainment all the way, this one ought to please any audience. Comedy, romance and action enough to please those who do not care for ordinary westerns. Edgar Kennedy and Maude Allen deserve special mention. Running time, 67 minutes. Played September 4-5.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Rochelle Hudson—Shirley's best picture. John Boles and Rochelle Hudson turn in unusually good performances, Boles singing several good numbers. You'll stand 'em in line again on this one. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 9-10.—O. T. Kirby, Palace Theatre, Roxboro, N. C. Small town patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Played this to above average business. Story not so good, but Will Rogers made up for the rest. Running time, 73 minutes. Played September 13-15.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—A dandy comedy which will suit the masses and classes. Played September 14.—Frank A. Finger, New Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—This one was much better than 1934 Scandals. It drew some extra business and seemed to satisfy. Played September 6-7.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn, Lyda Roberti, George White—A clever musical revue held together by a slight story. There is much in this to entertain and very little to give offense. This, together with "Straight from the Heart," gave us a better than average business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

GINGER: Jackie Searl, Jane Withers—Far better than most so-called specials. Watch this Withers kid go places. More favorable comments on this than in many a day. Patrons are asking when Jane Withers' next picture will be released. Play it up big. It's great. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

GREAT HOTEL MURDER: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—A simple plot as murder-mystery plots go, and most of my ruralists saw it all. It seems to be off-season for mysteries. Comedy relief present, but not many good laughs. Average to average business. —T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—The first Will Rogers picture I have exhibited since the tragic death of America's best loved star and it is the usual down-to-earth, every day sort of picture Will Rogers always played in and that everyone, young and old, enjoys. Mighty fine picture that will please. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Sept. 14-15.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—The dean of the talkies has passed. No one should even try to replace Rogers. It can't be done. This is his greatest work, to my way of thinking. I am thankful that they will release his other two features, as I am sure this would be his wish. Running time, 79 minutes. Played September 1-2.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—Very good. Pleased 100 per cent and did good business. Played September 7.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple—A wonderful picture that pleased everyone and did above average business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 23-25.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore, Bill Robinson—My idea of the perfect picture. Good story, wonderful cast, good photography, everything it takes for good, clean entertainment. Shirley Temple could put on a whole show by herself and Lionel Barrymore gives his best performance. And don't forget Bill Robinson and his dancing. The stairstep clog is about the best dancing ever screened. The last sequence in color is beautiful. Don't be afraid to promise your patrons a perfect evening's entertainment when you advertise this one. They will not be disappointed. (In reading this over am afraid I have used too many adjectives but the "Little Colonel" deserves them all.) Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 28-29.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: "Pat" Patterson, Lew Ayres—Another good one from Fox. This company seems to have the pictures this year. The 20th Century crowd knew when to change cars and how to pick a winner. The combination looks unbeatable if they keep their feet on the ground. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 13-14.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: Lew Ayres, "Pat" Patterson—This is another one of Fox's splendid program pictures. It has everything it takes to make a splendid evening"s entertainment. If you have not played it, don't be afraid of it because it is getting old. It will please better than a good many of the new ones. Running time, 82 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and country patronage.

SILK HAT KID: Lew Ayres, Mae Clarke—Nice little program picture. I wish someone would get hold of Paul Kelly and make a star out of him. He's swell. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 4-5.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton—A high school play transplanted to the screen, with the hero getting a lucky million and turning the tables on the boss. They always like to see the worm turn. A bit thin in several spots. Box office below average.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter—Nothing to brag about. Not nearly as good as "Cisco Kid." Recording bad. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 23-24.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—Real swell Western and drew best mid-week business in a long time. Played July 10-11.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—Good picture for any theatre, anytime, anywhere. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 8-10.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp, H. B. Warner—One of the best westerns played in this theatre. Many favorable comments from patrons. Pleased our Friday and Saturday patrons 100 per cent, and did good business. Played September 20-21. —Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

MGM

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This is the best picture this pair has made in my estimation. Plenty of good laughs. Drew good business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—This should please 100 per cent. Plenty of action, comedy and a swell cast. Did better than average business.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Excellent production. Drew good business. Pleased majority.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—Personally I thought this the most inane and tiresome picture I ever inflicted on a long suffering audience but quite a good many seemed to like it. Luise Rainer is not my idea of the answer to an exhibitor's prayer. She is very hard to understand and certainly her looks are nothing to write home about. However, that is just my opinion and if my patrons like her, and a lot of them do, she is O. K. with me. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Sept. 7-8.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer, Frank Morgan, Virginia Bruce—One of the sweetest little pictures we've run in some time. Our people became "Rainer conscious" and raved. Played September 10-12.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

MARK OF THE VAMPIRE: Lionel Barrymore, Bela Lugosi—I'm still trying to figure out what this was all about. Plenty of walkouts. I don't think that there is any entertainment in being scared to death. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 6-7.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

PARIS INTERLUDE: Robert Young, Madge Evans—An old one. Played on a double bill with "One in a Million." One patron remarked "There ought to be a law." Majority just shook their heads. The trouble is we pay the same for the bad ones as we do for the good ones. Just a waste of dates and dollars. Running time, 73 minutes. Played September 11-12.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur—A good program picture with the usual killing and gangs. Average business. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 30-31, September 1.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Parker—The first one of this type here and it was well received and business good. Played September 13-14.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell—Business not so good, but those who came to see it were well pleased. Many said it was the best show they had seen in a long time. Played September 8-9.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell—Harlow and Powell good drawing cards and patrons seemed to enjoy the show. Played Sept. 14-15.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

SEQUIOA: Jean Parker—A wonderful picture for Friday-Saturday showing. It pleased them and the second night at the box office proved it. Played August 30-31.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—This is an extra good comedy drama. The stars were fine and a mighty good cast of characters. I call it one of the best pictures we have played in months. Gave splendid satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery—Our patrons said this one had real entertainment. However, business was only about normal. Played September 1-2.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—Can't please them all. The women thought it was fine. Small crowd. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 23-24.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Maureen O'Sullivan, Joel McCrea—A murder mystery that is different and better than most of the cycle of murder films. Excitement, thrills and romance with a good cast that will please any audience. Hope they star Joel McCrea in another picture soon. He is great. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 21-22.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre. Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Monogram

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley, Mickey Rooney—This is one of the finest pictures I have thrown on my screen for some time. This picture should go over in any town, anywhere, any place. It gave as near 100 per cent satisfaction as any picture could do. Ralph Bellamy well liked here. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 25-27.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—Nice little picture to average business. Played September 15-16.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—This would have been a great show if we had received a good print. So many splices in the film it was hard to get a good idea of story.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Walnut, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Carl Brisson, Mary Ellis, Edward Everett Horton—I cannot recall having a poorer or smaller attendance than I had during the run of this picture with ideal weather conditions. Too much crooning and dancing, no action, no comedy to speak of. This might go over all right where you have a lot of lounge lizards to draw from. We don't care a heck for a bunch of kings or "dooks" and what have you. Played September 11-12.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Sir Guy Standing, Tom Brown, Richard Cromwell, Rosalind Keith—Swell show. Sir Guy Standing's acting is marvelous.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Cardon, Iowa. Rural patronage.

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Sir Guy Standing, Tom Brown, Richard Cromwell, Rosalind Keith—A fine story of the Annapolis Naval Academy. Heard much praise on this one. Played September 18.—Frank A. Finger, New Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

ENTER MADAME: Elissa Landi, Cary Grant—Fans didn't like the title and stayed away. A good picture for the ladies, nevertheless. A snappy title would have put this one over for us. Running time, 83 minutes. Played Aug. 21-22.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—One of the better comedy musicals released. It will please them all. Running time, 80 minutes.—H. J. Longacre, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye, Frances Langford, Patsy Kelly—This is an excellent picture composed of many amateur radio broadcast programs. Very good and did S. R. O. business on Sunday. Running time, 8 reels. Played September 1-3.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft, Edward Arnold—This is the kind of picture that fits Raft to a T. Edward Arnold helped to make it a real picture. Doubled this with a western and did average business. Running time, 77 minutes. Played September 6-8.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—The first time for Mae West in my own. Did a very good business on this one. It went over good. Played August 23-24.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—They came looking for double-meaning wise cracks and they found them. Mae still has her fans but they are diminishing. Little better than average business.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West, Paul Cavanagh—Biggest Wednesday gross in 1935. Pleased the most of my audience. If it brings in the cash customers and pleases the majority, what more can we ask? Played September 11-12.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns, Gracie Allen—About as goofy of a picture that you have ever seen. Gracie takes the cake for being dumb. Picture should please those that like light entertainment.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns, Gracie Allen—This one got lots of laughs. It has some vaudeville that helps to put it over. Would rate it as a good program picture. Played September 20-21.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields, Mary Brian—This picture failed to quite come up to expectations. It seemed to lack something to put it across. Pleased the Fields fans but the rest did not say much about it. Business good.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Walnut, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields, Mary Brian—Comedy in the usual Fields style. Story very light. If they like Fields it is O. K., but otherwise just a double feature picture. Average business here. Played Sept. 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—Very excellent "G Man" story and picture. Every one liked this one. We pushed it as a "G Man" hit and won. It will stand a lot of publicity push and back you up in some strong "G Man" statements. Did S. R. O. business. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 7.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

PARIS IN SPRING: Mary Ellis, Tullio Carminati, Ida Lupino—Wonderful little picture. Pleased those who came to see it. The title is sure to draw some attention. Running time, 8 reels. Played September 13.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Amusing domestic farce with a Ruggles drunk scene, which never fails. Average picture and box office.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett, Joel McCrea—Hospital atmosphere which my patrons called a good show. Played Sept. 7-8.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Zazu Pitts—Can only echo the other exhibitors who played this feature. Direction, acting and story far ahead of ordinary product. Clean and very amusing. A film that lingers in the mind and that's what all theatre men hope for. Played Aug. 18-20.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

SHANGHAI: Loretta Young, Charles Boyer—Average picture. Did not go so well for me.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SHANGHAI: Loretta Young, Charles Boyer—Good acting by all the characters. However, the story wasn't so good. Why do they put good stars in such a poor story is more than I can figure out. Running time, 8 reels. Played September 13-14.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

Puritan

OUTLAW DEPUTY, THE: Tim McCoy—A very good western. Lots of action. Saturday night crowd eat them up and like it, and the customer is always right.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Republic

WESTWARD HO: John Wayne, Shelia Mannors—Better than most westerns. Quite a few good musical numbers. Male voice quartette and it makes a hit. Running time, 60 minutes.—H. J. Longacre, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—It did just what I expected it would do. Brought in the school teachers and old ladies, but the young people were noted for their absence. Such being the case it was less than average draw. This type of picture is probably needed, but they never make any money for me. Played September 14-15.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix—Very good western which drew well. Dix a favorite here. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 13-14.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—A marvelous colored production, but too much was put into color and little in the story. It was a disappointment. Played September 12-13.—Frank A. Finger, New Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Sidney Fox, Polly Moran—Our idea of "nothing at all." Played on a double bill with "Unknown Blonde," which incidentally saved the show and sent the customers out satisfied. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Sept. 4-5.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Made a big mistake in setting this one on Sunday-Monday. Just a fair picture for Friday and Saturday showing. Lost on this one. Played August 25-26.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen, Margot Grahame—A very strong picture. Great acting by the star, wonderful cast, story big. The picture is too good to draw any extra business in this town. All that saw it said it was great, but it did not draw. But no fault of the picture; one of the best I have ever seen. Played September 17-18.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—This was a big picture for us. We sent advertising into every farm home and had special matinees for rural and town schools. The picture stood up and everybody was pleased.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

NITWITS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—We all laughed till we cried. Had this run two reels longer, I would have had to get all new seats. Business above normal. Running time, 79 minutes. Played August 21-22.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

PEOPLE'S ENEMY: Preston Foster, Melvyn Douglas—The picture itself is the people's enemy. Goes nowhere and takes an hour to do it. This picture will not please and will not gross. My ad mats said: "Uncle Sam Cracks Down On Crime." They expected G Men and gangsters and got an insipid drama.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—One of the most exciting railroad pictures we have ever played. Edgar Kennedy as the old engineer is a knockout. Played this on Sunday-Monday to normal business, and it pleased. Running time, 7 reels. Played August 25-26.—Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Very entertaining by these stars, as usual. Business not so hot. R. K. O. takes the cake for meaningless titles. Very good comments. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—A "Thin Man" sequel with the same sparkling dialogue and comedy. Better than average business. Plot a bit deep for the farmers, and some adverse comments on the excessive drinking.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Just get them in. They'll eat it up and praise it sky high. Double your running period, as it should be shown twice as many days as most shows. Running time, 102 minutes.—H. J. Longacre, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minnn. General patronage.

United Artists

CALL OF THE WILD, THE: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—For our locality, this is the one really satisfactory picture from the U. A. pictures we have run. Good entertainment. Played September 8-9.

—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

CARDINAL RICHELIEU: George Arliss—I got out from under this one by giving it to the library for film rental. They sold the tickets and made a little money. It is a good picture, but an English picture is poison to this town.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Sothern, Merle Oberon—I consider this as good a picture as any that Maurice Chevalier has ever appeared in. The story is a little peppy in spots, but not offensively so. The dual role portrayed by Maurice is a clever piece of work. Ann Sothern as the spitfire deserves special mention. This has two fine spectacular numbers, at the start and the finish where they do not interfere with the story. While this had no special drawing power, it did a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

LES MISERABLES: Frederic March, Charles Laughton, Rochelle Hudson—A picture that the entire motion picture industry can be proud of. Even our young so-called roughneck patrons gave this their undivided attention, which is a great compliment to any picture. Drawing power a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

NELL GWYN: Anna Neagle, Cedric Hardwicke—If you have to play it, double feature it. It will not draw and it will not please.—T. R. Burcham, Princess Theatre, Doniphan, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Jane Wyatt, Phillips Holmes—Good picture with a slow tempo. Crowd divided in opinion. Older folks liked it and the younger element endured it. "Nuff sed." Running time, 99 minutes. Played Sept. 18-19.—D. M. Reardon. Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Louise Beavers—If you have this one bought, be sure and play it and give your patrons a real treat. Played July 6-7.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Douglass Montgomery, Anita Louise, Alan Mowbray—This is one picture with the Universal brand on that went over O. K. This, in just plain words, is a very good entertaining picture with plenty of good clean comedy. But it seems to me they have too many that are N. G. That is especially true of their Buck Jones westerns. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 11-13.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and country patronage.

MANHATTAN MOON: Ricardo Cortez, Dorothy Page—This is a very good program picture. Played on a double feature bill and the picture was specially mentioned by patrons as a good one. Played September 13-14.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton, Paul Cavanagh—Fair picture, no business. Star unknown. Running time, 7 reels. Played September 17-18.—Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

SHE GETS HER MAN: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—Very pleasing little picture. Nothing big, but will please the average fan.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART: Mary Astor, Roger Pryor, Baby Jane—We double billed this with "George White's 1935 Scandals." This bill drew above average. I credit this with part of the draw. Baby Jane, while not another Shirley Temple, did very nicely. At that, I overheard one of our patrons saying that she is better than Shirley Temple. As a whole, above the average heart-appealing drama.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART: Mary Astor, Roger Pryor, Baby Jane Quigley—Not so good. Double billed it with "The County Chairman" and Will Rogers as usual held the spotlight. Like all the Rogers pictures it was in a class by itself. Will Rogers can never be replaced. Fox, Exhibitors and the entire nation lose their "top hand." Played Sept. 6-7.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull—Had a number of good comments on the showing of this program picture. Played Sept. 11-12.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

Warners

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Excellent show. People came out raving about it. Business big on two-day run.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Walnut, Iowa. Rural patronage.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Another Joe E. Brown laugh riot. Everybody likes Joe and the good, clean comedies that he plays in. Pleased. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Sept. 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

"UNCANNY" IN FILM REPORTS

"By far the most valuable section of your magazine for us is the 'What the Picture Did For Me' section; it is almost uncanny in its predictions of how pictures will gross in our situation," writes T. R. Burcham, of the Princess Theatre at Doniphan, Mo.

"Due to the fact that we play pictures so late we have never submitted reports, but we are enclosing a group, and will be glad to continue doing so."

FRONT PAGE WOMAN: Bette Davis, George Brent—Good newspaper story. Satisfied those that came.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Walnut, Iowa. Rural patronage.

FRONT PAGE WOMAN: Bette Davis, George Brent—This is a mighty good entertaining picture. Stars and all the cast fine. Story interesting. The picture gave 100 per cent satisfaction and that's something nowadays in this town. Played September 15-16.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts—Fair comedy. Seemed to please fairly well. Played September 13-14.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner. Ore. Small town patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Fast and furious. Better than their other "hits." Did S. R. O. business both nights and everyone went home happy with several new ideas. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 23-24.—E. J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

It may be generally supposed by some people, from reading the foregoing, that we still were pestigating around up in South Dakota, but the boys up there asked us about how long we intended to stay, which we took as an indication that they thought we ought to get out of there, so what with that and sickness at home, we decided that perhaps we ought.

We heard a fellow say once that there were four seasons of the year, winter, spring, summer and Los Angeles (he was a resident of Los Angeles) and we presume what he really had in his mind when he said Los Angeles was the autumn season, and we have often wondered if people really appreciated the autumn season. To us it is the most beautiful season of the year.

And when we think of the autumn season we wonder if very many of you have spent the season in some of the beauty spots of the United States, and this may bring up the inquiry, where are some of these beauty spots. Listen Abner, some of the most beautiful spots in the whole world are in this glorious country of ours, for instance, Southern Michigan during the autumn, when the trees are beginning to color and we can gather the Lawton grapes, the Alberta peaches and the black haws and paw paws that Nature has provided for those having eyesight and appetites.

And Other Places

Then go down into the Ozark hills of Arkansas and southern Missouri and note the gorgeous coloring of the trees on the hillsides. Then go out northwest of San Antonio in Texas and note the beauty of those hills, and if the panorama of variegated colors of the trees don't impress you as nothing else ever did, then it will be no use for you to go to Broadway, Niagara Falls, the Grand Canyon, the National Park and "Old Faithful"—nor Neligh, Nebraska, U. S. A.

To us, autumn is the most glorious season of the year. It is the season when one rejoices in the days that have passed and anticipates the days of the future. There is but one serious fault we can find with autumn, it is the season when the hay fever grabs a fellow without warning and makes him sneeze, cough, blow his nose and use language that is commonly called profanity. But even the hay fever has its good features. During sneezing spells it makes one forget, during a sneezing spell, crooners, jazz orchestras, shelterbelts and blue pelicans, and that alone is enough to justify one in having hay fever. We wouldn't have brought the subject up except that we have hay fever ourself and our language is such as is not used by the best families. Anyhow, autumn is the season when things are ripening into perfection, when the bass are getting hungry, the weather is glorious, the trees are gorgeous, the rag-weed is shedding its hay fever pollen and Mrs. Maloney's goats have twins in the woodshed. Yes sir, the autumn is the prize season for us, darned if it ain't.

PENNSYLVANIA PASSES EQUAL RIGHTS LAW

A law has been passed at Harrisburg, Pa., giving every citizen equal rights in amusement places, hotels, restaurants and stores, no matter what his color, race or creed.

The law is now in effect throughout the state.

But speaking of South Dakota. There are some more boys up there that you all ought to know. As an illustration, there is John Reichling, who operates the Sun theatre at Emery. John also operates a cafe during his idle moments, and when you are in Emery, and it isn't showtime, you better drop into John's place and get something good to eat. After that you can go and see a good show at the Sun theatre.

And then there is another thing, as Andy said to Min that time. There's P. G. Estee of the S. T. theatre at Parker, South Dakota, and Parker, South Dakota, is where they have the streets all torn up and where profanity is about as common as it is in Sioux Falls, where they have had the main streets torn up for several weeks.

P. G. went out to Vancouver, Washington, last summer and from there he went down to Hollywood expecting to do a little cutting up around there, but he made the mistake of taking Mrs. Estee with him, a mistake a lot of 'em have made once, but will never make again. We saw P. G. in Sioux Falls and, after considerable persuasion, he induced us to renew his subscription to the Herald, his argument being that he didn't see how he could run his theatre without it. We couldn't either.

That Potato Law

When our legislature passed that "Rainmaker's Bill" some years ago, we thought that Nebraska had secured the belt for idiocy, but after we got into Wisconsin and learned that their legislature passed that "Cheese Law" we were ready to surrender the belt to them unless Congress claimed it for their "Shelterbelt" law, and now we will have to hand everything to Congress for their "Potato Bills," which is the biggest piece of damphoolishness that ever emanated from the House for the Feeble Minded. We don't care very much about potatoes anyhow, the doctor tells us to cut them out, so a tax of 45 cents a bushel don't worry us very much, but how about the poor families in the cities where potatoes comprise their chief diet? That's what is going to worry a whole lot of people.

Didja ever go up to Atkinson, Nebraska, and meet Arthur Miller? Arthur used to operate the Lyric theatre up there but it was proved that he had voted the same ticket from a little boy up, so he was appointed postmaster and then he turned the theatre over to other people to worry about and turned his attention to reading postal cards. Arthur denies being a Norwegian. He says his ancestors came from the sucker state of Illinois, which state borders on the Hoosier state on the west, and we can vouch for this because we used to shoot ducks and geese with his ancestors on Black Marsh, Beaver Lake and the Kankakee river in Indiana long before Arthur shed his breechclouts. We drove up there to see him the other day and he told us he had gotten tired of reading postal cards and wanted us to send him the Herald. We did. We never can go back on a friend.

Can't Do Without It

Then again, we received renewal orders for the Herald from several of the boys, A. Burrus, Crete, Nebraska; J. J. Hoffman of Plainview, Nebraska, and Charles V. Schoecraft of Omaha, Nebraska. None of these boys seem able to struggle along without the Herald. We have repeated several times that there was no darn sense in trying to operate a theatre correctly without the Herald; it just can't be done.

Today we heard a man in Washington broadcasting on the "Farm and Home Hour" and he told of a peanut convention that was to be held in Washington to determine something that would help the peanut growers. Then he gave the date of a convention to be held in Washington to adjust the corn and hog matter, and it made us wonder why they don't hold their peanut conventions down in a country where they grow peanuts, and their corn and hog conventions out in a country where they grow corn and hogs. There are plenty of nuts around Washington but they are of the squirrel and not of the peanut variety, and they wouldn't know an ear of corn from a banana, and if they heard an old sow squeal they'd think they were out in the zoo. If they want to determine the depth of the ocean why not go out to the Rocky Mountains to determine it.

BVD's for Eskimos

We were appointed as a delegate from this state one time to attend a "Conservation Convention" to be held in Indianapolis, Indiana, and we attended, and heard a candidate for president speak, and, to this day we don't know what in —— they wanted to conserve unless it was the B.V.D.'s for the Eskimos. Well, anyhow, we hope the boys up in Minnesota and the two Dakotas will try and behave themselves until we get up there, and we hope also that they will have a good bass lake picked out for us.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

RADIO FREE SHOWS AGAIN

Some months back the industry had occasion to act in concert and successfully to fight the menace of free shows put on by radio sponsors in motion picture theatres. Against the first of these shows was presented a united front—a front which must again go into action without delay for radio advertisers are at it again.

More than once in these pages have we called attention to the dangers of too close cooperation between the picture business and sponsors of national radio hours. There is reason to believe that by allowing stars to appear on these hours, and by making available studio facilities, producers have helped to sell radio listeners away from the box office.

Yes, there is a definite place for the broadcasters in the general publicizing of individual dates and this is indicated by the many campaigns put over by Round Tablers in which radio plays no unimportant part. But only up to a certain point and assuredly not that which allows further encroachment upon the box office in the form of the free show.

Theatres exist only by their ability to sell entertainment at a price.

OFF ON THE RIGHT FOOT

Well, folks, here we are, on the threshold of what promises to be the best picture season we have had in years. Product is far superior than it has been for some time and grosses are up. Mebbe not up to where they should be in every situation but distinctly headed that way.

Yes, headed that way if—

And the "if" depends upon what exhibitors and managers in general are going to do to put over their attractions.

From this end of the table, it's a cinch to say that if exhibitors will loosen the advertising purse strings, then the manager will do his part in bringing in those extra box office bucks.

But it isn't so simple.

Don't let us kid ourselves, friends and relatives, for there are managers as much to blame for unsatisfactory grosses as their superiors. You can't rest the entire responsibility upon one or the other.

The happiest solution until we find a better one, is the advertising budget. Not an arbitrary amount fixed in advance but a flexible budget that makes proper allowance for the unexpected that happens so frequently in the business of exhibition.

We do not favor for every situation a budget that necessitates a man working with dimes and his fingernails. Nor do we cast our vote for too prodigal a policy in spending hard won dollars.

There are numerous instances to hand of both and there may be every good reason for these individual arrangements. But for the most part this season's excellent product should not be handicapped by any arbitrary setup of advertising appropriations.

The exhibitor who turns over the responsibility of adequate grosses to his manager must be prepared to depend upon the theatreman's good judgment and general savvy. The manager who accepts this responsibility should in turn be on his toes, 24 hours every day, to make sure that not one cent of these precious dollars will be spent without a satisfactory return at the box office.

Where advertising matters are still confused, exhibitor and manager must get together—and right now—to prepare every big gun and plenty of dry ammunition to lay down that big barrage for this year's business.

Product is aces. Things are picking up. Come together, gentlemen, and straighten out your difficulties.

Step off on the right foot and not upon each other's toes.

ANOTHER MANAGER-PUBLISHER

To the promising list of manager-publishers we are pleased to add the name of Al Reh, State Theatre, in Philadelphia, whose "Youngsters' Weekly News" is reported by Skip Weshner and detailed on a following page.

That the publication has doubled in circulation after only three issues not only speaks well for this manager's resourcefulness, but might also be offered as a tip-off to other members seeking new kid angles that pay highly interesting dividends.

African Tribal Shields Carry "Sanders" Copy

Accompanying photo shows lobby display of Earle Gassoway's "Sanders" date at the Rialto in Kingsville, Tex., constructed of an eight by four foot panel sprayed with metallics. Imitation African tribal shields were painted with suitable catchlines and the whole decorated with date-palm leaves.

Another stunt Earle used for "Star of Midnight" was an imitation telescope constructed by his art department and placed on sidewalk in front of theatre with realistic tripod. Equipped with eye-piece and push-button that turned on a small inside light revealing a magnified star. In center of star were heads of Rogers and Astaire with copy. Sign on telescope invited all to look.

Druggist's label conspicuously displayed on one side and reverse carrying theatre ad with offer of 10-cent reduction (non-cost to theatre) on each admission to those presenting bottle at box-office when purchasing ticket. Tonic consisted of colored water. Johnny returned all bottles received to druggist.

Finesilver's Police Tieup

As a goodwill gesture on the part of the Avenue U Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., Charlie Finesilver has been cooperating with the police department on safety campaign. Charlie had stickers printed plugging the drive and through tie-in with precinct captain these were put on windshields of parked autos by police.

Bergen County Votes On 'Typical Mother'

Well, there have been contests to select prize babies, bathing beauts and most popular citizens but it remained for Manager George Kelly, of Warner's Oritani Theatre, Hackensack, N. J., to get in on a promotion with one of his papers, a contest to find the "typical mother" of Bergen County, in which the theatre is located.

All in all, the drive lasted 15 days during which time the paper spread the news in each issue with daily vote coupons, stories, photos, etc. Theatre was tied in with guest tickets and also to be there for the presentation from the stage of the various awards.

These included a flock of worthwhile prizes promoted from cooperating merchants who advertised the tiein liberally, the gifts ranging from electric refrigerators to an evening at a popular night club.

The winner, wife of an accountant, was given one of those "lady-for-a-day" parties, with shiny limousine picking her up at home and taking her from place to place to select her gifts previously advertised. At the theatre Hal LeRoy, the dancer, was on hand to act as master of ceremonies and to present some of the gifts.

Kelly recommends the stunt as a switch from the usual popularity contest for a Mother's Day drive or other local fitting tiein.

Levey Puts On Old Time Movie Star Contest

Bill Levey, Suffolk Theatre, Riverhead, L. I., apparently reads the Herald from cover to cover. For a while back, the news section ran a cut of thumbnails of 88 old-time movie stars compiled by Jack Fuld. Bill borrowed photo and made it basis of contest offering ducats to those coming closest to supplying correct names. Contest running for an entire month is being stimulated by heralds and frequent newspaper plugs.

Juvenile Newspaper Makes Quick Click

Doubling in circulation after only three issues is the record rolled up by the "Youngsters' Weekly News," a newspaper of, by and for the youngsters and sponsored by Manager Al Reh, State, West Philadelphia.

According to Skip Weshner, supervisor of Warner first runs and key spots in the Philadelphia zone, the paper is self-sustaining already with more than a dozen advertisers on the waiting list. Schools, P.T.A.'s and church officials are much in favor of the publication and are giving it their support.

The form is four page tabloid size, printed on newspaper stock, and currently, contest is being held for permanent name for the sheet. Plenty of local news stories are carried, reports on neighborhood activities and sports programs, plus personalities, school news and similar items of interest.

Challenges Big Eater To Consume "Jim" Meal

Weshner also reports various recent campaigns outstanding being the hefty score rolled up on "Diamond Jim" at the Stanton wherein Philadelphia's champ eater was challenged to consume a typical Jim meal. Stunt was planted by local daily and followed up with photos and stories.

Neat street bally was man dressed as "Jim" and bejeweled, riding a bannered two-seater bicycle. Unusual lobby tieup had two girls in gay-nineties costumes seated before Royal typewriters in arched booths and typing copy on "Jim" including plug for the machine.

Further tieups were made with California Fruit Growers for posters in retail stores and restaurants covered with "Jim" die-cut cards gave away meals daily on lucky number gag.

Old Lamps Sell "Lamps For China" for Lamm

An excellent window display (see photo) was secured by Louis Lamm, Palace Theatre, Lorain, Ohio, on "Oil for the Lamps of China" through tiein with the Ohio Public Service. As a result of want ad offering pass, various families contributed old lamps that had been handed down from generation to generation and these together with modern lighting fixtures formed the basis of the display. Newspapers gave added break by running stories on tiein and the history of lights. Bookmarks with books on China on reverse side were distributed in branch libraries.

Goldenberg's Novelty Card Plugs "Clairvoyant" Date

A novelty teaser herald was gotten out for "The Clairvoyant" by Martin Goldenberg, Keith's Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. There was a pair of die cut-out eye slits on green stock with a warning "hold this card up to your eyes and face a mirror." Opposite side of card with picture message was in reverse type and could only be read by holding before mirror. These were distributed in stores, streets and apartments.

Several window tie-ups were secured by Martin from optical shops, cards reading "Clairvoyant—to see clearly and with clear vision," etc. Tack cards carrying "hexed by an evil eye," title, cast and theatre were profusely planted around town and a teaser script emphasizing the question, whether or not anyone can foretell wealth, disaster, etc., was given over radio station.

Special "Irish" Lobby Constructed by Barr

For his lobby display on "The Irish in Us" Stan Barr at Warner's Capitol, Winchester, Va., placed a special shamrock easel in the center of his entrance one week ahead, mounted with three stills and copy on picture. A green spot shone on display and entire main lobby was decorated with green and white crepe paper, with cut-out shamrocks spotted over side walls.

Clerks in drug stores wore green silk badges plugging an "Irish Sundae," streamers were pasted on fountain mirrors and through tie-up with newspaper "good morning" stickers were used on papers. Another tie-up was used by leading dry cleaners in the form of a coat hanger herald hung on every article leaving shop.

Irwin Donates "Alibi Ike" Baseball to Rotary

Morgan Ties Street Car Company Up on "Sanders"

Tying up with the street car company, Herb Morgan, Loew's Century, Baltimore, Md., for "Sanders" reproduced a jungle setting on a 50-foot flatcar which was run over all major lines in city. Float was doubly attractive (see photo) by use of five natives in full paint and feather regalia, two of whom constantly beat large tom-toms.

Bally angle was further carried out by staging a grotesque native war dance directly in front of theatre. Twenty negroes were taught routine from picture and armed with spears and shields created a mild sensation, according to Herb.

Local representative of Opera Company permitted theatre to mail announcements concerning Robeson and musical angle to their entire subscription list. Library gave window display to African exhibit and used counter cards in all branches. Department store also devoted window display to tropical helmets and radio transcriptions of numbers sung by star were featured as part of broadcast.

To the winner an electric fan was awarded, runnersup receiving tickets to see the picture.

Teaser ads were run in daily copy reading "Who is the mysterious beauty in Escapade at," etc., and theatrical sections ran photos and stories on the new star, Luise Rainer.

On "Flame Within" Les used another form of the classified ad section contests, paper listing six questions re certain ads and to those correctly answering the list, theatre tickets were given.

Leino Constructs Street Trailer for Attractions

Frank E. Leino, assistant manager at the Columbia and Loring Theatres, Crockett, Cal. rigged up a trailer stunt to plug his two features (see photo). Truck was lettered on four sides and size of panels was such that three sheets in a frame could be mounted over them. Frank entered his bally in local parade, thus garnering a little extra break for himself.

Armistead Plants Score Cards on "Alibi Ike"

Harold Armistead, Lyric Theatre, Easley, S. These were placed on walls near radios in barber shops, pool rooms, drug stores and places where crowds gathered for inning-by-inning returns. Needless to say, theatre plug was prominently displayed.

Colored photos of the star were planted in various stores about town, soda fountain plugged a Becky Sharp sundae and a special preview was held for various civic organizations.

"NO ONE MAN WROTE THE BOOK"

Discussion on the effectiveness of the "Screen Reporter" ad form inaugurated by Fox Midwest Theatres, continues on this page, the author of the article analyzing the five points cited in the issue of September 7.

The author, a theatre manager and advertising executive for many years, is known to this department and in accordance with his request, no by-line is carried.

Managers' Round Table Club has invited an open discussion of the socalled "new idea" in the Fox Midwest Theatres styles of newspaper advertising and the many claims made for it. That it has been successful, Fox Midwest officials declare has been proven by box-office results, inasmuch as advertising costs have been reduced and the box-office has, seemingly, not suffered from the experiment; but that it would prove generally successful elsewhere and that it will revolutionize theatre advertising is open to serious question. I have a shrewd suspicion that if there were two competing theatres in a town with comparable picture programs, one using aggressive headline copy ads and the other using "The Screen Reporter" style, that what "The Screen Reporter" theatre saved in advertising costs would be negligible in comparison to the increased grosses gained by the opposition.

Five points have been cited in the September 7 issue of Motion Picture Herald as to why Fox Midwest considers "The Screen Reporter" is desirable and how it accomplishes these five objectives. That all these objectives are really beneficial is open to question.

I will discuss each of these five points separately.

1. "To escape from the 'colossal' description traditions of motion picture promotion."

"Colossal," "stupendous," "greatest," "finest picture ever made," and similar circus expressions have ceased to be used by progressive advertising men for many a day. These descriptive traditions have long ago given way to "Punch Headlines" that suggest or describe some further copy in the theatre ad, and are at the same time suggestive of enthusiasm and are eye and mind arresting. . . .

Enthusiasm Is Life Blood

Enthusiasm is the lifeblood of show-business. Faith in the article sold should always be reflected in advertising copy. While certain pictures require dignified treatment in copy, others require aggressive attack. We must always bear in mind that entertainment is the most perishable commodity in the world. It must be sold quickly if at all. Theatres really sell "time," presumably "a good time"—an entertaining or amusing passage of time. Selling it often requires extraordinary methods. Theatre programs change frequently. Sales, I repeat, must be made quickly. In advertising "Entertainment," the mind and eye must be arrested forcibly to create the desire to spend money at the box-office. . . .

2. "To make circuit advertising distinctive, yet uniform, making it as easily recognizable in the daily newspaper as the weather report."

To make it distinctive is highly to be desired. Uniformity, however, means standardization. The finest commercial advertising brains claim that standardization over a period ceases to have sales value through familiarity. The reading public will pass over and ignore the standardized "form-copy" and prefers to read advertising that is fresh and original in copy and make-up.

Paid columnists, so far as the general public are concerned, are critics of the modes, customs and persons of the day and have no particular axe to grind, except to interest their readers. These readers are often more interested in the personality and style of the writer than in the subject matter. To hope that "The Screen Reporter" will be regarded in the same light, after the public knows that the column is paid theatre or circuit advertising, is optimistic, indeed.

3. "To create a dependable source of information about motion pictures."

That is, I take it, from the theatre and circuit's angle. But reader columns that the public knows are paid advertising never have the sales value of a frank commercial ad. The public resents the camouflaged ad.

This third point's objective is a tremendous reflection on the national screen magazines, the scores of national magazines that devote pages to motion pictures and the splendid service given newspapers throughout the country by the press departments of the producers at the Coast studios, to say nothing of the motion picture critics throughout the country and the columnists and syndicated writers who certainly give a great amount of space to all pictures. Certainly the vast amount of matter must have many dependable facts. To make a "Screen Reporter" column have more local influence than all these factors impresses the writer as a Utopian wish that will fail to be realized.

ROBERTA FRONT. Artist Philip Sanderson at the Lyric Theatre, Bisee, Ariz., created this attractive front for "Roberta." Colored bulbs highlighted title under marquee.

4. "To reduce newspaper costs."

Here is the nub of the matter and a consummation devoutly to be wished, but never through the method advocated.

It is not the intent of the writer, nor the desire, to stand in the way, or to object and try to obstruct anything truly progressive in theatre advertising. In fact, no individual opinion could do so, for real progress can not be stopped. But the application of this "new" idea seems to me to open a serious question. There is a well-grounded fear that, instead of being constructive, this "new" idea will be destructive of many things we have fought for years with the newspapers to accomplish.

Memory of the long uphill fight to get the newspapers to devote space to motion pictures will be remembered by scores of Motion Picture Herald readers. It was a long fight to gain the recognition for the motion picture that was enjoyed by the legitimate stage and only public demand brought it about—just as radio has gradually won a foothold in the newspapers.

Now we are to say through the medium of "The Screen Reporter" or similar paid columns that we believe in paying for newspaper reader columns, after all, and that the newspaper ad with which we have commercially publicized our wares is not as valuable a form as the "column."

Says Modesty Is Questionable

I am speaking of the East, and more particularly of New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Boston and New England in the following comments. Tear sheets show that the newspapers in these cities and throughout New England have their motion picture reviewers who do a very creditable job in reporting pictures. They are liberal in their space to the theatre press departments and the treatment accorded the motion picture as a whole is excellent and the battle of years, has, to a great extent, been won. Are we to right-about-face and kick over the egg-basket? We would be foolish, indeed, to do so.

5. "To make advertising conform with the higher standards of pictures."

Absolutely! However, "The Screen Reporter" style is not the only, nor is it the most desirable, way to do it. It may work out all right for Fox Midwest. "The Screen Reporter" style does not have a universality of appeal to all classes. To have advertising conform to the better pictures of 1935-1936 will be best accomplished by avoiding extravagant claims; by dignity where dignity is advisable; while truthful statement is absolutely necessary, yet selling the pictures by cuts, line drawing and type layouts that arrest the eye and draw reader attention. Modesty is highly questionable, for enthusiasm should never be lost sight of. A plain statement of truthful fact, presented from its most attractive angle may be modesty, but further than that, modesty in advertising has little to commend itself in direct selling to the public.

No one man has written the "Book of Advertising" and no one man ever will.

MANAGERS PUT ON PRIZE "WEEKS"

Warnerites in Crabill's District Of M.A. Silver Zone Compete in Annual Awards; Entries Detailed

Each year, Ralph Crabill, Jamestown Warner Theatres district manager in the M. A. Silver New York Zone sponsors a "week" contest, setting it for one of the tough summer or early spring weeks. Its purpose is to develop merchandising, reveal the importance of managers' standing and local contacts, to emphasize position of Warner houses in each situation. Judging is partly based on amount of extra revenue produced through purely promoted attractions.

The "week" may take any form the manager wishes, such as Anniversary, Circus, or the manager's own week. Judges are composed of committee from the Buffalo film exchanges who this year voted Doc Westfall, Haven, Olean, first; Les Sparks, Diana, Medina, second, and Wally Allen, Keeney, Elmira, third.

F. M. (Doc) Westfall, manager, Haven Theatre, Olean, tied in his "week" to the fifth anniversary of the Warner Theatres' advent in Olean, this being celebrated prominently by a wire of congratulations from Lieut. Gov. Bray and a proclamation from the Mayor of Olean. Unsolicited and highly held also was an editorial in one of the leading papers praising Westfall.

And of course what helped Doc win first prize was a series of six special stage activities promoted at no cost to the theatre.

City lighting on most prominent streets were decorated with bunting and plaques, a first time, says Doc that city allowed commercial advertising in this fashion. Soundtruck, airplane bally and auto parade on opening day were other street features.

Two stage contests that clicked were the radio audition and beauty slants with prizes promoted from cooperating merchants. The newspaper campaign was also commendable.

Hundreds of dollars of radio time also were promoted, many of the best windows in town obtained and a fine birthday cake contributed by baker and exhibited in lobby. The latter display was entirely in keeping with the rest of the campaign and to be noted was unusual treatment of sidewalk (see photo) painted with white duco and lettered "anniversary week" in blue Japan.

Medina Mayor Calls It "Les Sparks Week"

Les Sparks of the Diana, in Medina, led off by making personal appeals to his audiences, stressing the importance of the attractions to be shown during his celebration called "Les Sparks Week." This, too, was proclaimed by the Mayor of Medina and carried by the local press.

Three full pages of publicity on the pictures to be shown were made possible through co-op ads, this angle taking a different slant as stories and cuts were carried in addition to ad displays. Prominent stores gave over their window space to plugging the week's shows.

Published in the press were copies of endorsements received from 12 leading civic and fraternal organizations as was also a page one editorial boosting Les and written by the town's leading editor.

Stage attractions in addition to radio talent finals included special kiddie shows, and among other things Sparks had florists decorate lobby daily with fresh flowers.

Joan Blondell Phones Allen For Radio "Week" Stunt

Punch stunt of the celebration put over by Wally Allen, at the Keeney, Elmira, was a phone call from Joan Blondell in Hollywood, the two-way conversation picked up by local radio station and put on air, a first-time angle, says Wally. This was followed by 15 wires from leading stars all conveying good wishes to Allen.

Co-op page of 26 ads, secured mostly by house staff also proved unusual feature, this and publicity on above stunts gathering more than the usual attention from the local press. The Hollywood wires were put on display in lobby.

Wally also secured results by explaining to the public the purpose of the week, the prizes, etc., and asked for their support especially during the period of the contest.

Newhall Calls His Local "Boost" Week

Up in Wellsville, Allen B. Newhall put on a general civic boost-week to tie in with the celebration for the Babcock Theatre, leading off by also having his Mayor and members of the village board proclaim the period a "Boost Wellsville Week," with everyone participating. Proclamation was blown up and carried out front (see photo). Newspapers ran stories and photos and all merchants ran boost copy in ads.

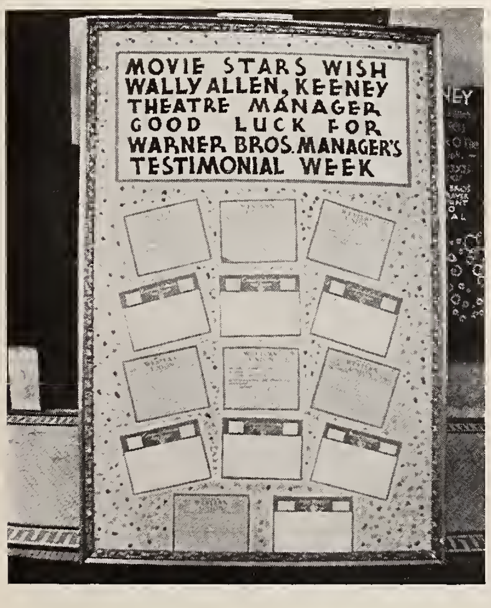
Different stunts included Boy Scout benefit for funds to send local scout to national jamboree. Local troop sold tickets for this. Newhall also put on special chocolate-milk matinee with local dairy contributing the confection distributed in lobby by girls dressed in white.

Phillips "Barrel of Fun" Tops Week's Activities

At the Family, Batavia, Henry Phillips called it a "Manager's Testimonial Week," with scores of local merchants taking space in co-op page to congratulate him. Photo of manager was run at top, with center page given over to week's program.

This included such slants as "Barrel of fun" giveaways, radio auditions, kiddie ghost show and free ice-cream at Saturday matinee. Phillips also secured his share of newspaper publicity and advertised his week via screen, heralds, posters, etc.

For his "week," Billings Booth, of the Winter Garden, Jamestown, put on a "Color Week," the details of which were run in a previous issue.



MOVIE STARS WISH WALLY ALLEN, KEENEY THEATRE MANAGER GOOD LUCK FOR WARNER BROS. MANAGER'S TESTIMONIAL WEEK that the week beginning July 1935 be designed as BOOST WELLSVILLE WEEK."

"The Babcock Theatre in cooperation with the Merchants of Wellsville is making an effort to boost Wellsville as the trading center of Allegany county.

I urge each and every resident to take advantage of the many values in Shopping and entertainment offered by these merchants during "BOOST WELLSVILLE Week."

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 285.—The following questions have been submitted by projectionists to the sound engineers who have been preparing the new Bluebook School questions: (A) "I have a small sound system a.c., 46-B, using No. 264 tubes in a modified amplifier, Western Electric. One day recently I found that in order to get my filament reading up to 300 milliamperes it was only necessary to turn the filament control rheostat knob half as much as was formerly necessary. Before I had to turn it all the way when the batteries were low. Now when the batteries are low enough to require charge, the control knob is only in mid-position when the reading is right. I questioned the engineer about this. He told me he had found a fuse that was offering abnormal resistance, and had replaced it with a new one. I have my dubious doubts about this answer and would like to have it verified by the engineers, or some explanation offered."—Baltimore.

(B) "In certain types of equipment there is what is called a 'mechanical damper.' As I understand the matter, such devices serve to smooth out small, sudden changes of the film as it passes through the soundhead, but that they have no effect whatsoever upon film speed as a whole. Is my understanding correct, and will the engineers explain, in not too complicated terms, just in what way, or by what means such dampers smooth out the small inequalities in film speed?"—Colorado.

"Students" are invited, of course, to send in their answers to these questions.

Answer to Question No. 279

Bluebook School Question No. 279 was: (A) What precaution should be observed in handling and storing photocells? (B) Do you feel it to be a part of the projectionists' duty to maintain proper volume level in the theatre auditorium? (C) What do you regard as the best arrangement to insure correct volume level at all times?

The engineers say:

(A) "A photocell can be ruined by misuse. It is important that the photocell be not exposed to any very brilliant light source—especially sunlight—regardless of whether or not the polarizing voltage be applied. It is good practice to keep spare photocells in the shipping carton, thus insuring non-exposure to light of any kind."

(B) "This is something it is difficult for projectionists to control. Sound level in auditoriums should at all times be such as will enable audiences to hear comfortably, without conscious effort to catch words. On the other hand too-loud sound is very annoying to theatre patrons, therefore the most logical means for controlling sound level is by remote volume control located in the auditorium, with a competent, careful man constantly on watch to determine when changes are required."

(C) Answered by projectionists only.

The following answered acceptably: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; A. F. Sprafke; C. Oldham; R. J. Arntson; H. Edwards; B. De Vietti; T. Van Vaulkenburg; T. F. Bochert; P. and L. Felt; J. E. Wyman; C. E. Moore; M. and J. DeVoy; D. L. Sinklow; Nic Granby; B. and S. True; M. U. Sampson; R. L. Richards; D. Howard and J. Jurts; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; P. F. Michaelson; D. U. Granger; A. L. Dodson and F. L. Benton; F. L. Savlor and G. N. Guidotti; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; J. Hendershot; D. L. Billings; R. Danby and T. Patterson; F. H. Klar, L. Klar and T. H. Morton; T. T. Golley; D. N. Davis; O. Allbright; I. B. Ackers; M. and S. T. Gibson; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; G. Basson; Q. O. Samuels; B. H. Danders; L. Thomas and D. D. Davis; K. Y. Spencer and D. L. Lode; L. Grant and R. Geddings; B. R. and M. Walker; P. Ott; M. F. Fallon; J. T. Grader; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleig; G. Howard and T. K. Aldridge; F. T. Benton; D. H. and L. B. Palmer; S. Spooner and B. H. Thaller; R. and K. Wells; L. R. O'Leary; G. Lathrope, N. L. Timlinson and H. Sanderson; G. R. Squires; B. T. Canter; D. N. Baxter and J. Leggett; H. R. Baldwin; D. L. Bryant and D. L. Monehan; D. U. Danielson; P. T. Daniels; J. R. Mathews; N. Prane and B. R. Mills; D. McGuire.

(A) S. Evans and C. Rau say, "Do not permit interior of cell to be exposed to strong light. In storage, pack to exclude all light and store in a cool, dry place. Handle photocells gently lest some element be jarred loose. When in operation keep contacts and window scrupulously clean, and casing door closed to exclude possible a.c. light, which might induce a hum."

D. Danielson says, "Store in dry, cool, place, well protected from light and possible breakage. In handling, protect from light as much as possible. Unless I am in error, the later cells are not so liable to damage by high temperatures as were the older ones."

A. F. Sprafke says, "Keep photocells wrapped in soft, black cotton or felt, enclosed in a light-proof carton. Store in a cabinet where they will not be subject to vibration. When handling, care must be taken that they be not either jarred or exposed to light. They are very sensitive and will not stand abuse, even the use of considerable pressure to force them into sockets."

(B) R. and K. Wells say: "We feel that in this matter the engineers who have done so many wonderful things have fallen down pretty flat. We are unable to accept statements that no feasible method has been found for placing projectionists into direct touch with the thing they are producing. If they have accomplished so many other marvels, they certainly could pull this much needed stunt, too, if they really wished or were permitted to. We hold that were the producers, for example, to demand that it be done (as they should do), some means for doing it, and doing it very well, too, would quickly appear. Also, we hold it to be unfair to the point of indecency to compel men to place product before audiences without knowing much of anything about it or its excellence. Producers who must and do depend upon projectionists to place their productions before the public at their full value, should in common fairness demand a rectification of this absurd state of affairs."

(C) J. E. Wyman says, "I believe the best arrangement would be to have a volume control panel established at some point in the auditorium, with a competent man constantly on duty and held responsible for proper maintenance of volume level. This would at least fix responsibility."

To Section C, G. E. Doe replies, "The best method at present available is the observer and a signal system. But it almost invariably fails more or less (usually more), for the reason that there too often is either no observer or he is busy entirely too much of the time attending to other duties or things that are not duties. My own view is that before sound reproduction is what it should be, some method must be devised to enable the projectionist to read the sound level from a visible meter, the needle of which must be held at one place continuously.

"It may be a difficult task to devise such a system, but just the same it seems no more so than many other tasks our engineers have carried through to successful conclusion. It seems to me our I. A. Executive Board might well study this problem and lay the matter before the equipment organizations."

Lily Pons, Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone were here this week from the Coast on the Santa Fe Chief. Between trains they posed for photographers and gave interviews to the press. Joan and Franchot refused to pose for the picture lads at the station but later were cornered at the Blackstone and gave the boys a break. They revealed that the trip to New York was for radio appearances and possibly matrimony.

Herb Ellisburg and Roy Topper, with their wives, celebrated their wedding anniversaries the other evening by "painting the town red." Among the places visited on the nocturnal jaunt were the Palmer House, Congress Hotel, College Inn and Ricketts Cafe. After that the boys failed to remember where they went. Herb was celebrating his seventh anniversary and Roy was paying tribute to his sixth year of wedded happiness.

John Immerman, son of Walter Immerman, is well on the road to good health after a serious illness.

Cecelia Colwell, one of the charming cashiers at the Chicago theatre, was married last week. Her husband is a member of the local fire department.

O. F. Spahr, for many years general manager of Enterprise Optical Company here, has just returned from a three weeks vacation trip to New England.

Abe Kaufman, buyer for B & K, is ill and confined to his home.

Film Row was saddened this week by the death of Elsie Hayes, 23, secretary to Henri Elman. Miss Hayes had undergone a minor operation last week but complications developed and she died on Saturday. Funeral services were held Tuesday.

ECKHARDT IN SALES FOR FOX 25 YEARS

Twenty-five years ago Clyde W. Eckhardt, Chicago district manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, started as a salesman for Fox Films in Pittsburgh.

Since that day Mr. Eckhardt has been in charge of the Pittsburgh exchange for Fox, was assistant to Winfield Sheehan when the latter was general manager of the company and was equally as active in the opening of most all the foreign offices of the company.

In 1926 Mr. Eckhardt took over the Chicago exchange and helped organize the Film Board of Trade there. He is still there in charge of the exchange and is the only Fox exchange head dealing directly with New York instead of through a district manager.

Mr. Eckhardt has worked for five general sales manager: Herman Robbins, Dick White, Sidney Meyers, James R. Grainger and John D. Clark.

When he first went to Chicago, in 1917, Mr. Eckhardt hired Ernest Grobe, salesman; Louise Schroeder, film inspectress, and Bob Tobin. They are still on his staff.

Last week the Essaness theatres gave away twelve bicycles at special children's matinees in their houses. Starting this week they will give away rare postage stamps every Saturday to all children. A new foreign stamp will be awarded to the members each week in the Stamp Clubs now being formed.

The night of the Louis-Baer fight a new low in box-office receipts for this territory was set, according to reports. Not since the blizzard of 1933 has such a slump been recorded. Now the houses are playing the fight pictures to make up for the loss.

With no large awards in the offing, "Bank Night" interest has quieted down for a few days, giving the local exhibitors a chance to spend their time exploiting their pictures instead of the giveaway.

James Grainger, Universal sales chief, was in town this week, stopping off between trains on his way to the Coast.

Sam Morris spent half a night waiting at the Aragon ballroom for Norman Kassel. Later he found out he was a week in advance of the engagement. Did he burn?

A cablegram from S. M. Spiegel, Jr., says that he is in London giving the British studios the onceover.

Two Southside theatres which play to Negro trade planned to change the name of their houses to the Joe Louis theatre until they found out that it would cost more than $5,000 to make the change. With the Champion moving out to that part of town permanently they figured it would be a good publicity stunt.

The "Better Pictures—NOW"—campaign inaugurated by the local Warner houses got off to a good start last Sunday and grosses for the first few days showed the effect of the heavy advertising campaigns used by the various managers and their staffs.

"Balabanter" is the name of a new house organ which the Balaban & Katz Employees Club now is issuing. Under the expert guidance of Jimmie Savage, S. Goldfinger and Eddie Solomon the mimeographed sheet is proving of great interest to the circuit's employees. The slogan for the paper is "News Of Youse To Amuse."

Back from Bermuda, Virginia Prendergast reports a grand trip and lots of excitement.

If this cool weather increases, one of the first guys to relinquish his place in the ticket line for the World's Series games will be none other than—you guessed it—

SMASH HIT

JUDGE Super X Negative solely on the basis of its reception by users. Placed on the market only a few months ago, it is already being employed in the majority of feature productions, as well as for various purposes of a special nature. Either of its striking advantages... greater speed, generally improved photographic quality... would have justified this swift, widespread adoption. Verdict of the industry: a smash hit. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

EASTMAN SUPER X

PANCHROMATIC NEGATIVE

Gladys Swarthout

A symmetry of form and figure that puts the fabled Venus de Milo to shame . . . just one in the rare combination of graces and talents that will make Miss Swarthout the delight of jaded screen audiences ...when they see her in her first fascinating screen role in Paramount's "Rose of the Rancho," in which she is co-starred with John Boles.

HERALD WEEK-ENDS

PRESS comments concerning the Martin Quigley 20th Anniversary issue of Motion Picture Herald reveal a lively newspaper interest and most significantly that motion picture editors are finding in the pages of that issue a deal of news about coming product addressed at the screens of their communities. For instance Don Craig in the Washington Daily News found enough new product listing to supplement his prior discussions of the new season with a column of cataloguing of coming attractions.

Speaking of the issue, he says it "is one of those publications that anyone interested in the screen as a business can take off into the country for a week's reading."

That reminds us that the circulation department is reporting increasing demands from New York home offices for additional copies of The Herald on Mondays, "because they took it home to read over the week-end."

ON "GOOD TASTE"

PERSISTENT refusal or inability to understand the basic nature of the responsibility of the motion picture to the mores of the American public is to be discovered in the production forces just often enough to give alarm and concern for the maintenance of the current standards of decency in the screen output.

The other day Mr. John Hammell, who used to work at "getting the pictures by the censors" after they arrived in New York, and now in Hollywood as "the censor-on-the-lot" at one of the important studios, took his pen in hand and did a piece for a magazine on "Censorship" resulting in evidencing a notion that the job is still just to "get by."

"I believe," he writes, "that there is not a play, a book, or a work of art, that can not be made into a picture, providing the producer has good taste. There are a dozen men in Hollywood today who could make 'The Captive' and make it without giving offense—and this because they have good taste and are master craftsmen. . . ."

Lesbianism as a theme can be just dandy entertainment, we gather, if only it is done in good taste.

Why should not Mr. Hammell consider the next step, prescribing a shade of even better taste and devoting the same master-craftsmanship to the making of something else possibly more suitable for audience consideration, something perhaps that would be considered fit to talk about in respectable mixed company, including the family, friends, neighbors and a couple of strangers.

Who, one may wonder, diverted Mr. Hammell's attention about the time that struggling Paramount, without a penny to spare, made "It Ain't No Sin" and incurred such problems in "taste" that it had to be expensively made over into "Belle of the Nineties." Maybe he could not help it, but it had to be helped.

Taste good or bad has nothing to do with the problems involved. The high sheen of fine craftsmanship and excellent taste in a number of flagrantly immoral productions contributed not a little toward getting them and the screen the degree of attention that brought the storm of protest that resulted in the current production code enforcement.

Common decency does not include endeavor to get by, by "treatment" in "taste" and "master-craftsmanship" of material that has no place on today's screen.

THE POTATO CIRCUIT

WE are not warmly concerned about the matter, but it seems appropriate to suggest that cuttings of the newspaper publicity given to the free Kate Smith show at Madison Square Garden presented and broadcast by The Great Atlantic & Pacific, chain—or shall we say circuit—grocers, be placed on the desk of Mr. Marlin Pew of Editor and Publisher, for attention on his return from a world cruise.

Remarks have been made by Mr. Pew and sundry newspaper critics of the position of the editor of this page anent newspaper treatment of motion picture merchandise.

There is among the newspapers special consideration for the screen in the matter of what is called "amusement rates." The A & P, which gives away entertainment and sells potatoes, does not pay amusement rates, but it "rates" reader copy in editorial columns, and is probably quite as entitled to it as the motor vendors and the department stores.

There is, to be sure, just this difference—the papers do not discuss the A & P entertainment values by a star rating system, neither do they endeavor to pass judgment on the quality of the potatoes, the flavor of the catsup or the nuances of the broccoli.

WHILE the air is laden with discussion of the great influences, evidence and aspects of Warner's production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," let us set down a significant minor item. When Dr. Max Reinhardt went on the air Sunday night to make a modest little talk about his work he had the grace to say of his Hollywood experience: "Never in my years in the theatre was I given such wonderful help, understanding and encouragement." That for the carping chorus of the condescenders.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

'Battle of Century'

It's a "battle of a century" in the courtroom in the old post office building in St. Louis where the Government is attempting to convict on conspiracy charges Warner, Paramount and RKO and Harry M. Warner, Herman Starr, Gradwell L. Sears, George J. Schaefer and Ned E. Depinet, all indicted on charges of alleged violation of the antitrust laws.

The defense scored an important point when Judge George H. Moore denied the Government's request to admit in evidence details of a "peace conference" in Washington last May when Sol A. Rosenblatt appeared as mediator.

The trial is proceeding slowly, and up to Wednesday Harry C. Arthur, head of Fanchon & Marco, was the only witness. The court adjourned Thursday to Monday.

A resume of the trial in the last week is on page 13 and verbatim testimony starts on page 14.

The Chance Business

Not in years has motion picture exhibition practice been so enmeshed in court complications as it is involved today over the many and different types of chance games being employed as box office stimulants, so-called.

Bank Night, Screeno, Lucky, Sweepstakes and such were the targets of authorities or others in the courts of Buffalo, Iowa, North Dakota, New England, New York, Philadelphia, Rochester and elsewhere. But neither did these prosecutions nor retaliatory activities of non-using competitors appear to have any effect on their spread across the country.

The subject, one of national importance to theatre owners, replacing the double bill as the subject of exhibition discussion everywhere, is covered in its latest developments on page 29.

Kent Observes

Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, returning from Europe on the Berengaria this week, said that film costs in England today are as high as they are in Hollywood. "Producers have gone crazy on negatives," he added. "The British industry will have to go through all of the diseases, such as overbuilding, through which we have gone here and have not yet solved," he said. Mr. Kent predicted, however, that eventually it will be a "good" industry.

Twentieth Century-Fox foreign sales are between 50 and 60 per cent ahead of last year, Mr. Kent declared. Shirley Temple is the biggest box-office draw in Europe and since the death of Will Rogers, the foreign patrons, particularly in England, are displaying greater interest in Rogers' pictures than ever before, he said.

Mr. Kent said: "Promotion in England is in full swing and money is very easy to get. Because it is it would be well to proceed carefully. So far as we are concerned, we are moving on plans for the Elisabeth Bergner pictures, but nothing beyond that at this time."

Mr. Kent is undetermined about his immediate plans. If Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board, does not come east in the next few days it is likely Mr. Kent will go to the Coast.

'Dream' Premiere

Amid pomp and circumstance never matched by a Hollywood premiere, Warner Bros. presented $1,500,000 worth of Shakespeare on the screen Wednesday night at the Broadway opening of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Simultaneous premieres in other capitals of the world made of it all an international event. The story of the opening is on page 31.

An analysis by Joseph O'Sullivan of the Mendelssohn "Dream" music, and of the arrangement by Erich Korngold, appears on pages 32 and 33.

U.S. to Rule Music?

Federal control of the organized music industry to which exhibitors pay $1,000,000 a year for the right to reproduce compositions and which exacts another huge fee from the motion picture producers is seen as inevitable by film company attorneys now concerned with copyrights and music matters.

Such regulation, it is pointed out, would be similar to that imposed on the broadcasting industry. At the same time it is anticipated that the Government's antitrust suit pending against the music societies will fail because the Government is attempting to have the court determine a basis for fees, which is outside the court's jurisdiction.

The Government is determined that the trial be resumed November 4, as scheduled, and meanwhile the situation becomes more involved, as related in the story starting on page 17.

Says Mr. Korda

One British picture like "The Private Life of Henry VIII" "makes more at the box office in one week than five British program pictures in five weeks," said Alexander Korda on his return to England from Hollywood, in answer to a question based upon John Maxwell's recent warning that money put into pictures on the strength of such exceptional productions as "Henry VIII" was in danger of being lost.

Another current topic of discussion in Wardour Street is the length of programs. The agreement between the organized exhibitors and the distributors that no program run longer than three hours and 15 minutes depends for enforcement upon a threat of a distributor boycott. The story is on page 46.

Canton Freeze-out

When the Canton board of film censorship barred Paramount from that Chinese city because the company had shut off film supply from a Cantonese theatre which had deducted the city censor fee from rentals, the board started something.

Now eight large American distributors have countered with a "stop-service" order on all Canton first-run theatres which make such deductions from rentals. A petition for a final ruling has been placed before the Nanking central committee of censorship.

Canton's city censor fee is in contravention of the national law guaranteeing freedom from local censor fees in all cases where the fees have been paid to the central board at Nanking. The article, by J. P. Koehler, Shanghai correspondent of the HERALD, is on page 34.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Lichtman Resigns

Al Lichtman, president of United Artists Corporation, resigned Wednesday and the board of directors accepted his resignation. Mr. Lichtman was elected to the presidency June 26th, succeeding Joseph M. Schenck, who with Darryl F. Zanuck and their Twentieth Century Productions joined Fox Film Corporation.

At the same time John Hay ("Jock") Whitney and David O. Selznick announced organization of a new company to distribute through United Artists. The story is on page 27.

Trial Balloons

Individuals in the motion picture industry who participated in "Blue Eagle" code and other hearings before the National Recovery Administration were queried this week by George L. Berry, coordinator for industrial cooperation, as to their willingness to join in "round table discussions" on President Roosevelt's new program for business recovery.

More than 6,000 letters are being sent to those who were engaged in the hearings and negotiations.

Under the President's order appointing him coordinator, Mr. Berry said in the letter that he was instructed to hold "conferences of representatives of industry, labor and consumers for consideration of the best means of accelerating industrial recovery, eliminating unemployment and maintaining business and labor standards."

Both management and labor, he said, "will be invited to Washington for the purpose of conferring on the advisability of developing a permanent structure contemplating the furtherance of prosperity and stability in our industrial life."

Canceled

The Theatre Alliance, which Elmer Rice and his associates were to launch in New York this fall on a repertory basis, has been canceled for at least a full season, it has been announced.

The decision to defer the production schedule was made on advice of the Alliance's financial advisory board, which is headed by Arthur S. Kleeman, head of the investment securities firm of that name at 57 William Street, Manhattan. The board, however, which includes men prominent in financial and industrial circles, will stage an intensive campaign for funds to insure the success of the Alliance a year from now.

"It was felt unwise to take any chance of jeopardizing the permanence or high standard of artistic production of the Theatre Alliance by opening its repertory theatre until such time as an endowment fund sufficient to guarantee security of employment to its actors, directors and other workers is available," the announcement stated.

The sum sought for by the theatre was $75,000, and it had been hoped that $100,000 would be raised. Only a small part of the minimum figure was realized, it is understood. Headquarters for the new financial drive will be maintained at Mr. Kleeman's office, and the play-reading staff and other members of the personnel will be retained.

Playdate Laws

Test actions in courts on the constitutionality of state laws prohibiting designated playdates are expected soon.

In Ohio, hearing by the United States circuit court of appeals of RKO's case against the state is expected to be set within the next four weeks, said Ben Schwartz, Cleveland attorney appointed by Attorney General John E. Bricker to defend the state.

In Wisconsin, the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan probably will aid the attorney general's office in the hearing later this month in district court in Milwaukee. Large distributors brought the test case.

Exhibitors Meet

Exhibitor leaders gathered in Omaha early this week for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska and Iowa at the Loyal Hotel. Ed Kuykendall, president of the national organization, was one of the principal speakers on the schedule.

Subjects that were listed for discussion included the Pettengill block booking bill, insurance, Diesel engines for electric power, designated playdates and percentage bookings.

At Detroit, however, Allied of Michigan has called off the annual convention set for October 21-23 because several national leaders cannot attend and because other conventions have crowded hotels on those days to capacity. Another date, probably the latter part of November, will be set soon.

The first annual meeting of the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan will be held at the Plankinton hotel in Milwaukee October 22-23 with George Fischer in charge.

Poole Resigns

Arthur B. Poole has resigned as a director of the Pathe Film Corporation. He will continue to act as treasurer of the company. Arthur Sewall, 2nd., has also resigned from the governing body. Charles L. Stillman of "The March of Time" and William C. Stettinius, Baltimore banker, have been elected to fill the vacancies.

An appeal from the court order approving the recent reorganization of the company, which was scheduled for hearing last week, has been postponed to October 17th to permit the substitution of a new plaintiff in the action for Murray Hulbert, the appellant, who died recently. Mr. Hulbert's attorneys have said that the executor of his estate will be named as the new plaintiff in the action to veto the reorganization.

Permission to examine Frank F. Kolbe, president, and other officers of Pathe before trial of an action charging them with dissipation of the company's assets, was granted to Pat Casey, plaintiff, by state supreme court justice Carew in New York this week.

National Theatre

The first meeting of the incorporators of the American National Theatre and Academy, which received federal sponsorship through the Wagner-McLaughlin bill, was held late last week in the New York offices of John Hay Whitney and an executive committee to guide the organization was appointed. Named to the committee were A. Conger Goodyear, Mrs. Amory Hare Hutchinson, Edward M. M. Warburg, Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Miss Mary Stewart French, J. Howard Reber and Mr. Whitney.

Frank Gillmore, president of Actors Equity Association, spoke enthusiastically of the opportunity presented for a national rejuvenation of the theatre.

Trial Reopened

New trial of the $31,090 Augusta Paper suit against Lincoln Theatre Corporation will be heard in the Lincoln, Neb., district court after introduction of new evidence opened the loophole for the defense. Both parties previously asked for a directed verdict, but the plaintiff introduced new material relative to assignment of stock, and was granted a judgment of $11,754.50.

Trial was brought on basis of breach of contract between Lincoln Theatre Corporation and the plaintiff's husband, Nick Paper, who said he was to retire from picture business in Lincoln, be cleared of rental and expense, and to be paid 25 per cent of net profits from the Sun and Capitol theatres.

CLASHING FORCES DIG IN FOR LONG ST. LOUIS FIGHT

Government, Exhibitors, Distributors at Odds as Million Dollar Legal Talent Argues at Antitrust Action There

With the industry's "battle of a century" in progress in the United States district court in St. Louis, where independent exhibitors, affiliated circuits and distributors are involved in an imbroglio with the United States Government as the prosecutor and Judge George H. Moore the umpire, the spotlight this week was focused on the age-old controversy of the rights of the small exhibitor with respect to the large circuits.

The Government's prosecution on indictments for alleged violation of the Sherman antitrust laws against Warner, Paramount and RKO and their corporate affiliates and five individual officers and sales executives is about to enter its third week. Indications point to a long-drawn-out trial requiring seven and probably eight weeks to reach the jury's decision which, it is conceded, will have far-reaching consequences to exhibitor-distributor relations.

A million dollars' worth of legal talent is pitted against the Government for the defense, headed by that old fire-eating "war horse," former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, with Frederick H. Wood, who had much to do with the Shechter case which overthrew the Blue Eagle, and an imposing array of film company home office attorneys and local counsel.

Conspiracy Charged

Answering to the indictments and on trial on charges of conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws are Harry M. Warner, president of Warner; Herman Starr, Warner, vice-president and treasurer; Gradwell L. Sears, Warner sales executive; George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager of Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation, as well as Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Vitaphone corporation, First National Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.; Paramount Distributing Corporation and RKO Distributing Corporation.

The Government charges those defendants conspired to deprive Fanchon & Marco's Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central Theatres in St. Louis of first-run product, under pressure from Warner.

Conference Evidence Ruled Out

Entering its second week on Tuesday, the trial took a turn favorable to the defense when Judge Moore ruled out of evidence details of a conference in the office of Homer S. Cummings, United States attorney general, in Washington, last May 17, which Russell Hardy, assistant attorney general in charge of the Government's case, contended indicated a confession of guilt by the defendants. The defense scored its first important point by this ruling.

Arguments were carried over from Saturday on the admission of a conversation which took place at the Washington conference, in which Sol A. Rosenblatt, former NRA division administrator in charge of the motion picture code, called in Robert W. Perkins, counsel for Warner, and told him of a settlement made in connection with the St. Louis theatre situation. Judge Moore dismissed the jury during the heated exchange between Mr. Hardy and defense counsel.

CROSS-EXAMINING OF ARTHUR BRINGS CLASH

Sharp clashes of opposing counsel tell the story of Wednesday's session of the St. Louis antitrust law trial. Harry C. Arthur, first Government witness, still on the stand, was subjected to rigid cross-examination by Frederick H. Wood, one of the Warner attorneys, but not without frequent objections by Russell Hardy, conducting the prosecution's case.

At both morning and afternoon sessions Federal Judge George H. Moore several times admonished the attorneys to conduct themselves according to court proprieties.

There will be no sessions Friday and Saturday.

Harry C. Arthur, head of the Fanchon & Marco interests, whose testimony regarding the Washington meeting caused the flareup, was still on the stand Wednesday as the Government's first witness.

The opening statements of counsel and the early testimony brought the issues into the open. The Government has taken the position that it initiated the case to protect the Fanchon & Marco interests, the bondholders' protective committee for the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central and the companies leasing those properties, from an illegal combination to prevent the theatres from operating because of the desire of Warner Bros. to get the houses back on their own terms.

Say "Wrong Parties Prosecuted"

The defense of the Warner companies and their executives on trial, as outlined by former Senator Reed in a four-hour address that took part of Friday's and Saturday's sessions, is that there was a conspiracy in restraint of trade in St. Louis, but the Government "is prosecuting the wrong parties." Harry Koplar, St. Louis theatre operator, was the center of Mr. Reed's heavy barrage, and the chief of defense counsel assailed him as being back of every move made to harass and destroy Warner's $4,000,000 investment in St. Louis.

Mr. Reed also charged Mr. Koplar is the power behind the federal indictments, although not among the 47 witnesses called for the prosecution. RKO and Mr. Depinet, its president, contend they very properly refused to commit their product in St. Louis to any concern in which Harry Koplar was interested because of unfavorable business dealings with him and Mr. Arthur's interests in the past. Paramount's position is that it had a legal right to choose its customers for film and did so for sound business reasons.

Defense Wins Point When Judge Rules Out of Evidence Details of Conference in Cummings' Office

Defense counsel has raised the question whether the charge, even if true, comes under the Sherman antitrust act, contending the sale of pictures for St. Louis is purely an intrastate transaction and subject only to the laws of Missouri. Also, on four different occasions the court has been asked to declare a mistrial because of what defense counsel considered improper remarks by Prosecutor Hardy.

The case is shaping up as a difficult one for the jury to follow. Early in the proceedings the court instructed the jury to apply certain of the evidence to only some of the defendants individually or the corporations they represent.

Hurling the charge that Mr. Hardy in his two-hour opening address made remarks designed to prejudice and inflame the passion of the jury, former Senator Reed, for Warner, and William R. Gentry, for Paramount, moved for a mistrial, but were overruled by Judge Moore. Numerous objections during the course of the opening statements by counsel for the opposing sides likewise made no impression on the court.

Also denied was a motion by George Leisure, RKO attorney, to dismiss the RKO and Depinet indictments on the ground the opening statement by Mr. Hardy showed no case against those defendants, as a matter of law.

Coercion Charged

Opening the Government's case by reading the indictments handed down last January 11 against 10 companies and six individuals, Mr. Hardy charged the defendants tried to coerce, intimidate and compel Fanchon & Marco to sell the three theatres involved to Warner. Mr. Hardy said Warner, Paramount and RKO represented more than 50 per cent of the entire film business and that their combined assets totaled more than $660,000,000. Warner, he continued, has assets of $168,000,000 and 581 more "of the finest theatres in the country." Mr. Reed's frequent objections to this type of statement were overruled.

Referring to the Paramount companies indicted, Mr. Hardy described them as part of "a gigantic corporate cluster," and declared that with 1,200 theatres Paramount has more theatres than any other company in the world. He gave Paramount's assets as $405,000,000.

Mr. Hardy again attempted to give the jury a picture of corporate bigness in analyzing RKO's status. Again there were objections, but Mr. Hardy succeeded in placing in the record that RKO has assets of $92,000,000 or more and about 100 theatres. Mr. Hardy at the same time described the indicted individuals' affiliation with the companies.

The prosecutor traced the history of the St. Louis theatre field, declaring the evidence would show Warner wanted to take the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central away from Allen Snyder and F & M, who had won in the bidding for the leases after Warner and Paramount, which had been operating the houses, had dropped them. To accomplish this purpose, said Mr. Hardy, Warner obtained the assistance of RKO and Paramount. When the prosecutor used the word "legerdemain" in connection with various theatre deals, Mr. Reed objected and was sustained.

Summarizing, Mr. Hardy declared that last year the three major defendants produced 48 per cent of all first class pictures, which are indispensable, he said, for the operation of first-run theatres. He added film rentals amounted to $220,000,000 annually and that 72,000,000 feet of film is shipped each year.

Several times during Mr. Hardy's address objections were made on the ground the Government was trying to prejudice the jury because of the great wealth of the companies. Judge Moore stopped this type of objection with the remark: "It is no crime to be poor and no crime to be rich."

Says U. S. Has "Taken Sides"

Former Senator Reed opened his remarks to the jury by saying, "This is a battle between two groups of motion picture men and the Government has seen fit to side with one group. From the evidence we will prove that the ones in conspiracy are those represented by the Government."

He related that the franchise for product with the Skouras Super Theatres was a loan terminated at the time Skouras lost the three theatres involved and that when Skouras was unable to pay rent or film rentals Paramount and Warner invested more than $500,000 to keep the theatres running. He said the three leases were made at an annual rental of $500,000, and that when the operation began to lose money in 1929, Paramount and Warner poured money into the concern until they could do no more. Film rentals were not paid, he continued, and when the franchises were canceled Skouras Super Theatres owed the two distributors more than $500,000.

Resuming his presentation Thursday morning, Mr. Reed charged Mr. Koplar with scheming to control the entire theatre situation in St. Louis as "a conspiracy to destroy Warners and their associates," and that in self-defense Warner was compelled to open the Shubert Rialto as an outlet for its product. Because of the dual feature situation, Warner entered into deals with RKO and Paramount for product, related Mr. Reed, later taking the Orpheum to use films that were not shown at the other house.

Mr. Gentry next made his opening address in behalf of Paramount and Mr. Schaefer, saying that the company, which owned half interest in Skouras Super Theatres, put in $250,000 to keep the company in existence. He said that Skouras owed Paramount $200,000 in unpaid film rentals and that in 1932 the franchise with Skouras was canceled.

"Warners were good customers of ours," said Mr. Gentry. "They paid their bills, and knowing the situation of the other interests as we did from experience we exercised our right to choose our customers."

Jacob M. Lashly, representing RKO and Mr. Depinet, centered his opening speech around Koplar and the company's dealings with him. He said the evidence will show RKO had considerable trouble with Mr. Koplar.

Says U. S. Tried to Make Peace

A flareup came when defense counsel objected to admission of testimony on what had taken place at the "peace conference" in Washington among Mr. Arthur, Attorney General Cummings, Mr. Hardy, Mr. Rosenblatt, Mr. Perkins and others. Mr. Hardy charged the defendants sought in the conference to compromise the St. Louis battle, and asked leave to introduce this fact into evidence. Mr. Reed denied the defendants took the lead at the conference, charging the Government itself undertook to make peace. "Because Rosenblatt worked out a plan for industrial peace we were willing to go along," said the chief counsel. "Mr. Arthur wanted a lot of money before he would accept the plan."

DOUBLE BILLING, LOW PRICES, STAGE SHOW

Bitter at the St. Louis operations of Fanchon & Marco, former Senator James A. Reed, chief of defense counsel, related that they opened the St. Louis theatre with double features plus a stage show, at prices which were as low as some of the neighborhood houses.

"The effect was disastrous," continued Mr. Reed. "A price war was precipitated which not only jeopardized the first-run theatres of Fanchon & Marco but threatened to put the little fellows in the neighborhood houses out of business. . . .

"Entrenched in the monopoly formed with Harry Koplar's help, Fanchon & Marco have pursued similar tactics in every theatre which they have operated here."

Mr. Arthur, on the stand, related various conversations he had had with film company executives regarding the St. Louis theatre situation. He was later cross-examined by Mr. Wood for the defense.

Subpoenas an Issue

Judge Moore on Monday took under advisement a motion to quash subpoenas duces tecum sought by the defense to compel Mr. Arthur and former Judge James T. Blair and Edmond Koeln, receivers for the Theatre Realty Company, owner of the Fox theatre property, to produce certain books and records, film contracts and correspondence. Attorneys for the three contended the subpoenas would cause annoyance and trouble to the receivers and that the evidence involved was immaterial, and the subpoenas too indefinite.

Mr. Wood replied the records sought would enable the defense to check against Mr. Arthur's testimony, and that the defence also desired to question Mr. Arthur concerning matters contained in the records. Mr. Arthur later was ordered by the court to produce leases and booking records.

Thomas on Trial Later

Abel Cary Thomas, Warner legal head and secretary, who was given a severance, will be placed on trial later, attorneys explained. Although called as a witness and defendant, Mr. Thomas is too ill to attend the trial.

Members of the jury, all from in and around St. Louis, are: Ed Panhorst, feed store operator; W. H. Stubblefield, real estate and loan agent; Bruce Bergman, dairyman; H. C. Applegate, retired traveling salesman; Erwin Weber, garage man; George W. Fullerton, Negro, waiter at the Tork hotel, St. Louis; Charles L. Krause, retired; George Atwood, bank employee; Charles E. Calif, trunk salesman; Otto G. Dietz, general contractor; Joseph G. Eddy, real estate agent, and Emil H. Lauter, coal salesman. Alternate jurors are Harry Mannist, millinery manufacturers' agent, and Oliver Brueseke, circulation manager of a monthly druggists' publication.

Harry Arthur First Witness

Harry C. Arthur, Jr., 41 years old, president and general manager of Fanchon & Marco, was the first witness called to the stand by the Government on Friday afternoon.

The direct examination was by Russell Hardy, but at various times different attorneys for the defendants interposed and asked questions of Mr. Arthur.

Mr. Hardy immediately began to lay the ground work of the conspiracy charge by a series of questions to Mr. Arthur. His examination was as follows:

Q. Mr. Arthur, will you tell the jury what your theatre connections are in the City of St. Louis?

How Leases Were Obtained

A. I am interested in the Ambassador, Missouri and Fox theatres which are operating and also the St. Louis and New Grand Central, which are closed at present. The Fanchon & Marco Theatre Company of Missouri, Inc., holds a lease for the operation of the St. Louis and owns 100 per cent of the stock of the Eden Theatre Company, which operates the Fox theatre for the present receivers of that property. The St. Louis Ambassador Theatres, Inc., holds the leases on the Ambassador and New Grand Central and the St. Louis Missouri Theatre, Inc., leases the Missouri theatre. These leases on the Ambassador and New Grand Central theatres are from the Ambassador Building Company and that for the Missouri from the Missouri Building Corporation.

Q. What is your connection with the companies holding the leases?

A. I am president of the companies leasing the theatres.

Q. How did the companies obtain those leases?

A. They got the leases by making a proposition to the Bondholders' Committee that reorganized the properties to take the leases.

Q. Do you know Allen L. Snyder?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have a business connection with Mr. Snyder on January 11, 1935 and prior thereto?

A. Yes. He was the treasurer, a director and stockholder of these companies.

Q. When did you first become acquainted with Mr. Snyder?

A. I originally joined up with Snyder in January, 1934.

Q. Do you know Harry Warner?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is he?

A. He is president of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and an officer of affiliated companies. (Mr. Arthur added that he had known Warner for a number of years.)

Q. Do you know George M. Schaefer?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is he?

Paramount Counsel Object

A. He is vice-president and general manager of the Paramount Distributing Company. (At this point there was an objection by counsel for Paramount in regard to Arthur testifying concerning Schaefer's duties.)

Q. Do you know Abel Cary Thomas?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is he?

A. He is secretary and general counsel for Warner Bros.

Q. How long have you known Mr. Thomas?

A. I don't know him very well.

He was also asked if he knew Gradwell Sears, Herman Starr and Ned E. Depinet, other individual defendants in the case, and replied that he did, giving the official position of each.

Q. Where are motion pictures produced in this country?

A. They are produced in Hollywood and New York. I would say about 85 per cent are made in Hollywood.

Q. Where are motion pictures developed?

A. In New York and Los Angeles.

Q. Does the same proportion of 85 per cent in Hollywood hold true?

A. No. I would say that a greater proportion are developed in New York City. That is, Hollywood does not develop 85 per cent of the pictures. The negatives are shipped across country to New York and developed there.

At this point the attorneys for the defendants protested that Mr. Arthur had not properly qualified as an expert on the production and development of motion pictures and how they are distributed throughout the country. Judge Moore overruled the objection.

Q. How is the motion pictures distribution handled?

A. There are from 26 to 30 exchanges throughout the country to which the films are sent for distribution to the various exhibitors.

Q. Where is the distribution center for the St. Louis territory?

A. Right here in St. Louis. St. Louis is the exchange center for this territory.

Q. What are these exchange centers?

A. The film exchanges are the sales agency for the distributing and producing companies.

Names Eight Producing Companies

Q. How many producing companies are there in the country?

A. There are eight.

Q. What are they?

A. Paramount, RKO, Warner Brothers-First National, MGM, Fox, United Artists, Columbia and Universal.

Q. You said eight, but apparently there are nine?

A. Well, Warner Brothers and First National are the same. That is how I get only eight.

Q. How many first class motion pictures are produced in this country?

A. I would say that 360 feature pictures is the average per year.

At this point F. H. Wood of counsel for Warner Brothers cut in to ask on what he based this information.

A. On statistics compiled by the Film Daily Year Book. Immediately George Leisure of counsel for RKO was on his feet with an objection that this information was hearsay. Judge Moore ruled that for the time being Arthur could not testify concerning what was printed in the Film Daily Year Book.

Checkmated in that direction Hardy veered his questioning slightly.

Q. How many feature pictures are produced yearly, basing your opinion on your own knowledge and buying experience?

MILLION DOLLARS CALLED LEGAL BILL

One million dollars is the estimated legal bill of the defense in the St. Louis antitrust trial. Warner is bearing the heaviest expense, with RKO second and the cost to Paramount the least of the three.

Reports from St. Louis are that the retainer of former Senator James A. Reed, chief of the defense legal battery, is $100,000, and that of Frederick H. Wood and Bruce Bromley, of the New York law firm of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine and Wood is the same.

Warner Bros. is represented by eleven attorneys, RKO by seven and Paramount by five. Russell Hardy, chief prosecutor, has the assistance of four attorneys from the attorney general's office in Washington as well as District Attorney Harry C. Blanton of St. Louis.

Mr. Arthur stuck to his 360 estimate, saying that he based the figure on the announcement made by the producers at the beginning of the year. He added that the producers never complete the number of pictures they announced.

Q. How many would you say they do produce?

A. I would say that 80 per cent of their announced totals are actually made.

This statement brought a vigorous objection from defendant counsel, who contended that the whole subject matter was immaterial and irrelevant and was being dragged into the case merely to prejudice the minds of the jurors by causing them to believe that the producers of pictures made promises they did not keep. It was their further contention that the announcements themselves were the best evidence.

Hardy Drops Subject

It then developed that a paper from which Mr. Arthur was attempting to testify was prepared from figures taken from the Film Daily Year Book and therefore not admissible. Judge Moore agreed that he had already ruled that Arthur couldn't present that evidence. Hardy then dropped the subject.

Q. State whether you had any conversation with Abel Cary Thomas in March, 1934.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have conversations with Gradwell Sears and Herman Starr?

A. Yes.

Q. Where.

A. In New York City. The same day I talked to Thomas.

Q. Where did you hold this conversation?

A. With Sears in his office.

Q. Who else was present?

A. Jack Partington and myself, Starr, Sears and Abel Cary Thomas.

William R. Gentry of counsel for Paramount then arose and objected to this line of testimony being used against the Paramount companies and officials. He said that the Government had not yet proven that a conspiracy actually existed, and proceeded to outline the manner in which a conspiracy must be proven, etc. Judge Moore sustained the objection.

Q. Did you have any conversations with Ned E. Depinet?

A. Yes, sir. One on the telephone and one at his office at RKO.

Another Legal Argument

Immediately George Leisure and Jacob M. Lashly of counsel for RKO objected and were sustained by Judge Moore. Mr. Hardy then informed the court that he desired to be heard on the matter and the jury was excluded from the room while the attorneys argued the various legal points involved.

Mr. Hardy said that he appreciated that the general law on the subject was that the Government must show an early contact of the defendants, but not necessarily of all the defendants. He argued that the Government must be given some leeway in such cases.

Judge Moore: "I am satisfied that the courts must allow a lot of latitude." He then announced he would be pleased to hear from the defendant counsel. Mr. Gentry then proceeded to outline the laws governing conspiracy as he understands them.

Judge Moore then said: "I am satisfied, Mr. Hardy, that you have not yet laid the proper foundation for conspiracy."

"Well, if the court will give me about five minutes I will bring all of the defendants in," Mr. Hardy declared.

"I don't care whether it takes five minutes or five hours," replied Judge Moore. "I feel that you have not laid the proper foundation."

Examination Resumed

It was finally agreed that Mr. Hardy should be permitted to examine Mr. Arthur about the conversations but that the jury would be instructed not to use such conversations against any of the individual defendants who were not present nor against companies who were not represented.

The jury was then called back, and Mr. Hardy proceeded with the examination.

A. Relate your conversations with Thomas, Sears and Starr.

A. It was on March 6, 1934, at 3 p. m. I went into Gradwell Sears' office and saw two trade papers on his desk, announcing that there was a theatre war in St. Louis. I said "Grad what's this all about. I don't know of any war." (Counsel for defense objected to Mr. Arthur testifying about what a trade paper said. Objection was sustained.)

Q. State what was said at the conversation when the three gentlemen you named were present.

Says "Sacrifice" Was Mentioned

A. Starr said that Fanchon & Marco would have to be sacrificed because you have upset our plans in St. Louis, and we will have to destroy you. We will have to destroy any other lessees who attempt to operate those theatres (meaning the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central for Warner properties.) We will have to destroy the Bondholders' Committees and the bondholders as well as you. We have nothing personal against Fanchon & Marco. We like you and feel for you. But we are going to teach the Bondholders' Committees a lesson. Warner Brothers have an equity in those theatres and they are going to protect it, even if they have to destroy you or several other lessees. I am sorry but you are the lambs that will have to be slaughtered.

I then asked Thomas and Starr whether they couldn't suggest some way for us to get out without being destroyed. I said that we didn't know Warner Brothers were one of the bidders, and asked they suggest some way for us to get out. Thomas said that he was sorry, but that the only way we could save ourselves was to walk out on our investment in St. Louis. I replied that we couldn't do that, as Snyder might sue us. Thomas answered that would be just too bad.

I then offered to turn our deal for the theatres over to Warners, but Thomas replied: "We don't want your deal. Your deal is a sucker deal. Probably some other suckers will make similar deals. But we want those theatres on our own terms, and we intend to get them on that basis. There was then some discussion about the Bondholders Committees. Thomas said that the Bondholders Committee were trying to feather their own nests, that Tom Dysart, chairman of the committee, was trying to perpetuate himself in a job, and that the committee's attorney was going to do the same thing as counsel for the committees.

I told them I was willing to turn over one of our other theatres, the Fox or the St. Louis, for the exhibition of their pictures in St. Louis, but Thomas answered: "We don't want any other theatres." The Skouras Brothers were also mentioned in some way. Thomas said: "We are going to break those Greeks, too. Skouras about a year ago came to Abe Warner with a proposition to take over those theatres. He told Abe that he would go into the deal as the agent for Warner Brothers and that he could have any portion of the deal he wanted. Later, after the deal for the houses had been closed, he came back and said we could have any part of it up to 50 per cent. Before that he led us to believe we could have any part up to 100 per cent. We told him to keep his deal, that he had gone into partnership with you fellows and double-crossed us. Skouras had been with us up to last November. He is in with you now and we are going to break him."

Koplar Also Mentioned

Then Koplar's name was mentioned (Harry Koplar is a veteran St. Louis motion picture exhibitor. United States Senator James A. Reed of counsel for Warner Brothers told the jury the defense will prove that Koplar is the person actually behind the present prosecution as part of his well laid plans to harass and destroy Warners' $4,000,000 investment in St. Louis). Thomas and Starr became very vigorous in their denunciation of Koplar. They both said he was a little rat and they would break him, too.

Q. What else did they call him?

Mr. Arthur pleaded that there were women present in the courtroom. (One was the official court reporter), but Judge Moore told him he would have to answer. He replied that they used a name for Koplar that indicated he was of canine extraction. (Thomas used the expression used.)

Q. What else was said in that conversation?

A. I told them that their plans would destroy us. Thomas replied: "We are sorry for you. We don't know that breaking you will help us. But it is best for you to walk out of the St. Louis picture." Starr said: "We are going to take over any 'can' in St. Louis and will run our pictures as well as those of other producers." "What are they, Paramount and RKO?" I asked, and Starr said yes. He added that they would double bill and run for a dime if necessary, and the entire resources of Warner Brothers would be put behind this fight.

Q. Did he use the word fight?

A. Yes, and he said that the opening gun would be fired with the opening of the Shubert theatre with "Wonder Bar" as the attraction.

Q. What else was said?

A. Thomas said they would oppose the Bondholders Committee's every move, as they wanted to impress upon the Bondholders Committee and everyone else that Warner Brothers were the only ones who could successfully operate those theatres.

Q. What did Partington say?

A. He asked that they call off the war and said that we were willing to do anything they wanted us to do.

Q. What about your conversation with Sears?

A. Earlier on the same date I called on Gradwell Sears with Partington. I picked up from his desk the March 6, 1934, issues of The Film Daily and the Motion Picture Daily. I said: "Grad, what is this all about?"

Q. What did you mean by that? A story in the paper?

Counsel for the defense then stated they objected to using what some reporter wrote or the Daily itself. This objection was overruled.

A. The headline in the Film Daily read: "Warners and Fancho & Marco in St. Louis Theatre War." Then he read the entire article to the jury. The article was admitted in evidence.

Conversation in Starr's Office

A. Sears said: "I am sorry, we have nothing against you, but you have to be the lambs that have to be slaughtered." He was the first one to make that statement, but each of the others repeated it later in the day. Sears then picked up his telephone and asked to be connected with Herman Starr. He said: "Those two gentlemen in which you are most interested are here; will you see them?" Starr said that he would see us. We went into Starr's office. He was alone. He told one of his girls to have Mr. Thomas come in.

Q. What did you do then?

A. After the conversations I have told about, Partington and I went back to my office.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Depinet?

A. Then I called on Depinet a few days after that.

Leisure objected that the proper ground work had not been laid for presenting this conversation into evidence. It was finally admitted with the proviso that it could be used against no other defendants.

Q. What was said at that meeting?

A. I said: "Ned, Warner Brothers told me they are going to take RKO pictures in St. Louis. (After much wrangling of counsel Arthur fixed the time of this conversation as about ten days or two weeks after he had talked to the Warner officials.) Is that true?" He said "Yes. I had to commit them. You have been in this racket a long time and understand. They put the pressure on me and I had to go along. Their company is our biggest customer. All I can say is that I am sorry, but I had to do it. However, it may not ever come to pass."

As Hardy directed his questions, Leisure objected to the leading of the witness.

Q. Then you called on Paramount?

A. Yes, I called on George Schaefer.

Q. When was that?

A. Approximately the same time that I talked to Depinet.

Leisure asked if it was the same date.

A. I am pretty sure I saw Schaefer first.

Q. What was said at that meeting?

A. I asked Schaefer about the statement of Warner Brothers they had Paramount for St. Louis. He said: "They are threatening to upset our plans in Detroit. We are carrying Detroit for $14,000,000 and can't afford taking a chance of injuring that investment. I had to give them the pictures." I told him that this would ruin us. He said: "You can get your money back. I will speak to Harry Warner about it. If you want me to I will talk to him for you. But if you don't hear from me you will know that I didn't have any success."

At this point an adjournment was taken by the court until 10 a. m. on Saturday.

Arthur Resumes on Saturday

When Arthur resumed his testimony shortly after 10 a. m. Saturday, Mr. Hardy took up the thread of the testimony where it ended the night before, saying:

Q. Mr. Arthur, at the close of the session yesterday you were relating a conversation with Mr. George Schaefer. Will you continue that?

A. George told me that he would see Harry Warner for me. He said he thought he could get my money back for me. I said, "George, I was told that I couldn't get my money back. They told me all that I could do was walk out on my deal." He said that he would talk to Harry Warner. I told him that I didn't know whether their deal was legal or not, that it seemed to me that it was not. He said, "Then the excuse will be we did it for good business."

Q. What else was said?

A. Maybe one or two other things transpired.

Q. He said he didn't think it was you they were after?

Counsel for the defense said the objection that Mr. Hardy was leading the witness. Judge Moore cautioned Hardy to avoid that.

Q. What else was said?

A. I don't recollect much more than was said, that is, about which I can testify to at this time.

Line of Questioning Changes

Q. How long have you been in the motion picture business?

A. Almost twenty years.

Q. Where?

A. In Chicago, Seattle, California, New York, St. Louis and New England.

Q. Tell us what your experience in the motion picture business has been.

A. I was a film salesman for six large companies, a branch manager for Fox, Metro-Goldwyn, First National and state rights exchanges.

Q. When?

A. From 1916 to 1920 and from 1920 to 1925 I was general manager for the West Coast Theatres. From 1925 to 1927 was president and general manager, Pacific Northwest Theatres Company.

Q. Where were their theatres?

A. In Montana, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, California, Arizona and Utah.

Q. You were general manager for Fox West Coast in California and Arizona and the Pacific Northwest Theatre in Montana and the other states named?

A. Yes, sir. Then the companies merged and

FEDERAL CONTROL SEEN FOR MUSIC INDUSTRY

Prediction of Film Attorneys Is Predicated on Failure of Antitrust Suit, Resuming November 4; Dissension Cited

Believe Courts and Congress Must Decide Whether American Society Can Collect Fees on Music Used in Films

The manifold ramifications of the music taxes and fees by which the organized music industry has exacted millions of dollars from exhibitors and motion picture producers is seen by film company attorneys as eventually becoming the subject of broad federal regulation similar to that imposed on the radio industry by the Federal Communications Commission.

That view is advanced in anticipation that the Government's antitrust suit against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the Music Publishers Protective Association, which is scheduled to be resumed in November, will fail and that the music societies will not be broken up.

At the same time there exists the definite probability that ASCAP will be wrecked by internal dissension arising from the demand of the important Warner music subsidiaries for a larger share of the society's revenue. In New York music circles it is generally expected that Warner will withdraw and that other companies holding copyrights, including European publishers, will follow suit.

That the Government's antitrust action against the music societies will proceed November 4 as scheduled became known with word from Washington this week that the U. S. Department of Justice is determined not to postpone the suit for any reason. It may, however, be delayed until after the November 5 elections.

Because the hearing begun last June before Judge Henry W. Goddard in the U. S. district court in New York was proceeding slowly and the trial promised to be protracted, counsel for the opposing sides agreed to a summer postponement in order to permit the filing of stipulations which would be accepted without testimony.

Agreement Expected

The Government has submitted its desired stipulations to ASCAP and the MPPA, and while the defendants are objecting to many of them on the ground they are conclusions and interpretations rather than statements of fact and are preparing to file counter-stipulations, it is expected an agreement will be reached before the trial is reopened.

Attorneys for the motion picture companies who are close to the situation base their belief that the Government's suit will be unsuccessful on the statement in court of Andrew Bennett, special assistant U. S. attorney general, who said at the outset of the trial that the only question involved was whether the ASCAP was guilty of illegal price-fixing and that the Government was not seeking dissolution of ASCAP, but was merely asking for a permanent injunction to restrain the Society from continuing its fee-fixing practices.

This, it is held, would be contrary to the Constitution because the courts cannot assume the functions of lawmakers and only Congress has the right to meddle with prices.

Mr. Bennett, who was in charge of the Government's prosecution of the antitrust action last summer, will not be identified with the case when the trial is resumed, it was reported.

Collection Right Big Issue

The matter of rates is secondary to the larger question whether ASCAP can collect for the performance of music in pictures or whether the music is part of the dramatic or literary rights vested in a production, according to copyright attorneys for the film companies. They contend that the music rights cannot be separated from the other rights in a film where, for instance, the song is acted as well as sung.

ASCAP itself is not entirely certain that it can collect for performances of such music, the attorneys say, and general opinion among them is that the question sooner or later will have to be decided by the courts and probably defined by Congress.

To some extent the Duffy bill, which has passed the Senate and now awaits action in the January session of the House, solves some of the problems involved for those using musical compositions, but it does not go far enough or as far as the larger users of music, such as the film producers, would like.

In any event, the matter of copyrighted music and fees is headed for federal legislation, the attorneys insist, and Congress will eventually place the music industry under Government regulation, either by creating a new commission empowered to fix the rates, among other things, or by subjecting it to the control of the Federal Trade Commission or the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In the meantime it became known that exhibitor and producer interests have been urging Congress to adopt machinery as outlined, primarily to obtain some control of the fees.

Producers' Stake Large

The producers, who have a large stake in the matter, are active through their permanent committee on copyrights headed by E. P. Kilroe of the Fox legal department and comprising also these attorneys; James Polk, Paramount; David O. Decker, MGM; Gordon Youngman, RKO; Benjamin Pepper, United Artists; Adolph Schimel, Universal, and Morris Ebenstein, Warner. Also serving on the committee are Gabriel L. Hess, general attorney of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and Edward L. Sargoy of the MPPDA legal department.

Mr. Kilroe predicts that unless ASCAP adopts the proposed unit or per-use system of distribution of its funds, the society will be broken up by grave dissension brought by Warner demands for a change in the collecting system and an increase in the fees collected from the broadcasters, which would give Warner a larger share of the royalties. ASCAP collections last year amounted to approximately $4,000,000, of which about $1,000,000 came from exhibitors, $2,000,000 from radio stations and the balance from dance halls, night clubs and other sources.

"The collections have become so lucrative that the members are warring among themselves for a distribution of the spoils," commented Mr. Kilroe. "The writers cannot agree and the publishers cannot agree; they all want more."

Commenting on the prediction of music publishing interests that when the Government's suit again gets under way sufficient evidence will be educed to persuade the Department of Justice to launch an investigation of the score charge payments by exhibitors to the distributors, film attorneys predicted that if the producers are forced to eliminate the score charge they will add it to the film rentals.

Currently the producers' committee is attempting to get from the Music Publishers' Protective Association the assurance that in the event ASCAP is dissolved by Government action or broken up by member dissension the theatres will have the performing rights after December 31, when many circuit contracts with ASCAP expire.

Seek Blanket License

The producers are seeking a blanket license covering performing as well as recording rights, and asked the publishers to name their terms. However, the MPPA prefers that the producers submit an offer, and in the meantime the negotiations are getting nowhere.

John G. Paine, agent and trustee of the MPPA, has said he would be willing that there be a single agency to clear both the performing and recording rights at one time, and in event that were effected that agency would be ASCAP and the MPPA would step out of the picture.

Under the plan, the producers would pay a single fee for both rights, instead of the present system whereby a fee is paid for the recording of music and another for reproducing it in the theatres. The exhibitor, however, would still be assessed for the performances because the producers would pass on the increased expense in the form of higher rentals.

Representative exhibitor opinion, nevertheless, is supporting the producers' plan, and recently Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, hit "at the cry that the theatres would deprive composers of music of all compensation for their work."

Would Buy Entire Rights

Speaking officially for the MPTOA membership, Mr. Kuykendall said:

"What we want, and what we would have if ASCAP were destroyed, is to buy the entire exhibition rights for the motion pictures we use, including the recorded music, for what they are worth. When we pay the license fee or film rental for a picture, we want it to include the public performing rights for the whole picture, including recorded music, as they are actually inseparable anyway.

"We want no extras levied separately for what we have already paid a good price, such as music tax, score charge and other fees."

While the Duffy bill holds many advantages

for the exhibitor, at the same time it is said by attorneys that it would work a hardship because compositions now in the public domain in this country but copyrighted in Europe would under the bill's international copyright provisions also be copyrighted in this country, and the exhibitor would have to pay for their use.

ASCAP is fighting passage of the Duffy measure when it comes up in Congress early next year and Nathan Burkan, ASCAP counsel, recently on the West Coast appointed a committee of composers and writers to oppose the bill. It is anticipated that hearings on the bill will get under way in January before the House patents committee, which is headed by Congressman William I. Sirovich of New York.

U. S. Might Be Without Case

In event Warner and others withdraw from ASCAP, the Government will find itself without a case when the antitrust suit is resumed next month because in that event ASCAP will by no means be a monopoly, as it is now charged. Warner controls four music publishing subsidiaries which in turn control 25 or 30 per cent of the ASCAP catalogue.

While Warner contends that its royalties are not sufficient on the basis of the number of times its published compositions are performed, ASCAP relies on figures to show that of the $1,500,000 paid to the publishers last year, the Warner companies received some $300,000, which is a dividend of three per cent on the Warner investment of $9,000,000 in its music subsidiaries.

Herman Starr, vice-president and treasurer of Warner, said he would remain a member of the ASCAP board to which he was recently elected until January 1 in an effort to iron out the differences. On that date ASCAP plans to put into effect a new method of rating for members, and Warner is urging payment of royalties on the basis of the frequency of the performance of compositions.

Exhibitor contracts with ASCAP did not expire September 30, as reported, and the Society said this week that all agreements renew themselves automatically, subject to cancellation on 30 days' notice. However, it was pointed out that an exhibitor must have a license since the producers' pacts with the MPPA makes such provision.

A reversal of ASCAP's policy on resistance to state legislative attacks is indicated in the Society's abandonment of plans for testing the constitutionality of the new licensing laws in Georgia, Wisconsin, Louisiana and Mississippi. None of the states have made any move to collect the new license fees, and it is understood that ASCAP will offer only passive resistance until the states attempt to collect the fees from its representatives.

Seek New Acquisitions

Meanwhile the film companies are scrambling for new music company acquisitions, both to increase their music lists and to assure themselves added revenue from this source.

Its deal to purchase the Crawford Music Corporation falling through, Paramount last week formed a new subsidiary of its own, Popular Melodies, Inc., with Philip Kornheiser in charge. The new firm will be operated in conjunction with Famous Music Corporation, Paramount's major music publishing subsidiary, and Lew Diamond, president of Famous, will have supervision over both.

Testimony Completed in Chicago Title—Wm. Fox Suit

The taking of testimony in the Chicago Title & Trust Company's action to recover $1,000,000 from William Fox for alleged defaults in the guaranteed redemption of Roxy theatre stock was concluded last Saturday in New York before Referee Sol M. Stroock. The referee will make his report on the case to the court at a later date.

The hearings on the action were begun last spring and resumed a month ago after an adjournment for the summer. By agreement of the attorneys all the hearings were conducted in private.

Otterson Home For Theatre Deals

John E. Otterson, president of Paramount Pictures, has arrived in New York from Hollywood and is scheduled to resume conferences at the home-office preparatory to setting new operating arrangements for the Hoblitzelle-Interstate, Kunsky-Trendle and A. H. Blank circuits.

Mr. Otterson has been at the Paramount studios for the past two weeks, and while there had preliminary discussions with Karl Hoblitzelle on a new Interstate agreement to replace that which expired September 28.

Of the Paramount theatre operating agreements which expired on that date only the three deals mentioned above remain to be settled, having been extended another month to permit further negotiation.

A report by Special Master John E. Joyce disapproving a plan for the settlement of the Samuel and Nathan Goldstein claim of $127,500 against Paramount has been set aside in an order signed recently by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe.

In his ruling Judge Coxe said, "It seems to me that this is a fair settlement of a confused situation and I think it should be approved. The settlement not only disposes of the Goldstein and G. & B. Theatres' claim, but also preserves the Rivoli Theatre at Chicopee, Mass., as part of the Paramount system. I am advised that unless this settlement is consummated the Rivoli property will be foreclosed with a strong possibility that there will be a deficiency which will form the basis for a claim against the Paramount estate. The trustee and the new Paramount company are strongly in favor of the settlement and as it will end the pending trial I believe it should be approved."

Changes in Paramount personnel at the Hollywood studios place two more former Fox department heads in executive positions. Walter Quinlan, former Fox electrical department head, was signed as electrical superintendent, and O. C. Stratton was placed in charge of properties. Quinlan replaces Earl Miller, George Bagnall, treasurer, and John Zinn, casting director, were both Fox executives.

Reports persisted that Winfield Sheehan definitely will join the Paramount studio at the conclusion of his European vacation.

Ernst Lubitsch, studio head, has rearranged the work of assistants in his department, making Fred Leahy and Charles Sprague his chief lieutenants. Hereafter Mr. Sprague will supervise layouts and plans for all productions, and Mr. Leahy will have charge of execution of production plans. Both will be solely responsible to Mr. Lubitsch.

Fox Theatres May Ask More Time on 'Met' Option Vote

Fox Theatres Corporation may ask for additional time in which to make a decision on the exercise of its option to purchase 50 per cent of the stock of the reorganized Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, creditors and stockholders have been advised.

Fox Theatres has until November 2 to decide whether it will acquire the fifty per cent stock interest by payment to the United Artists Theatre Circuit of $275,000 or dispose of its option to the latter company for $150,000.

However, Federal Judge Martin T. Manton reserved decision Tuesday on an order to show cause why the receiver for Fox Theatres should not be directed to exercise an option to acquire 50 per cent of the stock of Metropolitan Playhouses prior to November 2. Beginning Wednesday the court will hear testimony on the financial status of Fox Theatres to determine its solvency or insolvency prior to ruling on the order.

The Fox Theatres' option permits it to acquire 50 per cent of the stock of Metropolitan Playhouses for the payment to United Artists Theatre Circuit of $275,000 or to relinquish its option and receive $150,000 from the theatre company. The exercise of the option would leave Joseph M. Schenck with 40 per cent of the new Fox Metropolitan stock and Keith-Albee-Orpheum with 10 per cent. Failure to exercise it would give Schenck 80 per cent and K-A-O 20 per cent.

A preponderance of creditor sentiment expressed at Tuesday's hearing was opposed to the exercise of the option by Fox Theatres. Attorneys for U. A. Theatre Circuit and K-A-O also appeared to oppose any extension beyond November 2 of the time in which the Fox Theatres' receiver may exercise the option, declaring that this was a part of their contract with the receiver and could not be disturbed by the court.

Federal Judge Julian W. Mack on Tuesday extended to October 18 the time in which the receiver for Fox Metropolitan may file exceptions to a $4,500,000 claim filed against it by Fox Theatres. The claim has been settled by an agreement made a part of the Fox Metropolitan reorganization plan which grants Fox Theatres the option to purchase for $275,000 one-half of the stock of reorganized Fox Metropolitan or to forego the purchase and receive $150,000.

It is also expected that Judge Mack will also very shortly set a date for the hearing of applications for more than $800,000 for fees and expenses in the Fox Metropolitan reorganization. Judge Mack has had jurisdiction over the Fox Metropolitan rehabilitation since the inception of its receivership early in 1932.

Meanwhile, the results of the lengthy investigation by the Sabath Congressional Committee of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., and its reorganization will be laid before United States Attorney Francis H. Adams shortly, according to Murray W. Garsson, director of the investigation. Mr. Garsson expects that the committee's disclosures may lead to indictments.

THE LAST WORD IN SPECTACULAR PRODUCTION GORGEOUSLY PRODUCED AND ACTED WITH INTENSELY HUMAN STORY.

Easily one of the Ten Best of this or any other season. It makes all other spectacular productions fade in comparison. The mob scenes are magnificently handled. The scenes in the arena of Pompeii are stupendous and awe-inspiring. And for the climactic smash, the eruption of Vesuvius followed by earthquakes with thousands of people fleeing from the arena has never been equalled for sheer magnitude and spectacular smash and perfect detail. It's a dramatic triumph of impressive magnitude. Combine this with an emotional and very human story consummately acted, and you have a screen spectacle that will have the entire community talking. Preston Foster plays the role of a blacksmith who becomes a gladiator in the arena, and when his wife and baby die from an accident, he is embittered and resolves to attain vast wealth and power. He adopts a boy, son of one of his arena victims, and his entire life is centered about the young man as he grows up. The climax in the arena as the son espouses the cause of the slaves and the father tries to save him from death, followed immediately by the eruption of Vesuvius, is an unforgettable screen experience that will linger in memory. Everything about the production is superb—musical score, photography, directing, acting.

AL LICHTMAN RESIGNS PRESIDENCY OF UNITED ARTISTS; BOARD ACCEPTS

Directors Act on Resignation at Wednesday Session; Came Into Presidency June 26 When Schenck and Zanuck Joined Fox

Al Lichtman, president of United Artists Corporation, resigned Wednesday afternoon at a meeting of the board of directors in Hollywood. The resignation was accepted.

A joint statement issued by the board after the session stated:

"At today's meeting of the board of directors of the United Artists Corporation the resignation of Al Lichtman was unanimtusly accepted."

Mr. Lichtman, previously vice-president in charge of distribution, had been elected to the presidency on June 26, succeeding Joseph M. Schenck, who with Darryl F. Zanuck and their Twentieth Century Films joined Fox Films.

New Producing Group

Coincidental with Mr. Lichtman's dispute with co-owner Samuel Goldwyn came word from Hollywood that one of the important United Artists producers, in the person of David O. Selznick, had surrounded himself corporately and otherwise with some impressive financial support, forming Selznick International Pictures, Inc., with John Hay (Technicolor and Pioneer Pictures) Whitney, C. V. Whitney, chairman of the board of Pan-American Airways; Robert Lehman, of the noted New York banking firm of Lehman Brothers; Dr. A. H. Giannini, chairman of the executive committee of the Bank of America, and himself a strong financial backer of producers; Myron Selznick and Lloyd Wright, Los Angeles attorney.

Conferences between Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Lichtman, it is understood, last week reached a stage where Mr. Lichtman protested that his rights under his new five-year contract were being trespassed. At the United Artists sales convention last June the official announcements said Mr. Lichtman would be in complete charge of distribution, including sales, advertising and exploitation, with the Pickford-Chaplin-Goldwyn-Fairbanks-Korda owner-members relinquishing the right they had held since the company's inception to approve film contracts.

It is further understood that last week Mr. Goldwyn expressed dissatisfaction with the sales results on his "Dark Angel" and his "Barbary Coast" and refused to accept further of Mr. Lichtman's contract approvals, the rift then following when Mr. Lichtman stood on his rights and the two clashed.

Mr. Goldwyn was contending that United Artists and not he personally was the motivating factor in the dispute. The producer in the past always has demanded as high rentals as any obtained for United Artists releases, with the exception of Charlie Chaplin's productions, insisting, furthermore, on a comparative ratio between the Cantor and Chaplin pictures.

West Coast Called Factor

Mr. Lichtman's sphere of activity in the corporation is said to have been restricted by the constant demand that important sales matters be referred to the west coast for approval, and Mr. Lichtman felt this infringed his prerogatives is the way the United Artists head is represented as feeling.

Reports that Murray Silverstone, European manager for United Artists, or that James Mulvey, for years eastern representative for Mr. Goldwyn, will succeed to the presidency were not widely credited on the West Coast.

Nathan Burkan, attorney for Charlie Chaplin, a member-owner of United Artists, arrived in Hollywood Tuesday night, and Mary Pickford, another member-owner, arrived Wednesday to attend the meeting of the board.

Mr. Lichtman has spent no time at the United Artists studio since his reported verbal clash with Mr. Goldwyn, it is reported authoritatively. It is understood Mr. Lichtman has received offers from other companies and reports again tie him in with a special post at Twentieth Century-Fox, although Sidney R. Kent, president of that company, commented only: "There is nothing to it."

Started as Usher

One of the pioneer figures in the industry, Mr. Lichtman first was an usher, then a vaudeville actor. He became associated with Exhibitors Advertising Corporation and was eventually the New York manager for that concern. He was general manager for Monopol Film Company, and later became first sales manager for Famous Players Company.

He also was general manager of distribution for Artcraft, selling the pictures of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Elsie Ferguson and other such stars. The merger of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation made him general manager of distribution for the combined organization, and he also filled the same position with Universal. Mr. Lichtman joined United Artists nine years ago as a field representative, later becoming general sales manager and, last June, president.

David Selznick, John Hay Whitney, Lehman and Giannini in New Producing Company with United Artists Release

Selznick Heads New Company

Announcement from Hollywood of the incorporation of Selznick International Pictures, Inc., as a new motion picture producing organization, reached New York at about the same hour on Wednesday afternoon as the board of directors of United Artists was in session on the coast on the Lichtman matter.

Mr. Selznick is president and executive producer, John Hay (Jock) Whitney, who releases his own Pioneer Pictures (Becky Sharp) through RKO, is chairman of the board, the members of which include both of the aforementioned and C. V. Whitney, Mr. Lehman, Dr. Giannini, Myron Selznick and Mr. Wright.

The executive committee, apparently vested with charge of operations, is comprised of David Selznick, Jock Whitney and Dr. Giannini.

Said the announcement: "Principally interested in the new company, no stock in which will be offered to the public, are John Hay Whitney, C. V. Whitney, Charles S. Payson, Robert Lehman, Myron Selznick, David O. Selznick and other prominent eastern interests."

The new corporation has taken over all of the assets and contracts of the comparatively recently formed David O. Selznick Productions, Inc., including its releasing contract with United Artists.

Second To Be in Color

The first picture of Selznick International will be "Little Lord Fauntleroy," starring Freddie Bartholomew, production starting November 15. United Artists released the original silent version of "Fauntleroy," co-owner Mary Pickford having produced and starred in it some 14 years ago.

Productions in Mr. Whitney's Technicolor will form a large part of the new organization's program, and the first Technicolor subject will go before the cameras immediately after "Little Lord Fauntleroy." This color subject will be directed by George Cukor, who is under Selznick contract. The third production will star Ronald Colman.

Mr. Selznick's career in motion pictures began with his father, the late Lewis J. Selznick.

Wisconsin Attorney to Head A. T. & T. Inquiry

Samuel Becker, Wisconsin attorney and political aid of Governor Philip LaFollette, has been chosen by the Federal Communications Commission as assistant general counsel in charge of the Commission's inquiry into activities of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. Mr. Becker will receive $9,000 a year. John H. Bickley, also of the LaFollette camp, is chief accountant of the investigation.

5 Per Cent Admission Tax Goes Into Effect in Cuba

Film Carriers Discuss New Law At Annual Meet

Operating adjustments made necessary by enactment of the Motor Carrier's Act, which was passed at the last session of Congress, comprised the chief business on the agenda of the National Film Carriers' Association, in their annual convention in New York.

C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, addressing the meeting recommended the establishing of local arbitration groups, which could be set up in every exchange center if distributors would adopt two contract forms, one with a voluntary arbitration provision and one without it.

All officers were re-elected at the closing session Wednesday. Officers are James P. Clark, president and treasurer; H. C. Robinson, Detroit, vice-president, and Clinton Weir, secretary.

The following were elected members of the executive committee: George Callahan, Pittsburgh; H. C. Robinson, Detroit; George Blackman, Syracuse; James P. Clark, Philadelphia, and John Vickers, North Carolina. Members of the board of managers are Thomas Gilboy, San Francisco; H. Decker, Boston; E. E. Jamison, Kansas City; C. W. Trampe, Milwaukee; Charles E. McCarthy, Minneapolis; L. M. Miller, New Orleans; F. Smith, Syracuse, and S. E. Wall, Columbus.

The meeting which was presided over by James P. Clark, president, devoted its morning session on Monday to a discussion of the new Federal law pertaining to motor carriers and to a reading of the president's report on organization activities since the formation of the association two years ago. Harold Shertz, general counsel for the association, led the discussion of the Motor Carriers' Act which places all trucking under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Ted V. Rodgers, president of the American Trucking Association, addressed the meeting on Tuesday. Mr. Rodgers said that under the new act trucking rates would have to be made public and that rate committees were now engaged in drafting schedules in all sections. The rates would not represent unreasonable increases in any instance, he said. Mr. Rodgers also stressed to the carriers the necessity for safety in the operation of their trucks.

Pointing out that only compulsory arbitration has been outlawed by Supreme Court decisions, and not arbitration as such, Mr. Pettijohn said that contracts which offer exhibitors no alternative but to submit their differences to arbitration are "compulsory." This can be avoided, he said, by offering two contract forms.

Tower Files In Bankruptcy

Tower Magazines, Inc., publishers of six monthly periodicals which have been sold through the F. W. Woolworth stores, filed a petition in bankruptcy this week in the Scranton federal court. Catherine McNelis, president, listed liabilities of $400,000 and blamed high printing costs for the bankruptcy.

Zanuck Reorganizes Production Staff

Darryl F. Zanuck has reorganized the Twentieth Century-Fox production staff in a way that eliminates supervisors and puts all pictures in charge of associate producers. William E. Goetz, as executive assistant to Mr. Zanuck, heads the new group. Another division finds Sol M. Wurtzel, after 16 years of presiding at the Western Avenue studio, retaining his position as executive producer with John Stone and Edward T. Lowe as his aides.

At the Westwood plant six producers will function. They are: Nunnally Johnson, Raymond Griffith, Kenneth Macgowan, B. G. DeSylva, Henry Duffy and Bogart Rogers.

Other production executives are: J. J. Gain, studio manager; William B. Dover, personnel manager; Julian Johnson, story editor; Fred Metzler, studio treasurer; Edward Eberle, production manager; William Darling, art director, and Lew Schreiber, casting director.

Mark Kelly, former sports editor of the Los Angeles Examiner, has also been signed by Mr. Zanuck to a long-term writing contract.

Restraint of Trade Charged Against RCA

F. A. D. Andrea, Inc., has filed a suit in the United States district court of Wilmington, Del., against the Radio Corporation of America for injunctive relief, charging restraint of trade and monopoly. It is charged that in 1919 RCA entered into conspiracy with various other companies to obtain a monopoly in radio apparatus and especially in the manufacture and sale of radio broadcasting receivers. Patent pooling is also charged in the complaint.

Manhattan Theatre Tax Assessments Raised

Manhattan theatre assessments have been raised approximately $350,000 for 1936 by the Department of Taxes and Assessments. This is a gain of approximately $200,000 for theatres in buildings owned by film companies and a gain of $150,000 for theatre buildings alone.

Brooklyn theatre assessments declined $10,000, but on theatres in office buildings the levy remains the same.

Judge Murray Hulbert in the New York federal court ordered a receiver appointed for D. W. Griffith, Inc. The application was made in connection with a suit by John A. Manning.

The third of the "Stars of Tomorrow" series, with amateurs as the cast, produced by E. Schwartz and featuring Harry Jans, was completed Friday at the West Coast studio, New York.

GTE's Plan for Reorganization Is Set for Hearing

Plans for reorganization of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., have been submitted to the chancery court in Wilmington, Del., and a hearing will be held November 13. The plan provides for issuance of 800,000 shares of capital stock to replace the existing $28,687,839 of debentures, 1,893,946 shares of common stock and 938,090 shares of preferred stock and further provides option warrants under which holders of secured notes and debentures and holders of notes and accounts payable to the company may acquire units of Twentieth Century-Fox stock.

Chase National Bank has agreed to advance $2,000,000 working capital to a new corporation, if the plan gets court sanction.

The basis of exchange follows:

To holders of secured obligations and debentures—for each $1,025.82 of indebtedness, 10 shares of capital stock of the new company, with warrants to purchase one and three-quarters units of capital stock of Twentieth Century-Fox at $60 per unit on or before Oct. 1, 1936, and at $70 per unit on or before Oct. 1, 1937.

To holders of notes and accounts payable—for each $1,024.82 of indebtedness, seven and one-half shares of capital stock of the new company, with warrants to purchase one and one-quarter units of capital stock of Twentieth Century-Fox at $60 per unit on or before Oct. 1, 1936, and at $70 on or before Oct. 1, 1937.N

To holders of preferred stock—for each 10 shares, warrants to purchase one share of capital stock of the new company on or before Oct. 1, 1937, at $12 per share.

To holders of common stock—for each 25 shares, warrants to purchase one share of capital stock of the new company on or before Oct. 1, 1937, at $12 per share.

The plan was submitted by a committee made up of Arthur Loasby, chairman; Edward C. Delafield, Harry S. Durand, Lloyd S. Gilmour, Arthur Peck, Conrad H. Poppenhusen, Seton Porter and Ray W. Stephenson. This committee, which now calls itself a reorganization committee, has been functioning since Feb. 10, 1932, as a protective committee.

General Theatres went into receivership Feb. 29, 1932, in Delaware, and Daniel O. Hastings was named receiver. On March 1, the day following, Hastings was also made ancillary receiver by the U. S. District Court for the New York Southern District.

During Hastings' administration obligations of the company totalling $54,193,627.93 at the time of the receivership have been reduced to $47,812,790.72.

Many changes also have been made in assets as a result of the reorganization of Fox Film Corp. and its subsequent merger into Twentieth Century-Fox; the receivership of Fox Theatres Corp.; the sale of Loew's, Inc., stock held by the Film Securities Corp. and the subsequent liquidation of this company. Due to suits pending against All-Continent Corp., controlled by William Fox; the suit of the Chicago Title & Trust Co. against Fox on his guarantee of Roxy Theatres Corp. stock, and suits of All-Continent and Fox against General Theatres, various contingencies are left in the proposed reorganization.

At the time of the receivership General Theatres directly controlled as subsidiaries the following: National Theatre Supply Co., International Projector Corp., Theatre, Equipment Acceptance Corp., J. E. McAuley Mfg. Co., The Strong Electric Corp., The Ashcraft Automatic Arc Co., Hall & Connolly, Inc., lamp manufacturers, and J. M. Wall Machine Co., Inc.

It secured control of Fox and Fox Theatres through purchase of Fox's Class A voting stock in both at the time of his financial difficulties, but this control in turn was largely responsible for the undoing of General Theatres when Fox Film ceased to pay dividends.

The Fox Film and Theatres stock was pledged to the Chase National Bank with other stock for loans aggregating $20,389,769.85. The bank agrees to return the collateral in addition to lending the new company $2,000,000, if the reorganization is approved by the court without changes which it cannot accept.

It is expected that copies of the plan and agreement will be available soon at the City Bank Farmers' Trust Co., the depositary named in the plan and agreement.

MAZE OF COURT ACTIONS FAILS TO HALT SPREAD OF CHANCE GAMES

Decisions Range from Prohibition by Ordinance at Buffalo to Favorable Decree by Courts in Ohio

City, State and Federal Prosecutions Underway; Distributors of Devices Fight Over Copyright Ownership

Neither court prosecutions by city, state and federal governmental agencies, nor the maze of copyright infringement legalities, combined with the retaliations of competitors and the repercussions of disgruntled patrons holding losing tickets, are stemming the countrywide spread of Bank Nights, Screeno and other such box-office stimulants, so-called, in motion picture theatre operation.

Opinion still is divided over the value of the chance game to theatre operation. For the most part exhibitors are reflecting the position that its use is more or less compulsory because of its adoption by competitors, and in many places, principally Los Angeles, this attitude has caused "wars" of retaliation against the original users.

Entangled in Courts

Not in years has the structure of motion picture exhibition been so entangled in the courts over the matter of theatre procedure and practice, being the target of city, state and federal prosecution on the grounds of lottery-law violation.

Buffalo invoked a city ordinance against chance games, but Ohio's courts decreed in their favor. A test case is due in Iowa, while North Dakota declared the plan to be legal. Newspapers reiterated their orders against the publication of chance game copy in theatre ads, the while California's Better Business Bureau likewise expressed disapproval of chance game procedure. New England officials were turning a scrutinizing eye toward the policy, while in New York city courts completely vindicated the idea. On the other hand, Philadelphia held four owners on charges of violating the lottery statute, and a test case was due in Rochester.

Further complications are developing over the fight among chance game distributors on the right to the copyright.

Buffalo Ordinance Brings Warrant

Raking up an old city ordinance prohibiting giveaways by theatres, Buffalo police served a warrant on Max Rosing, as manager of the Roosevelt, for operating "Treasure Night," in use for weeks at that theatre on the basis of a $35-per-week award.

Police cited a local lottery statute, served the warrant as the winner was in the act of receiving it on the stage, and confiscated the prize for use as evidence.

Called Stimulant in Chicago

Midwest owners, while realizing that giveaways and chance games are not a regular procedure of exhibition, nevertheless admit that were it not for these games they would be a great deal worse off than they now are.

Since the inception of Bank Night, Screeno and such devices, owners in the Midwest territory, as represented by Chicago exhibitor spokesmen, are said to have experienced the best business they have had in a long time, much better, they claim, than with dual picture policies.

Hundreds claim that they would have been compelled to close during the summer were it not for the chance games, more than 60 houses in Chicago which usually darken during the summer, remaining open this year, profitably. Both de luxe runs and subsequents are favorably inclined toward the idea, there being instances where the Bank Night award reached a high figure and grosses for that night equalled or exceeded those of a full normal week. Even standees must hold tickets, which are good for any other night when they are unable to enter the theatre on Bank Night.

However, they expect that with the arrival of the better quality product that is promised this season they will be unable to abandon the stimulant.

With none of the theatres in the tri-states—Davenport, Moline and Rock Island—using Bank Night or Screeno, a cash plan of their own devising is being employed by all houses, both circuit and independent. A $500 cash award is split up and given away every few weeks. Sometimes an automobile is awarded.

However, Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., of Denver, owners of the Bank Night copyright, are proceeding with the prosecution of owners using any plan that is similar to theirs, on the grounds of infringement.

Three suits are being filed, through Halpern, Jacobson, Merric, Nierman and Silbert, of Chicago, against the Alger Brothers Circuit in Peru, the Anderson Circuit, in Morris, and A. B. McCollon, at Hoopeston. The Algers and the McCollom theatres are using "Cash Night," the Anderson Circuit employing "Money Night."

350 Drug Stores Go "Bank Night"

The "Daily Dividend" plan used in 350 Chicago Wahlgren stores has, in order to avoid legal difficulties on copyright infringement, been substituted by Affiliated's Bank Night. The drug concern, taking the idea from local theatres, has been so successful in stimulating business that smaller concerns throughout Chicago are now inaugurating similar ideas.

Even at private parties when several hundred guests are to be entertained, Screeno is fast becoming one of the chief forms of entertainment.

The countrywide record for participating in this connection is claimed by the Mode theatre at Chicago, where Screeno is used seven nights a week.

Huffman, Too, Defends Giveaways

Harry Huffman, Denver independent circuit operator, and one of the first users of Bank Night, last week defended the plan as a box office stimulant. As in Chicago, Mr. Huffman blames a current shortage of quality product for the necessity of using chance games. He has awarded an automobile every week now for 72 weeks, and recently took to awarding homes.

Mr. Huffman denied that a giveaway "war" exists among Denver theatres, as frequently has been reported.

Court Victory for Bank Nights

Bank Night won a signal victory in Ohio's Cuyahoga County when the court of appeals, in an appeal from a Cleveland common pleas court decision denying a petition for an injunction to stop Bank Night, unanimously decreed for the defendant, M. B. Horwitz, operating the Haltnorth theatre in Cleveland.

The decree was rendered for the defendant "for the reason that the plaintiff failed to show any invasion of any property rights entitling plaintiff to injunction relief."

This decision, long awaited, is expected to have far-reaching results, as it is said to be the first decision of a higher court on the status of Bank Night.

Meyer Fischer and his Fountain theatre, Cleveland, were the plaintiffs against Mr. Haltnorth's Haltnorth. Mr. Fischer had charged that Bank Night at the Haltnorth was unfair competition.

Idea Grows in Dallas

"Bank Nights, Screeno and the like are now being used in 100 theatres in the Dallas territory, representing about 25 per cent of those operating.

Iowa Test Case Due

On October 15 the status of Bank Night in Iowa will be determined in the state supreme court where G. P. Hundling, Newton, Ohio, theatre owner, will seek for a reversal of his conviction in a lower court on the use of Bank Night. His defense is that persons seeking the prize offered at his theatre were not compelled to buy admission tickets.

Not Illegal in Dakota

Bank Night does not constitute a lottery and therefore is legal in North Dakota, the district court ruled at Jamestown, N. D., in dismissing a complaint against Ben Ashe of the State theatre.

Mr. Ashe had been arrested on charges for operating the game at his theatre, but his attorney, Sam Halpern, of Minneapolis, filed a demurrer contending the plan is legal. The decision was said to have the effect of sanctioning Bank Nights in the state, inasmuch as it climaxed a test case instituted by the Attorney General, who had ordered all owners in the state to cease and desist.

Newspapers Refuse Advertisements

Following orders issued by the United States Post Office last summer, exhibitor users of Bank Night and Screeno in Kansas City have been ordered by the Kansas City Times and Star to discontinue advertising of either plan in their newspaper ads.

Meanwhile W. R. Thomsen of Des Moines was named Bank Night sales representative in the Kansas City territory, by R. W. McEwan, distributor of the franchise.

Retaliatory War on Coast

Declaring that independent owners belonging to the Independent Theatre Owners' Association had sufficient time to curtail their chance game activities, in line with Fox West Coast's warning, that circuit last week adopted the policy throughout its system.

The ITO made a futile effort at the last moment to obtain a 10-day extension from Fox West Coast and the war of competition is on.

Bank Nights and such games have spread so alarmingly throughout Los Angeles and that territory that West Coast officials insisted they must meet the challenge.

CHANCE GAME FIGHT IN THE FIELD

Where giveaways and games were formerly confined to the outlying districts, they are now sweeping downtown Los Angeles, following court decisions favoring Bank Night in patent infringement suits in several states.

Fifteen subsequents have just been given franchises and an equal number is expected to sign before October 15, according to Ray Olmstead, local dealer for Affiliated Enterprises.

Far West Exchanges, California distributors of Movie Sweepstakes, have installed the plan in eight Warner subsequent runs. Other operators are adopting Gift Stamp Nights.

The Better Business Bureau in Los Angeles joined the fight against chance games in a radio broadcast by Robert Sample, over Stations KFI and KECA, urging the public to report any collusion between theatres running Bank Night and persons winning prizes as part of the Bureau's campaign against socalled "rackets." The hazard to patrons, the Bureau claims, lies in the failure of theatres to give away designated prizes on the night advertised and allowing it to accumulate. The Bureau has called the alleged existence of the hazard to United States District Attorney Pierson Hall and to District Attorney Buron Fitts of Los Angeles county.

The Bureau announced that "from the number of inquiries and complaints we are receiving regarding the socalled Bank Nights which are held by some theatres, it is apparent that the plan is gaining considerable momentum and therefore seems to be a growing evil. We have discussed the matter with the city attorney's office, who expressed his thought that at least some of the theatres have the scheme set up in such manner to circumvent lottery laws. In his opinion such theatres operate the scheme in such a way as to preclude any legal action."

Minneapolis Owners Interested

From Minneapolis came reports that newspapers are receiving complaints from patrons about the manner in which Bank Nights are being conducted, and that independent exhibitors both in Minneapolis and St. Paul have decided not to use Bank Night, or any other chance game, more than once a week and no gift will be in excess of $250. A chance game war impending was said to have brought on the agreement for modified use.

Bank Night Wins Boston Decision

Roy E. Heffner, of New England Bank Night Company, in Boston, explained the decision which was handed down in the suit of Affiliated Enterprises, copyright owners of Bank Night, against James E. Kennedy and Federal Distributing Corporation, distributors of Gold Mine, said: "In the United States district court at Boston, Federal Judge Hugh E. McLellan entered a final decree forever enjoining the defendants (Kennedy-Federal) from the use or sale of Gold Mine to exhibitors and from the use or sale of Bank Night or of any infringing or competing system."

Mr. Kennedy, according to Mr. Heffner, "waived all right of appeal."

With Bank Night, Screeno and giveaways spreading throughout New England, where from 60 to 75 per cent of all theatres were reported to be using the idea in one form or another, an appeal from a Fall River, Mass., court decision holding Broadway Handicap to be a lottery was taken to State Supreme Court by Philip Smith, operating a New England circuit. He declared the game will continue in operation pending the appeal.

CENSORS CLEAR FILMS, RIDDLE VAUDEVILLE

Not one elimination was ordered by the Department of Public Safety at Boston, operating under the Massachusetts Sunday censorship law, in 43 pictures placed upon the latest list of approved pictures.

At the same time, vaudeville acts did not fare so well. More than half of those inspected were either barred or modified by the board, which is headed by Commissioner Paul G. Kirk. Eliminations were ordered on eight stage acts and three others were ruled out entirely. Eight were given a clean bill.

Too, Ernest Michelfelder, of the Capitol theatre, Fall River, was adjudged guilty of promoting a lottery with a picture showing at his theatre, in a decision handed down in Second District Court by Judge Benjamin Cook. The plan in use was a horse race.

Greyhound Derby is the latest giveaway to be introduced in Boston. It is handled by the new B-G Film Company, headed by Myer Gruber and Harry Bloomberg.

Other echoes to chance games were heard throughout New England. In Portland, Maine, County Attorney Walter Tapley, Jr., said that steps will be taken to rid Cumberland County of such devices "if there is any way of driving them out." Attorney General Clyde R. Chapman was reported to hold similar views. Meanwhile Portland newspapers started refusing chance game advertisements in theatre ad copy.

Beano was growing through the section as a stimulant for church, civic and lodge functions. However, Attorney General Chapman in Maine declared the stunt to be illegal and in Massachusetts a move was started by federal officials to halt its growth.

In Worcester, Mass., Beano parties ran as high as $50,000, conducted by the American Legion. Some $100,000 worth of tickets were sold. Exhibitors were complaining that the Beano parties at church socials and elsewhere were taking customers from their box offices.

Chance Games Cutting Giveaways

Before the advent of Bank Night and such cash awards in New Orleans the average weekly cost to theatres for dishes, towels, etc., for giveaways, totaled $50,000, and now has fallen to less than $25,000 weekly.

Henry Lazarus, president of Allied Theatre Owners of Louisiana, was reported dissatisfied with the results from cash awards, declaring that the idea, which formerly crowded local theatres, has lost much of its drawing power.

Court Rules in New York

Barr and Barr, New York attorneys, reported that a complaint alleging the conduct of a lottery for the playing of Lucky was dismissed in the Seventh District Magistrates' Court in Brooklyn, New York. The house involved was the Rivoli, one of the Weinstock Circuit.

The hearing was held a few weeks ago, but decision was reserved in order to give the District Attorney's office and the Legal Bureau of the New York Police Department an opportunity to submit briefs. Barr and Barr also submitted a brief.

The district attorney's office then expressed itself through the assistant district attorney, who, in joining with the defense counsel's motion to dismiss the complaint, declared: "In the opinion of the district attorney's office, it is established that no consideration passes in the conduct of these games and they therefore do not constitute a lottery."

Immediately seven New York theatres in the Consolidated Circuit reinstated Lucky after desisting for weeks following activities of the police.

Bank Night will be tested legally in the Bronx shortly when a case is heard in Magistrate's Court against Harmon Yaffa's Majestic theatre.

Five other chance game cases will come before Judge Croake in Stapleton, Staten Island Magistrate's Court on October 15, ex-Senator M. Smith representing four Harry Shiffman theatres. However, another delay will be asked for pending a Special Sessions hearing on October 17 on the legality of chance games.

Injunction proceedings by Playmore Premiums, Inc., against Charles Streimer's ad service was for a change of venue so that the action might be tried in Manhattan, not in Queens County, where the suit was originally filed.

Playmore claims Streimer with infringing on Sweepstakes in the New York territory, which the defendant denies.

Meanwhile Loew's decided to install Bank Night in 16 New York theatres.

Philadelphia Owners Held

Four neighborhood theatre owners in Philadelphia are being held in $400 bail for the grand jury by Magistrate Hamburg under the anti-lottery laws, for the use of chance games. A new court test on the legality of the game is foreseen as a result of the arraignment. Those held are John Ehrlick, Ideal theatre; Emanuel Lewis, Jumbo theatre; Isidore Schwartz, of the Frolick, and Allen Lewis, of the Girard.

From Pittsburgh came word that Bank Nights and similar games and giveaways are spreading throughout western Pennsylvania.

Screeno in Court in Rochester

Pending the filing of briefs, the Liberty, North Side Schine Circuit theare, is free to operate Screeno under an injunction restraining Rochester police from interfering.

The stunt was called a lottery law violation by Deputy Corporation Counsel Charles Forsyth.

Tampa Patron Sues for Prize

Typical of some of the reactions of patrons elsewhere to the conduct of chance games, Mrs. Hazel Greene Felix filed suit against the Tampa theatre in that city for refusal to pay her a Bank Night prize of $650. Hearing was set for October 15.

MGM Contributes to Park Fund

The first contribution to the newly established National Park Trust Fund has been made by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and acknowledged by Harold L. Ickes, secretary of the interior.

$1,500,000 WORTH OF SHAKESPEARE FORMALLY PRESENTED BY WARNERS

"Midsummer Night's Dream" Premiere on Broadway Never Matched by Hollywood; New Exploitation Fields Conquered

Harry, Albert and Jack, the brothers Warner, formally presented to the world on Wednesday evening, in New York, $1,500,000 worth of William Shakespeare—"A Midsummer Night's Dream." (A showman's review of the picture appears on page 38.)

The most glittering Hollywood premieres never had introduced even the most epochal of super-classics to a first-night audience of such eclat, amid a setting of such splendor as that which limousined to the liveried lobby of the Hollywood theatre on Broadway, there to see, for the first time in talking motion pictures, the Bard's Theseus, Hippolyta, Lysander and Helen, Bottom, Flute, Snout and Puck in their Hollywood-made pantaloons and doublets and many-petticoated gowns of the fantasy of old Athens.

William Shakespeare wrote "The Dream" on a rush assignment, somewhere along about 1590. He dashed it off in six days as a compliment to a wealthy patron who was to be married amid "pomp and revelry," and it was first performed at the wedding celebration. But Warner Brothers took 365 days to get it into the negative and another 60 days to the sabled, low-gowned, top-hatted and stiff-bosomed bigwigs who gathered there on Broadway Wednesday evening from Park Avenue and Wall Street to witness this newest progress of the cinema in its career esthetic.

It was an audience steeped deeply in anticipation that listened to a "canned" overture from Mendelssohn's "Dream" score, the while they awaited the results of Max Reinhardt's efforts to transplant the Joe E. Browns and the James Cagneys, the Hugh Herberts, Frank McHughs, Dick Powells and Mickey Rooneys from the Hollywood Boulevard of 1935 to the ethereal forests of Athens of 1590. (A study of the music of the production appears on the two following pages.)

Pre-premiere commendations were announced from some of the hardest-to-crack channels in the world of Shakespearean literature, and from leaders in cultural and social and civic and educational fields. There were teas and banquets, dinners and receptions, a nationwide radio broadcast over the national networks. The press was invited the night before to a special "dress rehearsal" preview, "to give you ample time to make deadlines."

Billboard announcements were placed on 20,900 locations in the New York area, where they posted 56,620 sheets, many running 102 sheets apiece.

Warners dispatched Dr. Richard Burton, "literary adviser"—(unique in Hollywood)—and a member of the faculty of Rollins College on a lecture tour.

There was much newspaper publicity accruing, too, from the arrangement which "won" from Professor Max Reinhardt (Warners) the promise to give to the Folger Memorial Shakespeare Library in Washington the original "working script" with which the Professor made "The Dream." Harry Warner at the same time notified Dr. Joseph Quincy Adams, librarian of Folger, that his corporation will accede to his request that a print of the film be placed in the vaults.

Added to the many exploitation and publicity expressions in the press and over the air were hundreds of free inches in the news columns of New York newspapers for several days prior to the opening. The New York American of William Randolph Hearst, whose Cosmopolitan Productions are distributed through Warner Brothers, reported that "the pride and pleasure with which America and New York welcome Max Reinhardt as a prospective citizen were warmly expressed" Tuesday night at a civic reception dinner given the stage producer, now an admitted dyed-in-the-wool Hollywoodite, at the Waldorf Astoria hotel the night before the premiere.

Warners made a world event of the screen play's launching with simultaneous premieres in the Adelphi theatre, London, and in Vienna, Amsterdam, Manila and Sydney, Australia.

Attending the London premiere were the Honorable R. W. Bingham, American Ambassador to the Court of St. James, Countess Oxford, Lord Ivor Spencer Churchill, Marquess and Marchioness of Queensberry, Earl and Countess of Rosslyn, Earl and Countess of Durham, Lord and Lady Glenconner, Countess Hollenden, Ladies Livingston, Erleigh, Crawfard, Dashwood, Hulton, Cochran and Macrobert, Honorable Mrs. Frederick Cripps, Honorable Katherine Norton, Sir Adrian and Lady Baillie, Honorable Reginald and Mrs. Winn, Sir Arthur and Lady Colefax, Mrs. Dudley Banks, Sir D. Banks, Sir Guy Marshall, Sir John Baldwin, Sir Clive Morrison, Sir H. White Smith, Honorable E. Roper Curzon, Sir Gerald Regan, Mrs. Winston Churchill, Mrs. A. A. Milne, Mrs. Claude Beddington, Honorable Evelyn Fitzgerald, Edward Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. James M. Beck, Sir Philip Ben Greet, Conrad Nagel, Basil Dean.

Other premieres are: Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, October 14; Hanna theatre, Cleveland, October 18; Victory, Dayton, Ohio, October 19; Wilson, Detroit, October 20; Royal Alexandra, Toronto, October 21; Strand, Albany, October 24; Bushnell Memorial theatre, Hartford, October 24; National, Washington, D. C., October 27; Nixon, Pittsburgh, and His Majesty's, Montreal, both October 28; Auditorium, Baltimore, November 3; Campoamor, Havana, November 13; Radius theatre, Budapest, November 15; Calcutta (Regal theatre) and Bombay and Rangoon, in India, November 23; Maryland and Savoy theatres, Barcelona, Spain, December 20; Palads theatre, Copenhagen, Denmark, January 1.

Premiere at $11 a Ticket

The New York premiere—at $11 a ticket—was held for benefit purposes under the auspices of the English-Speaking Union of New York, of which John W. Davis, former Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, is the president. Mendelssohn's Melody Interprets Shakespeare's 'Dream' on Screen

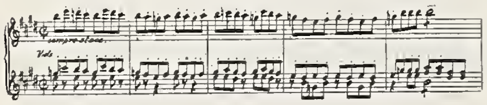
And Those Other Twins, Korngold and Reinhardt, Add Magic

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

When Shakespeare wrote "A Midsummer Night's Dream" there were many things (to paraphrase Hamlet) 'twist Heaven and Earth not dreamed of in his craft. The motion picture screen was one of them.

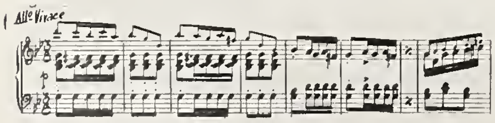
Like much of the tradition pertaining to the life and works of the bard, the data concerning the writing and first production of this fantasy are conflicting. Some authorities say it was written in 1590 to celebrate the marriage of the Earl of Essex to the widow of Sir Philip Sidney. Another tradition is that it was not written until 1598, to mark the wedding of the Earl of Southampton to Elizabeth Vernon. Still others assert that Shakespeare intended it as a tribute to Queen Elizabeth. However, the best authenticated information places its first production in Shakespeare's Globe Theatre between the years 1593-1595.



OVERTURE to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, used in the picture to illustrate the main title. It also leads over into the proclamation which announces the homecoming of Theseus after having defeated and captured Hippolyta, queen of the Amazons.

Two centuries later another creative genius—a youthful composer in Leipzig—reading a German translation of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" for the first time, conceived the idea of epitomizing in an overture the elfin spirit of the play.

Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy was only seventeen years old at the time, and if ever young genius was gifted with prophecy the composer who was destined to give to the world symphonic works, oratorios, and concertos for violin and piano that rank among the greatest in all musical literature, Mendelssohn was that darling of the musical gods. For, when seventeen years after composing the famous Overture he was commissioned by the King to write the incidental music for the entire play, the various sections of the Overture fit into the fantasy as though written after, instead of before, the incidental music.

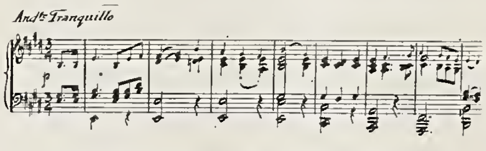


SCHERZO from Mendelssohn's work. In the picture it interprets the forest awakening and shows the fairy world at play with the Indian Prince, Titania's appearance coming down the moonbeam and joining the Prince in play until they are disturbed by Oberon.

Composed in 1826, the Overture had its first public performance in February, 1827, at Stettin, Germany, Mendelssohn himself conducting. It was not until October 18, 1843, that the complete score of the "Dream" music was played at the Neue Palais, Potsdam, and on October 19, 20 and 21 at the King's theatre in Berlin.

A veracious chronicler of the day reported that the play was for long "a subject of wonder to the Berliners," that "some disputed whether Tieck (the translator) or Shakespeare was the author," but all acclaimed it the work of genius. Mendelssohn's music made a profound impression, and in the light of modern music with its freedom of form and its dissonance, the opinion of the music critics of that day is interesting. Of the Overture, one authority reported: "It is asserted by one who has the best right to judge, and is not prone to exaggeration, that no one piece of music contains so many points as does this, and they have none of them the air of experiment, but seem all to have been written with certainty of their success."

Another century passed. Another master of drama and another inspired composer resumed where Shakespeare and Mendelssohn were compelled to leave off. Max Reinhardt and Erich Wolfgang Korngold, protagonists of a new art in a new era, utilized the flexibility of the camera and the audible screen in fusing the fantasy of Shakespeare and the music of Mendelssohn into something new and strange and compelling in its beauty and artistry.

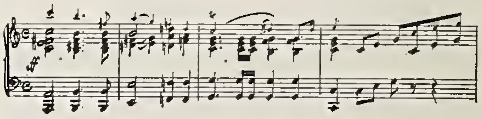


NOCTURNO from the Mendelssohn opus, used for the Nocturno Dance depicting the passing of night when Oberon and his batmen gather in the fairies and make them leave the forest at the approach of dawn.

Thus we arrive at the apparent anachronism of three widely divergent centuries and as many remotely related creative minds collaborating in the production of a very significant contribution to the very present art of motion picture entertainment.

Erich Wolfgang Korngold, famous operatic composer who was brought to Hollywood by Warner Bros. to arrange and adapt the Mendelssohn music to the film production, has retained all the original music written for the stage play, augmenting it with excerpts from such other Mendelssohn works as the Scotch Symphony, the Italian Symphony, and the Song Without Words.

A faithful and elaborate transcription of the Shakespeare classic, music assumes its place on the screen as a true integer of the fantasy and spectacle, the choreographic and mimetic art of the production. Embodying, as it does, the ebullient outpourings of the prolific Mendelssohn, the sound screen, through its unlimited scope, does for the music what the stage could never do. It holds up the magic mirror to tonal nature, materializing the fanciful visions that raced through the composer's imagination to find vent in musical idioms.



WEDDING MARCH, from Mendelssohn's "A Midsummer Night's Dream", is employed for the marriage procession of Theseus and Hippolyta, Hermia and Lysander, Demetrius and Helena. It assumes a satirical form in the dream sequence showing the wedding of Titania and the Donkey (Bottom).

In considering this function of music in "The Midsummer Night's Dream," it is interesting to note that Max Reinhardt has been quoted as saying that Shakespeare needs the screen to give complete expression to his fantasy. It is also significant when it is recalled that several years ago Reinhardt was reported as expressing the opinion that the motion picture was not an art but merely a novelty entertainment.

However, the great director now confesses a newly found respect for the motion picture media. The coming of sound to films and the magic of the camera have convinced him that the audible screen has possibilities unattainable on the stage. "When sound came,

MUMMER'S WHISTLE, from Mendelssohn, is the theme for the Craftsmen in the picture. It is heard chiefly while the Craftsmen walk through the woods to their rehearsal of the comedy they are going to put on at the wedding of Hippolyta and Theseus.

NEW DAY IN MUSICAL PHOTOPLAYS

the screen jumped farther in a few years than the stage was able to crawl in centuries," is Reinhardt's opinion.

Reinhardt and his associates have produced ample evidence to support his dictum. They have also demonstrated that when music is so closely woven into the texture of the production as is that of Mendelssohn's illuminating music in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," the audible screen is the one authentic medium. For the Shakespeare classic is pure fantasy, and the power of music to interpret the stuff that dreams are made of, has endowed with immortality the imaginings of two great creative geniuses.

The craftsmanship of Reinhardt has conjured up on the screen aerie, faerie visions synchronized to the tonal fancies of Mendelssohn, fitted into the tapestry of musical media by the gifted Korngold.

The visions sections of the Overture occur and recur throughout the picture, symbolizing and interpreting the action in a manner that is at times uncanny, taking on new meanings in the camera visualizations. Played first strictly as an overture and to illustrate the main title, the Overture carries over into the proclamation announcing the homecoming of Theseus after having defeated and captured Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons. The vivace is heard again in the fog scene where Lysander and Demetrius chase each other with swords, egged on by the mischievous Puck, bent on mutual destruction. When Titania awakes from her dream in which she has fallen in love with the Donkey (Bottom) and flies away with Oberon, the vivace wafts them to the realms of Fairyland.

RURAL MUSIC, from Mendelssohn's work, is used in the screen production when Titania gives instruments to the gnome orchestra to cheer up the Donkey (Cagney as Bottom), while Pease Blossom and Mustard Seed scratch the Donkey's head.

The Scherzo is revealed as tonal sprites come to life, playful, elf-like caperings of the dream world, with an orchestra of gnomes fiddling for the revels of Titania's crew. After the forest awakening and the fairy world is shown at play with the Indian Prince, with Titania floating down the moonbeam and joining the Prince in play until the appearance of Oberon, the Scherzo gives wings to fairy action and melodic meaning to fairy revels.

Tranquillo.
Oberon:
I know a bank where the wild thyme blows, where oxlips and the nodding vi-o-let grows;
Strings

I KNOW A BANK. This is recited by Oberon against background music when Puck returns with the magic flower.

In pointing the significance of the twin advent of Shakespeare and Mendelssohn upon the motion picture scene in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Joseph O'Sullivan draws upon a rich experience which began with stage direction for the Boston English Opera and the Chicago English Opera, following with the post of director of musical service for Mutual Film Corporation and Robertson-Cole. From general musical director for the Granat Circuit in Mexico City he returned to the opera setting as general manager of the Montreal Grand Opera Company, thence to W. W. Hodkinson and to Pathe, producing several musical subjects. Since 1931 he has specialized in writing and composing.

The Wedding March serves in both authentic and satirical episodes. In the opening scene it climaxes the spectacular maestoso upon the return of Theseus to Athens. It assumes satirical form in the dream sequence showing the wedding of Titania and the Donkey (Bottom), and provides a stirring climax in the marriage procession of Theseus and Hippolyta, Hermia and Lysander, and Demetrius and Helena.

The Nocturne, most melodious of the "Dream" music, is given a hauntingly beautiful screen interpretation in a fantasy ballet depicting the passing of night when Oberon and his batmen gather in the fairies and compel them to leave the forest at the approach of dawn.

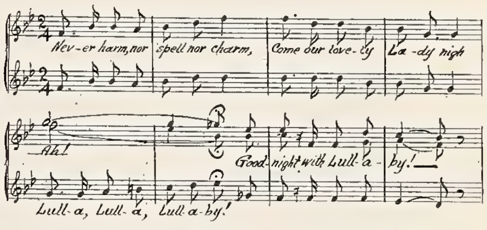
THE FOG DANCE interprets the materialization of the elves out of the fog.

In its fusion of musical and visual media, its fanciful and poetic conception, the term Nocturne—a song of the night—reveals its true significance to the music lover as well as to the musical philistine who takes his melodies as he finds them; and the proletariat as well as the cognoscenti will comprehend what Shakespeare and Mendelssohn envisioned in their imagination—"The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing a local habitation and a name."

Those familiar with the incidental music which Mendelssohn wrote for the Shakespeare classic at the behest of the King nearly a score of years after the Overture was composed, will recognize all of Mendelssohn and quite a little of Korngold in the voluminous score, which includes the Rural Music played by the gnome orchestra to cheer up the Donkey (Bottom), the Mummers' Whistle, used very effectively as a theme for the craftsmen throughout the picture, the Fog Dance, a weird tone picture interpreting the materialization of the elves out of the fog, the dramatic underscoring to Oberon's recitative "I know a bank," and the Lullaby sung by the fairies in putting Titania and the Indian Prince to sleep.

Throughout the score the masterful touch of Korngold is significantly evident in adaptation, arrangement, thematic development and recapitulation. The Viennese composer reveals himself as a genius of picture music-drama production, with the unlimited scope of the screen a fertile field for his distinctive talents. No detail of the musical pattern has escaped him.

Those who have observed with some trepidation and pessimism the tendency of the motion picture producers to "vocalize" their musical productions at the expense of veracious musical dramatization and motivation will greet with loud paeans of joy "A Midsummer Night's Dream" as marking a new era in musical-photoplays.



Nev-er harm, nor spell nor charm, Come our love-ly La-dy nigh Ah!
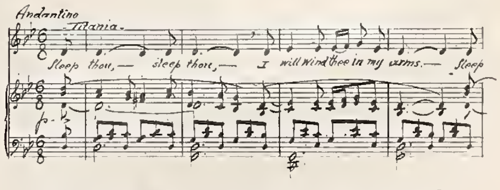
Good-night with Lull-a-by!
Lull-a, Lull-a, Lull-a-by!

LULLABY sung by the fairies in putting Titania and the Indian Prince to sleep.

The Sheep-Stealer of Avon and the Dream-Lad of Leipzig would surely thrill at the spectacle of their brain-children materialized. Rare Ben Jonson and Chris Marlowe would gasp in amazement at the screen re-creation of the work of their contemporary. Perhaps the spectacle would not faze some of the contemporary composers of Mendelssohn—those swashbucklers in music, Hector Berlioz, Liszt and Wagner.

The producers of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" have dared magnificently. In doing so, they have achieved a masterpiece of music-photo-fantasy that exalts the screen into a truer and greater medium for the expression of a completer and greater art.



Andantino
Titania.
Sleep thou, — sleep thou, — I will wind thee in my arms. — Sleep

SLUMBER SONG, sung by Titania as she lulls the Donkey (played by James Cagney) to sleep.

FILM SERVICE BARRED TO THEATRES IN CANTON DEDUCTING CENSOR FEE

Shutting Out of Paramount Pictures from Chinese City Brings Action from Eight American Distributors in United Protest

by J. P. KOEHLER
Shanghai Correspondent

Following the action of the Canton board of film censorship in barring Paramount from Canton, the eight major American distributors who constitute the membership of the Film Board of Trade (China) at Shanghai have countered with a "stop-service" order on all Canton first-run houses which deduct Canton censor fees from the distributor share of film rentals. This action will affect at least three if not six first-run theatres in Canton.

The difficulties follow out of a long protest against the Canton city government's special censorship fees. When a large Cantonese cinema deducted the Canton fees from Paramount's rental and the theatre refused to pay, Paramount shut off all film supply. Then the Canton board retaliated.

Petition has been sent to the Central Film Censoring Committee at Nanking, asking for a ruling on the Canton censor fee matter, which is in contravention of the National law guaranteeing freedom from local censor fees to all which have paid and passed the Central Board at Nanking.

Further petitions have been forwarded to the Nanking authorities asking for establishment of an Appeal Board, as at present appeals can be made only to the same committee that censors films.

J. E. Perkins, Paramount's general manager for China, is in Hongkong to discuss the Canton situation with the Hongkong representatives of the distributors. Mr. Perkins is also president and chairman of the Film Board of Trade (China). It is understood that Mr. Lo Kan, active in South China cinema affairs, has lent his good services to endeavor to arrange a settlement of this exasperating censor question in Canton. As is often the case, compromises may be effected to satisfy all parties concerned; since the matter has a slightly political aspect, due to Canton's order having been enforced without Nanking's approval.

Protest Title Substitution

A decision of importance may be expected soon on a matter which is peculiarly of interest to distributors. Recently the censors at Nanking objected to a Chinese title for a foreign picture, and substituted therefor a Chinese title selected by the Board. The distributor objected, stating the title given by the censors would have an adverse effect on receipts, and questioning the right of the censors to apply a Chinese title. The question still is pending.

"The Battle" ("Thunder in the East"), released by United Artists in China, has been banned by the Chinese and Shanghai censors as not conducive to peace of mind in the present stage of political sensitivity.

Scenes deleted by Chinese censors in recent censorships include these:

"Bride of Frankenstein" (Universal): Reel 2, Monster murders Hans and wife; reel 3, Monster attacks peasant girl; reel 7, Dr. Pretorious orders Denehmen to seize a woman.

"Mad Love" (MGM): Reel 1, Fitter's model without head; reel 3, Lorre at guillotine.

Shirley Temple Sets Record

Breaking all-time records for Shanghai's largest cinema, the 2,000 seat Grand, Shirley Temple in "Our Little Girl" made an extraordinary run of nine consecutive days, August 23 to 31, inclusive, and this in the heat and humidity and with most foreigners out of town on vacation. As a premier attraction for Chinese patrons, Shirley Temple has no equal. The first five days piled up a gross of over Sh.$23,000 and it was said the final check might make it over Sh.$30,000.

So popular has little Miss Temple become in China that a private screening was requested and given for Madam Chiang Kai Shek, China's first lady. The wife of Generalissimo Chiang Kai Shek expressed herself as highly pleased with the clean entertainment offered to the Chinese public by this winsome lass of the screen.

Howard Winner, Universal cameraman, arrived to make scenics of China for a few weeks, before going on to Java and the islands south. Good luck, Winner, but will wager after you get through all the red tape and find your shots cut, confiscated, and so on, by the Chinese, you will be glad to sail on! Getting real shots of real China past the Chinese censors is tougher than trying to masticate a water-buffalo filet steak in July. Carry the scene in your mind's eye and build it up at the studio, is our advice. And look what happened to Gareth Jones up north! (No, we aren't trying to scare away the cameramen.)

Wonder what will be the reaction in Nanking to "China Seas" (MGM) and "Shanghai" (Paramount). But whoever heard of a rich heiress falling in love with her rickshaw coolie! Wow! That scribe sure has imagination! Would you (girls) fall in love with your Chinese laundryman? And the laundryman is 10 stages higher socially than a rickshaw coolie. And no Chinese with a drop of foreign blood would pull a rickshaw anyway! However, it intrigues the imagination and may even start a new fashion in Shanghai!

With silver dropping, American distributors are shivering in their boots. What with the gross down 30 per cent this year, saved only by the high silver price, there won't be anything to send to the H. O. soon if silver keeps on sliding. It may possibly mean a hike in admissions; but exhibitors will fight this unless forced to do it through high costs of maintenance.

Chinese government law now prohibits children under 6 years from attending the cinema. One good law! The squalling of infants has broken up many a good show and, besides, out here there are other reasons for banning babies—not moral ones, either!

New Union Pact Is Expected Soon

A ten year agreement on the new wage scales negotiated by Loew's and RKO theatre interests in New York with the Operators' Union, Local 306, is believed likely to materialize despite some opposition within the union's ranks to a long term pact.

The negotiating committee for Local 306 originally favored a one or two-year agreement, but is now reported to be divided on the question, with a possible majority favoring a longer term and some supporting the circuits' request for the full ten-year pact.

Advantages Debated

The advantages of a long term agreement to the union are said to be the guarantee it affords of continuous employment without encroachment by new operators' organizations and the elimination of lengthy and costly negotiations on the expiration of short term pacts.

In other quarters, however, it is said that the fear of being branded a company union will cause Local 306 to reject any proposal for signing any contract of longer than two years' duration with the circuits. All the difficulties between Loew's and RKO are expected to be ironed out this week when officials of the three groups meet.

The union's negotiating committee will also meet next week with the larger Manhattan independent circuits, such as Skouras, Randforce and Fabian, and it is expected new contracts will be drawn up without difficulty.

The merger between the Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union with Local 306 has reached the stage where little progress is being made and it has been said that it will require several months to terminate the negotiations.

Indianapolis Strike Ends

In Indianapolis, however, a short strike which closed three downtown first runs Friday night ended when an agreement was reached with the union on a new one-year contract. The new scales were not revealed. The houses that were forced to close are the Indiana, Circle and Loew's.

In Philadelphia the anticipated settlement of the difficulty between musicians and the Earle theatre calls for six basic men in the pit and twenty on half time, or an orchestra of sixteen men at all times. The Fox theatre presently employs fifteen men regularly and twenty on half time. The musicians originally asked for two orchestras on part time, but the theatres refused because of the rehearsal difficulty that would ensue. The use of a basic number of full time men at each show is believed to have overcome this objection, however.

A meeting was held in Kansas City last Thursday to determine the future procedure of the Kansas City Theatre Owners Emergency Council, which is composed of all theatre owners employing union labor and deals exclusively with union relations.

At the same time, John P. Nick, vice-president of the International Association of Theatrical and Stage Employes, has completed all arrangements to place union operators in Kansas City and has left for Atlantic City to attend the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

FLOYD ODLUM'S financial holdings in the motion picture corporate structure—in Paramount, Fox, and perhaps eventually RKO—make him eligible for mention in the motion picture press. So, we pass along Whitney Bolton's story about the Odlums and the near-collapse of the century-old dignity of New York's extremely dignified Union League Club.

Seems that Mr. Odlum, who buys up ailing corporations and gives them a dollar-sign shot in the arm, recently bought a withering women's wear store—one of the big ones—and appointed Mrs. Odlum president of the new acquisition. In due time she received notice of a stockholders' meeting for two in the afternoon at the Union League Club. She got there at 1:58 and a stern guardian at the door refused admittance to her.

"But there is a stockholders' meeting here of a firm of which I am president!" she protested.

"I cannot help that, madam," he said. "No woman ever enters here. No woman ever has."

She got fairly firm and the custodian finally went in to see the boys about it. They'd forgotten about the woman president when they arranged the meeting. They hastily got together and talked it over. The decision was that the no-women-allowed traditions of the Union League Club were more sacred than the stockholders of the dress firm. So the meeting was adjourned to the orchid-decorated tea room of Sherry's.

Newsreel photographers now in Abyssinia for the American producers are learning much about some of the unique customs of the Ethiopians the while they observe Benito Mussolini conducting his African war. In parts of Ethiopia, they have observed, a native cannot marry until he has killed at least one man. In other places a woman who marries is allowed to associate with five lovers. As for shoeless soldiers and natives, they have found this simple explanation: The callouses of the soles of their feet are thicker and tougher than the heaviest walking shoes worn by white men today. And, in the desert, the only landmarks are the thinly covered graves of travelers the natives have killed.

And to Broadway's "Beau Broadway" we are indebted for the text of the bluntest orders issued to American newsreel cameramen concerning their Ethiopian coverage, as forwarded to Fox Movietone's crew by Laurence Stallings in this tone:

> "We have got to point our little boxes at shell holes in the act of creation, at bullets on their way to work, AND NOT REMAIN BEHIND PLAYING POKER WITH THE GENERAL STAFF!"

The stories of the expressions of wrath of the great John Barrymore during and subsequent to his recent escapades de protege in New York are many, but best of all is the incident where a woman clerk in a bookshop, not noticing his identity, asked him for his name.

"Your name please," she queried when John told her to send the package to his hiding place.

"Will you spell it?" she continued after he had replied "Barrymore."

He spelled it.

"Now, your first name, please," the damsel went on.

"ETHEL!" roared the "Great Lover" as he stamped out of the place.

"The Night of January 16," Broadway stage play, has 12 of the audience for a jury, and two endings, depending on whether the vote is "guilty" or "not guilty." Most of the verdicts, incidentally, are "not guilty."

"Not guilty" it was the other night when the jurors' vote was counted backstage. They filed back into the jury box, so Johnny Chapman tells us, and the judge ordered the verdict. The foreman, a mild little guy with spectacles and a "dead pan" countenance, rose. "Guilty!" he shouted.

There was a buzz in the jury box, but the play went on to its prescribed ending for such a verdict. Afterward, the eleven other customers asked their foreman what was the idea of reporting their verdict as "Guilty," when they had voted "Not Guilty." "Oh, nothing," declared the timid foreman. "I thought she was guilty but I knew I couldn't do anything with the rest of you."

The latest newsreel "scoop" is the "Fox Movietone News" cocktail on the cocktail list of "Sloppy Joe's" bar at Havana. It is made of the juice of half a lime, one-third Scotch whiskey, one-third Italian vermouth, one-third cointreau and drops of Curacao. Shake well with cracked ice, serve in a "Manhattan" cocktail glass and call in the Cuban army.

Jose Abeal (Sloppy Joe) went from Spain to Cuba in 1904 and tended bar at Galiano and Zanja Streets, Havana. He bartended there and in New Orleans and Miami for the next 12 years, returning to Havana in 1918 to the "Greasy Spoon." Later, while in business for himself, friends remarked about the sloppiness of his place. Since then he has become internationally known as "Sloppy Joe."

"At our new Minsky's Music Hall in Hollywood," drolled Herbert Minsky, "Minsky Burlesque" king, "we do not call the production by such a name as burlesque. Oh, no! We call it a Nudeal Revuesque, which is far more refined."

But it's still burlesque, isn't it, Mr. Minsky?

Into our editorial workroom the other day walked one whose profile and frontface so strongly resembled Mr. President Roosevelt that for the moment we thought F.D.R. was acoming askin' for some advice on governmental procedure. He introduced himself as Mr. J. Henry Smythe, of the Pennsylvania Smythes, a Who's Whoian who said he has received overtures to impersonate President Roosevelt in motion pictures.

Mr. Smythe is the chap—(he's 52, the President is 54)—who led the movement in the Methodist Episcopal Church for revision of the half-century-old ban on dancing, theatregoing, card playing, the circus and such. Largely through his efforts the M. E. Church rule was abandoned. The Dancing Masters' Association made him an honorary member. Seems his gal had turned him down because she, not being a Methodist-Episcopalian, became annoyed because his religious affiliation prevented their dancing, theatregoing, card playing.

J. Henry Smythe admits that he's the world's best slogan maker:—"Buy and Keep Liberty Bonds!" "Do Your Bit and Keep it Lit!" "Lend to Defend!," et al. He, with stars and stripes and a megaphone, led the cheering in the Republic National Convention, in 1904, that led to the nomination of Teddy Roosevelt as president.

Mark Hellinger says the average Broadwayite has his own formula for success. He wants to start at the top—and work his way up!

ONE Kansas exhibitor is walking around on air these days. He is W. J. Burke, of the Strand at Oxford, Kansas, where they brought in the state's largest oil gusher the other week. Mr. Burke's theatre has had a wiggly career, opening and closing on and off these five years, for the town has never been able to support a showhouse consistently. But with three or four gushers gushing, and a well going full blast right on the main street, the folks thereabouts should be able shortly to support his Strand handsomely. Burke may even tear it down and dig for oil himself.

They say that Kansans are quite able to conceal their discouragement. Perhaps the case of hopes deferred and final reward for patience and perseverence is best illustrated also by the western Kansas settler who has the euphonious name of Ezra Dingleberry.

During the first year of the long drought in 1931-34, Mr. Dingleberry sowed 100 acres to wheat. Not a grain sprouted. The following spring he sowed oats in the same ground. Nor did they sprout. In May he planted corn with the forlorn hope of getting a crop, but the corn didn't come up either. In the fall he sowed rye, again hoping for a fall pasture. It didn't even sprout. Undaunted, the next spring he sowed sorghum cane. He began to get discouraged when that did not grow, but bucked up in the fall and seeded the ground to wheat again. There was no rain, and the wheat did not sprout.

But along in the winter a fine rain came and the wheat grew and made 30 bushels to the acre. Then things began to happen quickly. Mr. Dingleberry and his sons had just got the wheat harvested when the sorghum came up. The first of September they harvested that. They had a tremendous crop of rye. Things had been coming along so well they went away for the winter to hunt in Canada. When they returned in the spring, the oats were well up and when harvested, turned out a bumper crop. They had no more gotten the oats harvested when they found the corn coming up, and it turned out to be the best raised in that section. And, last straw of all, the second crop of wheat he had sowed came on.

Dingleberry sold out and moved away, sore as an angry pup that "the dern country a-needed too much harvesting."

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

A Midsummer Night's Dream

(Warner Bros.)

Shakespeare

"A Midsummer Night's Dream" must be viewed by the showman as a great adventure in both the art and the industry of the motion pciture. It is as special and daring for its day and time as were "The Great Train Robbery," "Quo Vadis," and "The Birth of a Nation." It is as magnificently experimental as "Intolerance," although on what appears surer ground. It partakes of the excited zeal that brought sound with "The Jazz Singer" and remade the art.

Unlike those historic primitives, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" comes to the screen as pioneering in concept, in the status of the screen, rather than the exploration of the medium. This flight in Shakespearean drama is taken on full fledged wings.

The activities and concerns of the showmen who are presenting and who are to present this picture to their publics will be considerably more importantly related to audience groups and states of mind among potential patrons than to the intrinsic content of the three hours of screen time. The impending furore of discussion accompanying the early presentations will in this instance more than in the case of any previous work of the screen tend to establish an attitude and opinion likely to prevail through the whole working life of the piece.

It may be observed that the followers, students and patrons of Shakespeare will now discover the motion picture while the motion picture's vast and motley public will be introduced to Shakespeare. The motion picture can face the meeting with a large assurance. Mr. Shakespeare will have to take care of himself.

The motion picture, in the person of the Brothers Warner, has brought to bear all that the creative techniques of the drama, the dance, pageantry and music of the world today can give, through the services of Dr. Reinhardt, Eric Korngold and Nijinska, superimposed upon the superbly glamouring capacities of the motion picture makers of Hollywood, none the less great in that they are familiar to the screen world.

Shakespeare for his share has delivered a script, time tried on the stages of three centuries and enriched by both his tradition and its own, and having acquired on the way a score by the illustrious Mendelssohn.

The glorification and promotion, with all manner of acquisitions of cultural and academic color, has been in process now since about 1596.

Exploitation today will therefore consist chiefly in telling the right people about it and letting nature take its course. In time it is possible that it will be found necessary to have seen the picture version of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" to maintain residence or get a transport.

In the editorial columns of Motion Picture Herald some weeks past the writer of this review observed in substance that while Shakespeare had had the notion over three hundred years ago it had really been brought to completion this season in Hollywood. That stands as opinion both of the piece and its new medium. The motion picture has been able to present Shakespeare's fantasy with a completeness and fluid facility of perfection beyond anything that the playwright could have dreamed in 1596. He wrote beyond the scope of his instrumentation. It is likely that this will come with some bitterness to the diehards of the stage. Within the week the radio carried an appeal from Heywood Broun for the preservation of the stage as the sole custodian of fantasy, declaring for the screen the while special properties in the realm of realism.

If dreaming is to be done the screen will do that, too.

Meanwhile in obvious realization that the presentation of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" is to put the motion picture in a very definite sense on trial before the scholars and academicians, the producers have been at pains to permit no movie violence to the ancient classic. It is Shakespeare and he did it. On this point there may be, to be sure, argument, and of profit to the fame of the picture.

And while the literati are getting acquainted with what the screen has wrought, the motion picture public will encounter no doubt considerable surprise at familiar figures in such unaccustomed roles. There is something akin to shock at the first glimpse of James Cagney as "Bottom," Joe E. Brown in the role of "Flute" and Dick Powell as "Lysander." For a moment their well established and highly contemporary personalities come between the screen-experienced spectator and the land of Shakespearean illusion. The shock gives way to acceptance and presently acceptance becomes enthusiasm. No such experience will be had in the higher strata of Mr. Shakespeare's fan following, but many a picture patron will experience it, and enrich his experience thereby. Now if Charles Chaplin wants to play "Hamlet" it may be considered possible.

The production is also rendered especially significant by reason of its musical components, certain to have a considerable share in winning the attention of the new public that it promises to bring to the screen. The musical score and its story are discussed in detail by Joseph O'Sullivan on page 32 of this issue of the Herald.

Of beautiful girls and dance pageantry there is no end, all presented with allure and grace and magic, mostly in the strange affairs of that mad night in the enchanted wood. Special word may well be set down for the performance, outstanding among outstanding performances of the cast, of Mr. Cagney as "Bottom," and young Master Mickey Rooney as "Puck," arch conspirator and, in the Shakespearean manner, a master of ceremonies of sorts.

If they come to see Mr. Cagney they will see "Bottom."

At last a motion picture has been made with sufficient weight to enable the roles to dominate the stars and make players of them. Whether Shakespeare did it, or if one should credit Dr. Reinhardt, is immaterial. It has been done—in Hollywood.

The Eagle's Brood

(Paramount)

Western

For those who specialize in fast-moving outdoor action adventure entertainment as well as those anxious to provide their clientele with an intelligently produced, directed, acted and exciting western feature, "The Eagle's Brood" has plenty to fill the bill. It's all that anybody expects of a western; a picture that moves with exciting action; so full of shooting that one can almost smell the powder smoke, yet at the same time carrying an honest atmosphere of human interest, and as it concentrates on the elements that have audiences, particularly the youngsters, yelling and cheering, it does not bother to interfere with its he-man character by dragging in a lot of sentimental love interest.

Finely selected natural and stage backgrounds giving an air of class, the picture is straight western in tone.

To repay powerful ex-bandit El Toro for saving his life, Hop-Along-Cassidy and his pal Johnny embark upon the rescue of El Toro's kidnaped grandson, Pablo, whose father and mother have been killed by a gang of bad men. The whole ensuing situation is contrived to permit a grand series of wild riding chases and gun-roaring melees which result in restoration of Pablo to his grandfather after Hop-Along has wiped out the entire brood of bandits.

As the picture makes no pretense to be anything other than what it actually is, its selling should concentrate on that quality. A natural for the kids, it must not be forgotten that there still are many grownups, men and women, to whom nothing can surpass a western thriller as an entertainment feature. Let that contingent of audiences know that this should satisfy them to the last degree.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Last Days of Pompeii

(Radio-Cooper)

Dramatic Spectacle

Spectacular in story quality and production value, this is a picture to stir the minds of exhibitors and patrons alike. A massive feature, reflecting in every phase the care, thought and diligence put into it by producers, director, and players, it is screen merchandise of a caliber that should inspire the most extraordinary showmanship in order that commercial returns which its entertainment value more than justifies should be returned.

As the title indicates, "The Last Days of Pompeii" sets its time as that of Christ's last years on earth and the early part of the Christian Era and establishes the locales as ancient Rome, Judea and Pompeii, and this likewise establishes it as a costume picture. But whether costume or not, together which the production features—the gladiatorial combats reflecting the almost inhuman decadence of a pagan race, the cruel sports of the Colosseum, the atmospheric presentation of the Crucifixion, or the vivid manner in which its picturization of ancient racketeering parallels the most flamboyant of modern gangsters—it tells a story of human drama which from the point of view of power of theme and emotional impact is as attention arresting as the most moving current happenings. The cataclysmic eruption of Mount Vesuvius and the earth shattering destruction, which climax all the previous spectacles, seldom if ever have been duplicated on the screen either Bare of the wealth of substantiating production detail, awe inspiring features which lend great power to the motivating story, "Pompeii" is drama. It's the drama of Marcus, a tragedy embittered man, who came to believe that only in the possession of money and power could happiness be found, of a merciless gladiator of the arena, champion of champions, who in glory found solace in the adoption of a boy to replace his dead child.

Climbing the ladder of success, he becomes a promoter, allying himself with Pontius Pilate. He becomes a slave trading racketeer providing the human fodder to satisfy the depraved tastes of the roaring arenas. In Jerusalem, he hears of a great Teacher, a man who believes in meekness, kindness and humility, the direct antithesis to the character he is. His son being injured, Marcus again knowing a fear that once chilled his soul, he takes him to the Teacher. The boy is healed. Then follows the drama, atmospherically presented, of Calvary.

Years pass. Marcus, now the most important influence in the Roman empire, knows that his association with Pilate can do much for his son Flavius, now grown to manhood. But a different spirit motivates Flavius' life. He has never forgotten the presence of the martyred Teacher. In love with one of his father's slaves, Claudia, Flavius becomes an enemy of his father. He makes it possible for the slaves to escape. This wild horde threatening the very existence of Rome, the dramatic situation is menacing and is made more so when Flavius actually casts his lot with them. But the power of Roman arms is not to be denied. The slaves, Flavius and Claudia among them, are to be massacred for the delight of the mob. Marcus sees his son go down in the onslaught. Then the volcano erupts. Lava pours down on the ruins of Pompeii that earthquakes have razed. In the thrilling climax, Marcus with the words of the Teacher ringing in his ears helps Flavius and his bride Claudia to escape, he himself dying

In every way this is a big picture, rich in all the necessities required by any type of showman to satisfy the demands of his patrons. There's a story to sell and there's amazing production to help make the appeal of that story more impressive. The strength or weakness of cast names—and the personalities presented are worthy of anyone's best efforts—is of little comparative significance. All that is needed is a sincere effort to convince the public of the show's worth, a matter for which all the essentials are provided.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Three Musketeers

(Radio)

Historical Romance

Spirited thrill action entertainment, this picturization of Dumas' classical historical romance is a rare opportunity for discerning showmen. Fundamentally it is a deft example of understanding production craftsmanship. As all the swashbuckling color and wallop of the famous original—elements that have excited the interest of people for generations—are retained and embellished, they are screened in a manner that's just as up to date as today. Moving speedily, the picture is packed with an air of at-swords-point romantic adventure. It bristles with menacing political intrigue which has for its point the honor of a Queen, the destiny of a King and the fate of a nation. There's plenty of love interest, but not too much. Comedy is not neglected, rather serving as a pleasing offset to the basic drama, and the thrilling culminating chase is just as effective as the U. S. cavalry riding over the hills to the rescue of the beleaguered pioneers. The blending of the essentials is a worthy combination of exciting modern screen material and exploitation availability.

The theme is familiar. It's the story of d'Artagnan, a Don Quixotic character, a boy embarked on a man's business, riding forth to join the King's forces. A happy hero, he immediately becomes embroiled with de Rochfort, arch conspirator and toughest guy in France, who adapts the most modern gangster methods to rid himself of a bothersome yokel pest. d'Artagnan joins in the Musketeers and right away gets into a brawl with the trio, Athos, Aramis and Porthos.

As several situations interlude with comedy for their basis, d'Artagnan falls in love with Constance, lady in waiting to the Queen. His romance plunges him into a welter of political intrigue, through which march the figures of Cardinal Richelieu and his illustrious contemporary friends and enemies. Then it's d'Artagnan and his one-for-all, all-for-one pals, the central cogs in an action packed series of situations to frustrate de Rochfort's treacherous plot to dethrone a dynasty and to confound the priestly master politician. It's d'Artagnan, pretty much a bewildered tyro in the hands of the clever Milady de Winter, a hero more by accident than intention, who comes through with the help of the three musketeers to revenge himself upon de Rochfort, save the King, Queen and their state and win the love of Constance.

The complete picture affords so much with which to sell it that in no case should it be necessary to rely upon one single angle. It provides sock story quality, effective production features and name values of established worth. Two players, Walter Abel and Rosamond Pinchot, get off to an impressive start that augurs well for the screen careers.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Rainmakers

(RKO-Radio)

Comedy

As far as entertainment worth goes, this is pretty much for the Wheeler-Woolsey devotees who can take their particular brand of screen fun with or without much amusement. Oddly enough for a film that is practically a continual comic gagging of two rather serious bits of natural phenomena, a dust storm and a drouth, the antics delivered are suggestive of much unique exploitation. These stunts are possible if one possesses that happy faculty of concocting his ballyhoo in the clever way that makes folk laugh at past troubles.

The picture opens to the fury of a midwest dust-storm, brought on when rainmaker Roscoe's apparatus backfires and brings on a catastrophe instead of the anticipated manna from heaven in the form of gentle rain. Then it transfers to California where the lima bean growers are suffering a prolonged drouth. There's quite a lot of skulduggery going on as land-grabber Parker endeavors to turn the misfortunes of his neighbors to his own profit and his son, Orville, attempts to impose his attention on Margie, whose banker father, Spenser, also is being given the works by Parker.

Into this situation arrive Roscoe and his pardner Billy; there's an immediate romantic conflict triangle built up among Billy, the girl and snooty Orville. Comedy goes on apace, with much that is irrelevant yanked in, until Roscoe conceives the idea of having a head-on collision between two locomotives as the means of drawing the necessary crowd to make his contraption work. Ensues a long drawn-out chase between two engines, one loaded with dynamite, and the final crash, coming just as a missing part of the rainmaking machines is recovered. The explosion brings a deluge, which turns into a blizzard, and everybody but Parker and his son are very happy.

Suffering in comparison with the most recent Wheeler-Woolsey pictures in entertainment worth, the picture offers little to hold the interest of mature patrons. Its excitement and general foolishness, however, is something that under the stimulation of comedy premised showmanship should rouse the attention and probably appreciation of the kid contingents and those who'll laugh at anything no matter what the reason.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

I Live for Love

(Warner)

Comedy

Comedy, precipitated by the mad personal, professional and romantic gyrations of a volatile prima donna is the entertainment and exploitation substance of this show. While not a big picture, it is a pleasing bit of fast moving romantic excitement, presented against colorful backgrounds to the tune of several charming musical numbers in which there is an unusual quota of tricky and attention-engaging situations. Its cast made up for the most part of well known screen players, it introduces a newcoming songster, Everett Marshall, whose career on the stage and radio has made him familiar to many, so that he is a subject for special attention in drawing the interest of music lovers to the film.

With hectic comedy the accompaniment, glamorous stage star Donna insists that her personal romantic hero, Rico, be the leading man in her new show. Producer Fabian knows that the man is a bust. Fabian, in addition to having a big financial stake in the show, also has a promising embryo star, Roger, in line for the part. Donna will have none of it and as a result of catering to her fiery whims the first and second presentations are flops. In the meantime, Roger has become a terrific feature of Henderson's radio program. Anxious to make his broadcast tops on the air waves, he makes a deal with Fabian for Donna.

When she finds out she is to sing with Roger she indulges in another tantrum, but as Rico has been shunted off to South America, she goes on and, as everyone suspects, out of the strange association love is born. Together Donna and Roger are hits and their love is a hurly burly thing. He wants to marry her and get away from all the furore, but the thrill of being in the public eye and enjoying all its acclaim is Donna's life blood. The two have a serious spat just as Rico returns, and, to spite her partner, she's ready to marry Rico, until Roger's voice singing a love song is too much for her. Though lavish preparations have been made for an elaborate wedding, Rico is left standing at the altar while the battling songbirds embark on the trail of a simple wedding.

Strength of cast being a quality that must be considered in exploiting the attraction, substantiating features are the fun the production provides together with the lure of several good numbers.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Music is Magic

Although this title, which has more than ordinary commercial value, might suggest that this is inspired by and all about music, such is not entirely the case. The picture is an all-family comedy; not altogether unique, but it's a fun packed satire on stage folk and picture people. The substantiating story is geared for fun and laughter; the music more or less interludes but in it there is much amusement and consequently quite a bit of exploitation material with which to convince patrons of the whole show's entertainment worth. Absolutely devoid of anything even remotely resembling seriousness, that quality should serve as a tip-off as to the type of showmanship with which to sell it.

As the yarn opens, Diane DeValle, passé picture star, is making a personal appearance tour as a means of convincing the yokels that she's still a big number. On the same vaudeville bill with her are Peggy and Jack, and Peanuts and Eddie, a bunch of fifth rate vaudevillians. The tour flops and all make for Hollywood, that land of milk and honey, where one and all think that if they put up a good enough bluff, they'll crash the pictures. Although Diane gets a new break, things don't go so well for Peggy, who becomes a laundry worker, and Jack, who goes to work in a lunchroom.

However, the allied trio are not to be denied. The merry mad antics of the Jack-headed group in turning restaurants topsy turvy, making life miserable for picture executives, stealing street cars and substituting themselves for bosses and directors on the sets when they don't happen to be around, provides plenty of amusement. When Diane again gets temperamental, Jack has Peggy in her spot just at the psychological moment to convince producer Pomroy that he's discovered a star in the rough.

In most ways the picture is the kind of attraction that undoubtedly never will stir any great amount of enthusiasm among the sophisticates or the intelligentsia who consider that the screen should always be a medium of elevating theatrical art. But there are definite values for the folk who pay their money to see the show and to whom fast moving comedy, full of familiar but pleasing situations, means something, together with the several lilting tunes incorporated, plus the glamour of an inside peek at how things might be done in Hollywood.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Remember Last Night

Murder Mystery

Here's something brand new in the line of murder mystery entertainment. It is a picture which, while holding strictly to established formula as far as motivating character is concerned, introduces much that is distinctively unique to set it completely apart from any such type of picture previously seen. In general aspect it is deep, double-dyed-in-the-wool mystery melodrama with a refreshing comedy twist. As such, and as it proceeds to erect baffling, complicated, suspense packed situations, with fine individual player characterizations making for sustained interest, it is a broad satire on this type of entertainment. Additionally, whether relevant or not to the basic theme, it includes within itself many theatrical ingredients of amusement or commercial worth. Furthering the different entertainment-exploitation value of these features, it presents a cast of first water name players to tell the story. This factor alone, but naturally in cooperation with the other assets, should make business-creation for the attraction and unusually simple matter.

In the story, there's not one murder to solve, rather there are four or five intertwining slayings to so complicate the affair that any possibility of the super-sharp amateur sleuth putting his finger on the guilty culprit is practically impossible. It is benefited by lavish production that accentuates its substantiating gayety.

A bunch of high-flying socialites start out on a continue-till-all-are-drunk progressive party. There's a lot of fun to this feature, which takes on a rather daring tone as the various husbands and wives get amorously mixed up. There's a bit of absorbing drama, which presages what is going to happen as Vic Huling threatens Billy Arnold, who, in addition to owing him money, Huling also believes is getting too friendly with his wife. However, when Carlotta and Tony Milburn wake up the next morning, they find Huling dead in bed. Detective Harrison is

Warner, Lloyd Films Are First Gifts to Museum

John Hay Whitney, president of the New Museum of Modern Art Film Library, announced Wednesday the acquisition of the first two groups of motion pictures, from Harold Lloyd and Warner Brothers, for inclusion in its proposed museum of important films and for showings at universities. The Lloyd films cover the work of the comedian from his earliest days into his later dialogue films. The Warner group is made up of outstanding examples of both silent and sound films and includes an historically important series of experiments in sound film through the years 1925 to 1928. The Film Library has also acquired many examples of early films produced by Vitagraph, which was later merged with Warner Brothers.

Mr. Whitney said important gifts of outstanding films have been promised by the other companies and by individuals long connected with the industry. These acquisitions will be announced as they are received.

As it becomes available, all this material is being catalogued by Iris Barry, curator, and reviewed by the "Selection Committee" of the Film Library so that the most illuminating and outstanding films may be chosen for the study of each step forward in the development of the art, and constructive program notes prepared for the museums and colleges to which these programs will be circulated.

In commenting on the gifts, Will H. Hays said: "The project undertaken by the Museum by which students for all time may study the progress of the film as a living art—the great modern art of the 20th century—deserves and will receive, I believe, the cooperation of every responsible factor in motion pictures."

The motion picture films given by Mr. Lloyd to the Film Library are as follows:

Just Nuts, 1915
Luke's Fatal Flivver, 1916
Luke Joins the Navy, 1916
Fireman Save My Child, 1918
Pipe the Whiskers, 1918
High and Dizzy, 1920
I Do, 1921
Grandma's Boy, 1922
Safety Last, 1923
The Freshman, 1925
Welcome Danger, 1929

The gift from Warner Brothers is composed of the following motion pictures:

Selections from the old Vitagraph Company films
Beau Brummel, 1924
Lady Windermere's Fan, 1925
Early experimental sound films
The Jazz Singer, 1927
Lights of New York, 1928
Outward Bound, 1930
Little Caesar, 1930
Public Enemy, 1931
I Am a Fugitive, 1932
Wild Boys of the Road, 1933

In May, 1935, the Museum of Modern Art, New York, received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for the purpose of establishing a department of motion pictures to be known as The Museum of Modern Art Film Library. The Film Library was organized the same month with the following officers: John Hay Whitney, president; John E. Abbott, vice president and general manager; Edward M. M. Warburg, treasurer, and Iris Barry, curator.

Independents Delay Naming of Officers

Election of officers of Independent Theatre Circuit, Inc., has been put off indefinitely. About 90 theatres have pledged support to the new buying combine, but exhibitors who operate about 50 of the signed up theatres have failed to send in their necessary membership checks.

Interstate Theatres, Inc., another cooperative exhibitor unit with S. S. Stevenson as president, H. R. Berry as vice-president, and B. L. Strozier as secretary, has received its incorporation papers and started operating, with headquarters in Henderson, N. C. Object of unit is to effect operating economies, avoid destructive competition and promise better service to the public.

Chase Holdings in 20th Century-Fox Shown in Detail

Chase National Bank holds 574,753 shares of new preferred, or 42.29 per cent, and 287,376 shares of new common stock, or 23.43 per cent, of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, it has been disclosed in an amended registration statement made public recently at the New York Stock Exchange, New York.

The bank is also listed as the beneficial owner of an additional 200,000 shares of the preferred and 100,000 shares of the common, which, with the shares of record, bring the total percentages up to 57.01 and 31.58 respectively.

Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of the new company, holds 55,283 shares of preferred and 214,642 shares of common, representing 4.07 and 17.50 per cent. Darryl F. Zanuck, head of production, is listed as the holder of 21,945 preferred and 183,979 common shares. Percentages here total 1.61 and 15. William Goetz, executive assistant to Mr. Zanuck, holds 4.07 per cent or 55,283 shares of preferred, and 17.50 per cent, or 214,642 shares of the new common stock.

White, Weld & Co., of New York, also is listed as holding 212,630 preferred, 106,315 shares of common and $9,700 of 6 per cent convertible gold debentures due April 1, 1936. White, Weld has made known that it is not the real or beneficial owners of any shares of stock that are registered in its name but is the beneficial owner of $9,700 of the 6 per cent debentures.

The Amerex Holding Corporation also holds 7,832 stock purchase warrants expiring March 21, 1936, while Hayden, Stone & Company holds 2,583 similar warrants.

The New York Times said in comment:

"Few registration statements filed this year with the Securities and Exchange Commission by industrial corporations have revealed such concentrated control as that shown last week in the statement of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, formerly known as the Fox Film Corporation. What might lead to a technical corner in the stock in the event that a large short interest developed is the apparent control held by five interests, which together own 1,119,894 shares, or more than 80 per cent of the company's preferred stock, and 1,106,954 shares of the common stock, or 90 per cent of the amount outstanding."

Detroit Guild May Move Against Ban On Russian Film

Legal action against Joseph Kollar, Detroit police censor, for his banning of "Youth of Maxim," a Soviet-made film, is being considered by attorneys of the Detroit Cinema Guild, under whose auspices the film was to open a week's run at the Institute of Art.

Kollar confiscated the print after a preview when American Legion heads and others branded the film Communist propaganda. The censor had approved it for showing to the Guild's members, but revoked the license when it became known that it was to be shown to the public. The action was taken under the Dunckel-Baldwin sedition bill passed at the last session of the legislature, it is understood.

Meanwhile "pinks," Reds, liberals and radicals were protesting the action to Mayor Frank Couzens and Police Commissioner Heinrich Pickert, demanding that the film be released for public exhibition.

Attacks on "Red Salute" (Reliance-United Artists) were continued over the weekend in New York, while in Cambridge, Mass., the executive committee of the Liberal Club voted to ask the management of the University Theatre to refrain from showing the picture, which the students regarded as an attack on campus radicalism.

Last week's demonstration against "Red Salute" at the Rivoli on New York's Broadway, which resulted in the arrest of 19 youthful pickets, was repeated on a larger scale last Friday night. About 125 students, half of whom were girls, were arrested on charges of unlawful assembly but later released because of "insufficient evidence."

Magistrate Perlman severely reprimanded the demonstrators, however. Upon learning that none of them had seen the picture, he told them they had no conception of what they were protesting and therefore had no right to create a disturbance. He cautioned them against a recurrence.

While all was peaceful at the Rivoli this week and intimidating telephone calls, letters of protest and picketing had ceased, a police guard was still maintained at the theatre as a precaution.

Full Support Pledged Maryland Theatre Drive

All members of the Motion Picture Theatres Owners of Maryland, Inc., have notified Frank A. Hornig, president, of their cooperation in the campaign, "October Is Go To Movies Month," now being put on by the organization. Jack Whittle is chairman of the committee of arrangements for the exploitation.

Schumann-Heink and May Robson to Team

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has announced it will team Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink and May Robson in "Gram," by Kathleen Norris. John W. Considine, Jr., will produce the picture. No other cast assignments have as yet been made.

Dressed for Business

An advertising agency's production expert sat down beside us on the New Canaan Express the other evening, with Motion Picture Herald in hand.

"Why," he asked, intending to suggest, "do you spend so much money on a weekly in the movie trade field? You could cut paper costs, printing costs and you only need two staples on the binding edge—and you've got a lot of expensive cuts—also you re-set your tables and standing matter oftener than you need to. That runs into money."

Our answer was: "You wouldn't send out a salesman to call on your customers with a second day shirt and three days' beard. You do not scribble letters on cheap stationery and you swear at your secretary if there's a blur or a smudge on the page. There are plenty of papers to demonstrate typographical neglect and bad manners—but The Herald is always dressed for business, because it has to make its appearance, every issue, before practically all of the showmen in the world."

The world's greatest motion picture circulation—and it's A.B.C. Audited.

called in and he arrives with his "flat-foot."

As the investigation proceeds, no one can remember what happened last night. Tony calls in a criminologist who specializes in hypnotism to awaken the subconscious minds. As he is about to put his case together, he is killed. As suspense piles up, with illusion giving audiences much opportunity to exercise their imaginations and uniquely contrived comedy situations are tossed in to add to the confusion, Tony and Carlotta bump into the situation that leads to the killing of the roadhouse proprietor, Faronea. Mystery becoming thick enough to cut with a knife, to the tune of a load of suspense-packed goings on, Chauffeur Baptiste is found dead and Chauffeur Flanagan, who took a run-out in the first part of the picture, is picked up and accused by Harrison as the killer. But Tony has other ideas and in collaboration with Harrison sets the stage for a surprise climax that should prove as bewildering to audiences as it does to the characters in the story.

The course to follow in directing patron attention to this picture is to convince them that it is completely new and different. There are all the standby elements of a well produced mystery melodrama to sell. There is a comedy contrast that fully justifies anyone labeling this as an all-laugh feature. There's a romantic angle, spicy, thrilling and sometimes daring, that suggests an entirely new publicity trend. The title has a significance that makes possible a whole host of catchy and tricky exploitation gags. Names should suit the purposes and needs of anyone. While it is a picture that probably is a little too deep for children and younger adolescents, it's one that can be sold to mature audiences with the confidence that what they see will hold their attention from start to finish and will send them out of the theatre talking in such a manner that word-of-mouth advertising will bring in much additional business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Car of Dreams

Romantic Comedy Musical

Not a GB Picture (U. S.) Release

Blending fantasy and realism and occasionally adopting the musical comedy idiom, "Car of Dreams" is light, amusing and varied in appeal. It is not staged on the scale of the American musical but its theme, essentially whimsical, does not demand spectacle. A pleasant love story, amusing characterization and a series of songs by Sigler, Goodhart and Hoffman keep it moving entertainingly.

Starred are John Mills, who ranks among the very best British juveniles, and Grete Mosheim, recently understudy of Elisabeth Bergner and showing considerable resemblance to her in features and method. Paul Graetz, of "Power," is another cast notable. J. Robertson Hare's broad comedy is British but understandable.

Vera Hart, daughter of a German antique dealer, loves so much the fine things she cannot afford to buy that she has developed the dangerous habit of visiting shops and inspecting expensive clothes and other luxuries, escaping with the pretext of "thinking over" the question of buying them. She is caught when she announces her intention of purchasing a super-auto ordered by Robert Miller, son of a wealthy factory owner. Bob, infatuated by her, offers to let her have the car and, when it becomes obvious that she cannot pay for it, makes it a gift. Her parents are placated by the story that it is a prize.

Vera works in father Miller's musical instrument factory. Bob, on holiday, persuades her that he is an out of work chauffeur and offers to run the car on hire for weddings and the like, splitting the takings with her parents. The ruse works and for some time he pays the imaginary "percentage" for the privilege of driving the girl to work every day and into the country other times.

Making the mistake of sending instructions to the factory that Vera's wages are to be enormously increased, he deepens the scandal already caused by the anomaly of the work girl who comes to her job in a Rolls Royce. Anne Fisher, Bob's secretary, plots with Butterworth, a departmental manager, to catch the couple at an ice carnival. Bob, to prevent Vera learning who he is, has persuaded his friend Peters to borrow the identity of "the young boss." Anne spitefully points out to Vera the real Mr. Miller and leads her to believe that Bob has been planning a dishonorable relation, but the misunderstanding is happily cleared up and the conclusion shows the young couple touring in their "car of dreams."

"Good-bye Bubbles" is a good theme song, cleverly presented, and the tuneful background of the film as a whole is an asset.—Allan, London.

The Last Outpost

(Paramount)

Dramatic Romance

The story which motivates this production is unappealing. In developing its dramatically premised triangle romance situation, which culminates in a noble but unnecessary sacrifice, it becomes a mechanical and artificial thing. So constructed it is totally devoid of such a feature's most necessary ingredient—the power to stimulate audience sympathy.

Timed to the World War period, the locales are Mesopotamia and Africa. Here settings intended to intensify production values assume the character of a travelogue composite of pictures similar to "Grass," "Chang," "Trader Horn," "The Big Trail," "Beau Geste," "The Lost Patrol," as well as a vivid atmospheric digest of the career of the mystic Lawrence of Arabia.

Andrews, a British officer, is captured by the Kurds. His most cruel captor, liberating him, turns out to be John Stevenson, a sort of Lawrence of Arabia character. His big job is to move an Armenian tribe, friendly to the British, from the fury of the Turks. Tough and dangerous as it is moving the tribe and all its belongings across deserts, through rushing torrents and over Alpine-like mountains, Stevenson has an equally tough and dangerous job in keeping Andrews away from Ilya, alluring wife of the head chief.

The job completed, the locale shifts to a hospital in Egypt, where Andrews, injured in a scuffle with Stevenson, is recuperating. Andrews gets interested in nurse Rosemary Haydon, who, descriptive dialogue makes obvious, is the wife of Stevenson. Stevenson gets a furlough for his accomplishments and in some miraculous way lands in Cairo. His amazed wife, who hasn't seem him since their wedding day, is cold and he finally becomes aware of a situation that the audience has known right along. Bent on revenge, he takes up the trail of Stevenson, who has been assigned to mop up some enemy nomad tribes. Ensues a lot of 'Beau Geste" stuff as all but Andrews and Stevenson of the desert fort's defenders are wiped out. Both set off across the desert to contact an advancing relief party. Comes the dramatic thrill of "Lost Patrol" as the pursuing tribesmen pot shot the pair, to be followed by the flag waving arrival of the British cavalry. Stevenson, mortally wounded, forgets his wife as he commends the welfare and care of his wife to the great love that Andrews has for her.

There's a lot of thrill and color to the substantiating production values and they actually are the basis of the showmanship campaign which, as far as straight dramatic or romantic story values are concerned, should test the ability of the most astute exhibitors.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Great Air Mystery

(Universal)

Action Serial

Bringing to the screen in serial form "Tailspin Tommy," the widely publicized cartoon by Hal Forrest, Universal has captured the action and thrill of adventure inculcated in the original newspaper strip. The first three episodes of this twelve-chapter serial offer plenty of inducements to draw the children. The serial features Clark Williams as "Tailspin Tommy," Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers and Delphine Drew. The setting is the mythical Latin-American island of Nazil. William and his pal, Beery, are hired to make an aerial survey of oil property in Nazil. Disaster overtakes them at the start, when their dirigible is wrecked in a storm. Safely out of that predicament they land in another. The principal mystery element is the mysterious eagle plane and its equally mysterious pilot. The romantic angle is capably handled by Williams and Jean Rogers. Each chapter runs approximately 20 minutes.

LOW COST PRODUCTION IS OPPOSED BY KORDA

Says One "Henry VIII" in One Week Outdraws Five Program Films in Five Weeks

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

A record press gathering welcomed Alexander Korda on his return to London, a tribute to the importance attached to his achievement of the status of owner-member of United Artists. That Mr. Korda is the first man to reverse the usual Anglo-American procedure by buying into an American concern instead of selling part-control of his studio to America is a circumstance which the trade, at any rate, rates as historic.

Mr. Korda, always a good press, proceeded to give details of a production program involving a whole series of American directorial and star names. He also made one or two typical comments on general controversies, including the very current problems of just what British films should cost in order to be a commercial success.

John Maxwell made this a front-page story recently when, at Associated British Pictures' annual meeting, he declared that money put into British productions on the strength of such exceptional successes as "The Private Life of Henry VIII" was in danger of being lost. Mr. Maxwell's remarks amounted to an argument that British production was commercially a sound proposition on the basis of programers making a profit in the United Kingdom market; Julius Hagen of Twickenham, supporting this argument, gave the figures of £40,000 ($200,000) and £60,000 ($300,000) as maxima for U. K. and world distribution, resspectively.

These figures, which actually well overstate the average cost of the programers apparently indicated by Mr. Maxwell, compare strikingly with the minimum £80,000 recently mentioned by Joe Schenck and the £100,000 and upwards laid out per picture by Mr. Korda and by Herbert Wilcox (on "Escape Me Never" the cost figure is believed to have been well over this figure) for features aiming at world distribution.

Mr. Korda's comment on the suggestion inexpensive British films were good business was: "If I could make a film for £5,000 or £10,000, I would make one, and retire." He also suggested that the only person who could decide whether a film was really inexpensive or not was the exhibitor. "One big British picture like 'Henry VIII' makes more at the box office in one week than five British program pictures in five weeks. Which is the cheap picture, the one which makes big profits or the five which make small profits, or a loss?"

To the other question whether a basis of £100,000 negative cost was a sound one for British production, or whether "Henry VIII" was a freak picture from which it was unsafe to generalize, he replied that the world gross of "Henry VIII" was $2,500,000 and that it was already certain that this figure would be exceeded with "Scarlet Pimpernel," while "Sanders of the River" promised to do 10 per cent better in U. K. than "Henry VIII."

Whether the insular or the international outlook on production is the sounder from the standpoint of British financiers, conservative or adventurous, is a question which may well be answered by the activities of the new London Films studio at Denham, as outlined by Mr. Korda. The year's output will be 20 features, all made for world distribution, and of these seven or eight will be made by London and the balance by other organizations, including fellow members of United Artists.

Some of the signings announced by Mr. Korda were, in themselves, a comment on the theory that British pictures should be made cheaply. King Vidor, Harry D'Arrast and William K. Howard will each direct a picture and Mr. Korda also hopes to get Eddie Goulding for Merle Oberon's next. He is also negotiating for Frank Lloyd to bring over a complete unit. Marlene Dietrich is his biggest star engagement; she will make a picture at Denham in April.

Mr. Korda is completely sold on color, declaring that if it were available at the present moment he would never make another black and white picture.

Limiting Programs

The Kinema Renters Society announced a day or two ago that it had been asked by the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association to make effective the agreement arrived at that no program should exceed 3¼ hours in length. It therefore proposed to take "drastic measures" against offenders, which means that any theatre running over the program limit would find its film supplies suddenly and completely cut off. There is practically universal agreement as to the necessity of this reasonable limitation of program time, but it is significant of the balance of power in the British industry that, to enforce its own Council's policy, the exhibitors' association has to rely upon the threat of a distributors' boycott.

No Nazi Union for FBI

The announcement from the Film Producers' Group of the Federation of British Industries that it had decided against applying for membership in the International Film Chamber, planned by the German Reischfilmkammer, was expected.

The Film Chamber was discussed at recent international film conferences at Munich and Venice, but the plan has been suspect from the beginning, due to its inspiration coming from official, which means Nazi, sources in Berlin.

Basil Dean of Associated Talking Pictures, who has expressed his pique over the fact that an American company (Warner Bros.) is first to place Shakespeare on the screen ("A Midsummer Night's Dream"), announces forthcoming production of Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" and "The Tempest" at Ealing.

Gerrard-Technicolor Deal

Details published of the agreement entered into, through London Film Productions, between Gerrard Industries (controlling the Hillman Colorgravure process) and Technicolor, show that Gerrard acquires 45,320 shares £1 par, in Technicolor, Ltd., of which 20,000 are paid for in cash at a premium of 4 per cent and the balance represent the surrender value of 6 per cent debentures in London Film Productions, Ltd., exchanged for 100,000 Colorgravure shares under the agreement with London. To pay for the Technicolor shares, Gerrard has raised a 5 per cent loan, repayable in five years and carrying an option to the lenders (unnamed) on 6,500 Technicolor shares.

Production Notes

Herbert Wilcox has signed Tilly Losch, the famous Viennese, for "Street Singer's Serenade." She will be featured in three dances.

Fedor Otzep has begun direction on Anna Sten's first picture for Garrett-Klement, "A Woman Alone." Henry Wilcoxen and Leslie Banks played in opening scenes.

Alexander Films gave free entrance to the 8,000-seated Albert Hall in order to get crowd backgrounds for "Excuse My Glove," featuring the British boxers Len Harvey and Don McCorkindale.

Hans Brahm has taken over the direction of "Broken Blossoms" at Twickenham, for which D. W. Griffith originally was scheduled. Arthur Margetson plays Donald Crisp's old role of Battling Burrows.

Concordia Films is completing "The Robber Symphony," first of a series of "composed" films, in which the action is interpreted by music and sound. Friedrich Feher, who played the leading role in the original "Dr. Caligari," is directing. Eugen Schufftan, inventor of the process of that name, is cameraman, and the art director is Erno Metzner of "Pitz Palu," "Westfront" and "Kameradschaft" fame. There are only 300 spoken words in "The Robber Symphony," which is to be followed by a similar treatment of "Caligari."

BRITISH 20% QUOTA BECOMES EFFECTIVE

The 20 per cent exhibition quota under the Cinematograph Films Act became effective last week and for the first time exhibitors are compelled to show the same percentage of British films that distributors are required to handle. The 20 per cent became applicable to exhibitors on April 1. The quota is in a final form, operating until the Act, as it stands at present, lapses in 1938.

Mystery Writer Found Dead from Poisoning

Harry Engman Charlot, creator of "The Shadow," sinister figure of many detective tales and radio programs, died in New York late last week in a Bowery hotel in circumstances that, according to the police, may rival the weird deaths of many of his fiction characters. He was thirty-one years old.

When the author's body was discovered, the manager of the hotel revealed that he had been living for several days under the name of Mr. Loe. It was thought at first that the death was due to a heart attack, but when the body was removed to the Bellevue Hospital morgue, it was discovered that death had been caused by poison of an unknown nature. A chemical analysis was ordered.

Mr. Charlot's character, "The Shadow," first appeared in the magazines of Street & Smith, publishers, in 1928. The character, who pitted himself against the police and underworld alike, soon became popular. Radio was the next medium through which it reached the public and Universal produced a series of short subjects in 1932 based on the radio sketches.

SAYS HOUSES HAD ONLY "SLUFF" FILMS

I became southern district manager for the merged company. In 1930 I was made general manager for the Fox Theatres and in 1932 general manager for the Arthur Theatres.

Q. What are the Fox Theatres?

A. They were a group of houses owned by the Fox interests in the East, mostly east of the Mississippi river. They were different from the West theatres.

Questioned in Theatre Holdings

Q. What was the Arthur Theatres?

A. We took a lease on some Fox theatres in New England.

Q. What else?

A. In the middle of September, 1933, I became president of Fanchon & Marco.

Q. What are Fanchon & Marco?

A. They produce and manage stage shows, manage actors, book vaudeville acts and things like that.

Q. Has it any theatres?

A. It actually owns or leases thirteen. He added that the company also managed the Roxy theatre in New York for the receivers. He said that Fanchon and himself were also interested in some other theatres in the Southeast that were managed by his brother. We have twenty-three theatres in all.

Q. Any in Nevada?

A. Yes. One at Boulder Dam.

Asks About Pictures

Q. What is the definition of a feature picture?

A. Usually a picture about 5,000 feet in length that forms the principal part of the program. Usually it takes up about three-fourths of the program.

Q. What other kinds of pictures are there?

A. Short subjects, such as novelties, travelogues, cartoons and the like and newsreels.

Q. Can a first class motion picture theatre business be carried on successfully without first class pictures?

A. I haven't heard of any yet.

Q. Can it be done?

A. I don't think so.

(Objection was then raised to the witness testifying on the grounds that he could only give his personal experiences. The objection was overruled).

The St. Louis Situation

Q. Are you familiar with the picture situation in St. Louis?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you familiar with it during the three years prior to January 11, 1935?

A. I operated here in 1930-32 at the Fox with the Fox Theatre Corporation. I came here only about once every three months. But since the summer of 1933 I am very familiar with it.

Q. Do you know how many first-run houses there were here during the year prior to January 11, 1935?

A. Yes.

Q. How many?

A. There were eight.

Q. Name them?

A. The Fox, St. Louis, Loew's State, Ambassador, Missouri, New Grand Central, Orpheum and Shubert.

Q. How many first-run theatres were being operated during the year prior to January 11, 1934?

A. The same theatres except the Orpheum and the Shubert.

10 Second-Runs, 40 Subsequents

Q. How many second-run theatres were there here the same year?

A. About ten.

KOPLAR A CENTRAL FIGURE, YET ABSENT

Harry Koplar is charged by the defense with being an "arch conspirator" against the film companies on trial in St. Louis, and in the courtroom there is much speculation whether he will appear as a witness.

The Government has not called him, and the defense does not want to. However, he has been injected so prominently into the proceedings that it is considered probable he will take the stand at some time during the trial. If he does, his appearance is certain to prove one of the real highlights, attorneys predicted.

Q. How many subsequent-run houses?

A. I think about forty.

Q. Who operate the second-run theatres?

A. The St. Louis Amusement Company and others by Clarence Turley and a man named Ansell.

Frederick H. Wood of counsel for Warner Brothers interposed to ask: "Do you mean Turley and Ansell together, or separately?"

A. I don't know, but they book pictures together.

Q. How many second-runs are owned by the St. Louis Amusement Co.?

A. Seven or eight.

Q. What is the difference between first and second-runs and subsequent-run theatres?

A. The time that elapses between the showings. I believe the first-runs have twenty-one or twenty-eight day protection over the second-runs, and so forth.

Product Shown

Q. Whose pictures were shown at the various first-run theatres during the year prior to January 11, 1935?

A. Do you mean any part of the year?

Q. Yes, any part of that year.

A. Well, up to March, 1934, Loew's State was showing Metro-Goldwyn and United Artists; the Fox, Fox Pictures; St. Louis, RKO and Columbia; the Missouri, Ambassador and New Grand Central, Warner-First National, Paramount, and Universal. After the Shubert opened in March, 1934, Loew's State continued to have Metro-Goldwyn and United Artists; Fox, the Fox pictures; the St. Louis had RKO and Columbia, and the Missouri, New Grand Central and Ambassador continued with Paramount and Universal, while the Shubert ran Warner-First National. After August, 1934, Loew's State continued with Metro-Goldwyn and United Artists. The St. Louis was closed, the Fox, Ambassador and Missouri ran Fox, Universal and Columbia, and the Shubert and Orpheum ran Warner-First National, Paramount and RKO.

Asks Why Theatre Closed

Q. Why was the St. Louis theatre closed?

A. Primarily to back up pictures for use at the Ambassador and Missouri.

Q. What do you mean by "back up?"

A. To make available an additional supply of pictures. We anticipated that the Ambassador and Missouri would have an acute shortage in a short time and the only source available was those we already had. We were unable to close the Fox because of the terms of our lease. We perfected arrangements with the landlord of the St. Louis and the receivers of the Fox to close the St. Louis. We gave our best pictures to the Fox and backed up the other pictures for use of the Ambassador and the Missouri.

Q. Could you operate five first-run theatres with the supply of pictures available?

A. That was impossible.

Q. After your company took over the lease of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres, did you get possession immediately?

A. No, we did not get possession until the latter part of July, 1934. The theatres were closed a week or two to clean up the shows.

Q. You operate the Ambassador?

A. The Ambassador and the Missouri.

Q. Tell the history of your operations.

Says Loss Was Heavy

A. It was disastrous. We lost a lot of money. We had only the sluff pictures of Fox, Columbia, Universal, and the sluff pictures of independents.

Q. What are sluff pictures?

A. Well, they are not the best product of the companies.

Q. You mean that they were not first class pictures?

A. Not by a long shot.

Q. Didn't you have any first class pictures?

A. The only first class picture in the fall of 1934 was Mae West in "The Belle of the 90s," a Paramount picture.

Q. You say that was a Paramount picture? How did you get it?

A. They sold it to us.

Q. Who sold it to you?

A. Neil Agnew.

Q. Have any conversation with him?

A. Yes. It was the latter part of July or early in August, 1934.

Q. What was said?

A. Well, Agnew and I was talking about getting "Cleopatra" for Los Angeles, and some other pictures. He said, "I am Santa Claus today. I have another picture for you for St. Louis, Mae West in 'The Belle of the '90s.' " I said, "what will you take for it?" Then I said: "How can you sell that one to me, Neil? I thought you were committed to Warner Brothers." He said that this one was under the contract, that it happened to belong to the last season contract although we are releasing it this season.

Q. Tell about that picture, "The Belle of the '90s," for use in the Ambassador.

Licensed to Skourases

A. It had been licensed to the Skouras Brothers under their contract. In lieu of fulfilling their guarantee of $2,700 for it they released it to the producers to sell to the best advantage. He chose to sell it to me. The contract was sent to me in a few days. I signed it and we ran the picture.

Former Senator Reed, chief counsel for the Warner Brothers companies, then presented a motion that the court strike out all the testimony relative to the conversation with Agnew, but was overruled by Judge Moore.

Mr. Arthur testified that also the Bondholders Committee had suggested they run stage shows at the Ambassador.

JUDGE ADMONISHES ATTORNEYS

Q. Did you run stage shows?

A. Yes.

Q. What was your experience?

A. That was disastrous. We went to running pictures.

Q. What pictures did you run?

A. Part of the Fox, sluff pictures and those picked up from independent exchanges.

Q. What do you mean disastrous?

A. I mean we lost a lot of money.

Q. Tell about the history of the Missouri theatre after you ran it up to January 11, 1935.

Dropped Vaudeville

A. It was about the same as that of the Ambassador. We used vaudeville at both houses. We then dropped it and went back to straight pictures.

Q. Was the Missouri closed?

A. No, we didn't close the Missouri.

Q. What was the history of the New Grand Central?

A. We operated it only a very short time, I think about eight or nine weeks.

Q. When?

A. The spring of 1935, I think.

William R. Gentry of counsel for the Paramount companies then moved this testimony be stricken out as relating to something that had happened after January 11, 1935, and his motion was sustained by Judge Moore.

Q. Did you open the New Grand Central immediately after you got your lease?

A. No. It was some time after.

Q. How long after?

A. Six or eight months. I think it was opened on May 15 and operated to July 11, 1934.

Q. Not opened up to January 11, 1935?

A. No.

Q. Why?

A. We couldn't get the pictures.

Calls Industry Sixth Largest

Q. What is the standing of the motion picture industry as to size in comparison with other industries of the United States?

A. It is the six largest.

This testimony was vigorously objected to by Gentry and Reed, they contending that it was merely a personal opinion and that the witness had not shown himself to be qualified to speak with authority. Judge Moore rejected their objections, saying that it seemed to him that the witness could very well have sufficient knowledge of the industry with which he was closely actively associated as to have knowledge of its relative size.

Q. Do you know Jules Levy?

A. Yes. He is sales manager for RKO.

Q. Was he their sales manager for the three years prior to January 11, 1935?

A. I don't think so. Part of the time he had another position.

Q. Who is Cresson Smith?

A. He is western sales manager for RKO.

Q. Has it any connection with RKO Distributing Corporation?

A. Yes. That is the company he is with.

Q. Do you see Mr. Jules Levy in the court room?

A. Yes. He then pointed to Levy. He is sitting in the last row. Mr. Levy, who was seated in a row of seats along the north wall of the court room, stood up and took a bow.

Q. Do you see Cresson Smith here?

A. Yes. With that he pointed to Smith, who stood up near the rear of the courtroom. Then in turn he pointed out Gradwell Sears and Harry Warner.

Q. What is the gentleman with him? (Referring to a man with Harry Warner.)

A. I don't know him.

Conversation with Levy

Q. Did you have any conversation with Jules Levy? See him about buying pictures?

A. Yes, sir. Several.

Q. Tell what conversation was.

This brought forth an argument of counsel, the defense contending Arthur should fix the place and approximate time of the particular conversation. They objected especially when Arthur replied he talked particularly to Levy about St. Louis from November, 1933, to the present time. Mr. Leisure contended the witness should not be permitted to roam over such a wide period. Finally, Arthur said:

A. I had a conversation with him in June, 1934, in the Tavern restaurant in New York and in Levy's office in the RKO Building in New York City. I had about four conversations with him in the month of June, 1934, two at the Tavern and two at his office.

Q. Did they relate to pictures in St. Louis?

A. At the first one in the Tavern, I said: "Jules, how come that you committed pictures to Warner Brothers in St. Louis?" He said: "I didn't do it." I said: "Who did it?" He said: "I don't know who did it. I am not sure but what I would have done the same thing under the same circumstances." I then said: "Jules, you must have known about it."

More Legal Arguments

This again precipitated strong objections from defendant counsel. At first Judge Moore overruled an objection raised by Mr. Gentry that Mr. Levy's testimony could not be used against the defendant. Former Senator Reed came forward with the contention that Levy's statement was merely hearsay and that whatever he might have said to Arthur could not apply, since it was not shown that his statement was made in connection with and in performance of his duties for his employer, that he had stated he didn't have anything to do with the picture contract with Warner Brothers.

The jury was excluded from the room while the attorneys argued the legal points involved. Arthur and Levy were also excluded.

In the absence of the jury, Mr. Hardy said that no man was better qualified to speak for RKO than Mr. Levy, its generad sales manager. It was finally agreed that both sides were to submit to the court legal opinions and citations in support of their contentions and that Hardy should continue to examine Arthur on other points with the privilege of calling him back later to go into the conversations with Levy.

The jury came back and Arthur resumed the stand at 11:30 a. m.

Depinet Conversation

Q. Mr. Arthur, can you add to the same conversation of Depinet in March, 1934, about which you testified?

Immediately Mr. Leisure was on his feet with contention that Arthur should fix the time and place if he knew.

A. The RKO Building, the time after the March 6 meeting with Warner Brothers officers.

Mr. Leisure: "Was it in Depinet's office, the building lobby or the street?"

Mr. Hardy: Let him finish saying something.

Mr. Arthur: I would say before April 1. I have been in their building dozens of time. They have a number of different offices, Mr. Levy, Cresson Smith, Depinet.

Mr. Leisure: And the office boy and the secretary.

Mr. Hardy apparently resented the continued interruption of the witness and in turn Judge Moore apparently disliked Mr. Hardy's attitude.

Judge Moore: "I told you, Mr. Hardy, several times that Mr. Leisure is trying to make an objection." Finally Mr. Hardy deferred to the court's wishes and Leisure raised his objection that the time and place should be more specific.

A. I saw Mr. Depinet twice, once in his office; the exact time I am unable to fix. I had another conversation with him in the office of Jules Levy.

When Mr. Leisure again arose and asked for more specific details, Mr. Hardy replied: "If you will sit down long enough you will get one of them."

Judge Moore then remarked: "He has fixed one within a certain range."

A. It was just a statement made to me by Ned. Ned walked into Jules Levy's office when I called on Jules. I again spoke to him about pictures in St. Louis.

Q. Can you fix the time?

A. About the same time, the best of my recollection in March, 1934. That was the month.

Q. What was said?

A. He said: "I don't think they will take them. I think they are just trying to pull you into line."

What did he mean, "pull you into line?"

An objection by Mr. Leisure was sustained.

Q. What else was said?

A. Nothing.

Q. Except what was said and testified to yesterday?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Leisure once more arose to say: "I think he should qualify that. There is confusion in the record."

Judge Moore: "That point is well taken."

Frederick H. Wood then cut in with a vitriolic barb at Mr. Hardy, saying: "Except what the witness was expected to do."

Hardy: "What do you mean by that?"

Judge Moore: "I don't care what he means. Let's proceed with the case."

Hardy: "The remark was not part of the case," turning toward Mr. Wood.

"Address your remarks to the court and proceed with the case," Judge Moore ordered.

Q. Did you have a conversation with Depinet in the lobby of the Plaza Hotel?

A. What am I to do?

Q. Fix the time as nearly as possible.

A. Then I will state it was on April 7, 1934, in the Plaza hotel in New York City at 59th street and Fifth avenue in a suite of John S. Leahy.

Mr. Reed arose to announce the defense objected to this testimony being included against any of his clients. At various times the court had instructed the jurors not to accept the conversations or statement of any defendant against any other defendant not present. This was repeated.

Q. Who was present at that meeting?

A. John S. Leahy, Ned Depinet and myself. I said, "Mr. Leahy, RKO pictures possibly will be committed to Warner Brothers in St. Louis." Leahy picked up the conversation, saying: "Does Mr. Depinet realize his action was illegal? It will go hard for you if what Mr. Arthur tells me is correct. It is illegal." Mr. Depinet replied, "I don't know whether it was illegal or not. That is what the legal department is for." Mr. Leahy then began to elaborate upon the legal points, of the anti-trust laws, and held that Mr. Depinet's action was distinctly illegal. Depinet replied that he had already committed the pictures and that was all there was to it so far as he was concerned.

Q. Was that all that was said?

A. Yes, a lot was said, but I can't recall it well enough to testify to it under oath.

Q. Can you give the substance of it?

A. That was the substance of it.

Washington Conference

Q. Mr. Arthur, were you present at a conference in the office of the Attorney General of the United States in Washington on May 17, 1935?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was present?

At this point an objection by defense counsel was overruled. Mr. Reed then asked for permission to argue the law points involved and the jury was excluded. Mr. Hardy then asked that Robert W. Perkins of counsel for Warner Brothers, as well as Mr. Arthur, be excluded from the room. Judge Moore, however, declined to bar an attorney for the defense from the courtroom. The court then asked if others who were present had been at the Washington meeting.

Mr. Hardy then proceeded to outline to Judge Moore the line that the testimony he proposed would follow through Arthur.

He said that Mr. Perkins, acting on behalf of the Warner companies, had come to the Department of Justice in company with Tom Dysart, Ernest Wilkinson, a Washington attorney, Mr. Arthur, Sol Rosenblatt.

Judge Moore interrupted to ask who was Sol Rosenblatt.

"He is a New York attorney," Hardy replied.

Frederick H. Wood was on his feet, declaring: "There is no secret about who Mr. Rosenblatt is. He was the head of the NRA."

Hardy turned toward Wood, responding: "That is not a correct statement. Mr. Johnson was head of the NRA."

Wood answered that Rosenblatt was the NRA so far the motion picture industry was concerned.

Says Rosenblatt Was Consulted

Mr. Hardy continued his narration of what had transpired at the Washington conference, which he had attended personally:

"Rosenblatt said that Mr. Dysart or Mr. Skouras had come to him about the picture situation in St. Louis, that the situation was bad in regard to the inability of the three theatres (Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central) to get pictures, and this was creating a situation that was very, very hurtful to the motion picture business. He said that the companies named in the indictment and Mr. Arthur's company had effected a settlement of their differences, that the terms of this agreement were satisfactory to Mr. Arthur and his associates and satisfactory to the defendants, and that if the settlement was satisfactory to the Department of Jusice it would be a good thing to terminate the situation."

CIRCUIT REQUIRED FOR OUTLET, SAYS REED

Reciting the large-scale theatre acquisitions by Paramount, Fox, RKO and MGM in explanation of the reason why Warner Bros., to assure an outlet for its product, also had to form a circuit, former Senator James A. Reed in his address to the jury said:

"All of these companies were and are in the keenest kind of competition with each other and with Warner Bros. Instead of there being a 'monopoly' or combination or understanding between them, each was and is fighting for territory and contending for business in practically every town, city and village of the United States."

Mr. Hardy said that when Mr. Rosenblatt had concluded his statement Attorney General Homer G. Cummins declared that the Department of Justice would not be a party to the agreement. Mr. Hardy continued:

"The Attorney General then declared that the agreement was not satisfactory to the Department of Justice, saying, 'You can't compromise the Department of Justice. You can't compromise the United States. The department will not call off the St. Louis indictment. This prosecution will go on, even if the defendant companies had agreed to furnish pictures to the three theatres.

" 'The Department of Justice has been receiving very serious complaints concerning the motion picture companies from all parts of the country.' "

Mr. Hardy then told Judge Moore that he had a memorandum presented to the Attorney General touching on these complaints, and said he desired to have it put in the record. He also told of a letter sent to the Chief Justice of the United States, Charles Evans Hughes, relative to having another judge appointed to handle the local case so as to avoid delay. This was early this year prior to the appointment of Judge Moore and when District Judge Charles B. Davis was endeavoring to handle the dockets of two divisions of the court. At that time there was also some question as to whether Judge Davis should be disqualified for alleged prejudice.

Judge Moore said to Mr. Hardy relative to the memoranda: "You would do well to put it all into the record."

Mr. Hardy added that Attorney General Cummings had said that the Department for years had endeavored to handle the situations complained about through civil actions, saying: "Maybe a conviction will do some good. We have tried all other means. Now we will try this one."

"The Attorney General," said Mr. Hardy, "then turned to Mr. Arthur and asked him if the complainants wished to quit. Mr. Arthur said 'No.'

"Mr. Perkins then asked if he could say something. He said it is about ten words. He was told that he could. He then declared that while his clients still insisted that they were innocent of the charges against them and had been unjustly indicted, the proposal made by Mr. Rosenblatt was a feasible settlement and they would go along with it, and hoped that the Department of Justice would dismiss the indictment or let it slide."

Judge Moore then asked Mr. Hardy if he knew of any way to get all of that into the record.

Mr. Hardy replied that he did. He added that he could cite various legal decisions in support of his contention that any conduct on the part of a defendant either before or after he was indicted indicating that he had guilty knowledge of a crime could be used against him.

At this stage of the proceedings, William R. Gentry of counsel for the Paramount companies said to Judge Moore, "I note that the members of the press are busily engaged in making copious notes of all that it is being said while the jury is excluded from the room. I respectfully ask that the court order the press not to publish it, since it may get into hands of the jurors."

"The Department of Justice does not join in that request," Mr. Hardy said. "It is based upon the suspicion that the members of the jury will violate the solemn instructions of the court not to read about or discuss the trial with anyone. If such a suspicion was true a mistrial could be declared. The Department is making no such request."

"I will make no such order," Judge Moore said, "but I hope that the press will not publish it at this time."

Reads Court Decisions

Continuing his argument in support of the contention that the facts about the Washington conference should be used against Mr. Perkins' clients, Mr. Hardy said: "If they could stop a restraint of trade, then they must be the cause of it. They said we will see that they get the pictures if you do not press this suit."

He proceeded to read court decisions touching on the general rule that it is for the jury to determine whether statements made by a defendant under such circumstances are an admission of guilty knowledge of the crime.

"Has the supreme court passed on that point? I think it did in the Al Capone case," he was asked.

Mr. Hardy replied: "I don't think so. We have made a search of cases and found no supreme court ruling."

Mr. Gentry then protested that it would be impossible for the jury to avoid the effect of such testimony on the other defendants even if instructed to apply it only to the Warner companies.

Wood Charges Prejudice Aim

Mr. Wood then arose, saying: "I desire to make a statement. The court should not permit this evidence to go in until it knows what it is all about. The whole purpose, and the only purpose, of the Government in bringing it in is to prejudice the jury. The counsel for the Government knows that and that it is only against the participants that it is admissible."

Mr. Hardy arose to protest against the accusation against the Department of Justice.

"Please let Mr. Wood finish his statement," Judge Moore ordered.

"When this court asked Mr. Hardy about Mr. Rosenblatt, he said he was a New York lawyer," Mr. Wood went on. "With equal lack of candor he did not tell the court that Mr. Rosenblatt as a coordinate officer of the United States Government and acting in his capacity as head of the NRA code for the motion picture industry had taken the initiative in bringing about the proposed settlement. Mr. Hardy knows that he did so with the knowledge, the consent and the encouragement of the Department of Justice."

Again Mr. Hardy sought to interrupt to defend the department from this attack, protesting that he did not see the purpose of it.

"Sit down," Wood directed him. "You will understand what my purpose is in a very few minutes, if you are capable of understanding."

Questions Rosenblatt's Absence

"It is strange that among all of the forty-seven witnesses called by the Government in this case, Mr. Rosenblatt alone is missing. Yet Mr. Rosenblatt was a member of a coordinate branch of the Government. And of all of the witnesses that could be called, Mr. Rosenblatt is missing, and is the one person who knew all about this settlement. He does know the whole story and could tell it if the Government sought to prove it through him. He knew the circumstances of Mr. Perkins' statement and it was not an admission of guilt.

"The Department of Justice led him to believe that the settlement that Mr. Rosenblatt proposed was satisfactory. And then the Government reneged on the settlement. Hardy knows that. If Rosenblatt would be among the forty-seven witnesses he could give a purely impartial version. And, remember, he was in a coordinate department of the Government. If he was among the forty-eight witnesses, he might place the Department of Justice and Mr. Hardy in a bad light in the eyes of the jury and in the eyes of the public."

Mr. Hardy was on his feet at once shouting to Mr. Wood: "Call him. I am willing to be put in that light. I am willing to call Mr. Rosenblatt."

Mr. Wood then announced that he proposed to tell the court what actually happened and what was said. Mr. Hardy cut in to say that he would ask that the record contain as an admission against the defendant any admission Mr. Wood might make.

Says Rosenblatt Was Umpire

Mr. Wood continued: "The facts are that some went to Mr. Rosenblatt in his capacity as administrator of the code for the motion picture industry and told him that there was a bad situation in St. Louis and that for the good of the entire industry something should be done about it."

Mr. Hardy interposed that it was either Skouras or Dysart that made the request.

"Mr. Rosenblatt when he took his job as administrator undertook to cure all of the ills of the industry and through practical business methods settle or compromise and adjust various disputes, such as labor troubles, and so forth. That is the way they operated under the NRA. He was the umpire. They went to him to see if he couldn't work out an adjustment of the situation. He went immediately to Mr. Hardy, for he knew that there had been an indictment. He wanted to make sure Mr. Hardy knew about the proposal. He was encouraged and then proceeded to settle this controversy. If this settlement was made it follows that it was done with the knowledge, consent and encouragement of the Department of Justice. The Department never said in advance that it would dismiss this indictment. They never say that."

Mr. Hardy interrupted once more to deny that the Department of Justice encouraged or consented to the proposed settlement.

Mr. Wood's reply was vitriolic: "Your statement to me means nothing. What you said would carry very little weight."

Mr. Hardy responded that he didn't intend his statement to carry weight with Mr. Wood.

Mr. Wood replied heatedly: "Mr. Hardy, would you mind waiting until I finish my statement?"

Wood then told the court that Perkins had never applied to Hardy, the Attorney General or Mr. Rosenblatt asking for a dismissal of the indictment.

"What he did say was that in order to dispose of the matter his company was willing to go along with the settlement proposed by a Government official, and that at the very outset of his statement in the Attorney General's office he declared that his clients were not guilty. And then the Attorney General of the United States arose with great dignity and said: 'Nothing doing. You can't compromise with the United States,' when it was an officer of the United States Government worked out the entire plan and gave it to the defendants to accept. They all know that is the correct story of that Department of Justice conference. That's the story. If Mr. Arthur is asked about it he will admit that the proposition came from Mr. Rosenblatt.

"The Attorney General's conference was nothing else but a trap laid by Mr. Hardy to enable him to make this offer he has made in this court today. He wished to get into the record and before this jury the sweeping uncomplimentary remarks of the Attorney General against the industry generally."

Reed Explains

Former Senator James A. Reed then asked the indulgence of the court while he explained what happened at the Washington meeting. He said Perkins for the Warner companies had joined in the peace move proposed by Rosenblatt in his official capacity, but that at the meeting, when Arthur said that the settlement was not satisfactory to him, that he wanted a lot of money, then the Attorney General said that the Department of Justice was not in the business of a collection agency. He added: "We have made no propositions of compromise, no admissions, and agreed to the peace plan only to reopen some of the houses that had been closed and help along the film industry."

Defense counsel then asked for the opportunity to cite legal authorities against the admission of the proposed evidence concerning the Washington meeting.

Mr. Hardy, when finally given the opportunity to respond to Mr. Wood, said: "I was very much astonished when Mr. Wood questioned my good faith. I have legal authorities to support my claim that what Mr. Perkins said was a highly incriminating episode in this conspiracy and may properly be used against his clients. I have no reason to conceal any facts. It is my duty to see that every fact is brought out. We want the truth, the whole truth, 100 per cent, presented to the jury. The Department of Justice gave not one word of encouragement or consent whatsoever to the settlement plan. On the contrary, the Attorney General told Rosenblatt that the department would proceed with the indictment."

HIGH TAX REVENUE BRINGS HOPES OF LOWER ONTARIO THEATRE LEVY

Reduction on Low Price Tickets Awaited; Eastern Canada's First "Quota" Film Underway with Paramount's Toby Wing

by J. H. COWAN
Toronto Correspondent

Some measure of tax relief for Ontario theatres, probably a reduction in the levy on lower-priced tickets, is expected, though it may not take place for some months yet. The revenues from the new amusement taxes are admittedly higher than the Ontario authorities anticipated.

For June, amusement tax receipts were $239,271, or three times the June, 1934, figure, with the July total of $265,303 jumping to five times the figure for the same period of a year ago and August, at $230,978, 5½ times greater.

In its amusement taxes, the government tapped a rich flow but it should be noted that the revenues are not coming from theatres only. The Canadian National Exhibition, taxed for the first time, will turn in approximately $30,000 in a two-weeks period. The Ontario Government's share on Rudy Vallee's presentation at the exposition amounted to almost $1,000 on one typical big day.

Province-wide protests against the severity of the tax continue. The Allied Sports and Amusement Association is campaigning steadily for a reduction. The immediate objective is exemption on all admissions of 25 cents or less.

Government spokesmen claim that, among the reasons for the enormous increase in collections, is an improved system of nailing the tax-dodgers, though theatre managers insist that there has never been more than a minor amount of evasion on the part of the film industry whatever the rates.

One point to be noted, as far as film men are concerned, is the fact that the Ontario law now catches various types of competitive amusements, including amateur sporting events, formerly exempt, and the theatre does not carry the whole burden of keeping the amusement tax coffers filled.

First "Quota" Film in Work

Eastern Canada's first "quota" film, "The King's Plate," is being shot by Booth-Dominion Productions on a budget of $50,000, featuring Toby Wing on loan from Paramount. Burt Kelly is the moving spirit in the enterprise, with Sam Neufeld directing. The story is a race track yarn with part of the exteriors to be shot at the Woodbine track during the fall meet. A former skating rink has been rebuilt as a studio. Arthur Gottleib, Film Laboratories of Canada, and Jack Goetz are named as associates in the undertaking.

The reported interest of J. R. Booth, Jr., indicates that the enterprise is adequately bankrolled. He is a son of the late great Canadian lumber king, and thus the heir to millions. The younger Booth has been interested in film experiments for eight years and chiefly concerned with the technical end. He has back of him a considerable amount of experiment with color processes.

There are two Canadian film concerns with the name "Booth." There is no connection between Booth-Dominion Productions, now producing the Toby Wing film, and Booth-Canadian films. The last-named is reported seeking backing and distribution in Canada and the United States. A young Englishman named George Booth is the moving spirit. He seeks to establish a studio. He made a one-reeler of "The Bells" some years ago which he still has.

Vallee Points a Lesson

For film men, the two-week engagement of Rudy Vallee at the Canadian National Exhibition here was interesting from one viewpoint. Vallee, with his band and a floor show, opened to modest business only, but wound up his 14-day stay to turnaway business. The highlight was the way that Vallee sold himself, particularly to male audiences.

He said that his feminine following had a tendency to prejudice him with men and that this could best be beaten by first-hand treatment. Vallee took full advantage of the opportunity and did a superb job of solidifying his personal reputation in the area. It was an unusual example of the way a film player could use personal appearances to build himself with future audiences. Warner Brothers' Canadian organization cooperated in the Vallee campaign.

ERPI Leases Space In Old NBC Studios

Electrical Research Products, Incorporated, which controls important recording patents used by World Broadcasting System and others and which is in the business of making electrical transcriptions, has leased the three top floors of the old National Broadcasting Company headquarters at 711 Fifth Avenue, New York. The lease runs for ten years.

Erpi will use four studios and will be in active operation at the new quarters by the end of the year or early in 1936. The Bronx studios will be discontinued and activities will be concentrated on Fifth Ave.

This will have no effect on World Broadcasting System, which remains in its present quarters. World Broadcasting is a licensee of Erpi patents and operating as an independent company under the direction of Percy Deutsch, president.

Vast Chain of Costly Stations Called Key to U. S. Television

Europe Sitting Nearer Stage of Events Than America, Says Writer

by BENN HALL
Editor of Television Times

It is no passing coincidence that the leading nations are becoming, officially and unofficially, more and more concerned with the progress of television. America, Great Britain, Germany, Japan, Italy, Canada, France and other nations are making both independent and correlated efforts to introduce practical commercial television to their citizens.

Television is believed to be bound to become one of the next major developments in show business, possibly following a pageant of color; it is also possible that the "magic eye" will be used in the next war just as "wireless" received its baptism in the world conflict.

Europe seems to be sitting nearer the television stage than America. Two radio expositions recently were held across the sea. One, in Germany, exhibited television fully and proudly. The other, in England, took an ostrich-like attitude and bashfully hid her television charms from the public gaze—just as is done, for the most part, here in America.

European observers noted that the Berlin show was well-attended, but more money seemed to have been spent by smaller crowds in London. The German firms that displayed their television wares included Telefunken Loewe, Lorenz, Fernseh and TeKade. All but TeKade showed cathode ray reception, with the picture at the end of the tube itself. Images averaged 8 x 7 inches and were of various line-definitions. The Fernseh 320-line job was considered one of the best. Sets were priced at high figures, starting at over $300. There was much resentment on the part of many English television enthusiasts that the new art was not well represented at their show.

More Than Demonstrations

But there is much more going on than occasional demonstrations. Giant corporations and the wellknown poverty-stricken inventors are laboring in palaces (Alexandra in London) and cellars all over the world. In Italy, Magic Man Marconi is keeping his television strides to himself and the Government, but it is known that he is interested in determining exactly whether the ultra-short waves will be suitable for television images. France is falling over herself to keep up with Germany and England; she took a late start and now fears that television will play an important part in signal corps operations in the next war. In Canada, American inventor William Peck is going ahead with his station and programs in Montreal.

In the United States, interest focuses on the American Telephone & Telegraph coaxial cable between New York and Philadelphia, recently authorized by the Federal Communications Commission. Although the wire services filed objections, these protests were withdrawn later. RCA's announced plan to spend $1,000,000 to develop television has interested many; Farnsworth has patent arrangements with British Baird Television, Ltd., and Germany's Fernseh A. G. The independents are hard at it—from New York to the West Coast.

Link for Propaganda

One obvious reason for Germany's haste with television is the knowledge that the "magic eye" will form a most important link in the vast propaganda chain covering Germany today. Trucks have been equipped with cameras and sound recording mechanism and pictures have been developed and televised 75 seconds later. Germany announced some time ago that the 1936 Olympics would be televised.

Although England is officially committed to television, she makes haste slowly; $900,000 is expected to be spent by the Government to help introduce flying images.

In the Orient, Station JOAK at Tokio is conducting experiments. In Russia, progress is reported with motion picture-television experiments. South America looks to the United States and Europe for television leadership.

In Belgium it is reported that at least 50 applications were received recently for permission to make television transmission experiments.

Here in America, we have 28 experimental stations. A score or so of independent workers are experimenting, but do not transmit programs from stations and, therefore, require no license. Several thousand amateurs (no exact figures available) are tinkering with television, for the most part with reception.

The television "eyes" are seen and seeing in the background during a sight and sound broadcast by Florence Kyte.

Advertising possibilities of television vary in each country. It is safe to assume that advertising television will follow the general set-up of radio; that is, in nations where Government regulations forbid or limit advertising by radio, such a policy will be followed for television, and in nations where radio uses sponsored programs, as in the United States, such a policy will be followed. But there are certain physical, financial and geographical differences that must be understood.

Area a Problem in U. S.

Television programs will be sent either by "wire" from station to receiver or will be broadcast. If broadcast, it is very likely that the short-wave will be utilized. These pygmy waves have a radius of approximately 30 miles, unless Marconi succeeds in "bending" them and increasing their range. If the short waves are utilized and they "circulate" or cover only 30 miles, obviously a huge chain of stations must be maintained to insure a large television audience. Such a network would be highly expensive in America because of the vastness of the territory to be covered. If the new "coaxial line" proves successful, costs will be reduced and uniform programs assured.

But in England and, for that matter, the Continent, the story is different. Areas are smaller and it would be much simpler and less expensive to cover the country well. America, therefore, can learn much from European pioneering, but must, at all times, keep in mind Europe's physical advantages because of its compactness, as contrasted with our scattered and sprawling peoples.

Getting back to the more direct advertising potentialities, the attitude of the Government, particularly because of the worldwide and growing centralization of federalization of power, is of primary importance. A government, by encouraging or discouraging the manufacturers, the experimenters and future advertisers, can do much to advance or retard television.

In England, programs are not sponsored. They are government-prepared and generally designed to "elevate" rather than merely entertain listeners. English law does not forbid the acceptance of "sponsored programs," but the powers that be frown on such procedure. We quote from the official report of the Television Committee of January 31, 1935. Under the heading "Finance" the committee stated:

"We estimate that the cost of providing the London station, including all running and maintenance expenses, program costs and amortization charges (calculated on the basis of a comparatively rapid obsolescence) for the period up to December 31, 1936, will be £180,000 ($900,000).

"We have carefully considered the question of providing the necessary funds. Roughly speaking, the means suggested to us for so doing may be classified under two heads:

"a. Selling time for advertisements, and

"b. License revenue.

"We see no reason why the provision concerning sponsored programs in the existing license should not be applied also to the television service; and we think it would be legitimate, especially during the experimental period of the service, were the corporation to take advantage of the permission to accept such programs."

WHAT THEY FORESEE FOR TELEVISION

This statement was misunderstood in some British radio and advertising circles and was clarified by Major Gladstone Murray of the B. B. C. Said Major Murray:

"The simple facts are that, according to our charter and license, we are entitled to accept 'provided' programs, that is to say, appropriate program material paid for by outside organizations.

"These, of course, do not contain advertising matter, but we are at liberty to give a courtesy acknowledgment to the providers. The dance music from hotels and restaurants is a case in point."

Which seems to settle the question of television advertising in the British ether. It does not seem likely that England will drop her non-advertising radio policy to take up the practice of selling time on the air for picture transmission.

German Government Control

Plans in Germany, at present, indicate that the government will control television. It is understood that radio advertising will cease in Germany on October 1. A circular from the Propaganda and Public Enlightenment Ministry reports that newspapers and displays will be given the benefit of the advertising concentration.

In 1934, the American Federal Radio Commission adopted rules regarding the use of advertising programs in television transmission. The present Federal Communications Commission has retained these regulations. One requirement for permit to construct an experimental visual broadcast station was that "if sponsored programs are transmitted such sponsorship will not interfere with the program of research, and that the conduct of experiments will not depend only upon the sponsors as a means of defraying the cost of the experiments."

Aside from the many technical problems, there are several serious financial questions that must be solved.

W. R. G. Baker, vice-president of RCA Victor Co., in an analysis of television costs in May, 1934, as reported by the New York Times, said:

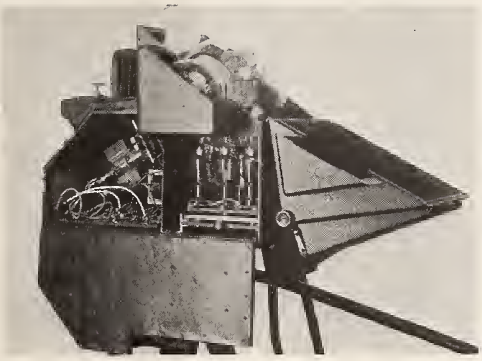
"If 700,000 persons should spend $300 apiece to equip their homes with television apparatus that would require a total expenditure of $210,000,000," he said. "To serve that many persons about 80 transmitting stations would have to be provided at a cost of $40,000,000, and another $40,000,000 would have to be spent to develop an interconnecting network. It would take $58,000,000 a year for costs of transmitter operation and for depreciation."

Added to this tidy little sum would be the cost of providing entertainment. Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, radio and motion picture engineer, recently discussed and compared motion picture and radio production and costs. The round figures are:

Yearly Film Production: About 1,000 hours; cost, $150,000,000.

Yearly Radio Production: From 40,000 to 50,000 hours; cost, about $100,000,000.

All of which means it will cost about $120,000 for an hour of film entertainment as compared with $2,500 a radio hour. It is difficult to conceive how present standards of radio output could be produced at today's cost of film productions. The solution seems to lie in reduced costs of films, limited number of television broadcasts and the use of other non-film or less expensive entertainment, such as stage plays, vaudeville, radio studio broadcasts and newsreels. Of course, old reels of pictures might be televised in the beginning. (Germany has done this.) There has been talk that the government, in line with its expenditure of public funds for relief projects, might finance television. It is difficult to see that the radio industry would welcome this support, particularly because of the implied or possible rigid government censorship, if not eventual ownership that might result. There have been suggestions that the government share introductory expenses with the radio industry.



The inside of the iconoscope television camera for outside pickup developed by Dr. V. K. Zworykin, of the RCA Victor television research laboratories at Camden, N. J.

The advertiser and that popular, somewhat elusive figure, the ultimate consumer, often wonder what television will be like. Sensational articles have likened it to a visitor from Mars, here on a buyer's holiday—or a fantastic bit of optical witchcraft which will enable one to see any place at any time by the mere pressure of a magical button. But to more sedate prophets of what television should be like, the matter is something like this. Television receiving sets will contain a screen about a foot or so square; or, mayhaps, larger pictures will be projected on a wall or larger screen similar to the projection of home motion pictures.

Television entertainment may not be continuous. There is no great necessity of seeing everything we hear—once the novelty wears off. A great symphony can be quite completely enjoyed, as they are today, by merely hearing it. If television programs are limited to certain set periods, similar to a legitimate theatre production, the costs to the broadcaster and advertiser in the case of both sustaining and sponsored programs will be lowered.

The field of television entertainment potentialities is about as wide and inclusive as the whole of show business and a great deal of sport events and many other subjects, including news flashes and educational lectures, might be added. It is possible that special films will be made for television programs. Possibly Broadway plays may be televised or special productions arranged for sight and sound transmissions.

Here, too, enters the possibility of sports being sponsored—somewhat similar to the way advertisers broadcast boxing matches. But this is open to all kinds of speculation.

The possibility of government taxation of programs and of sets should be kept in mind. Although, up to the present time, there have been only local and spasmodic attempts to tax radio entertainment, in a nation with a large percentage of its population on a dole (call it what we may) the possibility of taxing programs, possibly sets, may some day enter a legislator's topmost cavity and added complications and headaches will be in order for advertisers, stations and Johnny J. Fan.

Educational programs should find a large public. A University of Iowa professor has made extensive tests with television material and has indicated that television will be a welcome ally to the instructor. He televised various lessons and used charts and diagrams to illustrate the lectures.

Effects on Theatres

Television has divers possible effects on theatre properties. Evidently, judging from our present knowledge of the art, film producers will benefit from television. But the theatre owner, the exhibitor, is busy consulting horoscopes and looking for the right charms to ward off evil spirits that keep patrons away from the box office. On the other hand, some theatres may be aided by television. Newsreels might be flashed immediately to theatres—not to homes.

Most of the advertising, socalled, to date, has been publicity for stores, for theatres, for players and for inventors who sponsored or participated in television demonstrations.

As to advertising possibilities, the largest question of all, certain predictions can be made, based on facts and data which we now possess.

In radio, it is fairly safe to assert that if 5 per cent of a program's time is devoted to advertising, the public will not resent the plug. But when from 10 to 15 per cent of the "hour" is taken up with advertising spiels, the fan does begin to be conscious of the interruption. In publications, however, from 15 to 60 per cent of the contents (let us think of publications in the black) may be devoted to advertising. Imagine a program which contained 60 per cent advertising! Dial it out, kind sir! There seems to be one obvious lesson to be gleaned from such a comparison. The public will stand for more visual than sound advertising. As Dr. Goldsmith recently pointed out, the eye-arresting nature of motion will make it less objectionable than the ear-wearing qualities of much sound.

Interludes for Credits

It is very likely that sponsored programs will devote much of their time to entertainment with interludes for credit lines. But the possibilities of strong dramatizations of products themselves are evident.

All of which leads to the subject of costs. The number of artists suitable for television will be limited. Not only must they possess a speaking or singing personality, but they must have that indefinable element in their personality which will make them appealing "in person." Transmission charges, as already shown, will be high. The cost per fan will be higher than radio. Television receivers, in the beginning, should be high-priced. Therefore, a relatively small audience will be reached. Television, in the beginning, might be considered the "Rolls Royce of Advertising." Therefore, it appears that pioneer television will be particularly suited for higher-priced products intended for a class audience. In the beginning, television should not be particularly competitive to newspapers and magazines because of its higher costs (higher than radio today) and smaller audiences.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Good picture that pleased all. Above average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown—By all means the best Joe E. Brown picture to date. Entirely different than any of his other performances. It unquestionably establishes Brown as the screen's most able comedian. Splendid performance on the part of the supporting cast helped to put the picture over. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 1-3.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—Talk about entertainment! Believe me, this musical has everything. Jolson's singing of "A Quarter to Nine" is the hit of the show. We had requests to run reel No. 5 over and did after the last show and did they enjoy it. When you can make a musical to catch the ear of sawmill hands and miners, you've got something. Running time, 97 minutes. Played September 6-7.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien, Edward Everett Horton—A good musical comedy with catchy songs and well produced musical numbers. The brief part with Judy Canova, of hill-billy fame, stood out. Fine audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Is it fair to the stars to let the exchanges allow the exhibitors to double show pictures like this: "The Irish In Us" and "Judge Priest"? If so, it won't be long before James Cagney will be out of the racket, too. Played at the Globe Theatre in Berlin, Md.—C. E. Carey, Capitol Theatre, Ocean City, Md. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: Pat O'Brien, James Cagney—Did above average business for us. Story good, has all kinds of punch to it. Very good business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 13-14.—W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Should click in any situation. Down to earth comedy that makes some of the so called sophisticated offerings of late look like second rate product. Pulled well and pleased as nearly 100 per cent as anything we have screened in a long time. Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 15-17.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Here is one that they like and will tell you they do. In my opinion, this is the best comedy-drama made this year. Another one of those good pictures it's a pleasure to run.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

MAN WHO KNEW TOO MUCH, THE: Peter Lorre—About as much entertainment in this as a funeral. Skip it, by all means. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 20-21.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

PRINCESS CHARMING: Evelyn Laye—This picture is below the high aveage set by Gaumont British in their previous releases.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Mascot

HEADLINE WOMAN, THE: Heather Angel, Roger Pryor, Conway Tearle—A pleasing picture that satisfied.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HEADLINE WOMAN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—This is one of Mascot's pictures that every exhibitor should run. It is exciting from start to finish and every patron will be satisfied. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 17-18.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

HEADLINE WOMAN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel Good story and plenty of comedy will make this picture stand on its own. O. K.—John A. Mulligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Metro Goldwyn Mayer

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March, Freddie Bartholomew—The women liked Garbo and I still haven't found a man who did. This picture is one of those long drawn out affairs of the heart which men don't care for. Nothing about the picture to give it top ranking. Just another Garbo.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Stuart Erwin, Robert Young—Well, we have no band here. I guess that's why they didn't come in. It's a rugby picture, our town had just gotten a good beating, so rugby pictures are curtains to us. Poorest weekend business since summer.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BISHOP MISBEHAVES, THE: Edmund Gwenn, Maureen O'Sullivan—Not worth playing. Not a pleased customer in the house. Played one day and was I glad.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, June Knight—This is the best musical that has been produced for years. There is none of the "show must go on" stuff in it. The most entertaining song and dance numbers have been worked into one of the smoothest running and most fascinating stories you have ever seen. It's as clean as the proverbial "hound's tooth" and if there is anyone, anywhere, who does not like it, well, I just cannot imagine such a person. It's 100 per cent entertainment, so put your steam behind it and let the folks know it's coming to town. Running time, 99 minutes.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

CALM YOURSELF: Madge Evans, Robert Young—Only a fair picture for Robert Young. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 6-7.—W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich. General patronage.

CALM YOURSELF: Madge Evans, Robert Young—Played this on a double bill with "Alibi Ike." They came to see that one and "Calm Yourself" got a good reception. It has no draw but if you get them in, they'll like it.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

CALM YOURSELF: Madge Evans, Robert Young—A nice little comedy that pleased everyone. Nothing big, but it will please everyone and that's what we're looking for. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 19.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—This is a good picture of its kind. It brought out the old folks and those who like high class pictures. It lacked appeal to the masses, but nevertheless, did fairly well at the box office. This girl Luise Rainer gives much promise. The curtain speech by Powell at the end is very good. Played September 8-10.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—They came out crying. Was wonderful picture. They all raved about it, but my crying came in at the box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis—Excellent. Plenty of comedy, music and a nice story.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—More amusement packed in this picture than we have had for weeks. Do not be afraid of this and get behind it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce—Failed to pull, but pleased all who did turn out. Another title might have meant more at the box office. Picture itself is of clever plot and well done throughout. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 18-19.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Frachot Tone—Very good. Business good. Picture good. Everybody happy. There's an Englishman that almost walked off with the picture. Played September 1-3.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT: Franchot Tone, Una Merkel—An unpretentious program picture that is entertaining, but not above the ordinary. Satisfactory audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—A snap-bang-up picture, with everything that it takes to make swell entertainment. Eilers and Morris are a peach of a team and I hope to see them again teamed together, for it's a guarantee of an evening of pleasure. Running time, 62 minutes. Played September 5.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker—Good picture of its kind. Pleased. Business off. Let's have more reports in this department. Running time, seven reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

TIMES SQUARE LADY: Robert Taylor, Virginia Bruce—I consider this to be one of the best program pictures released during the year and our patronage seemed to feel the same. Many good comments and feminine raves over Robert Taylor. A fine box office attraction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—Real entertainment that creates friends for the theatre. A wholesome blend of action, comedy and romance. Perfect audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—A fine picture which pleased every one. Packed house second night. Play this.—Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

Monogram

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Norman Foster, Charlotte Henry—Another one of Monogram's surprises as far as showmanship is concerned. This picture, although not having a large crowd, pleased all who came. If well advertised it will do nice business. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 10-11.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

Paramount

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan, Sir Guy Standing—Used this on midweek bargain nights, and with the exception of "The Silver Streak," pleased the most of any picture run on those nights this year. Educational, thrilling and plenty of comedy. Made to order for our audience.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross—Drew fairly well on return engagement. Picture is fine. Give us more with Lanny Ross. Running time, nine reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

DEVIL IS A WOMAN, THE: Marlene Dietrich, Cesar Romero, Edward Everett Horton—No wonder they fired Von Sternberg. If this be art, give us junk. Slow and draggy and each moment seems like the last you can watch. There is better stuff in Dietrich than this. Let's have it. Played September 11-12.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pear River, N. Y. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice

Faye, Frances Langford, Patsy Kelly—A wholesome little flicker with just enough of everything to make it patron-pleasing. Not the great musical that its producers would have you believe, but above the average.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess, Joe Morrison, Helen Mack—This picture, adapted from the stage play, "Small Miracle," is an interesting gunman story which has the benefit of more originality than most of the law-and-order sagas, yet it does not rise above program picture classification. Satisfactory audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Ray Milland—This will easily rate in my list of the 10 best pictures I ran in 1935. One of those rare pictures that will come awfully close to pleasing any audience almost 100 per cent. Had many very favorable comments on this.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—They came to see the glamorous one in reduced numbers. Mae is losing her vogue. If you ask my audience they would say, too much of the same story. As in all of her pictures, her wisecracking is the main part of the show. But I think that she is on the way out for any exceptional business being done on her pictures.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West, Paul Cavanagh—The Decency League and those in charge of the Production Code must have taken a vacation while this picture went into circulation. This picture contains as many broad double meaning suggestive remarks as I can recall hearing in a picture. More pictures like this and it won't be long before the League of Decency will be on the warpath again. While this picture did above average business, I am glad I don't have to make my living showing pictures of a suggestive nature as most of the box office draws coming through are of such a nature that they can be shown to the whole family. The League of Decency were a great influence in bringing about the making of more wholesome pictures which helped the entire motion picture industry toward greater prosperity.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

HOP-ALONG CASSIDY: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison, Paula Stone—This is a dandy. You can show this picture on any change. Not at all like the general run of westerns, but a darn good picture. Didn't gross as I expected, but believe that the rest in this series will bring them in. Watch this boy, Jimmy Ellison; he's going places Played September 20-21.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: Burns and Allen—"Gracie Allen's Flop" is what I call it. The picture, while it is produced well and comes up to any standard, does not seem to create any business. Advertised it more than usual, but could not get them in. Burns and Allen do not mean a thing at my box office.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields—This is the best picture Mr. Fields has made. Full of comical situations that brings out the laughter. Was immensely enjoyed by our patrons.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields—A very deceiving title. Title pulled them in the first night and second night "Brodie" showed what word of mouth advertising does. How they panned it! Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 6-7.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields, Mary Brian—This comedy pleased every one and many saw it. Although draggy in places, it keeps the audience entertained and they were well satisfied. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 10-11.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—The best of the "G Men" pictures. If it had had a name, it would have grossed tremendous figures everywhere. The trouble was Paramount couldn't give us a print for three weeks after availability and then only in the middle of the week. Played September 18-19.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—This picture was exhibited on Bargain Night and plenty of people came to see it. It is a G-Man type of picture and plenty of action. Exhibitors should not hesitate to book this picture. It will prove a box-office success. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 20-21.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

MENACE: Paul Cavanagh—A very good mystery story that failed to bring them in due to there being no one in the cast to attract their attention. Story very well direced and acting good, but this does not mean a thing if it doesn't keep the box office busy. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 5.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

ONE HOUR LATE: Joe Morrison, Helen Twelvetrees—Very light story. Morrison sings a few songs and Twelvetrees plays the part of a dumb stenographer. Picture so light in entertainment, several walked out. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 3-4.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

PARIS IN SPRING: Tullio Carminati, Mary Ellis—You can write the names of all the people in your town on a postage stamp who like this picture. You will not need a magnifying glass to do it.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

SCOUNDREL, THE: Noel Coward, Julie Haydon, Hope Williams— It must be fun to thumb your nose at convention and produce pictures that will make exhibitors hate you. At least, Hecht and MacArthur seem to be enjoying themselves for they have produced another film which is destined to be traded off by small town exhibitors for anything from Dietrich to Betty Boop. The latest H. & M. melodrama has a pseudo-sophisticated story that will undoubtedly convince a host of adolescents that they are seeing life in all its Bohemian glory when Noel Coward wearily says, "I'm not interested in the masses." Julie Haydon, for the first time, is revealed as an interesting personality who can do more than stare blankly and ask, "Papa, what's beer?" as she has been forced to do in her previous picture. The whole cast gives an interesting performance and seems to be having a darn good time in doing it. And the photographer was also in on the fun. My personal opinions? I thought the picture was good. I like spinach, too.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SCOUNDREL, THE: Noel Coward, Julie Haydon, Hope Williams—The world's worst. There was not a single person in the audience knew what it was about. They called by phone and in person to ask if we could tell them. Some thought that we had missed a couple of reels in the picture. There is just one word for it: "awful," in every way. One has a lot to live down to give them something like "The Scoundrel" and ask them to like it. The boys that panned "Crime Without Passion" should see this one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SCOUNDREL, THE: Noel Coward, Julie Haydon—We exhibited this picture on Bank Night, but it wasn't the picture that got the crowd. Although something entirely different, this picture did not please. Our customers are still raving because we showed it. This picture will please a few, but not many. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 5.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

SHANGHAI: Loretta Young, Charles Boyer—A perfect picture exceedingly well done, and will please a very large per cent of the paying customers. We had average business last three days of week. The performance by Loretta Young is better than anything and supported by a wonderful cast you are assured of an extraordinary offering.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—Just fair title, did not appeal and hence no business. No star name value was another thing that hurt the picture. The public does not waste their money on unknown stars and a poor title.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—Although this picture was run on Bank Night, it wouldn't need the Bank Night to get the business. This was a swell picture and every one enjoyed it from start to finish. Joseph Cawthorn and Gail Patrick were excellent and Pinky Tomlin also deserves a merit. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 12.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott, Judith Allen—Used this for a special bargain show and it drew more business than a lot of specials we have run this summer. House was filled a few minutes after the first show started. However, the picture is not average Zane Grey entertainment. Story is entirely too disconnected.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

VIRGINIAN, THE (reissue): Gary Cooper, Richard Arlen, Walter Huston, Mary Brian—Paramount handed us a nice surprise with this one. Drew far beyond anything we had anticipated and pleased fairly well. Principal kicks were on the sound and photography, neither of which were good. Sound has indeed progressed a long way since the days this was made. Print otherwise in excellent shape. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 20-21.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WITHOUT REGRET: Elissa Landi, Kent Taylor—Used on a preview showing, this gave good satisfaction. On a regular booking, I doubt it would have drawn. Interesting drama of the romantic sort, with well-worked-out story, rather complicated, but well done. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 7.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn—Just the type of photoplay one would expect from this Booth Tarkington story, and the success of same lies in the box office value in Hepburn and Booth Tarkington's name as the author. It has always been quite a job to reproduce Hepburn's voice, but they did a much better job here and makes it better. Business just average four days first part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame—The best western we have ever had. It drew not only western fans, but everyone. One man told me it was "keen," and that seemed to be the consensus of opinion. It drew a big crowd, a big hand and a big gross. Played September 13-14.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins, Frances Dee, Alan Mowbray—I am at a loss to understand all the critical acclaim this picture has received. I appreciate the fact that it is the first feature length picture to be filmed in the new improved Technicolor, but I expected it to offer more solid entertainment. Frankly, it is far less entertaining than "La Cucaracha." The settings and costumes leave nothing to be desired as they have been designed to present the color in all its glory of the rainbow. The story is too episodic to please the average patron and the cast, with the exception of Miss Hopkins, is uninteresting. A very noisy picture results from most of the dialogue being shouted. I may be wrong, but I doubt the success of this picture in the smaller towns.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—The color is beautiful. There I ought to stop. But the picture is terrible. Hopkins screamed and screeched her way through it and there was no other "name" in it. The story was disjointed and sketchy and the picture boring and tiresome. Played September 15-17.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HURRICANE: James Barton, Helen Mack, Helen Westley—Good enough for the simple folk, although a few of the sophisticates complained. Would rate it average entertainment.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HURRICANE: James Barton, Helen Westley—Double billed this picture. Did a nice business, but don't know whether it would have stood alone. People thought it all right, so, after all, that's what we want.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler—This little Weidler girl certainly plays the part like an old trouper. Gene Stratton-Porter's stories always well liked; however, story changed to modern times, but pleased those who saw it. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 29-30-October 1.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

QUIGLEY BOOKSHOP

1790 BROADWAY NEW YORK CITY

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—Ran on Bank Night and our customers left the house well pleased. Plenty of dances and song hits in it. It will please all who come to see it. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 19.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—This one didn't seem to click, although it has all the ingredients to make a good musical. One of those musicals where all they do is talk about it and never get around to the show. However, there are some very good song and dance numbers. The dance Bill Robinson does is worth the price of admission. Did a fair business on it. Played September 15-16.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen, Heather Angel—This picture was excellent for its acting, but patrons like McLaglen as hero. He was grand as the Informer. This picture with plenty of advertising will make lots of money. Running time, 91 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart, Virginia Weidler—Excellent production. One of the best we have shown for months. Not a big special by any means, but full of audience appeal. Clean and most interesting. Played September 28.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

NITWITS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is a natural. The house was in an uproar from the first scene. They sure went for it in a big way. Plenty of laughs and thrills for the whole family. This is really a comedy; give it a good build-up and do business. The theme, "The Black Widow," is also very timely and offers a chance for some unusual exploiting. Played September 8-9.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—The best from this pair in a long, long time. Played it with the first of the Major Bowes series of two-reelers, and what a program it made. All comments good. Everyone wanted to see more of the Major Bowes subject. Running time, 81½ minutes. Played September 13-14. —G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Joel McCrea, Miriam Hopkins—Richest girl to the poorest box office. Too much money for our simple people. Was O. K., but no good for my creditors.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—Here's one that will surprise you. Although it gets off to a slow start, it's good all the way through and, any way, no audience could stand a whole show of the thrills that end up this railroad drama. This is the one that has them biting on the seats and going into hysterics because of the last two reels of thrills; they even stood up and yelled. We did a good business on this one on Friday-Saturday night. Play it. Played September 13-14.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Gave general satisfaction. However, I think there are altogether too many pictures of this type, a society murder mystery. One had to follow this closely to keep things straight. I missed one short scene and the outcome of the show meant nothing.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise —Not bad of its sort, but the print was old. Picture out of focus a lot of the time. What you could see of it was fair. But absolutely no draw.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—Is it so that this little girl, the world's sweetheart, is bad enough to be put in a double feature with such as "Public Hero No. 1," or is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Public Hero No. 1" so weak it is necessary for it to be played with little Shirley Temple to put it over, like the Globe Theatre in Berlin, Md., is now doing? Answer.—C. E. Carey, Capitol Theatre, Ocean City, Md. General patronage.

COCKEYED WORLD, THE: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe—We revived this roughneck picture and profited as a result. It is vulgar and obvious, but the patrons liked it well enough to ignore the women's out-of-date styles.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

COWBOY MILLIONAIRE, THE: George O'Brien—Not the best picture from this star, but on the whole a very satisfactory one. Our patrons liked it and turned out well. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 6-7.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Rochelle Hudson—The little girl still draws them. Good picture for her to show her talents. She is a wonder and it is too bad that she will have to grow up.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—No use to make a report on this picture. I just want to add my indorsement to previous reports that it's her best and the folks come out from the cross-roads to see Shirley.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles—How they raved about this little genius. Unquestionably an all-Shirley Temple show with Shirley displaying all her talents. Story merely a "Daddy Long Legs" with Shirley added, but it pleased 100 per cent and that's what counts. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 8-10.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Started a little slowly, but soon became a splendid comedy. Drew the biggest crowd we have had for months. One of his best audience appeal productions to date. Played September 7.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Good entertainment with Will Rogers playing an unimportant part. Our patronage is highly pleased to learn of Fox's decision to release Rogers' two last films.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Stories for Gaynor are slipping, which is evidenced by the second and third night reaction at the box office. A fair picture, but does not warrant top classification in price. Running time, 91 minutes. Played September 15-17.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

GINGER: Jackie Searle, Jane Withers—Did a good business on this one. It's a picture for the whole family. Very amusing and interesting all the way through. Concerns an orphan in the slums and her adventures with a would-be child specialist on Park Avenue. Jane Withers as "Ginger" is very good. Play it; you can't go wrong. Played September 22-23.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien—Just fair. O'Brien fans disappointed. Good story of its kind, but practically a repetition of "Under Pressure." Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 20-21.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—One of the nicest pictures we've played for a long time. Everyone liked it; it was 100 per cent clean and just up my alley, but the sad part of it, it did poor business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—(See C. E. Carey's report on "The Irish in Us.")

ORCHIDS TO YOU: Jean Muir, John Boles—Very pleasing program picture, well directed and acted. Not a big picture, but pleased everyone who saw it. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 11-12.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Not as good as previous Temple pictures, but above the average at the box office.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles—Not so hot. Dozens of pictures have been made with the story about the Motion Picture Industry and they have all been washouts. This one is no exception.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

STEAMBOAT 'ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers—If Rogers has been a natural in your community, this will mop up. It may not be his best picture, but they will still like it.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Henry Fonda, Rochelle Hudson—This is a delightful old story, well played. The scenes are marvelous for their realism. Gets out the old folks who remember years ago paying several dollars to see it. The cast is excellent and fine directing has made a picture chuck-full of entertainment. Running time, 84 minutes.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—Very weak story. A few laughs, but not a business getter. James Dunn is a very capable star, but Fox is certainly cutting his throat with our patrons with this kind of material. Running time, 72 mnutes. Played September 22-24.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—Seemed to please the audience; not the best Dunn has played in. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 19.—W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich. General patronage.

FOUR CONTRIBUTORS JOIN REPORTERS

New contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" in this issue are the following:

W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich.

C. E. Carey, Capitol Theatre, Ocean City, Maryland.

Returning to the fold after a long absence from reporting to the department are these:

Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y.

G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, North Dakota.

Read the reports of these four showmen in the department this week.

United Artists

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—After playing the Arliss pictures to a select few at a loss, it certainly is a pleasant change to get one from United Artists that pleases. This is a picture you can boost. The box office returns on this one were away above average. Beautiful scenery, comedy by Oakie, and Gable and Young to draw the regular fans. Played September 21-22.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Sothern, Merle Oberon—This was just an ordinary picture, not nearly as good as it was represented to be. Running time, nine reels. Played September 8-10.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town and rural patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce—Another "G Men" picture which gave general satisfaction on the weekend spot. Usual gun play and killing, with capture of the "bad man." Running time, 12 reels.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WEDDING NIGHT, THE: Gary Cooper, Anna Sten—Pulled poorly, and on the whole did not prove too satisfactory from the entertainment standpoint. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 11-12.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

CHINATOWN SQUAD: Lyle Talbot, Valerie Hobson—Although this is just average entertainment (the kind that no one kicks or praises), it did draw somewhat better than I expected. Most pictures draw less than we hope for, so when we get an exception like this, we are naturally pleased.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Phillips Holmes, Jane Wyatt, Florence Reed—A slow-moving costume picture that does not compare with "David Copperfield." Fair patron reaction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Lyle Talbot, Heather Angel—One of Universal's best shows in the 1934-1935 group. Drew well, as I used it with last chapter of "Call of the Savage."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MOON: Ricardo Cortez, Dorothy Page—Clever comedy of the familiar dual role theme, which might have been a real hit, but did not quite make the grade. Dorothy Page of radio fame looks good for the future, with proper casting and stories. Nice voice, but nothing to use it on in this case. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 21.—M. R. Harrngton, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PRINCESS O'HARA: Chester Morris, Jean Parker, Henry Armetta—This is a peach of a picture. Has everything, action, comedy, romance, an excellent horse race and everything to make it attractive. No showman will go wrong in booking it. Played September 14.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SHE GETS HER MAN: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—Picture is a good comedy, not much to it in story, but it pleased the audience. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 26.—W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich. General patronage.

WEREWOLF OF LONDON, THE: Warner Oland, Henry Hull—A good picture of the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" type that was well liked by our patrons. Running time, 74 minutes.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Joe opened his mouth and they poured right in. Dusted off the S. R. O. sign and Warners made me do it again. They deliver the goods and the good ones. This one is the best Brown has ever made and it did the best business. Played September 7-8.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

DINKY: Jackie Cooper, Mary Astor—Played this on a double bill with "The Arizonian." It deserved a better fate than it got. Never got a first run in this territory. But better entertainment you can't get. Another example of where Warners delivered the goods. The kid is growing up, but he is still appealing. This one was a "sleeper" for us. We thought it just a picture, but they certainly liked it and gave it a hand. Played September 13-14.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

DON'T BET ON BLONDES: Warren William, Claire Dodd, Guy Kibbee—An amusing program comedy with a clever characterization by Guy Kibbee as a southern colonel. Good audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FRONT PAGE WOMAN: Bette Davis, George Brent—Satisfying newspaper yarn. Davis and Brent go very well together. Plenty of comedy. Okay.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

FRONT PAGE WOMAN: Bette Davis, George Brent—Very good entertainment, but no draw at all. They stayed away, but those that came liked it. Played September 4-5.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts—This is a 100 per cent audience picture. It will be thoroughly enjoyed by everyone who sees it. The story is about them being rich. Zasu wants to play society and Guy is just a common fellow.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Edward Everett Horton, Zasu Pitts—Played this on a double bill with "Men Without Names." This is a great comedy done in typical Warner style. Typical Warner style is always good, so that tells that story. Horton walked away with the picture.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Glenda Farrell—A very poor story to introduce this clever little girl. Jason has the makings of a drawing card with better material to put her in. A different type than Shirley Temple, but Jason was well liked by everyone. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 18-19.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Patsy Kelly—Only a fair picture for the stars that played in it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 15-16.—W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich. General patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Pat O'Brien, Dick Powell, Patsy Kelly—An amusing comedy with Dick Powell miscast as a dizzy aviator in love with the mythical "Miss Glory." The audience response was good, but I thought the picture a trifle silly.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Good comedy, typical of these stars' previous offerings, though not quite so good. Pulled fairly well and gave general satisfaction. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 13-14.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

New Fan Magazine Makes Appearance

The Street & Smith Publishing Company has launched a motion picture fan magazine which will be devoted to novelized film stories and will be called "Movie Action Magazine." The book is designed as an aid in exploiting various pictures by tieups with local theatres for special stunts and the use of display cards. The first issue will feature a novelized version of "The Last Days of Pompeii" as well as several shorter versions of eight other pictures.

John E. Nanovic is editor of the new book and Robert Sidman associate editor. The policy of the new monthly will be to obtain serializations of pictures for release on the newsstands simultaneous with the release of the picture in theatres.

Two Directors Given New Radio Contracts

Jean Yarborough, formerly assistant to director George Stevens, has been promoted to the directorship of two-reel comedies by RKO Radio in Hollywood. His first assignment will be the direction of a two-reel subject starring Ford Sterling.

The New England rights to the "Wandering Jew" have been acquired by the Hub Film Exchange in Boston.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

SIOUX CITY, IOWA

Dear Herald:

We are going to put you wise to something. Listen. Should you ever go to Sioux City and want to have a good time and spend a very enjoyable evening, go down to the Iowa theatre and meet the manager, Nate Dax, and if Nate should ask you to go up to his house to meet Mrs. Dax and to spend the evening with them, don't you go unless you want to have a most enjoyable time.

Nate invited Sherm Fitch and this rambling vagabond to go up to his home and spend the evening, which we did, and it will be some little time before we forget the delightful time we had.

Nate seemed to know exactly what Sherm wanted, so he went to the sideboard and shook something in a shaker for a while and we could see Sherm's mouth begin to water clear across the room. Then after a while Mrs. Dax sat down to the piano and began to rattle the keys (and say Ezra, she can rattle' em, too), and then she sang some very lovely songs, like "Old Black Joe" and "Way Down upon the Swanee River," and before we realized it that doggone clock of Nate's said it was 12:30. Then we persuaded Sherm to go and we went back to the hotel. Sherm has one trait that we will bet nobody can beat, and that is, when it comes to visiting, but maybe that is why the RKO service is playing about every theatre in South Dakota and western Minnesota. And then again, maybe it's because RKO has been getting the boys a lotta money. Well, anyhow, don't forget Mr. and Mrs. Dax.

Speaking of Canton

Our first visit to Canton, South Dakota, was several years ago when we went there to trade some Holt county, Neb., land for a stock of goods. We hope the fellow who got the land didn't set soaked as hard as we did. But then, that's gone over the dam.

Our next visit to Canton was the past week when Sherm drove over there to see W. P. Lowell, who operates the Lowell theatre. How we ever came to miss going to Canton before now and meeting Mr. and Mrs. Lowell is a mystery that is beyond solution. We went to Canton this time and met these two delightful folks and we saw a very fine theatre in a very fine town operated by a man who evidently knows the business.

Mr. Lowell asked us to renew his subscription to the HERALD, which was not only a pleasure for us, but it indicated that he had most excellent judgment in his selection of trade journals. Canton is in the southeastern part of Iowa and too closely located to Sioux City to permit of that city ever becoming the metropolis of the West. Glad we met you, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell.

The Good Towns

E. W. Kundert operates the Empress theatre at Bersford, which is also located in South Dakota. Somehow it is funny how they came to locate the good towns in South Dakota. Iowa is just as good a state and she has a lot of good towns, but Iowa was settled some time after Paul Revere rode old Fan that time and South Dakota was settled before Lydia E. Pinkham discovered her vegetable compound, which became such a boon to suffering humanity. Well, anyhow, Mr. Kundert believes in reading a worthwhile magazine, which accounts for giving us his renewal. The Empress theatre is a darn good place to spend an evening, if you ask us.

Roy Mundon operates the O. K. theatre at Lake Andes. We don't know very much about Roy except that he impressed us as being like his theatre, O. K., and we don't know very much about Lake Andes except that it used to be a mighty fine lake for bass. But speaking of bass. We are going to take a few days off and go up to Sherm's lodge on a lake near Park Rapids, Minn., and get material for a good bass story. Anyhow, when you go fishing in Lake Andes go over to the town and call on Roy and see a good show at his theatre.

Cheaper Than to Swim

H. S. Tammen operates two theatres in Yankton. Yankton used to be an Indian trading post before Tammen opened his theatres and now there isn't an Indian left in Yankton, except the boys who beat the tom-toms and dance the war dance at the W. N. A. X. radio station.

They have a bridge charge of 50 cents to cross the Missouri, which you are expected to pay or else stay on the other side. We took this matter with H. S. and, of course, kicked about the charge, and H. S. consoled us by saying that it was cheaper to pay that than to try and drive across when the water was high unless April Shower could swim. Doggone that Tammen, anyhow; he doesn't claim to have any Sioux blood in him. He's probably Irish.

Forward to the March

George L. March operates the March theatre at Vermillion. They named the theatre "March" probably because about everybody in Vermillion marches right down there when it is time for the show. He and his father and his brother (and some more of the March family) own and operate both theatres in Vermillion and one in Haworden and two in Le Mars, Iowa, and two in Wayne, Neb., and these theatres keep them so busy that they don't have time to catch many catfish in the Missouri. But they do find time to read the HERALD. Probably that is why they are such successful theatre operators.

Here's one for you to figure on. If they have to replant nine-tenths of the trees in that "Shelterbelt," how many eggs can a blue pelican hen lay before it rains? Ask the faculty.

George J. Ehlers of Worthington, Minn., built his New Grand theatre right on the main highway so the people going from one place to another would have a chance to see a good show, and the funny thing about it is that they have all come to know that, too. George and his New Grand have a reputation that has spread all over southwest Minnesota. If you want excellent treatment visit the New Grand. We are not asking George a darn cent for this.

Protecting Fifi

But speaking of jazz orchestras and crooners. The other night we heard a little girl playing "Me-me-ra-do" on the piano while her little dog Fifi was whining to go out. There should be a law passed to protect these dogs.

Did you ever meet Eddie Ashkins, who sells United Artists service out of Minnesota? Well, if you ever do, don't ask Eddie to have one—that is, unless you have two bits that isn't working. Eddie reminds us a whole lot of a redheaded girl we used to know back in Indiana, but she is a grandma now.

We called at Fulda, Minn., to see George Rauenhorse of the Crystal theatre. He had gone away, but we had a visit with Mrs. Rauenhorse, and if George will forgive us for saying it, we would like to suggest that he showed mighty good judgment. We hope he will be at home next time.

There was a carnival on at Slayton, Minnesota, when we called on Ole Viste of the Murray theatre and Ole was playing Will Rogers in "Steamboat Round the Bend," and the carnival seemed to draw more people away from his theatre than it should when he had such a picture as that. We will betcha we could have a whole lot of fun with Ole. He wanted us to stay but Sherm wouldn't do it. Doggone that doggone Sherm, anyhow!

Then we drove down to Marshall to see W. R. Hiller of the New State theatre and he told us that he had just sent his check in to renew his subscription to the HERALD. You betcha, that's the right thing to do. W. R. was getting ready to go up to North Dakota chicken-hunting, and we wouldn't think of delaying him, because we have gone chicken hunting ourself a lotta times. Wish we could have gone with him.

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 286.—This question comes from a Boston, Mass., projectionist who says, "If it were known that I asked these questions, Brother Richardson, you can imagine the kidding I would get, and probably from some who would themselves like to ask the questions did they dare. I therefore ask that my name be withheld." The questions are: (A) Is there any means by which the projectionist can himself test the sound absorbing effect of the various materials employed to line theatre walls and ceilings and ascertain which is the most efficient? (B) What causes loudspeakers to get out of phase with each other? How may the condition be detected by the projectionist, and what is the remedy? (C) What may cause a loudspeaker to develop scratchy sound, as though two metals were rubbing together? What is the remedy?

Answer to Question No. 280

Bluebook School Question No. 280 was: (A) No matter how well designed it may be, equipment containing as many inter-related parts as are required for motion picture-sound reproduction and projection may develop trouble when it is in operation. What is the best means for insuring trouble-free operation?

The engineers who formulated this question say:

"Trouble that develops during operation may be reduced to a minimum, or even entirely eliminated if the equipment is properly taken care of and inspected or checked over frequently and thoroughly. Cleanliness and neatness are of prime importance in the prevention of trouble. Dirty equipment is certain to develop trouble. Dirty soundheads will cause distorted reproduction and loss of volume; also, dirty soundheads may be the cause of no ground. Dirt on storage batteries will cause noisy reproduction and shorten the life of the battery. Dirty commutators will cause hum in the loudspeakers. Dirty exciter lamps, photocells or lenses will cause distortion and low volume.

"Care should be exercised when cleaning equipments to prevent the disturbance of adjustments on the various parts of the apparatus. This is especially true of the sound optical system, which is delicately adjusted and must not be disturbed when the soundhead is cleaned. However, even with the best of care trouble may occasionally develop which requires immediate correction, hence it is important that the projectionist be ready to meet the situation with a well conceived, definite plan of action."

Names of those submitting acceptable answers are omitted because I would like to publish many of the answers received. There are at least 300 very good ones, and some that I consider pretty nearly perfect.

Charles Oldham, Norwich, Conn., says: "The best preventive of trouble is through close cooperation between the service engineer and projectionist. The projectionist must have a good general idea of the function of every part of the sound system, which includes knowledge of what every part of every equipment is and exactly how it serves its purpose. This knowledge may be had in part from the equipment manufacturers and service engineers and by studying the equipments thoroughly. Study and understanding makes it unnecessary to proceed by guess. It substitutes knowledge for guesswork. The whole system must be examined."

G. E. Doe replies: "The best means is for the projectionist to know his business thoroughly and attend to it, giving it his whole attention while on duty, plus some thought while off duty. It of course is necessary that the management be willing to supply all those things necessary to keeping the equipments in first-class condition."

D. Danielson says: "Constant, diligent and intelligent care of each and every one of the related parts is necessary to keep any equipment in the 'pink' of condition. To make this care effective and avoid overlooking some minor yet important part, as well as to insure regularity of inspection, a regular routine of inspection is indispensable. The intervals between inspections must be determined by experience, local conditions (number of hours of operation per day), manufacturers' recommendations, and good, plain horse-sense. But the inspections must be thorough each time. Also at regular intervals there should be a general check-up. Inspections should be sufficiently frequent to secure adequate care without overdoing things. It must be rigid and compelling, yet flexible enough to cope with varying circumstances as they arise.

"The best plan is, I believe, to list those things that must be done weekly, those semi-weekly, and those daily, with the day on which each is to be attended to, and form the rigid habit, regardless of what happens, of doing those things on their appointed day."

Barney DeVitte, helper of Utah, says: "(1) A thoroughly competent projectionist is the best insurance of trouble-free operation, and to be that, one must thoroughly understand the equipment he has charge of. The projectionist who has not a thorough knowledge of the apparatus he must handle certainly cannot be expected to cause it to function perfectly. (2) The equipment, for best results, or even decent results, for that matter, must be kept scrupulously clean in all its parts. Dirty equipment will inevitably develop trouble. (3) To keep apparatus, such as is employed in sound reproduction and projection in good condition, there must be periodic, not-too-far-apart thorough inspections."

A. F. Sprafke writes: "Trouble-free operation is just as big a problem as is the sound reproducing system itself, with all its inter-related parts. I find myself utterly unable to believe, advertisements to the contrary, that there is any such thing as a trouble-free sound system, but the fact remains that trouble can be reduced to a minimum and kept that way. When sound came it was just thrown into our laps, with a few pointers given the projectionist by installation engineers, the chief one of which was 'let the equipment alone!' Under such circumstances there was but one logical course to pursue, namely, settle down to the study of sound equipment and all its component parts. Each projectionist must ask himself whether or not he pursued this course diligently. If he did, he now should be thoroughly competent and able to avoid trouble—for that is the real answer to the question as asked—competence. If knowledge be limited or absent, how can the projectionist make competent tests, inspections, etc.? Daily and periodic tests and inspections are necessary to enable the remedying of faults before the zero hour arrives. The projectionist must know where to look for trouble and what to do when it is located. In order to do this he must understand the working principles of each part of the equipment and its effect on the system or equipment as a whole. Using tabs and trick lighting systems are all right as far as they go, but they are merely short cuts and of small value in locating the exact point of difficulty. I might write thus for an hour, finally coming right back to my original statement that the most intimate approach to trouble-free operation is thorough knowledge of the equipment, its operating principles and all its parts. The man lacking in such knowledge has no right place in the modern projection room."

I wish I might publish many more of the splendid answers to this question. They indicate the advancement of progressive projectionists far beyond and above the old by-guess, monkey-wrench and screwdriver days.

EXHIBITORS PROTEST CHANGING OF TITLES
FWC AND WARNER SIGN CHANCE GAMES
CINEMA CRAFTSMEN, LABOR UNIT, FADES
TWO PICTURES START, EIGHT ARE FINISHED

Title changing, one of Hollywood's chief occupations, is beginning to vex exhibitors. New release titles for pictures that have been publicized and exploited under different names while in production are announced almost daily by nearly all studios. The longer a picture has been in production, and the more prominent the star, the greater the damage, they say, when a new name is given it. For example, RKO recently changed the title of the Lily Pons picture from "Love Song" to "I Dream Too Much." The picture was in production for more than 10 weeks, and thousands of words were printed about it under its original title. Exhibitors contend that when it is released as "I Dream Too Much" the public will think it is either a short or an old film, and will pass it by to await Miss Pons' new picture, "Love Song." At Paramount Jan Kiepura's picture, which has been widely publicized as "Song of the Nile," will appear as "Give Us This Night." And most other studios have given similar cause for complaint.

300 RADIO AMATEURS STRANDED EACH WEEK

More than three hundred crooners, musical saw artists, one-man bands, boy sopranos, opera singers, Swiss bell ringers, mountaineer musicians, and impersonators are being stranded in New York every week as they seek fame on the various amateur hours broadcast from Manhattan radio stations, the Emergency Relief Bureau has reported.

The ERB, which shares with the federal government the task of caring for transients left destitute in New York, said that a discussion had been held with Major Edward Bowes, master-of-ceremonies of the best known program of this sort, in an effort to work out some solution whereby the number of transients would be reduced.

No matter what the cause of this present influx of hopeful performers, ERB officials are determined to stop it. Last week, they said, an entire brass band applied for relief.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

SANDWICHES AND SLUMBER

The writer of the following letter to this department is one of our leading Round Tablers. He speaks of the many accessories looked for in the equipment of the successful manager and stresses the fact that very little has been said by authors of the various articles on "time out" for the 24-hour-a-day theatreman. We set down a few words in response.

Dear Mike:

Just in the nature of passing comment. Happened to be going through my files of the Round Table Club for the last year and a half looking for something and in the course of my perusal noticed many articles dealing with the qualifications and duties expected of the successful manager.

Mentioning just a few, such as: personal supervision all departments, planning and arranging exploitation campaigns, taking an active interest in community affairs, which means meetings, being prominent in social and service organizations, greeting patrons as they enter and bidding them good night, watching the first performance, "being a good mixer and getting out among your friends," staging kiddie shows and radio broadcasts, personal supervision of cleaning, maintaining church and school connections, knowledge and understanding of all mechanics of operations, proper maintenance of equipment, looking after comfort of patrons, knowledge of likes and dislikes of Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith in the way of pictures, service staff supervision and meetings . . . and a few more that I might add myself.

It occurs to me with but twenty-four hours in a day and but seven days in a week, it would be impossible to locate any manager who could qualify one hundred percent. It strikes me that after reading the numerous suggested requirements the only way one could hope to attain anywhere near perfection, would be to hire himself a couple of more managers of equal capabilities.

In none of the stories did I see any mention made of time out for an occasional sandwich or a couple of hours sleep.

There's nothing personal in the above, but should you publish it . . . please don't mention its origin, as it might be misinterpreted.

Oct. 5, 1935

Dear Member:

Well, just to keep the record straight, so to speak, the articles you refer to have been published in these pages, we believe, more for the purpose of adding to the sum total of general showmanship-knowledge than to check managers' qualifications. In most instances these writings have been authored by managers like yourself and are the results of their findings on the subjects you mention.

Leaving aside for a moment the question of "sandwiches and slumber," we'd like to point out that though what you say is true, there is a surprising number of managers who qualify handsomely in the listing of your "musts."

How they ever get around to doing all of it and so well, is something to cause wonder, and we doubt if there are employers in many other lines who demand and actually receive as much competence from their workers. And the hell of it is that this high degree of excellence is so often taken for granted instead of being carefully tended and protected by the powers that be.

Yes, there are exhibitors who list manpower among their most invaluable of assets and treat managers accordingly but the number unfortunately is far from impressive. There are too many managers forced to eat on the run.

Whether the boys receiving the breaks are satisfied to leave things be, and those who are not, too discouraged to protest, we cannot say. But in the meantime we shall continue to lead the movement for better working conditions and to publish such letters as yours. It is to be hoped they will eventually bring the industry to realize that it would be good business at least to provide the theatre manager with sufficient time and even more for the well-earned "sandwich and slumber" you emphasize.

THE ANNUAL STRUGGLE

Snow is falling. The birdies and guys with money are headin' for the South and the odor of mothballs is in the land. Though lots of the laddies are already rassling with the problem, the suggestions for Fall and Winter business in this issue give formal notice that the annual struggle to get them away from the coal-stove and up to the boxoffice is again to hand—and very prominently.

More of the same next week and to those who contributed, well, "thanks a million." (free ad)

Hosts Author For Special Screening

The author of "Hop-a-Long Cassidy," Clarence E. Mulford, lives in the small town of Bridgton, Me., not very far from Portland, where Harry Botwick holds forth at the State Theatre. And as Mr. Mulford had yet to see his story in celluloid, Harry conceived the idea of putting on a special showing for him in Bridgton, tying in the stunt to a leading Portland daily to insure the resultant publicity.

Eddie Ruff, Paramount exchange manager in Portland, arranged the screening and was represented at the show by his booker, Lester Hughes, who traveled to the author's home town with Botwick and the newspaper gang.

Everything went off as scheduled and though Mr. Mulford was pleased with the screening he was no more so than Botwick, who wound up with a two-column story and photo in the Portland papers.

Bill Ties "Sanders" To Ethiopian War

With war actually being waged in Ethiopia and the papers filled with news from the front, Bill Leggiero's actionful colored throwaway, size 11 by 18 inches and printed on both sides on his date for "Sanders of the River" at the Avon, Utica, N. Y., illustrated below, is especially timely.

Labeled "War Extra" with the banner head shouting, "Can Mussolini Conquer Ethiopia?" Bill's copy tied in his picture to the general discussion on what chance the Africans had to defeat the "white man." Full figure of Il Duce gave the herald further prominence, as did the box illustrating the war drums, now being featured in all the news stories. The reverse side was given over to a five-column press book mat and further theatre copy.

Although Leggiero put this one over some weeks back, it can be used now by theatremen still to play this picture. It is also a handy bit of high-power advertising for any picture with an African background, current or about to be released.

BROWN AND WOODIN SEPTEMBER WINNERS

Theatremen from Pennsylvania Take Down Silver and Bronze Plaques; Both First-Timers

by A-MIKE VOGEL

It's Pennsylvania all the way in the September competitions, as theatremen in the Keystone State crash through for both the Silver and Bronze. Here is how they finished by majority vote of the judges, Charles Moskowitz, of Loew Theatres; Robert Gillman of Paramount Pictures and Leon J. Bamberger of RKO Radio Pictures.

Dick Brown, manager, Rowland Theatre, Wilkinsburg, Pa., is voted the September Silver on MGM's "China Seas." Larry Woodin, manager, Arcadia Theatre, Wellsboro, Pa., is awarded the September Bronze on Warner Bros.' "Bright Lights."

Brown has the distinction of winning his plaque after many tries and is, incidentally, the first manager in the Harry Kalmine district supervised by C. J. Latta, to win a Silver, these Pittsburgh Warnerites having already taken down a number of the second-place Bronze plaques. Dick's theatre, the Rowland, is a subsequent-run, playing after downtown Pittsburgh.

The town of Wellsboro has a population of only 3,500, with no daily paper. Woodin plays from four to six changes weekly and his stunning job for his Quigley entry which rated him such signal recognition might be offered as another answer to the small-town showmen who feel their locations are against their chances of winning Award recognition.

The only two First Mentions given in September go to two previous plaque winners. Sid Holland, Elkhart Amusement Co., Elkhart, Ind., Bronze plaque recipient in April, did a nice job of work on Columbia's "She Married Her Boss," and Ralph Lawler, August Bronze winner, is recognized for an outstanding campaign on "The Perfect Tribute," the MGM Lincoln short. Lawler sent in his entry before his transfer to the Newman, in Kansas City.

14 Honorable Mentions

Eight Honorable Mentions go to newcomers in the Competitions, and six to theatremen who have previously gained recognition in other months. The detailed list and their entries is carried in column to right and it is to be noted that quite a few of the first-timers are from smaller situations, where a lot of smart showmanship originates. Engraved sheepskin certificates go forward to all First and Honorable Mention winners.

With the September Competitions decided, there stills remains three months in which theatremen anxious to get in on that trip to Hollywood have an opportunity to qualify. As already noted, winners of the monthly Silver and Bronze plaques during 1935 are eligible.

The Big Prizes are round trips by air via TWA to the studios and a week of fine entertainment in addition to the presentation of the 1935 Grand Awards. Are you acomin'?

To build up his kid patronage, "Snuff" is offering a couple of bikes to those attending all twelve chapters of "Call of the Savage." Cards are punched each week, bikes on display in lobby and store windows.

SOME "TOP HAT" STUFF

The folks from here and there have been doing quite a bit of this and that to put over RKO Radio's "Top Hat" and below are listed various campaigns as reported from the field, ranging from Atlantic City, south to Dallas, and then 'way up to Ontario, across the border.

Blumenstock Stencils Bathing Outfits

Bally in Atlantic City as far as concerns the beach is very tough and the local gendarmes watch this angle very carefully. Little circusing is allowed around the boardwalk and therefore an extra bow is indicated for the efforts of Sid Blumenstock, A. C. Warner Theatres zone publicist, who worked out the campaign under the supervision of Herb Coplan, zone manager.

Accompanying photo shows how Sid put over his beach bally, enlisting 20 youngsters to wear those commodious old time bathing suits across the backs of which were stenciled the attraction and theatre credits. Another water angle was a boat carrying a 30-foot banner which patrolled the beach front.

Another standout boardwalk stunt was the planting of a large banner across the face of an apartment house fronting on the walk. Band in lobby played the hit tunes shot over the p.a. system to the boardwalk, with girl singer helping out.

Short Plants Pinch Of Tophatted Ushers

Dallas, Texas, seems to be another of those spots where the majesty of the law frowns upon public ballys. And with this in mind, Paul Short, of the Majestic Theatre, as related by A. D. Deason, publicist, arrayed six of his ushers in toppers and tails. These he sent over to the roof garden of a leading hotel for lunch, where they were promptly pinched for the stunt. The resultant publicity mentioned the name of the attraction and theatre, which Paul secured while having his boys disengaged from the local John Laws.

Another neat break was a five-column shot of the theatre forces in tails and toppapers in the lobby taking a bow for contributing to the local free milk fund sponsored by newspaper. Head included title with further breaks in the caption below.

Then Sid Scott, who does a bit of personal costuming to advertise some of his shows at the Capitol, Windsor, Canada, hooked his leading department store to a page of advertising that was nice going indeed.

Usherettes Costumed To Plug Date

At the Poncan Theatre, in Ponca City, Okla., Rut Neilsen tells us, eight of the best lookers among the usherettes were dolled up in the high skimmers, white mess jackets, dark trousers and white shoes for the date. And of course, according to Rut, the gals aroused plenty of that good ole wide comment.

In New York, at the Palace, further admits Neilsen, the usherettes and cashiers wore the coronet braids as sponsored by Ginger Rogers in the picture and manufactured by a local company on a tiein.

Fair Officials Aid Morris on "Farmer"

Tying in with the Fair Association, Seymour L. Morris, Schine's Colonia Theatre, Norwich, N. Y., for "Farmer Takes a Wife" secured permission to send a horse and buggy around track previous to races. Couple dressed as farmer and his wife drove bannered gig. For his street bally hay wagon with p.a. system plied streets playing old time music for three days.

Through cooperation of feed company, merchant gave away 400 pounds to farmer traveling farthest distance to witness picture and 400 to the farmer bringing in the largest family. Tieup was announced on screen and special handbills were distributed at fair grounds and sent to rural mailing list. Feed display was planted in lobby with explanatory copy, and several window displays of wearing apparel worn in olden days were secured.

Merchant Aids Prust In "Hoosier" Hat Giveaway

Theodore Prust, exploiteer at the Brooklyn Strand, arranged a tieup with department store and millinery company in connection with his "Hoosier Schoolmaster" date. A large display board was planted in front of theatre and merchant's ad plugged offer of free "Hoosier" hat, similar to that worn by Charlotte Henry, to first fifty blondes entering theatre.

In lobby two girls were in attendance at the giveaway counter, which was attractively arranged with stills. Hats were exchangeable for color and size, store thus assured of getting potential buyers and window was devoted to display of the chapeaux.

Earle Holden Sells It With Stills

How Two Showmen Plug the Newsreel

The weekly selling of the newsreel is recognized in many spots of paramount importance by an increasing number of theatremen in various sectors. Above and below are reproductions of how Earle Holden, of the Capitol, Atlanta, Ga., and Ben Ostrow, of the Academy of Music, New York, plug their news events out front.

Holden secures clips of the events shown in the current news and has these blown up to regulation size. Each is explained in panel to the right of the stills shown in above three sheet poster and Earle says that the display gathers its share of attention.

Ostrow uses sidewalk boards on either side of the box-office facing the street, the heads changed with each newsreel edition. Sometimes photographs are used. Ben feels that the newsreel is as "hot" as the front page of today's newspapers and merchandises the news successfully in the downtown section where the Academy is located.

Football and Hallowe'en Ideas

FOOTBALL . . .

As young as the football season is, at this writing, already there have been a number of unexpected upsets to add interest to the 1935 gridiron season, which, of course, is to be immediately capitalized upon by theatremen who utilize the pigskin encounters for extra box-office revenue.

Therefore we lead off by outlining some football angles that by long use have proven themselves as money-getters and of course the most reliable is the good old football rally.

The Ever Reliable Rally

Like money in the bank is the theatre get-together on the eve of the big local game, a slant that can also be worked more than once in a season, depending on how seriously the town takes its college or high school team or teams, as the case may be.

The usual procedure is to put aside a certain number of student tickets, up to say 500 at a discount, these to be sold by the student body only to students and not at the box office. A special section should be reserved and the students seated at one time. The theatre of course is to be decorated with flags and such like of both schools and it is advisable to allow time on the schedule for a stage program in which coaches, cheer leaders, glee clubs, players, etc., can participate.

As the stunt is put on at night, the torch-light parade to the theatre from the college grounds is also in order. Led by the university band, the procession, including theatre banners, should be routed through the main streets. At the theatre the students enter before the band, which may play a few selections to stop the crowds.

College Nights

The above slant was elaborated upon last year by Publicist Morris Kinzler at the New York Roxy as a tiein on "Saturday's Millions," Universal's football picture. Kinzler worked with individual graduate managers of all schools in the metropolitan sector for a series of different college nights, the guests being the teams and their coaches. Theatre was appropriately bannered and advertising taken in the undergraduate publications. Placards were also distributed at different games.

WRIGHT ACCENTS AUTUMN ACTIVITY

It is the consensus of opinion that these coming autumn months, with their bumper crop of box-office hits, give every indication of being a season bristling with extra selling activity. In this issue of Managers' Round Table you'll find effective exploitation ideas and suggestions. Check them thoroughly . . . they've been carefully prepared to be of assistance to you . . . include them in your plans. Your results, measured by your box-office receipts, depend entirely upon you . . . your initiative and accent on autumn activity.—Dick Wright, District Manager, Warner Ohio Theatres.

Score Guessing

Very popular and aided last year through the many pools throughout the country has become the score-guessing idea wherein prizes are given for those coming nearest to calling scores of a certain number of listed games. Sport editors are pushing this slant in tieups through the season with theatres. Kinzler also put this one on, using a herald on which was listed the games with blanks for the scores. Space at bottom for name and address of guesser was provided and of course there was copy for the picture. Guest tickets were given to the 50 coming nearest and guesses were left at the theatre.

Local Newsreel Shots

Dick Wright says, sell a local store or stores to whom student and sports fan patronage are important, on sponsoring newsreel shots of local football games at home and out-of-town. Leader to newsreel plugs sponsor who in turn will plug the shots in cooperative newspaper ads. Also good for plenty of publicity at the games and local interest will draw patrons to the theatre.

Sport Page Contest

In the Warner "Irish In Us" press book exploitation section is a 10-question contest slant on boxing and boxers that can be adapted to football. Local sport editors and authorities can work out the questions to fit individual situations with guest tickets as prizes. This can be featured on sport page in tieup with football picture.

Other Pigskin Slants

Free programs will also be used. These distributed round town and at games take various forms, one of the more popular being four-pager with announcement on cover, team lineups and score card on inside two pages with theatre copy at bottom. Back page is sold to merchant usually for enough to cover cost of printing. Imprinted cardboard megaphones and balloons distributed at football games are still in favor.

HALLOWE'EN IDEAS . . .

Among the many excellent ideas for celebrating Hallowe'en on Oct. 31 are those suggested by Roundtabler L. S. Stein, Warner Theatre, Chicago zone publicist, who points out that this occasion is an excellent one to call for the support of teachers, merchants, parents, etc. Ofttimes Hallowe'en means broken windows, busted gates, soiled clothing, doorbell ringing and other nuisances, if not controlled.

Stein says that this should encourage the support of the Chamber of Commerce, PTA associations, school principals and others for a big night at the theatre to put on no later than eight o'clock so that the show will not run too late for the youngsters. The celebration held at night will help to keep the young potential mischief-makers off the streets. Thus it will be publicized properly in the local press and perhaps announced in class rooms.

Hallowe'en Lobby

The conventional pun'kins, witches, cats and artificial autumn shrubbery in black and orange are advised at least a week ahead, poster copy tying in the "old-fashioned Hallowe'en Night Party" with favors for all. Same copy slant may be used in ads and heralds. The various contests arranged should be listed in the lobby, including the fancy costume parade on the stage. Cornstalks, dried leaves, etc., due to the fire hazards, are to be avoided.

The Party Itself

Where the manager is up to it, he should serve as the MC of the evening, otherwise some local celebrity may do the honors. This angle requires a lot of good judgment, as much of the evening's success depends upon the speed and pace of the program.

Curtain opens to the usual noises of horns, whistles while the house lights are dimmed. Sound Hallowe'en trailer can also be used and a few flying witches on broomsticks for further atmosphere. Then the MC opens the proceedings and details the contests. Entrants for these should be arranged for in advance and extra participants may be called for from the audience. Here are some of the amusing contest angles:

PRIZE WINNER. This attractive float constructed by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Buckmiller, Baker Theatres, Baker, Oregon, was awarded first prize in recent celebration there.

Armistice Day and Thanksgiving

Balloon Contest

Six to ten children—straight line—all ages. Line up the contestants, each one's hands placed behind their back. A 10c. balloon is placed in each one's mouth and the one bursting the balloon first by blowing it up is declared the winner. Be sure and see that their hands are kept behind them. These balloons will provide an immense amount of laughter.

Apple Ducking Contest

One large tub and several large apples. Five or six children from 12 to 15 years of age. The apples are placed in the tub of water. The boys are put on their knees behind the tub facing the audience. Their hands are placed behind them and they are to get the apple out of the tub with their teeth, without the aid of their hands. Be sure the apples are large and hard.

Cracker Eating Contest

Six to ten boys from 10 to 14 years of age. A small box of crackers unopened for each contestant. The first one that can eat his box of crackers and whistle "Turkey in the Straw" is declared the winner. The boxes of crackers must be small or the contest will lag and lose its effect.

Pie Eating Contest

Six or ten boys from 12 to 15 years of age. Place tables in straight lines across the stage. Get special raspberry or blackberry pies baked about half the size of the regular pie. Have them made as juicy as you can. Have a pie for each contestant on the table and have the contestants face the audience and eat the pie without the aid of their hands. The one finishing first is the winner. Be sure that the contestants do not get between the patrons and the tables—they must stand behind the tables.

Milk Bottle Contest

Boys from 10 to 15 years of age in a straight line across the stage. One milk bottle with nipple for each contestant. The one that can suck the milk from the bottle first is the winner. Be sure that all start at the same time.

Children's Fancy Costume Party

Entrants are called from audience to come up on the stage. They parade around the stage to music, if possible, and are lined up in a row facing the audience. The prize is held over the head of each entry. The audience is requested to applaud for the one whom they think has the most beautiful costume. Adult costume contest may be handled in the same manner.

SAYS DON'T REPEAT GAGS TOO OFTEN

Whatever you do, don't repeat your exploitation gags too often, says Bob Paskow, Warner New Jersey zone publicist. Repetition has killed many a good stunt because it was repeated too many times in the same situation. You should endeavor to have some different slant each and every week, he adds, and if you can't find sufficient variety, lay off for a while or at least work on enough new angles to dress up an old one.

Flour Contest

Take six tin pans, filled half full of flour (tin pans two or three inches high). Place a silver dime in the flour in the middle of the pan. Have six boys (negroes preferred) take coin out of flour with mouth. Must place hands behind back and face audience, kneeling on floor. The first one to bring out coin is the winner.

Shoe Contest

Take ten boys—have them take off their shoes (comedy with holes in stockings). Take all shoes and mix them up in barrel, then dump in one pile. Have all boys run to pile of shoes at one time. The one having his right shoe on and laced first is the winner.

NOVEMBER IDEAS . . .

Election Day

Wherever this year's election assumes any prominence locally, managers may tie this in to advantage by such means as announcements of returns via p.a. systems, radio broadcasts in mezzanine, etc.

The regulation "vote for" election card adapted to the current attraction and star is another thought, cut and name of star being used instead of candidate with picture and theatre copy beneath.

Whatever election tieups are made should of course be strictly non-partisan. The smart theatreman will not allow his publicity to involve the theatre in any electioneering, unconsciously or otherwise.

Armistice Day Slants

With the recent holding of the various veteran conventions, more than the usual publicity has been noted which will be stressed in Armistice Day observances. The usual decorations are in order, as are available shorts, and stage presentations too are planned. MGM's recently released "Abraham Lincoln" two-reeler and other fitting topics might be considered.

Information booth in lobby and rest room facilities for visitors are good-will builders where elaborate celebrations are being arranged as is extra advertising pointed to those seeking theatre entertainment at conclusion of the vet program, such as parades and other patriotic activities.

November "Festivals"

To step off the November bookings, Round Tablers in previous years have inaugurated special drives such as "festivals" or "weeks" along the usual lines. These are to be repeated in many spots next month, with the expectation of cooperation from civic associations, merchants' organizations, newspapers, etc. What with the upward trend of business and reassurances from Washington, local contacts this year can be counted on for more vigorous support to such drives. Fashion shows, popularity contests, special sales days and other previously detailed slants will be worked.

As November is harvest month, this angle can be worked and invitations extended to agricultural organizations, 4-H Clubs and suchlike to display exhibits of handiwork.

Style shows, contests for best dressed merchants' windows have also proved profitable, the latter pepped up with prizes for those using most effectively theatre cutouts, posters and other accessories.

Thanksgiving Day Slants

In a few weeks it will be time to begin laying out the details of the always acceptable Thanksgiving Day canned goods matinee with admissions being foodstuffs to be turned over to the various charities. Prominent citizens, newspaper editors, fraternal organizations are always willing to participate.

Show usually is put on the Saturday before Thanksgiving with the publicity running as far as ten days to two weeks ahead. Contributions piled up in front of the theatre make a good shot for the papers, and the division of food made so that charities of various denominations will be represented.

Turkey raffles, turkey cutout and pumpkin lobbies, appropriate short subjects and holiday atmosphere in newspaper advertising are also to be remembered in observing this holiday.

"Old Settlers' Night" Brings 'Em

GENERAL IDEAS

Among the contributions from Bob Paskow, Warner New Jersey Theatres zone publicity head, is what he terms an "Old Settlers' Night." This is arranged by invites to oldest residents locally. Have group photos made for lobby which may be promoted from newspaper running the shot. Prizes are given to the oldest old settler, youngest old settler, and with biggest family.

Entertainment from these venerables is another effective slant and such gags as fiddlers', square and figure dance contests should do much to pep up the night.

Comedy Star Joke Book

For the "Bright Lights" date at the Stanley, Jersey City, a Joe E. Brown Joke Book was distributed in the form of a four-page folder, front page carrying the book title and cut of stars. Inside two pages carried carefully selected jokes illustrated by cartoon laff cuts of Brown, and back page, theatre and picture copy.

Same idea can be adapted for most any comedy star, Mickey Mouse, Pop Eye, etc. Half of back page might also be sold for ad to cover cost of printing.

Horse Show Trophy

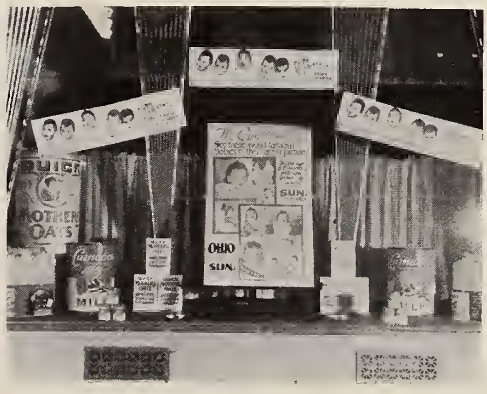
Selling Jean Harlow on "China Seas," E. A. Steinbuch, at Loew's State, Cleveland, reports a tiein with the Cleveland Horse Show whereby a Jean Harlow engraved trophy was presented. Wire from the star was read on last night of show by president of the organization, papers carried shot of trophy and presentation of same.

Tea Ball Tie-up

On "Shanghai," Steinbuch used a tea ball hookup, local tea company supplying the samples in imprinted envelopes distributed by gals in Chinese costumes along the main street. Same company tied in further on distribution of Loretta Young photos.

Dionne Quint Tie-in

On his date for "Goin' on Two," the new RKO Radio Quint short, Frank Harpster of Warners' Ohio, Mansfield, tied in with his local Quaker Oats representative for window (see photo) showing how the quints are thriving on that company's products. Local dailies ran cut of the window with caption including theatre credits.



Harpster's "Oats" Quint Tiein

HARRY BOTWICK'S ICE CARNIVAL

What with the temperature being right nippy today and snow falling in various parts already, it isn't too soon to think of an ice carnival along the lines of the one put on last year by Harry Botwick, State, Portland, Me. Complete details were carried in the issue of Jan. 26, 1934.

Introducing New Manager

When Phil De Petro moved to the Jamaica Theatre, Boston, he had made up and distributed a neat four-page folder of introduction. The word "Introducing" was all that appeared on cover and on inside pages were photo of Phil, his history and a letter of greeting to patrons headed "Dear Friend" and soliciting the good will and cooperation of all community interests.

Back page was given over to classifications and names of all personnel, including Francis McManus, M & P supervisor of the Jamaica. Box at bottom carried schedule of performances and prices.

The folder was distributed at the theatre, to the house mailing list and also given out at leading neighborhood stores and gathering places.

Cracking Tough Papers

One of the leading New London, Conn., dailies is especially hard to crack and to soften the situation Barney Dobrans, at the Crown, did a bit of work that brought him a nice box with theatre mention.

Barney advertised for an usher in the daily and getting over 80 replies suggested to the ad manager that he tell the folks how effective is this advertising. Which the paper did, and from now on Dobrans can look for more enthusiastic cooperation on his publicity tieins.

Managers' Weeks

Harry Browning, M & P Theatres ad head, reports a lot of successful Managers' Week in the circuit put over with the help of the various house staffs. In Pawtucket, for instance, the personnel at Al Lashway's Strand was divided into two teams, each with captain responsible to the assistant manager for tickets sold by them in a drive for a big week's gross.

Prizes were awarded to those selling the greatest number of tickets, and as the sellers also plugged the shows while they were disposing of tickets, the ultimate results, says Browning, were even greater than expected.

School Supply Plug

From E. J. Landsborough, of the Capitol, Galt, Canada, is reported a tiein made annually with drug stores handling school supplies, whereby each purchaser of merchandise amounting to one dollar receives a free ticket to the theatre. Children's tickets at ten cents are redeemed in full by the druggist and on tickets to adults or students over 15 Landsborough allows a ten cent credit. Druggists of course plug this in all advertising.

Chinese Stuff

To interest the Chinese in Vancouver, B. C., in his "Shanghai" date at the Orpheum, Maynard Joiner ran a series of display ads in the local Chinese press, one of which is reproduced below. This slant can also be used for novelty advertising by having ad made up in Chinese on herald with tiein copy on reverse side.

The window possibilities of this China-background story were also realized by Joiner, who tied in department stores for displays on Chinese pajamas, novelties, etc.

Club Nights, Benefits

Local clubs can be encouraged to hold special nights with possibly extra entertainment furnished by members, says Bob Paskow. Regular admission is charged. This angle is also being worked for benefits in which of course organizations sell tickets to their members and friends and participate in the grosses on a percentage.

Get Acquainted Week

Ben Katz, Warner Milwaukee zone publicist, suggests a get-acquainted week to give manager and staff an opportunity to become better acquainted with patrons, old and new. Ben advises manager to move desk to lobby and greet patrons as they enter.

Trailer, merchant's windows and mention in advertising prove helpful. Also passes to families new in the neighborhood forwarded with personal greeting from manager. To add to mailing list, star photos may be given to those signing their names and addresses.

Newspaper Birthday Club

Dick Moss, Egyptian, Long Beach, Cal., reports a cooperation with local daily, sponsor for a Merchants' Birthday Club, whereby local juveniles who join are given parties as guests of the paper and cooperating merchants. Stores are paid off in publicity and furnish free eats, candy and other prizes on contests held at the meetings. Moss has had the gang over at his place, which was duly publicized.

It's another form of the club idea and where managers are looking for another slant, the permanent meeting place might be arranged at the theatre for the usual Saturday morning ten-cent session, with different merchants contributing at each get-together.

Doll Carriage Parade

Put on recently and successfully by J. J. Cahill, at the Brockton, Brockton, Mass., was a "Doll Carriage Parade" on the stage one afternoon. Tiein was made with local dance school for a number of entries amounting to over 50. Prizes were promoted and judges picked 10 winners, shown in photo.

Benefit Shows

Wally Allen, at the Keeney, Elmira, is using a benefit plan, available for all Warner houses, whereby special tickets are printed and organization cooperating receives 30 percent of receipts on all these tickets sold, and at regular admission prices.

Plan which has proven itself on weak days is being plugged among 135 local organizations, a number of which have already signified their interest.

Impersonation Contest

For a tiein with local ballroom on "Here Comes the Band," Jack Lykes, at Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, put on an impersonation contest with cash prizes given for those giving the best Ted Lewis impersonations. Everyone coming dressed in Ted Lewis costumes received guest tickets to the picture. Ballroom paid half of all expenses, distributed circulars and displayed giant banner in front of the building.

Doubles Contest

An ace says Paskow in recommending it to theatres where the stunt has not been pulled. Contest is put on with merchant help and newspaper cooperation wherever possible and cash plus merchandise prizes to those most closely resembling the stars. The latter of course to be shown in coming attractions.

Style Show

Frank Harpster, of Warners' Ohio, Mansfield, has just put over a style show with his local merchants' association, 20 stores of all kinds cooperating. Each night cash prizes were awarded and on the last night a fashion queen was selected and given a complete outfit of clothing.

Harpster followed that up with an amateur radio broadcast, also a merchant hookup, and publicity on the two events was carried in a special section gotten out by local daily and distributed to every rural box holder in the county as well as all names on theatre mailing list.

Winners in Cahill's Doll Contest

AND HOW ABOUT THOSE SNOWSTICKS?

A lot of the old-timers and quite a few of the younger folks are awaiting the first healthy snowstorm to break out those snappy snowsticks which may be planted in most any size snowpile—downtown, uptown or out on the roads. It's fast advertising and the cost is negligible.

Ad Reproductions

At the Boyd, Philadelphia, on "Karenina" small cards were made up bearing reproductions of newspaper ads, cards distributed in apartment buildings, downtown hotels and restaurants. On "She Married Her Boss," the question—"would you marry your boss?" was planted on the local voice-of-the-people broadcast, this latter incidentally becoming very popular and a good tiein.

Blotters for Children

Ernie Petch, at the Strand, Brandon, Can., finds very helpful a series of blotters made up especially for school children. That the schools welcome these is shown by the cooperation extended by principals and teachers who oversee their personal distribution to classes.

Wire Angle

At the Palace in Montreal, George Rotsky enlisted the aid of Major Bowes himself for the showing of the Amateur Night short by having the Major send a wire which included an appreciation to Montrealers for being among the warmest of his friends and admirers. George of course planted the wire out front where it did the most good.

New Model Shows

Dick Wright, Warner Ohio theatre district manager, suggests a radio show in mezzanine to introduce all new radio models. Dealers tiein with coop advertising.

Same slant for auto show idea, now that new models are coming out. Wright says contact dealer who has new model to show and arrange for week's preview at theatre. Dealer should go for tickets for prospects so they can see the new cars in the finest possible atmosphere, theatre usually being a much better spot for background.

Glee Clubs

Wright further suggests on list of school activities, tieins with glee clubs to show their stuff either at theatre football rallies or on one of the regular programs. Schools usually go for publicity of this sort, says Dick, and students can be expected to turn out for such engagements.

Fifty-Year-Old Club

Harvey Cocks, Strand, Akron, tied in local branch of a Fifty-Year Old Club to a showing of "Diamond Jim," newspapers having feature writers on hand to ascertain if any of the members knew "Jim" in the old days. Institutions such as these clubs present good angles for publicity and such cooperations are usually good for news stories and pictures from the human interest angle.

Temple Photo Contest

Successful for "Curly Top" and also effective for other child stars is Ernie Petch's Temple photo contest at the Strand, Brandon, Canada. Prizes were offered for photos or snapshots of children most closely resembling Shirley, cooperating photographer giving a dozen photos to winner as one of the prizes (see photo). Other prizes were promoted from merchants who plugged the stunt in their advertising.

The idea can also be worked by having photographer take pictures free of charge to all children who enter in exchange for extra business from parents who want prints of these pictures.

Costumed Distributor

Obviously the use of natives for street bally is more effective, especially on giveaways, says George Rotsky, who forwards a shot of Chinese girl in full regalia distributing free photos of Clark Gable on the date for "China Seas." Cost of natives where they can be obtained for bally on pictures with foreign backgrounds might be a bit higher but in most cases well worth it.

Novelty Teaser Herald

On "The Clairvoyant" at Keith's, Philadelphia, Skip Weshner, Warner first-run zone director, reports an effective herald centered around a pair of die-cut eye slits on green stock with following copy—"hold this card up to your eyes and face a mirror." Copy on other side is in reverse type to be read correctly when seen through the mirror.

Photo Giveaway

Skip Weshner also reports the distribution of Clark Gable photos by leading department store for the Philadelphia date on "Call of the Wild." Photos bore store ad plugging their "thrift aisle" bargains and also copy on the picture.

Calendar Programs

Nicely gotten up are Walter Davis' pocket programs and calendars for use at the Capitol, Regina, Can. On cardboard stock and one-fold, they carry various publicity. One shows the bookings for the month with notes on back cover such as parcel service for shoppers, information regarding purchase of tickets for gifts and prizes, etc. Another carries a yearly calendar, the month's bookings, a blank page for notes and parking instructions.

NEWS NOTES FROM CHICAGO SECTOR

CHICAGO

Emil Garber, promotion manager of the Chicago Examiner, was elected president of the Chicago Amusement Publicists Association at their last meeting. He succeeds Larry Stein, Warner press chief. Harry K. Smythe was elected vice-president, Lou Abramson scribe, C. E. Dennison treasurer, Ted Weber sergeant-at-arms, and Sam Morris director of public relations.

These officers will be in charge when CAPA stages what is said to be the merriest event ever offered to Chicago's film industry, a Mardi Gras dinner-dance featuring that gala stage show, "La Nudite Paree." Right smart are the ticket-program souvenirs.

Celebrities of radio stage and screen will be participants in this event, which is set for the night of October 19th, at the Congress hotel, in the Gold Room. Felix Mendelsohn of MGM will be master of ceremonies for a part of the show, aided and abetted by Jack Miller, theatre mogul. Tickets are being handled by Lou Abramson, at Allied Theatres offices and CAPA members.

"The Crusades," Cecil B. DeMille's latest screen epic for Paramount, comes here October 18th. Originally slated to start as a roadshow at the Erlanger theatre, it will open instead at the United Artists theatre at a $1 top. This is forty cents above the average price for this house. The picture follows "Anna Karenina," which, after much delay and a pink ticketing, comes in to follow "Red Salute."

As soon as "Wings Over Ethiopia" is ready for showing the picture will be booked into the Apollo or Garrick for the first loop showing. The time element is an important factor of this film which Paramount is preparing for market as fast as possible.

Arline Judge gets a prize. On her way to the Coast she stopped long enough between United Airline planes to call her friends on the phone. The time was 3:30 a.m. The "prize" will be awarded by the recipients of the calls the next time Arline comes to town.

Our hat is off to Marcel Brazee, youthful Warner theatre manager. This chap has one of the nicest theatres in town to operate, the Avalon, and he does it in grand style. On a trip around the place the other evening he took us backstage, down in the boiler room and to other out-of-the-way places. We've been in lots of theatres but if you can find a speck of dust anywhere in that big house you can have a year's free admission. A good staff that like to deliver for their boss is the cause.

Bill Elson, down from the Twin-Cities for the ball games and the holiday, dropped in on film row.

Tito Schipa, opera star, and Edgar Guest and family were a few of the prominent folks who departed westward on the Grand Canyon Limited the other evening.

Charles Reagan, Paramount executive, was another who took in the ball games and attended to business affairs while here.

Stopping at the Stevens were Grantland Rice, Damon Runyon and a host of other celebs. Runyon says that in order to escape the film producers, who want stories he hasn't time to write, he will leave shortly for Ethiopia to take a look at the war.

Eddie Fontaine combined business with pleasure, and went to Detroit Monday to see the ball game and visit the Paramount office.

"Top Hat," the Mark Sandrich directorial success, gets a sixth week at the Palace here—a record, both from a gross and long-run standpoint. Following it the Folies Bergere Revue and "39 Steps" will be the attractions. On the 25th, "Last Days of Pompeii" will be the screen fare with the Benny Davis Revue on the stage.

Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA prexy, was in town for two days. He reported theatre conditions here in a healthy state. Ed was so busy he didn't even see the games.

"Chic" Sale was guest of honor last week at the premiere of his MGM short on Abraham Lincoln when the picture was shown at a Lincoln memorial program in Springfield, Ill. After the showing "Chic" was invited to dinner at the executive mansion by Gov. Henry Horner. During the course of the dinner "Chic" said:

"When I was a boy I used to look through the iron gates outside the mansion here. I never dreamed that someday I would be inside dining in style."

"Neither did I," replied the Governor.

With the World's Series a thing of the past theatre business is slated for a rise. Those on film row can now get back to their work and the ball fans can go to the theatre and see the games in the newsreels.

When James Farley, Postmaster General decided to come out and see the ball game, CAPA members had to give up their clubrooms. Seems as though the lads have one of the choice suites at the Congress for their headquarters and the place was so crowded the management had them move temporarily.

Ashton Stevens, local dramatic critic, was given a banjo by Eddie Peabody and now Frank Smith, manager of the Palace, wants to book them as a team. Eddie is willing but Ashton wants more time to practice.

Irving Berlin, rushing to catch the Santa Fe Chief for Hollywood, was stopped by reporters who congratulated him on his songs for "Top Hat." "Yes," said Berlin, "Astaire and Rogers are great dancers." Modest chap, eh what?

Roy Bruder got a nice yarn in the local papers the other day about the ushers he trained some years ago. Seems as though Wayne King, Bob Elson and a host of others got their first theatrical training from Bruder as B&K ushers.

Doris Arden, film editor of the Times, is back home after a trip to Hollywood where she took the Times-MGM film contest winner, Eleanor Stewart, for screen tests. Miss Stewart, it is reported, made such a good impression she is being retained in the cinema city until more tests can be made.

Mort Singer, theatre executive, is a Chicago-New York commuter. For the last six weeks Mort has flown home Saturdays to spend the weekend with the family in Chicago, returning Sunday night to the eastern city.

Warner Films Set For Comerford Circuits

The Comerford-Publix Circuit has signed for the complete Warner Brothers-First National-Cosmopolitan list of features, as well as the Vitaphone shorts and trailers, for 1935-36 for its houses in Eastern Pennsylvania and Western New York, according to Andy Smith, Jr., Warner executive in charge of eastern and Canadian distribution. According to the deal the company's product will play the circuits' eleven theatres in Eatsern Pennsylvania and in its 62 in New York.

Imperial to Cameo

The product of the Imperial Distributing Corporation has been acquired for New England by the Cameo Screen Attractions of Boston. Some forty features will be included in the Imperial lineup for Cameo handling.

400 Theatres In Deal With First Division

First Division's exchanges report contracts for film service with 400 theatres throughout the United States for their 1935-36 product. Harry H. Thomas, president, announced that First Division has completed over half of its program. Included are eight new Hoot Gibson pictures to be produced by Walter Futter.

First Division and Preferred Pictures' differences over "Hong Kong Nights" and a series of Hoot Gibsons in the Philadelphia and Washington territories have been settled with First Division releasing the product.

Mr. Thomas and Al Friedlander, vice-president, are to tour exchanges.

Owing to the absence of several of the directors of the company the board meeting scheduled for last Thursday has been postponed for another two weeks.

SMASH HIT

JUDGE Super X Negative solely on the basis of its reception by users. Placed on the market only a few months ago, it is already being employed in the majority of feature productions, as well as for various purposes of a special nature. ONLY M-G-M DOES IT!

From long-forgotten pages of time, written in the heart's blood of men who braved uncharted seas to found an island Paradise, comes this pulsating drama to thrill and warm the hearts of all who see it. Penned after months of research in the archives of the British Museum by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall . . . fashioned by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer into a motion picture true and authentic to the last detail, the tang of salt air, the fragrance of tropical winds, in every scene. Nearly two years in the making . . . produced at a cost of more than two million dollars . . . an epic saga of high adventure and warm romance comes to the screens of the world!

A THOUSAND HOURS OF HELL FOR ONE MOMENT OF LOVE!

The mutiny that thundered over the decks of the "Bounty" lives again on the screens of the world! The romantic adventures of a motley crew who endured a thousand hours of hardship on the open sea for a fleeting moment of love on an enchanted island . . . come to you with all the tremendous sweep of this stranger-than-fiction saga of the sea. High adventure, young love, courage and daring—these are the things that virile drama is made of. And Irving Thalberg, master-maker of motion pictures, has given all of us a chance to re-live a story that will never die. Charles Laughton, as the dastardly Captain Bligh, is an unrivaled portrayer of the master mariner. Clark Gable as leader of the mutineers, again ranges the screen with that dynamic personal force that has won him the position of a truly great actor. Nor must one fail to pay tribute to Franchot Tone, the superb cast, Director Frank Lloyd, and all of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio staff who have combined to build a new flag stone in the corridor of motion picture fame. "Mutiny on the Bounty" has been authentically produced after two years' painstaking time, at a cost of over two millions of dollars . . . It awaits you on the screen of your favorite motion picture theatre.

THE FAN PRESS

THE current plight of Tower Publications brings to consideration the somewhat more curious than significant career and status of the fan press in general. Despite its frequent effulgence, its widely conspicuous displays in the beauty parlors and on the newsstands, and the plethora of publications occupying what they hope will one day be a field, the fan press is not a success, largely for reasons far beyond its power to affect.

It is true enough that for various periods some of the fan magazines have had flights of prosperity and occasional profits have been made in their operation by a few individuals, but the grand average if reduced to figures would inevitably be reported in red figures. It is little known, for instance, and most generally not even suspected, that the most pretentious and on the whole the most meritorious publication in that field operated for nearly twenty years under one management without showing a profit, continuously investing in hope.

It is interesting to observe that the tendency has ever been for publishing projects in the fan field to become the property of the printers, directly or indirectly, making them in the end principally devices for occupying the surplus time of composing rooms and presses. Similar phenomena are to be observed on the fringes of the trade press field, as well.

The fan press took its rise with two national monthlies, Motion Picture Magazine of Brooklyn, which began under auspices of the Motion Picture Patents Company group, and outlived it, and Photoplay Magazine in Chicago, which began as a theatre program and got taken over by a printing house by being in arrears on its bills, thereby in 1914 establishing a pattern. Both of these publications saw their most important period of development in those few years in which the motion picture, having arrived at the full stature of the feature era and busy supplanting the roadshow, had not yet won the recognition of the daily papers and the general periodical press. When the newspaper took up the motion picture with its swift daily columns and its flamboyant Sunday edition stories, the attention of the fans was overwhelmingly pre-empted. From that time it was ordained that fan magazines should find for their circulation only the super-fans, the relatively few who wanted to make a religion of the motion picture and their idols. Far too large a proportion of this super-fan fringe has ever been of unhealthy and prurient mind, as reflected in fan letters. That field presently disclosed itself as numbering about two millions all included, with vast overlapping of circulations, and so much governed by whimsies that newsstand returns on particularly unappealing issues of the magazines were found to run as high as 40 per cent of the output.

So often as to constitute a menace to the status of the screen fan publications, making despairing effort at circulation, have resorted to the purveying of scandal and pornographic materials in text and picture.

Meanwhile advertisers in the general merchandise field early arrived at the conviction that this crank-fan circulation did not represent important buying power, resulting in the restriction of sales of space largely to the cheaper cosmetics, knickknacks painfully akin to carnival prize goods, horoscopes and "make-money-at-home" schemes. The while the most ably produced magazine in the field found that editorial merit and good printing had no appreciable effect on the readers but that circulation was to be built mainly by cash prize contests for the cutters-out of paper dolls.

The motion picture industry itself, which would at first glance be likely to be considered the most important party at interest, has looked upon the fan press with a striking apathy. The largest enthusiasm within the institution of the screen has been that of Hollywood press agents making extensive use of fan magazine covers to decorate the studio bulletin boards to impress the players with the job done for them. While a modicum of production advertising has appeared in the fan press, vastly more has been placed by producers and distributors with the general magazines and newspapers.

Star building and picture merchandising, it has been discovered, must revolve around the boxoffice and the screen and product there delivered. The stars of the motion picture have been made by its own screens and its internal endeavors, rather than by the attentions of a fan and lay press which have sought to make its merchandise of personalities their own.

POSITIVELY!

THE standard Fourth of July cover drawing of the little boy standing expectantly a-tiptoe while the fuse of the firecrack sizzles, accurately depicts the emotional state of observers of the scene since the accession of Mr. Al Lichtman to the presidency of United Artists Corporation in sequel to the departure of Mr. Joseph M. Schenck.

Given any reasonable area short of infinity, place Mr. Lichtman in one corner of it and Mr. Samuel Goldwyn in the other, and the question of eventuations is one of time only.

This is observed with all due appreciation of the extraordinary capabilities of both men, both great showmen. It is accurate to observe that Mr. Lichtman as a distributor of pictures has built a record for getting something close to the last ounce on offerings of merit. Meanwhile Mr. Goldwyn puts his determined last ounce into his product—and he wants it out, with a profit, also the last ounce. He too is positive.

When it was given out that Mr. Lichtman would put the final O.K. on all sales contracts in New York, he viewed it as a decision. It wasn't. So he made one.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Uncle Sam!

1. Bonds

Many of the inner workings of the Paramount Publix reorganization were related by witnesses as bankers, attorneys and others who had much to do with the rehabilitation were placed on the griddle for the third time within four months, this time by the Sabath Congressional committee inquiring into realty bond reorganizations.

John E. Otterson, Paramount president and former head of Electrical Research Products, Inc., was questioned about a possible television link with American Telephone and Telegraph Company. Frank A. Vanderlip, another witness, revealed he resigned last week from the company's board. Details of the hearing are related in the story starting on page 43.

2. Patents

Three who are associated with lawsuits pending in the federal courts seeking $67,000,000 as damages from the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, Western Electric Company, Inc., and Electrical Research Products, Inc., are prominently identified with the Sirovich Congressional committee now sitting in New York in an investigation of patent pools and cross-licensing agreements. One of these, David Garrison Berger, is chief counsel to the committee. He is also counsel to the plaintiffs in the actions pending against A T & T and the two subsidiaries. See page 34.

3. Sales

An army of witnesses and attorneys participating in the United States Government's prosecution in St. Louis of corporations, subsidiaries and officers of Warners, Paramount and RKO, for alleged conspiracy in withholding motion pictures from the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres of the Harry Arthur-Fanchon & Marco interests, began this week to dig in for a siege that may last as long as five months.

The story of the trial this week is told on page 36 and is supplemented by the week's question-and-answer interrogation of witnesses, which starts on page 63.

4. Free Shows

Uncle Sam will on November 1 become the largest producer of the drama, musical comedy, vaudeville and allied entertainments with the start in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago of the WPA theatre project for which $10,000,000 may be allocated out of the Government's fund of $27,000,000 for the "cultural" arts.

Later the program will be extended to the smaller centers, blanketing the nation with low-priced or free entertainment.

Elmer Rice, New York regional director, said his program definitely would be directed to proving that there are other forms of amusement than motion pictures. See page 15.

Odlum and RKO

As his first significant acquisition in the motion picture industry, Floyd B. Odlum, on behalf of his gargantuan Atlas Corporation and Lehman Brothers, is due soon to obtain Radio Corporation of America's entire controlling interest in Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, valued on the market at almost $16,000,000. Part of these holdings were announced as already purchased.

As a result of this development, a reorganization plan for RKO will shortly be submitted to the federal court. And Mr. Odlum, a Paramount director, also is interested in Fox, Warner and Loew's, Inc. The story of Mr. Odlum's latest purchase is told on page 54.

World Standards?

Mechanical motion picture standards for the world, which have developed more or less haphazardly, are now promised orderly administration under the procedure of a "League of Nations" of standardizing activities—the International Standards Association, with headquarters at Basle, Switzerland.

Eighteen leading nations are joining the United States in supporting this procedure for the world film industry, making for more harmonious and unified development of design and specifications than in the past.

America's controversy with Europe over the selection of a 16mm. standard is the first test of the procedure. What international standardization as a whole means to the industry is told in the story starting on page 13.

We Have a War

The war is well under way in Ethiopia, Lloyd's of London is wagering long odds that it will embroil Europe, and Hollywood preceeds to reflect these pulsations on the motion picture screen.

Militarism in one form or another is the basic theme of at least two dozen films intended for early release; every available subject from or about Ethiopia is being recruited by both large and small distributors for quick screening, and the newsreels were working at fever pitch to transform into release the first actual battle scenes, received from Abyssinia on Monday.

Theatre owners are definitely involved in the situation, what with the troubled state of world affairs influencing the nature of the product which they will show. Developments in this connection, and there are many, are reported on page 18.

Zoning Some More

The clearance-and-zoning pipe of peace was smoking clouds of tranquility in Chicago, after demands for an additional week's clearance by Balaban and Katz were held in abeyance, at least until late November. But such was not the case in Kansas City, where strong-minded independent owners were sharpening their legal lances for thrusts at Fox Midwest because of the alleged burdensome zoning specifications that Fox is charged with imposing. Midwest, however, denied that it is attempting to create a zoning "system" in its favor.

The clearance and zoning situation at this moment is explained on page 33.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

President Mary

Far from the glamorous setting that once surrounded her as "America's Sweetheart," Miss Mary Pickford sat herself down on Wednesday in the president's chair in the Seventh Avenue home office of United Artists, and thereupon the First Lady of the Screen became the First Woman President of a major motion picture corporation.

Whether the position for Miss Pickford is to be a permanent one does not appear to have been decided, its acquisition having come about automatically because she was next in line as first vice-president.

The corporation, which last week accepted the resignation of Al Lichtman, submitted after Samuel Goldwyn expressed a difference of opinion with Mr. Lichtman's presidential procedure, does not contemplate any changes in distribution policies and methods, said Miss Mary. She explained that operations will be in the hands of Arthur W. Kelly, handling sales, and Harry D. Buckley, in charge of corporate administration.

Meanwhile Mr. Lichtman arrived in New York from Hollywood, and after listening to Broadway rumors that posted him with Universal, MGM, Warner and elsewhere, said he will disclose his plans for the future next week. See page 31.

Writer's Guild Doubts

Producers in Hollywood, acting through their Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, will not put into effect the Academy's "Proposed Revised Basic Agreement and Writer-Producer Code of Practice" without encountering stiff opposition from the independent Screen Writers' Guild, which this week charged that the move is "an obvious attempt to destroy the Guild."

Skeptical over the extent of the "benefits" that are claimed by the Academy for writers in the new agreement, the Guild set its attorneys to an analysis of the document for a comparison with the Guild's demands. Their findings are set forth on page 52.

Again "Rasputin"

A second suit against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, Ltd., of London, based on the picture, "Rasputin and the Empress," is pending in a high court in the British capital.

According to the Daily Sketch, a writ claiming damages for libel has been obtained against the film company by Prince Jacob Chegodieff, a Latvian attorney, who asserts that his name is defamed by the picture. He says that a Prince Chegodieff is depicted in the picture as the murderer of Gregori Rasputin and submits that he, the real Prince Chegodieff, was not acquainted with the famous "mad monk" and did not have any position in the court of the late czar.

In August, 1934, the film company paid damages of $250,000, plus court costs, to Princess Irina Alexandrovna, wife of Prince Felix Youssoupoff and niece of the czar, to satisfy all her claims that a character in the film, Princess Natasha, shown to have been seduced by Rasputin, was a libel against her.

SMPE Meets

Out of the laboratory of the motion picture engineer there will come, next Monday, an explanation of the progress in the present day toward improving studio, laboratory, exchange and theatre practice.

The occasion will be the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, to be held for four days at the Wardman Park Hotel, in Washington. Starting Monday morning with a session in explanation of the activities of the United States Government in motion pictures, the meeting will continue through discussions on color, educational films, 16 mm. production, theatre design, screen brightness, projection, illumination, technical standardization and such.

Will Hays will be the principal speaker at the banquet on Wednesday evening, highlighting a program that will include the reading of 50 papers, as listed on page 45.

Warners Deny

Film row in Philadelphia was excited last week over the theory that the T.N.F.R. Realty Company, which just settled for the Tower, Nixon, Roosevelt and Frankford theatres with the estates of William Freihofer and Fred C. Nixon-Nirdlinger, had a definite connection with Warners. Joseph Bernhard, Warner theatre head, announced in New York, however, that his company had no connection whatever with the transaction.

A year ago Harry M. Warner was reported purchasing these houses apart from Warner Theatres, but he vigorously denied such a report at the time. The real estate agent for the current purchaser, however, is Albert M. Greenfield & Company, acting with Lionel Friedman, Inc. The theory of Warner participation in the deal, therefore, was strengthened by the fact Greenfield had negotiated most of the company's real estate affairs in Philadelphia.

Neighborhood Wins

That the trend is away from the downtown sections to the neighborhoods has been noted, but in Kansas City it is indicated by the fact that more suburban theatres are in operation than at the peak of the 1928-29 prosperity, while downtown patronage has declined and four large downtown theatres are still dark.

Downtown first-runs have attempted to stem the tide by slashing prices, but have found it difficult to check, and the shift is now regarded as one of the inevitable trends of the times. The story is on page 56.

Spreading Sunshine

Collection of information of value to the industry and the spreading of goodwill among those prominently identified with sources of public opinion is the dual purpose of field trips undertaken by representatives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in which 100 key cities are to be visited.

While the information thus gathered is confidential, it is considered important in the work of the MPPDA staff. See page 96.

Friends in Mexico

Despite intermittent strike movements in the industry in Mexico, American film talent stands high in the friendship of the local business of the motion picture.

Witness the recent instance of a delegation of executives, technicians, players and studio laborers waiting upon the minister of the interior at Mexico City to protest against deportation of an American cameraman. The cameraman was permitted to remain.

This and other notes on the news of the industry in Mexico, by James Lockhart, HERALD correspondent, appear on page 104.

Sam Hardy

Sam Hardy, veteran actor, died Wednesday in Hollywood Hospital, Hollywood, following an emergency operation for an abdominal ailment. He was working on Samuel Goldwyn's latest Eddie Cantor picture early this week when he was stricken. Mr. Goldwyn announced that that part of the picture in which Hardy worked will be dropped.

Hardy went to Hollywood in 1917 following some twenty years on the legitimate stage.

FILM 'LEAGUE OF NATIONS' TO STANDARDIZE INDUSTRY

New Federation, with Goldsmith Heading Sectional Committee, Seeks Economies to Buyers and Increased Production

19 Nations Forming Committees Following Dispute Over 16 mm. Dimensional Standards at International Congress

A "League of Nations" for the motion picture industry, designed to supplant conflict with harmonious procedure in the development of world standards of technical practice, is being forged with the participation of 19 leading nations having national standards organizations affiliated with the International Standards Association.

In purpose and function it parallels the League at Geneva, which is much in the public eye at the moment, with the distinction that the film "league" will not concern itself with political matters, but will concentrate on coordination of engineering and manufacturing processes vital to the motion picture in the world markets.

The movement means that the film industry is taking its place with other major industries which are advancing their progress by establishing standards recognized as uniform throughout the world. In practical significance it aims to bring vast benefits ultimately in the fields of production and exhibition.

In the opinion of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, chairman of the American committee subscribing to the activity, the International Standards Association's procedure opens up channels of unpredictable possibilities. While equipment and technique has tended toward uniformity among the important manufacturers and laboratories of the world, this is the first attempt actually made to assure that uniformity may be universal.

Outcome of 16 mm. Controversy

George Friedl, Jr., of Electrical Research Products, Inc., and other motion picture engineers in New York, this week pointed out that with continuous research and development under way in various countries in sound recording and projection, the necessity of obtaining a world standard doubtless will present itself many times in the future. The ISA procedure, he added, will prove its usefulness in avoiding conflicting procedures such as arose over the consideration of a dimensional standard for 16 mm. equipment and film.

It was, in fact, the question of procedure that climaxed the congress of the International Standards Association and the International Congress of Scientific and Applied Photography in Paris last July, and resulted in adoption of the ISA machinery.

With the exception of the Sectional Committee on Motion Pictures under the American Standards Association and several others, only a few of the nations represented at the congress had organizations set up primarily to deal with motion picture standardization, although such organizations have been functioning for a long time in other branches of industry in practically all major countries. In order, however, to carry out the plan of the congress it was agreed that they would form such committees on motion pictures and that the ISA would act as the clearing house and the validating agency internationally, just as the American Standards Association and the British Standards Institute and others perform such functions in their respective countries.

$1,700,000 INVESTED IN 16MM. INDUSTRY

The importance of the vote being conducted among the leading nations under the procedure of the International Standards Association to determine a 16*mm. film standard for the world is indicated by the fact that the total investment in this division of the industry in the United States is well above* $1,700,000.

Two years ago no commercial machines using narrow gauge film were available. Today more than 2,000 projectors have been built and sold, and more than 3,000,000 feet of 16*mm. sound film has been purchased.*

Twenty per cent of the machines sold are being used in private homes; 80 per cent are used in schools, libraries, by industrial organizations for advertising purposes, by the Government in Civilian Conservation Camps and in other small theatres.

Thus, Great Britain and Sweden and other countries have since organized their committees, and it is expected that eventually all national standards associations will have under them sectional committees on motion pictures, representative, as is the American committee, of all branches.

The first test of the effectiveness of this machinery is in progress now with a ballot among the nations on a 16 mm. standard. At stake in the referendum is the huge and only slightly scratched export market for narrow gauge film and projectors, which would be available to both American and European manufacturers due to the consequent interchangeability of equipment and films.

Once the matter of a dimensional standard for 16 mm. film has been decided—the balloting closes November 15—it is planned that attention be directed to codifying the practices and specifications already in use, and as new developments are announced or improvements made they will be submitted to the functioning organizations for adoption as their national standards, subsequently to become international standards by official validation.

Wide Screen, Third Dimension, Color

Developments that might well be included in the future are named by engineers as wide screen projection, third dimension and color, among others.

Heretofore, adoption of designs and specifications as standard for the world has been without benefit of any international agreement but has followed as the natural result of wide practice or superiority or, as has been frequently the case, commercial penetration. Priority of a product on the foreign market has led usually to adoption of identical standards.

As Dr. Goldsmith pointed out, while there is great need for standardization, many American standards are universal because we have pioneered the industry, especially in sound recording and projection, and these standards are the result of very careful development.

Economy One Result

Direct benefits of uniformity of specifications, as recognized from practical experience, are that they are interchangeable and that they make for volume of production, resulting in economy to the purchaser and convenience to the user.

The lack of a standard can be a tremendous handicap in the sale of equipment, pointed out Mr. Friedl, who said that prospective purchasers of 16mm. projectors and film for visual instruction and industrial and commercial uses are familiar with the present confusion resulting from an American and a German standard: Consequently, they are withholding their orders until the situation crystallizes, because not only would there be a lack of interchangeability and hence difficulties but also they would have no assurance against obsolescence in case one or the other of the equipments were withdrawn from the field.

A situation of this sort, he added, always is a negative factor in any sales talk, and in this particular instance is retarding a division of the industry which should be making rapid strides.

Recently in Industrial Standardization and Commercial Standards Monthly, published by the American Standards Association, Homer G. Tasker, president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, outlined the development of motion picture standardization in America.

Points Need of Coordination

"In a very real sense the entire activity of a motion picture studio is devoted to 'design and tooling' while the actual 'production, sales, and delivery' of the product occurs in some fifteen thousand local branch 'factories,'" said Mr. Tasker. "It is clear that more than usual coordination between the 'tooling' and the operation of production machinery must be achieved if the product is to have uniformly high quality.

"For example, it is necessary that the projection machines in every theatre have film-propelling sprockets whose teeth are spaced to the same pitch and gauge and that all films be perforated accordingly; otherwise, the problem of getting the right film to the right theatre would become insurmountable. Furthermore, it would be regrettable if the film from which pictures are projected upright in one theatre were to produce inverted pictures in another or if, instead of scanning the sound track, the sound apparatus were to scan the picture area with meaningless result; hence the size and position of sound and picture areas must be carefully standardized."

Mr. Tasker cited the formation of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in 1916 and pointed to its standards committee as its most important technical unit.

SAVINGS TO EXHIBITOR SEEN IN LEAGUE

"So far as possible," said Mr. Tasker, "the Standards Committee has been kept in balance as to the scientific or practical abilities of its membership and the technical and commercial interests which they represent, yet breadth of representation, while important, has not been absolutely essential in the past standardizing activities of the Society, since their direct result in each case was an SMPE standard and not a national or international standard.

"The acceptance of such standards by the industry is a purely voluntary matter. . . .

SMPE Sponsoring Project

"It is appropriate that steps should now be taken to formulate American standards for the motion picture industry through a sectional committee of the American Standards Association, in which the industry is broadly represented not only by membership on the committee but also by voting power. . . . In view of the many years of standardizing activity on the part of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers it is particularly appropriate that this Society should sponsor the new project.

"Some two years ago Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, then president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, undertook the preliminary work of determining whether there was sufficient accord among the various commercial and technical interests in the motion picture field to make possible the creation of a Sectional Committee on Motion Picture Standards within the American Standards Association. As a result of his interest and energetic pursuit of this project the Committee has now been formed and its structure determined, and the various interests concerned have, for the most part, nominated their representatives. In recognition of Dr. Goldsmith's great interest in this project and his untiring efforts to bring it about, it is most fitting that he has been appointed chairman of the committee."

25 Groups Represented

The degree to which a broadly representative character for the Sectional Committee has been achieved is indicated in its membership of 25 organizations and companies, representing every important group having substantial interest in motion picture production, distribution, exhibition and allied activities in the United States. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which itself has sponsored a number of production and release print standards, recently joined the Committee and will have representation on it equal to that of the SMPE. Mr. Tasker said that the Academy "may be looked to for many valuable contributions to motion picture standards."

All the various groups represented on the Committee—ranging from the American National Committee for International Congresses of Photography, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, national exhibitor associations and large manufacturers, to the Amateur Cinema League and the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association—will take an active part in writing standards, under the procedure of the American Standards Association.

The proposed standards will be transmitted to the board of governors of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, in New York, and they will assure themselves that the procedure has been duly regular and in accordance with American Standards Association methods, and will then be submitted to the ASA for final approval as national standards. As contrasted to the procedure of the SMPE, the letter ballots of the Sectional Committee members will constitute the approval or disapproval not of the individual members, who may or may not be guided by company or organization interest, but of the commercial or technical interests which they represent.

The American Standards Association procedure conforms to that of the ISA, and has been followed in the ballot on the 16mm. standard.

200 Projects Underway

The 16mm. matter is one of some 200 projects which the ASA now has underway. The Association is a federation of trade associations, technical societies and government bureaus, and commercial organizations, serving as a clearing house for standardization work in the United States and acting as the authoritative American channel in international cooperation in standardization. More than 600 national organizations are officially participating and 3,000 experts are serving on committees. Its roster of officers, directors and advisory committee includes many leading industrialists.

The Association has already been of assistance to the motion picture industry in cooperating in working out the controversial 16mm. standard. J. W. McNair, electrical engineer of the Association, and Mr. Friedl were the ASA delegates to the Paris congress last summer.

Headquarters at Basle

The International Standards Association has its headquarters at Basle, Switzerland, a traditionally neutral country, with Dr. Alfred Huber-Ruf as general secretary. The 16mm. vote of the nations is clearing through this organization, a federation of 19 national standardizing associations: Rumania, Norway, Finland, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Italy, Spain, United States, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, France, Japan, Austria, Denmark, Poland, Russia, Sweden and Switzerland.

The governing council of the ISA includes the representatives of the standards associations of Austria, Denmark, Hungary, Japan, Norway, Poland and Rumania.

All standards approved by the ISA are published in German, French and English so there can be no element of misunderstanding such as gave rise to the controversy between the United States and Germany when the Germans copied the SMPE 16mm. standards from the SMPE Journal and in doing so misread the specifications.

Agents Combine To Fight Moss

A combined meeting has been scheduled October 22 in New York of the RKO, Loew and Independent Agents' Association. Besides discussing their plans on the licensing of New York theatrical representatives, as employment agencies, the three plan to unite to combat the drive by License Commissioner Paul Moss. Mr. Moss is endeavoring to bring the theatrical representatives under the employment agency law's provision. Failing that, he threatens to petition licensed booking offices to refuse to do business with unlicensed agents.

RKO Theatres Change Opening

Friday and Tuesday will be the opening days of new programs at all the RKO neighborhood theatres in New York and Westchester, it has been announced. The new program goes into effect this week.

Radicals Renew 'Red Salute' Tilt

The showing of "Red Salute," United Artists-Reliance release, at Loew's State in New Orleans last week caused considerable controversy and a number of protests, but a threatened demonstration in repetition of the disturbances in Cincinnati and New York which resulted in the arrest of 150 youthful pickets failed to materialize.

Students of Tulane University gained admittance to a preview for exhibitors and city officials, and while they failed to stage a demonstration, the local press commented on the controversial nature of the film. Said the Morning Tribune: "Whether you agree with the propaganda in 'Red Salute' or not, it is a dangerous thing when propaganda either for or against any policy is permitted display on our movie screens." Other newspapers, however, thought it effective anti-Red propaganda.

The Red influence is reported to be making itself felt in New Orleans, where pickets recently were released after having been arrested for picketing the Crescent and Orpheum, where films were showing to which they objected.

Last week, under an order signed by Circuit Judge Arthur Webster, Police Commissioner Heinrich Pickert and Police Censor Joseph Kollar were ordered to appear before Judge Thomas J. Murphy to show cause why they should not be required to issue a permit for the showing of the Soviet film, "Youth of Maxim."

The police censor originally approved the film for showing to members of the Cinema Guild at the Art Institute, but when he discovered it was being advertised for public showing he canceled the permit after holding a preview attended by American Legion heads and other civic leaders, who agreed the film was subversive propaganda. Protests against the ban were being continued by "pink" and Red groups and the Conference for the Protection of Civil Rights" elected a committee to carry a demand to Mayor Couzens that the showing be permitted.

In New York, radicals were preparing to stage demonstrations against forthcoming releases to be shown on Broadway, and were undeterred by the action of the magistrate's court in holding 18 students, arrested in front of the Rivoli for picketing "Red Salute," in $25 bail each for trial in General Sessions on charges of disorderly conduct.

Reports from the field were that protests were being continued by Reds and labor unions against the showing of Hearst Metrotone News and that threats of boycott still were being made.

Revives Old Fight Film

Fight pictures have met with such success recently, that Herman Axelbank has revived the Langford-Flynn fight picture taken some 25 years ago and has booked it into the Trans Lux theatres in New York.

U. S. STARTS $10,000,000 COMPETING SHOW PROJECT

BOOTH REINSTATED OVER DRAMA UNIT

Colonel Earle Booth, director of the New York drama division of the Works Progress Administration, who was ordered suspended on October 7 by General Hugh S. Johnson, WPA administrator for New York, pending inquiry into irregularities, on Tuesday was reinstated and cleared of all wrongdoing.

The charges were investigated by a committee designated by General Johnson.

It was alleged that a small sum of money had been raised through collections taken up following WPA dramatic productions before CCC camps, and that Colonel Booth had received official mail at his home instead of having it all routed through official channels.

One Vaudeville Group Threatens Demand for Congressional Inquiry of Pooling as Barring Variety Shows

While independent exhibitors and circuits and exhibitor organizations are protesting the wide spread of non-theatrical show competition, the United States Government this week launched its $27,000,000 program of "cultural" arts, between $7,500,000 and $10,000,000 of which will be used to blanket the nation with a network of WPA dramatic productions, musical comedy, circuses and vaudeville.

Exhibitors generally were speculating on the effects ot the low priced or free entertainment, but sentiment among circuit executives in New York was that since the vaudeville plans were still in a nebulous state it was premature to venture an opinion whether the program, which will start in New York on November 1, would prove extensive enough or meritorious enough to offer serious competition to established theatres.

Meanwhile the skeleton announcement of the plan to take the drama and vaudeville performers off the relief rolls and put them back on the stage heartened the ranks of the economically distressed in the theatre fields, even though the wage would be presumably $130.40 a month, the same as is now paid to such workers in the program which has been under way in the New York area, and it might be less.

Vaudeville Plan Held Up

In view of the huge grant, which contemplated work relief for 26,000 persons not only in the theatre but in painting, sculpture, music and literature, the American Federation of Actors, which had planned to go direct to President Roosevelt with a plea for the establishment of a nationwide vaudeville circuit calling for an expenditure of $9,000,000 a year, was holding its plans in abeyance pending further information.

Another group, the United Vaudeville Producers' and Directors' Association, also was watching the new development and was threatening to demand a Congressional investigation of the theatre pooling situation which, it charged, showed discrimination against variety shows and a barring of this type of entertainment from key city theatres.

This association, said Charles B. Maddock, its president, was observing the St. Louis antitrust action against three major distributors and leading executives for elements of possible conspiracy in connection with the vaudeville situation. He added, however, that it would be difficult to prove that a conspiracy existed.

Film Theatres Picketed

The "save vaudeville" campaign launched with a mass meeting last week was being continued with picketing of exclusively films theatres in the Times Square area and other sections of New York, and the American Federation of Actors was enlisting newspaper cooperation and radio stations in its efforts to marshal public support. Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the AFA, said petitions bearing the signatures of 250,000 persons had been gathered in all sections of the United States and in Canada as evidence that variety still is demanded.

Reports that vaudeville would be reinstated in Broadway theatres operated by Loew and RKO where it was discarded recently were denied this week. A Loew executive said that if the public demanded vaudeville, as claimed by the performers' organizations, it would support it when it was in the theatres, and that if the support had been adequate stage shows would never have been taken out. He reported that there was no immediate prospect of a return to vaudeville either at the Capitol on Broadway or in other Loew houses where a straight film policy was inaugurated several weeks ago.

10,000 Performers Idle

Mr. Whitehead reported there were 2,000 unemployed vaudeville performers in New York City and estimated the number idle throughout the country as 10,000. They find occasional work in night clubs, radio, music halls and the films, while the top-notchers have entered these fields entirely.

While he also blamed poolings and "the motion picture monopoly" for the sad state of vaudeville, Mr. Whitehead said his group would not join with the producers' association in requesting a Government investigation, believing that the situation can be corrected by "more constructive means."

He said the independent exhibitors this year were favoring stage shows to a marked degree, especially in the Middlewest, from which he had received very favorable reports. He said he planned to confer late this week with WPA officials.

A permanent committee has been formed to direct the "save vaudeville" crusade launched by the AFA, and the campaign is being extended to all key cities in the country, with unemployed performers taking an active part in picketing theatres, staging mass meetings and other attempts to win public favor, he said.

Federation of Actors Holds in Abeyance Plan to Appeal to President Roosevelt for Outlay for Vaudeville Circuit

However, favoring more direct action, Mr. Maddock, himself a vaudeville producer and agent, and Simon H. Feinstein, attorney for the vaudeville producers' association, concurred that the time is not far off when the large circuits would be opened to vaudeville, probably by federal action. They said that in that event 1,200 performers could be given employment within 30 days in touring vaudeville and unit shows, and 6,000 in a year's time. Mr. Feinstein said there was a distinct possibility that the Government would intervene.

While details are still lacking, Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, director of the WPA theatre project, said that vaudeville will have an important part in the New York program, which was placed in the forefront of arrangements to put thousands of jobless actors to work. These units, under the direction of Eddie Dowling, national adviser for musical comedy, vaudeville and variety, will work with WPA orchestras and dance bands.

It recently was estimated in Washington that 12,000 persons allied with the theatrical field would be given employment at a cost that may reach $10,000,000, providing for 9,000 actors, the balance being writers, directors, stagehands, technicians and others.

Elmer Rice, playwright and director and president of the Council of Dramatists and of the Authors' League of America, was named head of the theatre program in New York City. Mrs. Flanagan said the New York projects would be among the first to start operating and added that "one of the more far-reaching purposes is to create theatre enterprises of lasting value." Los Angeles and Chicago will also be among the first where the projects will be started.

Mr. Rice stressed the development of a large audience for the legitimate theatre by giving young persons and children the opportunity to see federally produced plays at low admission prices.

Three new undertakings are outlined in the program. First is a playwrights' theatre to be sponsored in New York by the Dramatists' Guild, which would give tryouts to new plays. Another group will be sponsored by the League of New York Theatres, and the managers will supply the theatres, scenery and in some cases other aid, giving the managers the opportunity of a professional test of a play without going to the expense of a professional tryout performance. The managers, under this arrangement, will not be permitted to make a profit. The third undertaking will begin in the Harlem district of New York, where two theatres are planned, and this may spread to the South if sufficient interest is shown.

In both the playwrights' and the managers' units, limited engagements will be the rule. The policy will be worked out to charge small admissions, probably ranging from 10 to 25 cents to $1. It is not known whether a Federal tax will be charged on tickets over 40 cents. The income will be used to cover expenses other than the payroll.

15 YEARS OF THE BROADWAY STAGE

The optimists of the dramatic theatre appear to have tangible evidence to support their favorable predictions for a continuance of the returning success of the stage during the new show season just started.

Taking The Billboard's annual theatrical index of the status of the theatre at the recent end of the 1934-35 season, as at least partial evidence of the movement toward rehabilitation, Broadway today is pointing with some satisfaction to the many improvements noted during the past season in the condition of the stage, many of which, they hold, will continue.

The average length of run has increased, "an extremely healthy sign," going from 55 performances, as in 1933-34, to 60 in 1934-35. The total number of plays produced on Broadway, the center of the drama in America, increased to 189 from the previous season's 154, a gain of 35. This, too, they hold, to be further verification of their optimism for the rebuilding of the stage.

Finds Steady Continuance in Total Theatres Used

Billboard's "Theatrical Index" last week disclosed a steady continuance in the number of theatres used, as compared with 1933-34, both seasons averaging 50 and 49, respectively, and about the same percentage of failures—81 per cent. There were, however, three fewer hit plays in the past season, when 26 successes of that standing were on the boards.

"The theatre has been going through—it still is going through—a grueling period of reorganization forced upon it by the depression," Billboard's study concluded, and added: "The entire economic structure of the theatre was tested in the crucible of depression, and what came out of the caldron is an entirely different substance from what went in. The theatre is still finding itself in its new form. But, it is gradually settling down, gradually finding its new place and its new structure."

"The theatre," it was found, "seemed to be settling back into something approaching normalcy, with the shows displaying greater early strength. If this movement continues during the coming year we can expect to see an increase in the number of hits, a decrease in the number of shows closing within five weeks, and a vast increase in the 'middle-class' productions"—which class was the "backbone" of the theatre in prosperity days and which had almost entirely disappeared.

Regardless, the stage in its present form still is unaccepted by the motion picture theatre as a serious competitor, although Hollywod does recognize it as a fertile source of material.

Greater Early Strength of Plays Held Encouraging

The greater early strength displayed last season by plays is accepted by Broadway as "one of the most encouraging signs of all," indicating as they believe it does, that the public began to develop again its former habit of play-going. The general and notable increase in evening dress among audiences was cited, too, as a hopeful sign of returning normalcy.

Another "striking" feature was the reappearance of the stock and repertory groups which had been conspicuously absent the previous season. No less than 49 productions fell into this socalled "special" category—including the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, the Irish Players, the Moscow Art Players, Walter Hampden's company, Eva LeGallienne's company and the Civic Light Opera Company. It is this type of drama, trouped into the field, that brings the most competition from the stage to exhibitors.

"Sailor Beware" was on top with the most performances, marking up 488, as compared with the 357 performances last season of "Men in White." "She Loves Me Not" was credited with 367 performances, "Accent on Youth," 228; "Post Road," 210, and "Fly Away Home," with 202.

Six shows played only one performance, 10 played two, eight had three performances and six had five.

PRINTERS' INK

October 10, 1935

The motion picture industry this week got together and paid its compliments to a man who has played an important part in its progress and development, Martin Quigley. On the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of Mr. Quigley's heraldship of the Motion Picture Herald, it might be expected that the industry which bows to none in the matter of showmanship would conspire to produce a colorful tribute. It did.

Twenty years is not such a very long time as time goes. But in an industry that is so closely geared to the modern tempo, in an industry that has sprung up with such amazing rapidity, twenty years is a fairsized period indeed. And if anyone thinks not, let him get a copy of the Motion Picture Herald for September 28 and let him leaf through its 372 pages. He who does this cannot fail to be impressed strongly by the advances that have been made in the art of motion pictures.

To the Schoolmaster an exceedingly interesting feature is that which illustrates advertisements for the outstanding screen productions of the last two decades. What a far cry from Chaplin's 1915 brand of silent artistry, "Easy Street," to the present-day talking adaptation of Shakespeare! Equally interesting is the advertising section, not only for its bulk of 230 pages, nor its parade of famous names, but for the cleverness and ingenuity shown by certain advertisers in their congratulatory messages.

HOLLYWOOD STARTS WAR CYCLE, AS NEWSREELS GET BATTLE SCENES

At Least Two Dozen Military Pictures Are Rushed While Distributors Hunt Subjects Touching on Ethiopia

The thunder of hob-nailed marching feet of Mussolini's Italian infantrymen, mingled with the softer retreat of Haile Selassie's unshod but calloused tribesmen, echoes with the roar of bombing planes from Abyssinia across 3,000 miles of ocean and then 3,000 miles of land, and Hollywood is listening, even as the world listens to the newer rumblings of Mars on the Russo-Japanese border and on the waters at Malta and the Suez Canal. Already the blue bowl of sky echoes with the mimic warfare from the back lots of Hollywood, the while their exchanges in the field hasten to the doorstep of the exhibitor with Ethiopian subjects already in the can, and the newsreels work night and day, feverishly racing to market with their camera and sound recordings of the conflict. Directly, then, the motion picture theatre owner is affected by this troubled state of world affairs thusly:

1. The war cycle is on in Hollywood, militarism in one form or another being the plot of at least two dozen films intended for early release.
2. Every available subject from or about Ethiopia is being marshaled by both large and small distributors for showing while the conflict rages across the Abyssinian desertland and is reflected on page one of the American press.
3. First scenes of troops at the front arrive from Abyssinia and the newsreels open the anticipated competitive drive to reach the nation's screens first.
4. Trouble looms for exhibitors showing war subjects in those places where sentiment is strong for or against one or another of the belligerents. Hisses and boos were the greetings.
5. Foreign political censoring to prevent public demonstrations appears to be growing.

Even before the powder keg of the African war zone exploded across international headlines at three in the afternoon of Tuesday, October 1st, signaling the crossing of the Ethiopian frontier by the troops of Il Duce, Hollywood studios, sensitive to the temper of the times, were busy planning more films with backgrounds of combat than have been issued since "The Beast of Berlin" days in the World War, some 17 years ago.

In the Studio Camps

W. Ray Johnston's Republic Pictures is rushing into production "The Legion of the Lost," originally set as a French Foreign legion subject, but the locale of which was switched to Abyssinia to cash in on the Italo-Ethiopian war.

War is the subject matter of 20th Century-Fox's "Professional Soldier," already under way, the while Darryl Zanuck on that lot prepares "A Message to Garcia" of the Spanish-American War. The same studio is preparing "Under Two Flags," a foreign story that was filmed as a silent, and also "Wooden Crosses," drama of the World War

Warner Brothers has "The Charge of the Light Brigade," "Legionnaire," and a Joe E. Brown war burlesque, "I'm in the Legion."

Paramount is releasing "The Last Outpost," another story of the world conflict.

Though war figures only secondarily in Samuel Goldwyn's "Dark Angel," current, this United Artist release is a likely candidate for war billing on marquee fronts.

Samuel Goldwyn, too, will have "Navy Wife."

MGM has "Boots and Saddle," a cavalry story, and Academy Pictures soon gets under way with "Millions for Defense," visionary story of an invasion of the United States by an unnamed Oriental power.

A Story of the Slave Trade

Considered one of the most authentic stories of the Ethiopian sector is "Black Cargo," a new novel and screen play dealing with the slave trade and political backgrounds of Ethiopia, and written expressly for motion pictures. It has been published by Julius Klein, former assistant to Carl Laemmle at Universal City, in collaboration with Major C. Court Treatt, retired British intelligence officer, who for 22 years was stationed in Ethiopia.

The story, conceived and written in two weeks, relates the adventures of a British soldier family in Africa. It makes much of the "Ethiopian war drums."

John P. Medbury, newspaper columnist, as commentator, takes theatre-goers through Ethiopia in a new subject of his, the while state rights distributors are marketing "Ra-Mu," dealing with the African war-torn country.

Three Films in Toronto

In Toronto, newspapermen were given a private showing of three films taken in Ethiopia by Dr. R. V. Bingham, and depicting the difficulties which Mussolini's soldiers are encountering crossing mountains 10,000 feet high and climbing in and out of canyons each as great as the Grand Canyon in Colorado.

Film libraries the country over, private and otherwise, are being searched for Ethiopian shots. Not much is expected to be unearthed, however, and it is with this knowledge that the industry is looking for arrival here of negatives taken at the front by the newsreels.

"Abyssinia, the Last Imperial Country in Africa," has been released by Ufa, in short form, showing what its cameraman, Dr. H. Rikli, claims are all of the war preparations of Ethiopia prior to the rainy season last summer. Also, as a guest of the Negus, the King, it is said he was permitted to shoot scenes of the imperial family for the first time.

Paramount beat all its competitors to market in this country with the first all-Ethiopian feature talker, "Wings Over Ethiopia," United States distribution rights to which were acquired some two weeks ago.

Demonstrations in Theatres Reflect Patrons' Bias; Film Libraries Scoured for Material; Newsreel Race Underway

When war clouds first began to gather over Addis Ababa last summer, L. Wechsler, Swiss cameraman and motion picture director, chartered a giant Condor plane and, piloted by Walter Mittleholzer, pioneer North African pilot, toured Abyssinia from the capital to the farthest of the back-country savage tribal country.

Running some 7,000 feet in its present edited form, the film, taking four months to make, was originally 20,000 feet long.

Newspapers the country over reproduced scenes from the picture, with credit to Paramount, and the company reports that "hurry calls" are being received at exchanges in the field for more prints, following the premiere at the Paramount theatre on Broadway and at the Paramount in Los Angeles. Exhibitors are ballyhooing the film as a war picture, tying in directly with the daily newspaper combat headlines. Prints are being rushed by plane.

A later development was acquisition by 20th Century-Fox of "Gibraltar," by Laurence Stallings, who is now in charge of the Fox Movietonews camera crew at the Ethiopian front.

First Fighting Films Arrive

The first tangible results from the newsreels' costliest assignment in the history of film news coverage appeared on Monday when virtually all the companies received in New York the first actual army scenes, taken at the outset of the invasion two weeks ago. The newsreel staffs immediately were placed on a 24-hour schedule to edit, print and ship the subjects. No attempt was made to build them into special editions, as is customary with events of such news importance, and they were released on Tuesday in the regular midweek issues.

Reports of typical reactions to Ethiopian and other war subjects on the screen came this week from Long Island and London, partisanship in the Italo-Ethiopian hostilities nearly resulting in a riot at the Bay Shore (L. I.) Regent theatre when pictures of Mussolini, flashed on the screen in a newsreel, were hissed by patrons. Police and state troopers were called.

Protest Showing of Film

How British sympathy lies in the conflict was demonstrated at reels shown in British theatres. Pictures of Mussolini, General Emilia de Bono and other Italians have been greeted this week with hisses and catcalls, as against fervent applause for Emperor Haile Selasse and the Ethiopians.

Italian consular officers in New York were reported to be preparing a protest against Paramount releasing "Wings Over Ethiopia," the while governments elsewhere were clamping down on any war subjects that might arouse the sentiment of citizens.

The Austrian police banned all films dealing with Ethiopia.

Because of a tense situation created by the African war, the board of censors at Georgetown, British Guiana, barred the film "Emperor Jones" (Krimsky-Cochrane-United Artists) on the ground that it might stir up racial strife between Negroes and whites in the colony.

Political film censorship in other foreign countries was expected to spread, and in Panama "Thunder in the East" was withdrawn because the Japanese consul protested in behalf of his country, calling the film "quite offensive to the nationalist feeling of the Japanese Empire."

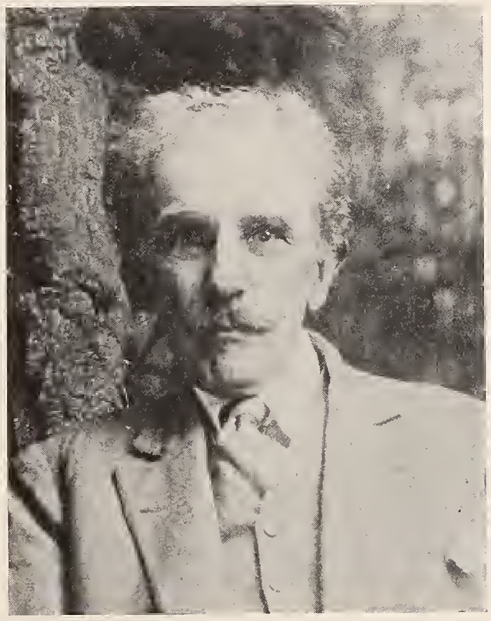
DICKSON'S DEATH TAKES MAN WHO MADE THE FIRST MOTION PICTURE

Briton Made Machine for Edison's Notions, Tried $2.50 Worth of Eastman's New 'Film'—Result: 'Kinetoscope'

Severance of Relations with Edison Followed by Invention of Mutoscope and Biograph Projector; Returned to Edison

by TERRY RAMSAYE



W.K.Laurie Dickson

The man who made the first motion picture is dead. William Kennedy Laurie Dickson, laboratory assistant to Thomas A. Edison through the years in which the film was brought into existence, died at Twickenham in England, Monday, September 30. He was 75 years old and is survived by Mrs. Dickson and an adopted son.

Mr. Dickson, long, long since forgotten by the world of the motion picture, was by reason of his early influence a factor in the formative years of the industry and a creator of sequences and consequences far beyond his foreseeing. It is not too wide a presumption to say that, but for him, his friendships and affiliations, the pattern of the first two decades of the industry, including the great Motion Picture Patents Company, would not have been created in the form that it followed and by reason of that many of the sequels that persist to today.

Uses Edison's Rejection As Letter of Introduction

It was way back about 1880 when the very young Mr. Dickson presented himself at the Edison Laboratories in New Jersey. He had, by way of an introduction, a letter from Mr. Edison.

A year or so before, from his home in England, this lad Dickson, filled with enthusiasms by what he had read about the "Wizard of Menlo Park," had written over for a place in the Edison research organization. He got a reply in Edison's own hand, saying in effect that there was no opportunity.

With that letter Dickson gained audience, and, it would seem, made a favorable impression. In any event Mr. Edison said, "Since you are here you might as well go to work—go in the next room and hang up your coat." He proved a great find.

About 1887 Mr. Dickson was busy across the river in New York on the job of supervising the construction of underground circuits to take care of the maze of festooned wires on poles that served the metropolitan district. What Mr. Edison thought of the New York electrical system was unprintable. He remarked that the condemned should be given jobs as New York electricians instead of sending them up to Sing-Sing for disposal. He evidently decided to rescue Dickson.

Two Assignments That Helped Make History

Called to West Orange, Mr. Edison made Dickson a member of the research staff and assigned to him a number of problems. One of them, incidentally, was examination of what happened in the idle filament of a two-filament incandescent lamp. It seemed to have juice in it. It did. It was, in fact, the ancestor of today's radio tube. That was then merely something for the note books. The other assignment was on Edison's problem of "a machine that would do for the eye what the phonograph did for the ear."

Edison had notions and made drawings. Dickson made machines and tried them.

In the summer of 1889 they had a machine that would work if they had had anything to work in it. They needed a flexible tape, transparent and tough, to make the pictures on and to take them back through the machine in the same way for exhibition. They had made for experimental purposes bits of film by painting collodion varnish on glass and stripping it off to use as a vehicle. It proved the principle and nothing else.

Sent $2.50 to Eastman For 50 Feet of "Film"

About this juncture word was about that George Eastman of Rochester, who specialized in "roller photography," was about to launch a new material to take the place of the negative paper with which he loaded his "Kodaks." Edison instructed Dickson to get a sample, and so they ordered a fifty-foot roll of the stuff, which Edison called "film," and sent Mr. Eastman a postoffice money order for $2.50 for it in September of 1889. The stuff worked.

October 6, 1889, Mr. Dickson took Mr. Edison into mysterious "Room 5" of the laboratories at West Orange and demonstrated the Kinetoscope, the world's first motion picture machine using film.

It was a peep show machine into which one spectator at a time could look. It was the beginning of the motion picture industry of today.

Mr. Edison was entertained, but not much. He gave Mr. Dickson some new assignments and put the machine in the corner of his office to show a friend now and then. Once it came near being introduced when a demonstration was made at the Brooklyn Museum. But it was not until a promotor for the Edison phonograph exhibit at the World's Fair in Chicago came along that it got real attention. Mr. Edison promised to make up some of the machines for the Fair and in a half hearted way started to do something about it. He had bigger problems than that on his hands.

Magic Lantern Hookup Wanted to Speed Nickels

Dickson was assigned to make some pictures for the machines. Too late for the Fair by a year, the machines and the pictures were made. So it came that the Edison Kinetoscope came to the show world in a peep show "parlor" at 1155 Broadway, opening April 14, 1894.

Showmen were impatient of peep shows and one customer seeing the picture at a time. They wanted a magic lantern hooked up with the pictures so they could show to a whole roomful of customers at a time and get the nickels faster. Edison was not much interested in showmanship in the first place, and secondly he was selling peep show machines and wanted to clean up that end of the business first. He had spent almost $25,000 developing the silly thing, and W. E. Gilmore, his new general manager, was insisting on some money back right away.

About then some Kinetoscope concessionaires, the Latham brothers, Otway and Grey, went to see Mr. Dickson. Unhappily

INVENTED FIRST PEEP SHOW MACHINE

they attracted his interest for a time and he visited their shop at 35 Frankfort street down under the Brooklyn Bridge where they were trying to build a projector.

Dickson Impatient to Get Projection Phase at Work

Mr. Dickson, who had been tinkering at projection at the Edison plant, and doing some tinkering on the side up at Columbia University's laboratory, was enthusiastic about projection's possibilities and more than impatient because the Edison plant was not in a hurry to make that next step and invade the peep show market.

Just then Mr. Dickson had a book on the press, written, it seems, at the instance somewhat of Raff & Gammon, who were selling the peep show Kinetoscope. The book was about the history of the Kinetoscope.

However, it does appear that Mr. Dickson gave some attention to the Lathams because very shortly his friend, Eugene Lauste, a photograph mechanic who had not been getting along very pleasantly at the Edison plant, went to work for the Lathams at their experimental shop in Frankfort street.

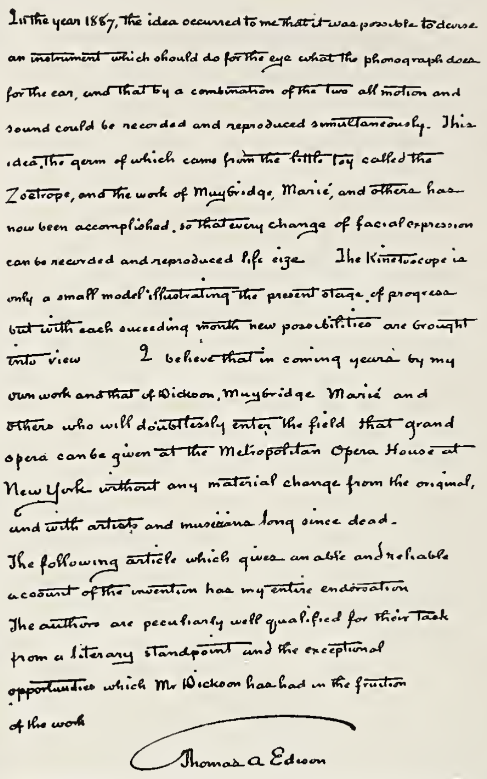
Major Woodville Latham, father of Otway and Grey, got annoyed because Mr. Lauste and Mr. Dickson talked French in the shop all the time, and presently Mr. Dickson broke with the Lathams and did not take up the stock in the Lambda company which he had put in escrow with his lawyer.

Gilmore Displeased, Dickson Leaves Edison's Company

But meanwhile Mr. Gilmore at West Orange got very displeased with what he heard and Mr. Dickson dissolved his connection with the Edison establishment.

Then came a really major development. Up at Canestota, New York, there was a meeting of Henry N. Marvin, inventor of an electric drill and one time employe of the Edison General Electric Company at Schenectady, Herman Cassler, mechanician extraordinary of Marvin & Cassler of Canestota, and E. B. Koopman of New York, a promoter of great ability—and Mr. Dickson.

From that meeting came the K.M.C.D. Syndicate, which produced a machine called the Mutoscope, to compete with the Edison peep show Kinetoscope, and presently the Mutoscope was to grow into the Biograph, a projector, and the company became in turn American Mutoscope and Biograph Company, which in years to come became the famous "AB" of later Patents Company days—bringing us in succession D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet, Mack Sennett and all that glorious company.



In the year 1887, the idea occurred to me that it was possible to devise an instrument which should do for the eye what the phonograph does for the ear, and that by a combination of the two all motion and sound could be recorded and reproduced simultaneously. This idea, the germ of which came from the little toy called the Zoetrope, and the work of Muybridge, Marié, and others has now been accomplished, so that every change of facial expression can be recorded and reproduced life size The Kinetoscope is only a small model illustrating the present stage of progress but with each succeeding month new possibilities are brought into view I believe that in coming years by my own work and that of Dickson, Muybridge Marié and others who will doubtlessly enter the field that grand opera can be given at the Metropolitan Opera House at New York without any material change from the original, and with artists and musicians long since dead.
The following article which gives an able and reliable account of the invention has my entire endorsation
The authors are peculiarly well qualified for their task from a literary standpoint and the exceptional opportunities which Mr Dickson has had in the fruition of the work

Thomas A. Edison

Edison Foreword from the Dickson Book

The Biograph machine was an amazingly ingenious set of evasions and attempted evasions of the specifications of the Edison patents. Otherwise its purposes were identical. Biograph always logically contended that Mr. Dickson made no contribution to it.

But while Mutoscope and Biograph were in the making, Raff & Gammon, the Kinetoscope agents, brought to the market the father of all today's projection machines, the Vitascope, evolved by Thomas Armat of Washington, D. C., and manufactured by the Edison plant.

Mr. Dickson's book was printed and ready to issue. In haste the cover was changed to bring the Vitascope into the title. It was mentioned nowhere else in the book. Meanwhile the book, written long before, anticipated and told about projection of pictures and of talking pictures, with synchronous dialogue, all as realistically as though it were today. Mr. Dickson's authorship and wishes had slightly outrun the facts.

Meanwhile in 1897, which was almost immediately, the lawyers went to work and the great era of the patents wars began with the case of Thomas A. Edison vs. The American Mutoscope and Biograph Company. It was not ended until that historic day in December of 1908 when they all met at the Brevoort hotel and formed the Patents company.

But through the litigations of the years Mr. Dickson had been and continued abroad. He was a technician of remarkable ability. He made the first pictures of the Pope and the Vatican ever recorded. He journeyed the world around, save the U. S., and wrote another book called "Biograph in Battle."

Many, many years rolled by. The prosperity of the Biograph faded and less happy days came upon Mr. Dickson. He fell into correspondence with West Orange again, tentatively. Presently the matter came to the attention of Edison and the differences of years before were dismissed. Once again Dickson was on the Edison payrolls—without research assignments. That was more than fifteen years ago and most of the years since Mr. Dickson spent in the sunshine of southern France or the Channel Islands, once again in his later years a defender of the Edison priorities which the Biograph had fought so bitterly to overthrow.

For many years the editor of Motion Picture Herald and Mr. Dickson enjoyed a friendly contact and voluminous correspondence. Some of it in time led up to the election of Mr. Dickson to honorary membership in the Society of Motion Picture Engineers October 16, 1933.

Doublier to Lecture For Film Alliance

The New Film Alliance is sponsoring a lecture to be given this Friday night at the Hubbell Auditorium, Steinway Hall, New York, by Monsieur Francois Doublier on "The Motion Picture." This lecture is the first of a series planned by the Alliance for its subscribers, but it will also be open to the general public.

M. Doublier has long been associated with the industry, having worked with Lumiere when he invented his first projection camera. He also has been credited with being the first newsreel cameraman, having toured Europe from 1896 to 1900 taking pictures of important events, such as the coronation of Czar Nicholas. M. Doublier then came to America and in 1902 he built one of the first laboratories in this country at Fort Lee, N. J. At the present time he is again at Fort Lee, managing the Major Film Laboratories there.

Bellinger Theatre at Batavia, N. Y., Burns

The Bellinger Theatre, for years a landmark in the heart of the business section of Batavia, N. Y., was destroyed late last week by fire, with the damage estimated at $200,000. The building, a rambling, three-story wooden structure with a brick front, was a roaring torch for two hours and threatened the entire center of the city.

MARY PICKFORD RUNNING UNITED ARTISTS WITH KELLY AND BUCKLEY

Arthur Kelly Vice-President in Charge of Sales, Harry D. Buckley Vice-President Over General Corporate Affairs

First Lady of the Screen, Now First Woman President of a Large Film Corporation, Confers at Home Office

The First Lady of the Screen, who is now the first woman president of a major motion picture corporation, Miss Mary Pickford, newly arrived from Hollywood, walked into the office of United Artists Corporation in Seventh avenue Wednesday and began to confer.

The offices were filled with the purring of electrical tabulating and bookkeeping machines, putting down their figures like the pattering of rain on a shingle roof. They are doing a lot of bookkeeping at United Artists.

Miss Mary is president of United Artists just now because she was in the line of succession, being the first vice-president before the argument over rental contracts started in Hollywood between Al Lichtman and Samuel Goldwyn, resulting in a vacancy in the office of president.

What United Artists ultimately is to do about the presidency does not appear. Miss Pickford has indicated that there is no hurry.

"The organization is compact and there are not many of us, so that the board can take care of everything that a president has to do anyway," she observed. "Meanwhile we are making haste slowly. We contemplate no changes in distribution policies and methods. In production, perhaps; there we have ambitious plans."

She was for the day at least very much Miss Pickford the business woman. She seems to have some debates with herself about whether or not she will appear in future productions for United Artists or elsewhere. It is her feeling that she will play again only if she finds a role that positively demands her. "And in that event I would certainly not function as the producer of the same picture," she observed.

It developed incidentally that Miss Mary has been getting some offers to play from the competition, including Paramount, Universal and Columbia. She is free, it seems, to play in anybody's pictures if she so elects.

Mr. Lichtman Wednesday morning was about the United Artists offices and spent an hour exchanging stories with Miss Mary, ending with a merry little tableau entitled "Friends Forever."

Kelly and Buckley Advanced

Announcement by the board of directors that Arthur W. Kelly had been appointed vice president in charge of sales, and that Harry D. Buckley had been selected a vice president in charge of general corporate affairs, was followed by Miss Pickford's explanation that the management of the company's business proceedings at the home office in New York and in the exchanges in the field will be vested entirely in the new vice presidents.

Mr. Kelly first became associated with United Artists in the capacity of Charlie Chaplin's eastern representative when the corporation was organized in 1919. He soon afterwards became a vice president of the organization, and in 1926 was placed in charge of the foreign sales division, a position he held until his appointment this week as vice president in charge of sales.

Al Lichtman did not relinquish his title or duties as sales manager when he assumed the presidency from which he resigned last Wednesday.

Buckley Began as Manager

Harry D. Buckley started in motion pictures as United Artists branch manager in Kansas City immediately after the World War. Previously he had managed some stock theatres in St. Louis. From the sales division of United Artists he transferred to supervising road shows of Douglas Fairbanks' "Robin Hood," and others, and for a time was also personal business manager of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. In 1926 he became one of the three members of the executive committee at the home office and subsequently was elected a vice president. Corporate affairs in New York, including much of the actual home office management, have been in Mr. Buckley's hands some years.

Mr. Kelly, however, will retain supervision of foreign sales, with the exception of Great Britain and the European Continent, where Murray Silverstone is in charge. Mr. Kelly will continue to have Haskell Masters as his assistant in Canada. Harry Gold and Paul Lazarus are other sales assistants.

Al Lichtman's train trip back to New York from the Hollywood meeting of United Artists' producer members, at which his resignation was accepted, late last Wednesday, was preceded by a current of rumors as to his future in motion pictures. The reports, all without foundation of tangible fact, and most of them vigorously denied by the parties of the second part, had him variously in executive capacities in 20th Century-Fox, Warner Brothers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, where, it was said, but denied, he would serve as vice president and assistant to Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew-Metro president.

Nor did the rumors stop there, one Broadway yarn even placing him, together with Harry M. Goetz and Edward Small, of Reliance (United Artists producer), and Sam Briskin, in control of Universal Pictures. They had the finances coming from Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries. The Universal management, however, had another story.

Too, a dispatch from Hollywood mentioned that Mr. Lichtman was considering the formation of his own distributing corporation.

However, arriving in New York Wednesday, Mr. Lichtman said, "I will announce whom I will be with next week."

Following his differences with the management, which climaxed his protestations against restrictions imposed on his distribution duties by Samuel Goldwyn, producer-owner, Mr. Lichtman explained his position thus:

"I found it necessary to sever my connection with United Artists because my views did not coincide with the policies of one of its producers. My chief regret is that I must leave those loyal co-workers in United Artists who have worked with me for 10 years."

Further Selznick Activities

David O. Selznick this week further strengthened his position as an independent United Artists producer with the selection of staff members of his new Selznick International Pictures, announced last week simultaneous with Mr. Lichtman's resignation. The company, which has some impressive financial support—"Jock" Whitney, Dr. A. H. Giannini, Robert Lehman, Charles Payson, et al—will have as story editor Val Lewton, author of 14 well known novels, and formerly associated with Mr. Selznick at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

Kay Brown, for many years an executive of RKO, enters the new organization as head of its New York office.

Joseph Shea has been engaged as press representative in Hollywood.

John Cromwell was the first talent acquisition, Mr. Selznick giving him a contract to direct its first release, "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

An Associated Press dispatch from Hollywood, unconfirmed by the corporation, indicated that Dolores Costello will return to the screen from retirement under a Selznick contract.

Formal ratification of the company came with its incorporation at Dover, Delaware, on a capitalization of $2,600 and 13,000 shares of common stock without par value.

Seeks Appraisal Of Fox Shares

Mrs. Orra B. Mead, as owner of 23 shares of Fox Film Class A common, has filed a petition in New York supreme court asking the appointment of three appraisers to determine the value of her holdings. Mrs. Mead objects to the Twentieth Century-Fox merger and the reclassification of stock which will result, and says she has demanded payment for her stock.

Five applications for the appointment of three appraisers to determine the value of Class A common stock of the Fox Film Corporation were filed last Friday in the N. Y. Supreme Court. All five were submitted by the law firm of Blau & Polakoff. The applications stated that their clients were opposed to the Twentieth Century merger and desired to dispose of the stock held by them.

The applications were made by Munson G. Doremus, owner of 900 shares; Estele R. Gold, 100 shares; J. C. Vogeler, Jr. 200 shares; Arthur A. Eisele, 65 shares, and Charles F. Eisele, 300 shares.

An appeal has been filed in the appellate division of the N. Y. supreme court from an order issued September 10 denying a motion of Sidney Franklin for summary judgments in an action against Fox Film and Fox Movietone News, Inc.

David L. Loew Joins Hal Roach

David L. Loew has resigned as vice-president of Loew's, Inc., the company named for and by his father, the late Marcus Loew, to join with Hal Roach in a partnership agreement whereby he will become executive vice-president in charge of finances and general business matters for Mr. Roach. Henry Ginsberg will continue as vice-president and general manager of the Roach interests.

Mr. Loew, who will assume his new post immediately, is at present in New York to conclude his duties in the Loew organization, but he will leave for Hollywood shortly and will make his permanent headquarters there in the future.

With the announcement that Mr. Loew had joined his production organization, Mr. Roach coincidentally revealed an expansion program involving several hundred thousand dollars in studio improvements. Contracts for two new sound stages will be let within the next two months, and plans to increase the actor and director personnel of the organization are also under way. The main expansion move is to begin shortly after January 1.

Mr. Loew explained his move into the producing end as simply "moving his desk," as Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will continue to release the Hal Roach product.

Arthur M. Loew, other son of the founder of the company bearing his name but who recently resigned as a member of the board while continuing in charge of sales abroad for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer through the Culver Export Corporation, either has been or will be offered a contract to continue in that post.

He said a contract had been discussed, but added no decision had been made by him because "I first would like to see what it provided and what it had to say."

Eugene Picker, son of the late David Picker, whose local theatres were purchased by the circuit some years ago, has long been identified with film buying for the circuit, for which David L. Loew has been chief buyer for a few months.

Denounces Equity On Sunday Shows

Only by means of "continued public pressure" will New York get general Sunday shows, Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive adviser of the League of New York Theatres, said Monday in making his annual report as the league met in its offices in the Paramount Building on Broadway.

Inasmuch as Actors' Equity Association has ruled that players must receive two-eighths of a week's salary for acting on Sundays, Dr. Moskowitz urged the members of the league, now numbering ninety-two, not to offer their shows on Sunday at all. Since the legalization of Sunday performances, two plays have opened on that night to avoid conflicts with other premieres. Dr. Moskowitz also mentioned the Equity referendum on the subject, which he called "unfair," and said:

"The giving of Sunday performances is financially impossible. Already one of our members has utilized Sunday for holding an opening because there were too many openings during the previous week. Others will doubtless do the same. I desire to caution our members to refrain as far as possible from doing this. We want to demonstrate to the Council of Actors' Equity that the conditions it has set for Sunday performances cannot be carried out."

Another matter of interest to the playgoing public—the matter of bars in theatres—also bobbed up in the annual report, but Dr. Moskowitz said that nothing could be done in the present year.

New Film Control Board in Poland

According to a decree of August 23, 1935, published in the "Journal of Laws" in Warsaw, the Polish minister of the interior is authorized to appoint a film commission and a supreme film commission to study motion pictures and advertising material presented to them by the ministry of the interior.

The members of these film commissions will be employees of the ministry of the interior and the first commission will include a president and one member, while the second will include a president and two members, one of whom shall be a lawyer. The president and the two members of the supreme film commission will be appointed by the minister of the interior and selected from employees of his ministry.

When films examined are intended for exhibition before school children or students, the ministry of public education may delegate a representative to participate in the sittings of the commission. The ministry of war may also delegate a representative to study pictures of a military nature or touching on military life.

The duties of these commissions will be to decide whether or not a film or a part of it may be shown in Poland or in certain parts of the country, and whether the advertising material and names used are appropriate.

CLEARANCE BATTLE CLOUDS DARKEN OVER MISSOURI, CLEAR IN CHICAGO

Balaban & Katz Fight for Additional Week of Protection in Chicago Will Come to a Head Next Month

The heat of the perennial clearance-and-zoning dispute between circuits and independent owners flared anew this week in Kansas City, but cooled somewhat in Chicago, these two places having been the main battlegrounds in the controversy these several weeks.

Balaban & Katz, dominating the Chicago scene, has not as yet obtained the additional week's clearance that was demanded, nor will the climax be reached there until next month, when all hands will gather to set bookings beyond November.

Although denying that Fox Midwest, largest operator in and about Kansas City, is attempting to set up a "system" of protection, the management has become the target of attacks by independents.

After two weeks of meetings to settle booking troubles the Chicago booking-clearance situation has momentarily quieted down. Whether this condition will last long is a matter of serious moment. In fact, things are so quiet that the trade there suspects there is considerable going on behind the scenes and at any moment the battle may break out afresh.

Demanded More Clearance

The cause of the excitement was the demand of Balaban and Katz theatres that seven days additional clearance be allowed between the release of pictures for the "C"-week houses and the "first week of release" houses. At present there is only one "week's" clearance between the two. This makes it possible for a "first week of release" house to show, on Sunday, a picture which played in a "C"-week house the Saturday previous. If the seven-day clearance arrangement was effected, the "first week house" could not play the picture until seven days from the date of closing in the "C"-week house.

It is this problem which almost has upset the booking system used in Chicago, a system which has been the model for many other booking arrangements throughout the country.

General opinion is that B & K would have encountered no difficulty in obtaining this clearance if it had set out for it soon enough. However, it was after many contracts had been signed by the distributors with others that the demands were made. This made it impossible for the distributors to give B & K the clearance demanded without jeopardizing some 300 deals made previously with others.

Says Grant Was Made

B & K executives said that when they made their deals for the new product they asked for and were granted, verbally at least, the extra clearance. However, exchange men explained that in conferring with B & K they agreed to allow the extra clearance provided all companies did the same. B & K added that five major companies are supplying them with the new pictures and that they took this as an indication that their demands were granted. These five are: Paramount, Warner, Columbia, MGM and Fox. It is understood, however, that the contracts have not in all cases been signed by B & K. It is also reported that the added week's clearance is not mentioned in the contracts, the agreement being a verbal one to the effect that if all agreed, B. & K. would get the clearance they asked.

After much delay, the independent exhibitors last week set their bookings for November. The B. & K. representative who is usually present at such conferences was absent. Now the matter stands with B. & K. setting their bookings the way they want them and the other exhibitors setting their bookings the way they always have. Whether this will work out remains to be seen.

Chicago exchangemen say they have notified B. & K. that they have not allowed them the extra clearance, that in fact they could not even if they wished without serious legal difficulties. B. & K. reports they have received no such notice.

A B. & K. executive said this week that "the booking clearance situation in Chicago is all messed up." From appearances he was correct. But for the time being all is quiet again, November bookings are set and not until there arrives the time of the actual playdates will one be able to figure out just what happened to whom and why.

It now appears that B. & K. will not get the clearance it wished until next season. But, whether or not they will make up for their loss of this in some way or another has Chicago's film row guessing. Some who profess to know the inside say that "B. & K. has something up their sleeve" which will produce plenty of fireworks when released.

Fox Midwest Not Trying to Set Up New System, Says Rhoden, but Kansas City Independents Make Protest

Fox Midwest is not buying nor is it attempting to set up a "system" of protection, said Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox division chief. The circuit is simply making separate deals with each distributor on whatever basis they want to sell.

All Fox Midwest is attempting to do is get away from "so much day and date playing of pictures," which, Mr. Rhoden feels, has "ruined the movie business in Kansas City." As many as 15 houses, and many times nine houses, have played big pictures day and date, he pointed out, thus destroying much of their potential gross.

"I've changed some good pictures to Friday and Saturday just to get away from showing them Sunday and Monday, when day and date playing is so prevalent," Mr. Rhoden added.

He said that nothing in the manner in which he is buying is new. It is the basis on which exhibitors buy in other cities, he explained. Other exhibitors want to play day and date with Fox houses, but don't want to pay as much as the circuit for the pictures, added Mr. Rhoden. He said he is willing for houses in competitive situations charging the same price to play before he does if they want to pay for it, but he doesn't want to pay two or three times what another house pays for a picture and then have to play day and date with it.

Independents Map Fight

Regardless, the reorganized Kansas City Independents Theatre Owners late last week resolved to "fight the proposed protection idea to the last ditch," adding, "We will use all the means at our command, including legal steps, to combat it."

The group empowered its executive committee to plan the fight against protection, and report to the entire membership.

Practically all Kansas City independents attended the meeting, and they unanimously opposed the idea of protection. They felt they should individually refuse to buy from companies responsible for the movement, according to Emanuel Rolsky, St. John and National Theatres, who was elected president of the ITO under the reorganization.

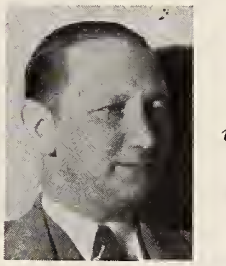
So far as independents can learn, Fox Film is the only distributor that has sold the Fox Midwest circuit protection.

Resignations of the old officers of the association, which have been pending some weeks, were accepted at the meeting and new officers were elected. Jay Means, Oak Park and Bagdad theatres, former president, is the only officer who did not return to some office under the new setup.

E. S. Young, of the Roanoke and Central theatres, was elected first vice-president; Mrs. Abe Baier, of the Lindbergh, second vice-president; Ed Hartman, of the Murray, was renamed secretary, and Charles H. Potter of the Admiral, treasurer.

ANALYZES POWER BUYING METHODS

Cost factors in the application of electric power to the facilities of the theatre, rate schedules, adjustment of operating conditions to reduce charges and related considerations in dealing with the utility companies, are dealt with in a discussion by Edward B. Silverman beginning in Better Theatres, accompanying this issue of the Herald.



Mr. Silverman is a New York consulting electrical engineer who has designed and revised the electrical arrangements of more then 250 theatres. He planned the electrical layouts for the two theatres in Rockefeller Center.

The current issue of Better Theatres is the fall Buyers' Number, containing The Equipment Index and Theatre Supply Dealers, semi-annual directories of the theatre equipment market.

SIROVICH COMMITTEE LAUNCHES HEARINGS ON PATENT POOLINGS

Chief Counsel Also Attorney in Pending Litigation of Seven Small Sound Equipment Companies Against A. T. & T.

With some of the titans of America's industry and finance "invited" to appear as witnesses, a Congressional committee on Tuesday opened public hearings in New York on a bill introduced by New York Congressman William I. Sirovich last session providing for the recording of patent pooling arrangements and contracts with the United States Commissioner of Patents.

Three Pertinent Facts

It was announced as a routine inquiry seeking, so Congressman Sirovich said, "information that will be of help to the committee." Three facts were apparent:

1. The statement by Congressman Sirovich, chairman of the House patents committee conducting the hearings, that the committee counsel and economic advisers were working "pro bono publico," which in translation means "for the public good," or, in terms of hard cash, for nothing.

2. The presence as the committee's chief counsel, or "legal expert," of David Garrison Berger, young lawyer who is "of counsel" in pending litigation instituted by seven small motion picture sound equipment companies against the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, for damages aggregating $67,000,000 claimed under the Sherman antitrust act on the basis of alleged misuse of the very patent poolings agreements the committee is probing.

3. The presence, at Mr. Berger's side, of Robert Robins, as one of the Congressional committee's investigators, or, officially, "economic advisors." Mr. Robins, creator of the American Society for the Protection of the Motion Picture Theatre and for the past several years the author of numerous pronuncia-business address and telephone number as mentos against the "big electrics," has the same Ralph Vatner, who is attorney of record in most of the lawsuits in which Mr. Berger is counsel.

Mr. Vatner, in addition to being a business associate of Mr. Berger, was in active attendance at the sessions.

Mr. Berger on Wednesday admitted that he was counsel in the actions pending against the electrics and said that that connection was the reason he was chosen by the Sirovich committee as its counsel. Mr. Berger took a large part in questioning of Mr. Bloom on Western Electric's activities in the sound equipment field through Erpi, and George E. Quigley, vice-president of Vitaphone.

An unexpected development occurred Wednesday when William Fox was taken into custody in Atlantic City, N. J., by the United States Marshal there, who was instructed to bring him immediately before the committee.

Mr. Fox had ignored a request to appear for questioning, at the hearing Wednesday, and also had ignored a request subpoena, according to committee counsel, who obtained permission to order him arrested and brought before the investigators. Deputy marshals seized Mr. Fox and started with him for New York.

In opening the hearings, held at New York's Fifth Avenue hotel, Congressman Sirovich said that the committee "has no axes to grind; no interests to serve. We are here to find the facts and to survey the patent pooling and cross-licensing field for the first time."

Congressman Sirovich was informed of Mr. Berger's and Mr. Vatner's interest in the lawsuits pending in the United States district court in New York against the electric and equipment companies whose officials have been subpoenaed by the committee and who will be subject to free interrogation by Mr. Berger, as counsel to the committee, on matters important in those litigations.

To this the Congressman said: "The committee will avail itself of anyone who can furnish us with the information. The existence of these lawsuits is of no concern to the committee. We are just trying to find out the facts. These men you refer to will get us the facts. The big interests won't help us."

Officials of A. T. and T., and its subsidiaries, Western Electric Company, Inc., and Electric Research Products, Inc., have been subpoenaed. Among these are Edgar S. Bloom, president of those subsidiaries. The first witness was Dr. Frank Baldwin Jewett, vice-president of A. T. and T. and president of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, the parent company's research division.

Among the suits, trial of which is pending in the United States district court in New York, in which Mr. Berger, head counsel for the Sirovich committee, and Mr. Vatner are counsel and attorney, respectively, are:

Biophone Corporation vs. A. T. and T., Western Electric and Erpi. Damages of $15,000,000 are sought in this action.

Audio Equipment Maintenance, Inc., vs. A. T. and T. Western Electric and Erpi. Damages sought, $1,500,000.

Service on Sound Corporation vs. A. T. and T., Western Electric and Erpi. Damages sought, $4,500,000.

Sound Picture Engineers vs. A. T. and T., Western Electric and Erpi. Damages sought, $1,500,000.

Macy Manufacturing Corporation vs. A. T. and T., Western Electric and Erpi. Damages sought, $3,000,000.

Standard Sound Service vs. A. T. and T., Western Electric and Erpi. Damages sought, $1,500,000.

In recent court actions brought by General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation, which sought damages aggregating $40,000,000 from the same defendants, Mr. Berger appeared as a witness against Erpi. The suit by Duovac, of which Mr. Robins is a former officer, was tried in Wilmington some months ago, and is to be argued this winter.

Congressman Sirovich concluded his opening statement, in which he said all members of his committee had concurred, saying:

"We shall now devote our attention to a concrete example, i. e., the most important single patent pool in existence, namely the pool to which A. T. and T., Radio Corporation of America, Westinghouse and General Electric are parties."

Mr. Berger read a list of witnesses which the committee would like to interrogate, and whom it has invited, the list including: Henry Ford, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., Owen D. Young, John W. Davis, Winthrop W. Aldrich and all directors of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company.

With Congressman Sirovich at the hearing on the opening day sat Representatives Thomas O'Malley, of Wisconsin; Matthew A. Dunn, of Pennsylvania; Randolph Perkins, of New Jersey; R. T. Buckler, of Minnesota; Thomas R. Amlie, of Wisconsin, and William D. McFarlane of Texas. Congressman Amlie, officially a Republican, is understood to be considering becoming a candidate for President next year on a third party ticket. Representative Kramer of California is a member of the committee.

William Fox Taken Into Custody by U. S. Marshal to Appear Before Committee; Swope, Jewett and Bloom Testify

Testimony Broadcast

The hearing was not far advanced before it gave promise of assuming a showmanship as well as political aspect. The testimony of the witnesses and statements of the committee members were broadcast over the New York City-owned radio station WNYC.

Gerard Swope, president of General Electric, was the only witness of the opening day besides Dr. Jewett. Repeated attempts were made by committee members, who hold widely divergent political beliefs, to draw Mr. Swope into political arguments. The electrical manufacturer merely smiled and evaded the questions and sat as an interested spectator while the Congressmen made lengthy expositions of their own credos.

After the communication and electrical patents investigation, the film industry comes next, and among film executives subpoenaed are Will H. Hays, John E. Otterson, Al Lichtman, Adolph Zukor, R. H. Cochrane, George Quigley, Jack Cohn, George McL. Baynes of Eastern Service Studios (Erpi), Joseph H. Moskowitz of Twentieth Century-Fox, M. A. Schlesinger, president of General Talking Pictures (Photophone-DeForest) and David Hochreich, president of Vocafilm.

That the investigation will turn also to music recording and probably underlying copyrights was seen in the calling of John G. Paine, agent and trustee of the Music Publishers Protective Association, who has been subpoenaed to appear Friday with the contracts the Association has made with Erpi.

The committee is functioning on an appropriation of $15,000, which, the committee said in a statement, makes it impossible to do more than "conduct a preliminary survey of the effects patent pools and cross-licensing agreements have to H. R. 4523." This is the Sirovich bill which would require the filing of information on all cross-licensing agreements and poolings with the Patent Office. It also would empower the Federal Trade Commission to bring action against any such agreements believed inimical to the public good.

Edgar Bloom Questioned

The committee on Wednesday questioned Edgar S. Bloom, president of Western Electric Company, Inc., and Electrical Research Products, Inc., on matters extraneous to motion pictures. In the course of his testimony the members of the committee aired their grievances against utilities generally.

At one point Congressman Matthew A. Dunn, of Pennsylvania, demanded: "Isn't it a fact that all legislatures and our Congress are controlled by your company and other companies like it?" The Congressman evidently forgot he was member of Congress.

"That is far from the fact," Mr. Bloom replied.

The Erpi executive testified that in his opinion it would be impossible to operate the Western Electric Company if cross-licensing were abolished, and that, moreover, in his opinion, cross-licensing does not tend to create a monopoly.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

"Tugboat Annie" was in New Orleans the other day. "A settled-down wife," as she now calls herself, Mrs. Charles W. Cook, of San Francisco, denied that any woman ever operated a tugboat out of Seattle, where Norman Reilly Raine's stories placed that beloved character who was made still more famous on the screen by Marie Dressler's interpretation of the mythical role in Metro's feature motion picture of that nickname.

Mrs. Cook is the lady who from 1918 to 1928 ran a worldwide shipping business with its $1,500,000-a-month turnover.

As "G. M. Starr" she chartered ships and sent them to ports throughout the world, to wherever she could pick up cargoes. She hired and she fired thousands of the toughest, hardest drinking stevedores to be found along the Pacific seaboard, clear from Vancouver to San Diego.

Men throughout the world during those years received her checks without any idea that "G. M. Starr" was a woman.

When you make a mistake in that business it runs as high as $40,000 on a single cargo. Mrs. Cook made very few mistakes.

Riding along this week on a stiff Autumn breeze from the towers of New York's Rockefeller Center there comes, along with the ether waves of NBC and the sales messages of the large distributing companies which headquarter there, an announcement of the formation of the Council for Moderation. Through this new medium some of America's leading social, cultural and financial bigwigs will move to enlist the cooperation of the whole country in a movement to curb intemperance and excess in the use of alcoholic beverages by means of an educational program through the screen, stage, radio and press directed towards fostering the principle of temperance and without resort to political or legislative action.

The Rockefellers and the Fords are interested, together with two score others who will set out to create an attitude of individual responsibility toward the use of liquor. Their efforts will be concentrated against the danger of excessive drinking and not in behalf of drinking in any degree whatsoever. Privately financed and no dues.

While traveling through north Alabama the other week, in the interest of Gerlach-Barlow, J. Milton Wigley, our Alabama correspondent, spent a night in the little town of Scottsboro. On a previous trip he had seen an old-fashioned lady around the Bocanita movie house there and when he saw her again on the last trip, apparently running the showhouse, he investigated and got quite an interesting story.

Mrs. Texas Snodgrass is the widow of an oldtime land owner of the Tennessee Valley. She invested some $50,000 of her own money in the erection of the theatre building five or six years ago. The lessee could not make a go of it and so the 66-year-old woman, still wearing the quaint old mother-hubbard dresses of a generation ago, took over the house and has been running it now for these three years.

Some few months ago an open-air theatre began operations in town and started cutting prices. Mrs. Snodgrass retaliated by slashing her rates, but still the five-and-ten-cent competitor continued. He then added vaudeville. Mrs. Snodgrass came back by building a modern stage at the Bocanita and installing vaudeville. Still the other place continues and the fighting old lady is now building another theatre in town where she will show at five cents. She says she expects to put her competitor out of business—or else.

"Bob" Cochrane's Mood Room

THEY say that humans can always work best, sleep best, eat best and relax best in rooms properly designed for these several purposes. Architects and decorators study ceaselessly new methods of designing rooms to fit a special purpose. An admirable example of a special mood room has just been completed for R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal Pictures, in his home in New Rochelle in Westchester County. Bob does not say, however, what the mood might be.

"Bob" Cochrane's home is a large Spanish-type house, one of the first to be constructed of pressed ashes. Everyone who knows him is aware that when he goes home, he leaves his office in the RCA Building; he does not take it home with him. Nevertheless, with a son rapidly preparing himself for the business of life, another room was required in this house, a study. Mr. Cochrane had some ideas; his son also had some ideas. Together they engaged George W. King, New York specialist.

Evidently Mr. King has captured the spirit they sought. Anyway the result, as pictured above, has the uniqueness of the modern style. The room itself stands on an oyster white rug, the walls stepping up on a base painted Chinese red. Above this they climb to the dado line on a wide band of glossy black, which terminates in a red stripe between two chromium moldings. The ceiling is blue, and in it swim a crescent moon and irregularly arranged stars. The tekko that clothes the walls above the chromium holdings appears like a shimmering reflection of these stars and moon in the ceiling, for it is silver, irregularly checkered into darker and lighter patches. The color scheme therefore is a riot of Chinese red, silver, blue, black and off-color white. It is a combination which makes for vigor of thought rather than idleness, for inspiration rather than relaxation, like jumping into a pool of cold water on a hot day as one steps into it from the quiet dignity of this Spanish home.

There are red rings on chromium drapery rods with crystal balls. The blinds, when turned upward, reflect the blue of the ceiling and spatter the room with threads of blue. The couch and arm chairs are upholstered of black seal cloth, piped in silver, standing opposite a desk of glossy black.

Carl Laemmle is offering a $50 reward for good ideas for the improvement of Universal Pictures.

The problems of each theatre operation are different, it is frequently said, and some are more difficult than others. Take the problems of the management of the Park Row theatre, down in the tough and polygot Bowery district of New York, in the shade of the Brooklyn Bridge, at the crossroads of Chinatown, the Ghetto and the Italian quarter. They have difficulties down there that other owners have never even dreamed of.

For example, there is the matter of the Bowery bums who are attracted by the bright lights of the marquee, not to buy admission tickets but to ask the cashier for a "few pennies for a flop" in the Municipal lodging house — — and the gum-chewing, cigarette smoking (yessir, smoking in the ticket booth) blonde girl frequently has to call on the husky bouncer stationed outside for the purpose, to shoo the panhandlers away.

And they're bothered aplenty, too, by the drunks—mellow on 15-cent-a-pint "smoke" whiskey—leaning up against the booth or making a bed right in the front lobby.

"All seats air conditioned cool—ten cents."

Fox Film, in 1919, answered exhibitors who were complaining about increased rentals, with the wail that "the cost of producing feature films has tripled during the past two years." Both producers and exhibitors have complained about the same matter ever since.

"Take the cost of the scenario as an example," the Wliliam Fox management moaned in 1919. "In the early days of the industry $50 to $100 was considered a fair price for an original. The screen rights of published stories ran about the same. Publishers of a novel were actually willing to pay the motion picture people for using a novel. They considered its filming a good advertisement for the sale of their book.

"Not so in the present status of the script market," complained Fox. "With a general scarcity of good material and competition among producers being what it is for the works of well-known writers, $1,000 is not at all unusual for the well-known novel or stage success.

"Take another important factor—actors' salaries. Strong support for a star could formerly be had for $75, $100 and up to $150; $200 and $500 is not unusual now. Even the humble 'extra,' who worked by the day for from $2 to $3.50, now gets $5.

"Directors' salaries have shot skyward along with those of their stars. Where they formerly were content with $150 a week—they now receive weekly salaries running in four figures.

"Studio carpenters used to get $4 a day. Now they get $5.50. The days of camera men at $50 a week are no more; $150 is now an average wage for experts in this line."

That was 16 years ago.

Charles W. Foster, ticket seller for the Ringling Brothers-Barnum and Bailey Circus, which played Kansas City the other week, walked into the Flora Avenue police station in that place and told Captain Tom Sullivan that he had worked there as a booking clerk 23 years ago and that when he left he put a manilla envelope containing some papers in the stationhouse safe. He wanted to know if the envelope was still there.

Captain Sullivan expressed doubt, but went to look. He found a soiled manilla envelope bearing the name "Charles W. Foster."

"That's it," claimed Foster, as the Captain opened it and found Foster's army discharge from the Spanish-American War and some other papers, including his appointment to the Kansas City police department.

DELAYS AND FIERY DEBATES MARK THIRD WEEK OF ST. LOUIS TRIAL

Significance of Prosecution Continues to Outweigh Importance of Testimony on Distribution and Exhibition Policies

Defense Charges Harry Arthur Interests with Trying to Build Up Monopoly in Downtown Exhibition; Long Trial Seen

Monotonous delays and fiery debates frequently interrupted the St. Louis trial this week—the third—of the criminal-indictment conspiracy suit, with its voluminous testimony, in which the corporations, subsidiaries and executives of Warner Brothers, Paramount and RKO-Radio are charged by the United States Department of Justice, as prosecutor, with antitrust law violations in withholding motion pictures from the Harry Arthur-Fanchon & Marco interests and their Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central theatres in St. Louis.

The significance of the prosecution, marking as it does the first real test in the industry-old fight for product between distributor-circuits and the independents, continues to far outweigh in importance the frequently uninteresting testimony of distribution and exhibition policy and practice. Regardless, the trial this week was marked by the following developments:

Harry C. Arthur, first of the government's 47 witnesses, finished testifying.

Thomas Dysart, president of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, and chairman of the bondholders' committees for the three involved theatres, succeeded Mr. Arthur on the stand, for the Government.

The Government was denied its plea to have only one of the Warner attorneys, instead of both ex-United States Senator James A. Reed and Frederick H. Wood, argue on objections.

The defense charged the Harry Arthur interests with seeking a monopoly in St. Louis downtown exhibition.

Estimates of the possible length of the trial were as high as five months.

M. A. Rosenthal, of Securities Service Company, Chicago; David Levinson, Chicago attorney, and Frederick H. Kreismann, who was mayor of St. Louis from 1909 to 1913, followed Mr. Dysart as witnesses for the government.

Possibilities were seen of Harry Warner, Gradwell Sears, Herman Starr, George Schaefer and Ned Depinet testifying in their own defense, after the government completes its case.

PARTINGTON REPEATS ARTHUR'S CHARGES

Jack Partington, president of Fanchon and Marco, on the stand Wednesday at St. Louis in the Government's conspiracy case against Warner Bros., RKO and Paramount, resulting from alleged refusal to supply product to F & M's Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres, repeated the charges Harry Arthur had made earlier in the trial when he told of conversations with executives of Warner and Paramount.

Mr. Partington said Gradwell Sears, Warner sales executive, had told him and Mr. Arthur that Warner Bros. had some $4,000,000 invested in the three theatres and were "going to get them back." He added that Herman Starr, of Warners, had declared that F & M were "the lambs that will have to be slaughtered." He said also that George Schaefer of Paramount had explained that he had had to give Paramount product to Warners in St. Louis in protection of Paramount plans in Detroit and that when Mr. Arthur had said that the deal might not be legal Mr. Schaefer had replied, "Legal or not, we call it good business."

Harry Koplar, although not yet summoned as a witness for either side, was listed all over the record in the cross-examination of Harry Arthur by Frederick H. Wood of Warner counsel. Mr. Wood, directing the Warner defense, has taken every opportunity to inject Mr. Koplar into the case, while Mr. Arthur has sparred and fenced to minimize Mr. Koplar's connections.

Former Senator Reed, of Warner counsel, in objecting to Mr. Arthur's "suggestions" on the case, declared that never had he before beheld a witness taking charge of the conduct of a case.

Another unusual feature was an offer by Mr. Wood to prove through Mr. Arthur that as early as January, 1934, Arthur and Koplar had worked out a program that would give them a monopoly of the first-run theatres in St. Louis, control of the St. Louis Amusement Company and drive Warner Brothers out of town, enabling them to dictate terms to every distributor and producer. Russell Hardy, who is handling the case for the Government, refused to accept this offer and raised objections to it.

Judge Moore, while apparently not passing directly upon Mr. Wood's offer, which was voiced low enough for the jury not to hear it, told him to proceed with his questions, saying that he would pass upon each in turn. Mr. Wood then began a series of questions intended to show an interlocking of interests between the owners of the St. Louis theatre, the Metro Realty Company, and Fanchon & Marco, through their joint ownership of the F. & M. Theatre Company of Missouri.

Mr. Wood asked Mr. Arthur whether his lawyer had not told him that a conviction in the criminal case would automatically result in a favorable verdict in a civil suit for triple the amount of damages. Mr. Arthur responded that he had not been so advised and told Mr. Wood that he was glad to get this legal information.

Mr. Wood, seeking to rebut Mr. Arthur's statement that with the exception of "The Belle of the 90's" all of the pictures he had shown at the Ambassador and Missouri theatres were "sluff" pictures, brought out that Fanchon & Marco in their daily newspaper advertising had highly praised many of the pictures shown in those houses. Mr. Arthur defended this by saying they used statements made by the producers and added that if they had told the truth in the ads no one would have gone to the shows

Former Mayor Testifies

Frederick H. Kreismann, who was mayor of St. Louis from 1909 to 1913, and is now president of the St. Louis Mutual Life Insurance Company and a member of the bondholders' protective committees for the three theatres, testified that on June 6, 1934, at a meeting of the committee at which Warner Brothers submitted their final plan for participation in the reorganization of the properties, in which they had a large equity, only to have the proposal rejected in favor of the proposition by Allen L. Snyder, who had had no previous experience in the business, Herman Starr, then vice-president for Warners, and active in their theatre properties, made the assertion that Mr. Snyder's operation of the three houses would prove unsuccessful because he did not have sufficient good pictures.

Asked by Attorney Hardy as to what Mr. Starr's manner was, Mr. Kreismann replied that it was rather defiant and assertive and that he seemed confident of his ability and the ability of Warners to interfere with the successful operation of the theatres by others.

Tells of Contract Drafts

Thomas Dysart, as chairman of the bondholders protective committee, admitted under cross-examination by Mr. Reed, of Warner counsel, that the first proposed form of contract and a subsequent suggested proposed plan of reorganization prepared by David Levinson, of Chicago, an attorney for the bondholders, contained a provision that Warner Brothers should name four of the seven trustees to manage the holding company for the properties and the bondholders' committee name but three. Mr. Dysart changed the draft so that the committee would name four trustees and thereby have control. This last draft also contained an entirely new clause that Warner Brothers would have to make up any deficiency in interest earnings for the bonds over the first five years, and that in the event Warners did not make good any deficiency in any year they would forfeit all of the interest in the properties and have their participation certificates canceled.

M. A. Rosenthal, of Chicago, told of his unsuccessful attempt in September, 1934, to interest Harry Warner and Herman Starr in a proposal that they allow him to work for a peaceful settlement of the St. Louis situation. He said that Warner asserted that the company for the first time in years was making money in St. Louis and were satisfied with the results being obtained with the Shubert and Orpheum theatres.

Direct question-and-answer interrogation of witnesses in the St. Louis conspiracy trial of distributors, as taken from the court records, starts on page 63.

THIS IS JUST OUR PERSONAL OPINION!

M-G-M is releasing this week a picture entitled "IT'S IN THE AIR."

This is positively no Super-Special. It didn't take a year to produce and it didn't cost a million.

But from start to finish it is one of the funniest of entertainments. It reminds us of "Caught Short." Especially because that one also was a "sleeper" that suddenly set the box-office world aflame!

In this picture JACK BENNY is his real radio self, truly America's No. 1 Kidder and the cast has M-G-M's top fun-makers like TED HEALY, UNA MERKEL, NAT PENDLETON and others.

We believe your audiences will get a great kick out of "IT'S IN THE AIR" and we urge you to spread the good word so that you can properly profit.

This is just our personal opinion but we have a hunch it's going to be yours too!

OTTERSON DENIES SABATH GROUP'S HINT A. T. & T. WANTED PARAMOUNT

Vanderlip Discloses Resignation from Paramount Board; Zukor Tells of 50 Millions Paid in Dividends During His Regime

The reorganization of Paramount Publix Corporation, subjected last summer to the searchlight in hearings before the Securities and Exchange Commission and later during hearings in the federal court in New York on the application of attorneys and others for $3,222,315 in fees, is the center of the spotlight for a third time within four months in an investigation by the Congressional committee studying real estate bond reorganizations and headed by Representative A. J. Sabath of Illinois.

Evidence sometimes approaching the sensational was given by witnesses or drawn from them in the sessions which began last Thursday in the Federal building in New York. Among outstanding developments were:

A member of the committee unsuccessfully sought an admission from John E. Otterson, president of the new Paramount Pictures, Inc., that American Telephone and Telegraph Company wanted control of Paramount as a link in television.

Representative Sabath, who frequently scored phases of the reorganization, indicated a searching inquiry was in prospect when he instructed investigators to present additional evidence.

Frank A. Vanderlip disclosed that he had resigned from Paramount's board last week, and Mr. Otterson revealed that Mr. Vanderlip had objected to his conduct of the company.

Mr. Vanderlip testified that while he was chairman of a bondholders' protective committee, he had traded in the company's securities, netting himself a profit.

More than $50,000,000 in dividends was paid out to Paramount stockholders during Adolph Zukor's regime as president, the Paramount board chairman told the committee.

Twelve former bank creditors of Paramount Publix were charged with stripping the company of all its security assets prior to the receivership, in the testimony of Samuel Zirn, a bondholders' attorney.

It became known this week that Austin C. Keough, Paramount general counsel, has retired from the board of Paramount Productions, Inc., the producing subsidiary, and that to fill this vacancy and one other the board has elected Y. Frank Freeman, theatre operating head, and R. E. Anderson, formerly with Erpi and now a Paramount vice-president.

During a flareup between Meyer Kraushaar, counsel to the committee, and Represenative Francis D. Culkin, committee member, Mr. Kraushaar offered to resign.

Investigated as typical of similar motion picture reorganizations with the purpose of bringing to light conditions that will be made the subject of legislation in the coming session of Congress, the Paramount rehabilitation was both sharply attacked and stoutly defended before the committee.

The committee made frequent allusions to the battles of the large financial houses for the control of business, particularly the motion picture business, and the members gave the impression they considered Atlas Corporation's investment in Paramount as part of its effort to wrest financial supremacy from the "House of Morgan."

Charging at the opening session that the reorganization was marked by "collusion, fraud and conspiracy," Representative Sabath declared, "This is a case where control of the company was grabbed by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and other interests." At a later hearing he again brought up those charges and hinted that the alleged connection with the telephone company would be looked into when he instructed Murray Garsson, chief investigator, to hire more accountants and investigators and be ready to present more evidence late next month or in December, when hearings would be resumed.

Questioning Mr. Otterson, who left a $50,000-a-year position as president of Electrical Research Products, Inc., A. T. & T. subsidiary, to become president of Paramount at a salary of $156,000, Representative Everett M. Dirksen, of the committee, on Wednesday hinted that the communications corporation sought control of the film company to be in command of Paramount theatres when commercialized television becomes possible. Mr. Otterson denied the truth of this assertion.

"You don't have to worry about that," he told Representative Dirksen. "The future of television is too remote. There is a question whether it will be practicable commercially for a great many years."

10 to 15 Per Cent to Erpi

Mr. Otterson conceded that when and if television becomes a commercial medium of entertainment, AT&T and Erpi will play a large part in its development. He ignored a question about whether theatres would be needed when that time came.

The Paramount president testified that Erpi, Paramount's largest merchandise creditor, received between 10 and 15 per cent of Paramount's net income under contracts for sound recording and projection equipment.

While the reorganization plan made provision to the extent of $2,500,000 for the payment of attorney fees and allowances and other expenses of reorganization, Mr. Otterson testified that the new company had $4,000,000 in cash with which to amortize these items. He revealed that under the terms of his five-year contract he would receive his share of the bonuses if they were declared later for company officials.

"Don't you think the better policy would be to put away a surplus for lean years rather than pay out large salaries and bonuses?" inquired Chairman Sabath.

"I think that is a question for the stockholders to decide," Mr. Otterson replied.

Zirn Charges 12 Former Bank Creditors Stripped Paramount of All Its Security Assets Prior to the Receivership

"Stockholders! oh, hell!" exclaimed the chairman.

H. A. Fortington, chairman of the Paramount executive committee and financial secretary of the Royal Liverpool Group of Insurance Companies, testified that Mr. Zukor was not chosen for the presidency of the new company because he had gotten "a big company into trouble," and the choice fell on Mr. Otterson because he was "the best man available."

Zukor Salary Aired

Mr. Otterson's salary, continued Mr. Fortington, was fixed at $120,000 a year with a five-year contract, and that of Mr. Zukor as vice-president and board chairman at $80,000 annually without a contract. He denied British capital was trying to get control of Paramount. Of the 16 directors elected to control the $70,000,000 motion picture company, only Mr. Zukor and George J. Schaefer had any film experience, Mr. Fortington told the committee. The others are bankers.

Mr. Kraushaar questioned Mr. Fortington at length about the procedure of the bankers' syndicate which acquired about $8,000,000 in Paramount Publix bonds before it went into court for an order permitting reorganization.

Much of the testimony was a repetition of that given at the Securities and Exchange Commission hearings last summer, and there was, too, considerable of the same type of interest in the requested attorney fees which marked the hearings before Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe last July. Mr. Zirm said he had applied for $75,000 in the Paramount case, but indicated he hardly expected to get it, saying the reorganization plan favored only those who had not opposed the large interests involved.

Counsel Clashes With Culkin

Mr. Kraushaar was questioning Mr. Zirn about the fees in the Paramount case and switched to another reorganization in which Mr. Zirn had applied for a fee, when Representative Culkin reprimanded: "You can't make a collection agency out of this committee."

Whereupon Mr. Kraushaar replied he was told to investigate lawyers' fees and that "if any one in this committee wants me to suppress any testimony, that's another matter."

Representative Culkin asked for an apology. Mr. Kraushaar withdrew his remark and apologized, adding, however, "if you are not satisfied with my services and want me to resign, I will resign." The committee refused to consider the offer.

Mr. Zirn referred to the Film Productions Corporation transaction, by which Paramount transferred title to 23 negatives to the new subsidiary of that name as security for new loans from 12 banks. He charged preferential payment to bank creditors and general "illegal manipulation" through 450 dummy corporations.

Mr. Zukor's statement regarding the more than $50,000,000 in dividends paid to stockholders during the years he was president was made in justification of his salary and bonus contracts with Paramount which netted him more than $2,000,000 in the period from 1928 to 1931. Mr. Zukor said he had "fought" for the contract which gave him a salary of $130,000 annually and a bonus of seven and one-half per cent of the company's profits after all charges were deducted. He said that when business declined in 1931 he voluntarily accepted a cut.

Mr. Zukor was congratulated by the committee "on the way the Paramount bondholders and creditors fare under that plan," presumably the reorganization plan.

$1,300,000 in Commissions

Sir William Wiseman, partner in Kuhn, Loeb & Company, bankers for Paramount for many years, estimated his firm had marketed $100,000,000 in securities for Paramount and had earned commissions of about $1,300,000, "or less than one and one-half per cent."

Sir William said he had advised against Mr. Otterson's election as president because "this is show business, and should be run by showmen." He added there was nothing personal in his stand.

In testifying that he was the only one on the new board of directors to vote against Mr. Otterson for the presidency, Mr. Vanderlip, chairman of the debenture holders' committee in the reorganization, disclosed his resignation from the board, to which he had been elected for a three-year term. He testified he voted against Mr. Otterson because of his connection with Erpi, which had long-continuing contracts with Paramount which gave rise to controversy and because while he believed Mr. Otterson to be an "extremely capable business man," he felt that he did not have the "peculiar talent" required to guide a company that was not "a business but an amusement activity." He testified that John D. Hertz, a partner of Lehman Brothers, and Mr. Fortington, both directors of the new company, were responsible for Mr. Otterson's election.

Resignation Not Acted On

Mr. Otterson declined to discuss Mr. Vanderlip's resignation but said the former president of the National City Bank had objected to his conduct of the company. The resignation has not been acted on, said Mr. Otterson.

In testifying concerning his request for a fee of $50,000 as committee chairman and about his trading in Paramount bonds, Mr. Vanderlip expressed surprise when informed by committee counsel that he had made a profit of about $56,000 in the transaction.

"If so, I am delighted, as that is more than I anticipated," he commented.

BILL ON BONDHOLDER COMMITTEES COMING

Legislation sponsored by the administration designed to control activities of bondholders' protective committees will be introduced in Congress early in January, said word from Washington this week.

The bill is expected to be based on knowledge gained from a series of investigations of the Securities and Exchange Commission, of which Paramount Publix was one.

An opinion that the Erpi contract is illegal in part went into the records from Arthur A. Ballantine and John M. Harlan, members of the law firm of Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, which served as counsel to the Paramount receivers and trustees. The attorneys added, however, that this development did not alter the claim settlement terms under which Erpi's claim of $1,800,000 was reduced to $1,200,000 of securities in the reorganized company. Mr. Harlan estimated that on the basis of Paramount's past production schedules, the 10-year contract with Erpi, given as part of the settlement terms, would probably involve less than $3,000,000.

Paramount's reorganization plan was defended as a "swell job" by Alfred A. Cook, counsel for Paramount and a stockholders' committee. He also defended the total of the fees requested. He denied collusion in preparing the plan and said its success could be measured by the fact that Paramount bonds are now selling above par.

Member Criticizes Judge

Representative Claude A. Fuller of Arkansas, member of the committee, charged that Federal Judge Coxe, in charge of the Paramount reorganization, had refused to permit a member of the committee to appear in court to oppose the fees. When Mr. Kraushaar advised Representative Fuller that Judge Coxe had since agreed to cooperate with the committee, the representative exclaimed:

"I offer no apology to Judge Coxe. He insulted this committee when he refused to see its members. Higher courts throughout the country tried the same thing, but they came off their high horse."

Other attorneys who testified were: W. B. Whitney, who testified in place of Robert T. Swaine of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood; Edward K. Hanlon, for Morton G. Bogue of Beekman, Bogue & Clark; Peter I. B. Levine for Sol M. Stroock of Stroock & Stroock; Thomas D. Thacher, special counsel for Paramount, who opposed applications for the fees, and Bethuel Webster, an attorney with the firm of Colonel William J. Donovan, which filed the bill in equity against Paramount in 1933.

Paramount built a $16,000,000 "monument" in Brooklyn that now is not worth $1,000,000, was the opinion given to the investigators by William M. Greve, former president of New York Investors, Inc., and now one of three trustees in charge of the Allied Owners, Inc., reorganization. Allied Owners, subsidiary of New York Investors, floated $9,500,000 in bonds and $2,500,000 in debentures for the erection of this theatre and handled also securities for other houses erected during the "boom."

The Paramount Theatre in Brooklyn recently was sold to Si Fabian for $1,250,000.

John E. Otterson, Paramount president, paid a tribute to Adolph Zukor, former president and now chairman of the board, at a meeting of company executives at the home office last Monday. Department heads and their assistants were present.

Mr. Otterson, who returned last week from Hollywood, is understood to have expounded his policies and views. This is reported to have been the first general meeting held by him since becoming president.

Fox Setup Aid Seen In 'Met' Purchase

A reorganization plan for Fox Theatres would be forthcoming from the protective committee for the company's stockholders in the event Fox Theatres acquired a 50 per cent stock interest in reorganized Fox Metropolitan Playhouses under the option it holds, Gustavus A. Rogers, chairman of the stockholders' protective committee, said at a hearing before Federal Judge Martin T. Manton in New York.

The hearing is being conducted to examine into the financial status of Fox Theatres Corporation in advance of a decision by the court on whether the receiver for Fox Theatres should be directed to exercise the option for acquisition of one-half of the stock of Metropolitan Playhouses. A majority of the Fox Theatres' creditors appear to be opposed to the acquisition.

Mr. Rogers revealed that claims against Fox Theatres had been reduced to approximately $8,000,000. Much of the testimony concerning the assets of Fox Theatres and the probable earnings of Metropolitan Playhouses was questioned by Archibald Palmer, attorney for Fox Theatres' creditors, in cross examination of an accountant placed on the stand by Mr. Rogers.

Federal Judge Julian W. Mack set Friday as the date for a hearing of the petitions for allowances and expenses of more than $800,000 which are being sought by attorneys, committees, the trustee and others for services in the receivership and reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses.

SCREEN BRIGHTNESS, 16mm. FILMS, COLOR TO COME UP AT SMPE MEET

Fall Meeting Opens Monday in Washington, D. C., with 350 Leading Film Engineers Hearing 50 Technical Papers Read

The motion picture's greying scientists and its younger technicians and engineers will leave their workbenches this weekend to converge on Washington, there to relate to their more commercial colleagues in the sales and manufacturing divisions of virtually all equipment corporations today's developments in motion picture studio, laboratory, exchange and theatre technical procedure.

The occasion is the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, to be held at the Wardman Park hotel, starting on Monday morning, and lasting through Thursday.

Some 350 leading motion picture engineers have been delegated to attend, to study 50 technical papers that will be read.

Unlike previous SMPE conventions, the meeting next week will not find any particular subject emphasized, although four of the seven technical sessions will be devoted to special topics: Screen brightness, problems of sound photography, and general motion picture equipment. A number of papers by United States Government officials describing federal activities in motion pictures will be read.

The Tuesday afternoon session will be held in the auditorium of the United States Bureau of Standards, at which time K. S. Gibson and B. D. Judd, both of the Standards Bureau, will deliver important papers, Lyman J. Briggs, director of the Bureau, presiding. Mr. Gibson will discuss "The Measurement and Specification of Color," while Mr. Judd will talk about "Color Blindness and Anomalies of Vision."

Seven Papers on 16mm. Films

The growing importance of 16 millimeter motion pictures is indicated by the fact that seven papers are devoted to this subject. Educational films will be the subject of three papers.

Previews of new features will be given on two nights. On Wednesday evening the semi-annual banquet will be held in the Continental Room of the Wardman Park, at which presentations of the SMPE's journal award and the "Progress Medal" will be made. The medal is a new award created to honor a Society member for outstanding motion picture achievement.

Presentation will also be made of a scroll of honorary membership to Thomas Armat, of Washington.

The highlight of the banquet will be an address by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, whose remarks will be broadcast over NBC's red network.

Foreign Engineers to Attend

A number of distinguished foreign motion picture engineers will be in attendance, including A. F. Chorine, director of the Central Laboratory of the All-Union Electrical Trust, of Leningrad. Professor Chorine is in direct charge of all motion picture technological development in the Soviet.

Results of the election of officers from the balloting now under way in the mails will be announced.

The relation of the law to color development will be discussed for the first time, by Howard Ketcham, editor of the Automobile Color Index, and for eight years director of the Duco Color Advisory Service of E. I. du Pont de Nemours Company, Inc. One company, through loss of a contract, according to Mr. Ketcham, paid $250,000 for unwittingly using a color repugnant for its products.

W. C. Kunzmann continues as convention vice-president in charge. James I. Crabtree is editorial vice-president, and J. O. Baker is chairman of the papers committee. Other convention chairmen: N. Glasser, local arrangements and reception; Herbert Griffin, projection; O. F. Neu, apparatus exhibit; W. C. Kunzman, banquet; Will Whitmore, publicity.

Atlantic Section to Meet

Preceding the main convention, the first fall meeting of the Atlantic section of the Society will be held Thursday evening in New York at the Pennsylvania Hotel. The feature will be an address by S. K. Wolf, director of Erpi's acoustical division, on the subject: "Recent Advances in Acoustics."

L. W. Davee, president of the Atlantic section, has been nominated for reelection, along with D. E. Hyndman, secretary-treasurer, and M. C. Batsel, manager. In no case is there any opposition.

The program for the SMPE's fall convention at Washington follows:

MONDAY, OCTOBER 21

9:30 a. m. Registration.

10:00 a.m. Little Theatre; Business and Technical Session.

Report of the convention committee, W. C. Kunzmann, convention vice-president.

Address of Welcome, H. G. Tasker, president.

Shanberg Silent On New Circuit

Reports that M. B. Shanberg, who sold his Midland circuit to Fox West Coast in 1929, is planning to reenter the business were neither denied nor affirmed by Mr. Shanberg in New York this week, following his return from Europe. He said he would remain in New York about two weeks.

"You never can tell," was his only comment on reports that he was planning to assemble a circuit again. About two years ago he made a bid for the Publix Northwest theatres, but the deal fell through because a $500,000 mortgage held by the receiver, Fred Hamm, proved an obstacle. However, it is known that the former circuit executive wants to get back in harness, provided he can make an advantageous deal.

A pioneer Kansas-Missouri circuit operator, Mr. Shanberg, with Herbert M. Woolf and other Kansas City associates, sold the 60 theatres in the Midland group to Fox West Coast, then operated by Harold B. Franklin, for $3,476,000. Of the original purchase price, some $478,000 still remained unpaid when the circuit entered bankruptcy in 1933. Following protracted litigation, this balance was paid some months ago, and accrued interest was waived.

The settlement with National Theatres, the new parent company, included a $30,000 allowance for attorneys' fees incurred in the litigation and settlement, and the attorneys are reported to have received an additional $30,000 from Mr. Shanberg and his group.

The Shanberg-Woolf associates also have a half interest in the Midland theatre and office building in Kansas City, a $4,000,000 development. The other partner is Loew's, Inc., which operates the property. The partnership agreement expires in 1937, and it is considered not unlikely that Loew's will not renew the contract, in which event the property will revert to the Shanberg group.

Since retiring as Fox Midland division manager in 1931, Mr. Shanberg has not been active in the business but has maintained his contacts.

GB Will Release "Tunnel" During Anniversary Week

The highlight of the First Anniversary Celebration of Gaumont British Pictures, according to Arthur A. Lee, vice-president and general manager, will be the release of the company's "Transatlantic Tunnel," featuring Richard Dix, Madge Evans, Helen Vinson, George Arliss and Walter Huston.

Republic Pictures Increases Budget, Merges Studios

The merger of independent producer-distributors into the national distributing structure that was set up by W. Ray Johnston (Monogram) and Herbert J. Yates (Consolidated Film Industries) in the form of Republic Pictures expanded further during the week when its sponsors (1) appropriated an additional $1,000,000 to the 1935-36 production budget; (2) moved to concentrate the entire production activity in its own Hollywood studios, thereby supplanting the former system of unit production at various rental studios.

In appropriating the additional sum to the production budget, Mr. Johnston said this move was made on the encouragement received by the 2,500 deals for its product, involving the largest circuits and outstanding key runs, that have been received.

With the funds now available, Republic has added to its schedule a special production, "The Glory Parade," dealing with the war between the states. It will be released in the Gold Medal group.

A large proportion of the new appropriation will be used to engage players of stellar rank for all forthcoming productions. Among those already signed on this basis are Lew Ayres, Richard Arlen, Helen Twelvetrees, Ben Lyon, Rod La Rocque, Roger Pryor and Leila Hyams.

"Dark Continent," dealing with explorers in Africa, has also been added to the serial program, to be produced by Nat Levine.

In commenting on the consolidation of studios, Mr. Johnston said that in the future all work will be done at the company's own plant in North Hollywood and that two new stages will be built at once in addition to the four already in operation. Mascot studios, the present title of the studios, where a portion of the company's program of fifty-three features and four serials have been made, will drop that title and will be known in the future as Republic Studios. Trem Carr, president of the producing company, will move his entire executive staff to the new location in about three weeks, when new offices will have been completed.

Nat Levine, vice-president of Republic, Pictures, also has three pictures in work. They are "A Thousand Dollars a Minute," "The Leathernecks Have Landed" and "Hitch-Hike Lady."

Serlin, Mayer, Burnstyn Acquire "Gulliver" Rights

Oscar Serlin, Arthur L. Mayer and Joseph Burnstyn have acquired the rights of "The New Gulliver," a Russian novelty picture, based on "Gulliver's Travels," by Jonathan Swift. It will be presented at New York's Cameo theatre, starting November 1.

It required 3,000 puppets and 60 settings for the production of this picture, which depicts the adventures of the modern youth Petya amidst the medieval pomp and circumstances of the Lilliput world.

Guild Criticizes Academy's New Writer-Producer Code

Charging that the move was "an obvious attempt to destroy the Screen Writers' Guild," the Guild this week attacked the revised basic agreement and writer-producer code of practice that is now pending in Hollywood as proposed by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. On September 25th, the Academy announced it had concluded several months of conferences between committees of writers and producers and that a revised Academy basic agreement had been drawn up.

GUILD'S DEMANDS	ACADEMY'S PROPOSALS
1. Written contracts: required in all cases.	1. After employment, a written contract must be tendered to the writer, containing nothing contradictory to the "basic agreement." Nothing to prevent waiver of written contract.
2. Delivery of contracts: in force only when signed and delivered by both parties.	2. A peculiar provision that leaves it to oral evidence when contract is enforced. Producer need not sign.
3. Writing on speculation: prohibited when initiated by a producer, except in case of royalty contracts.	3. Prohibited except on original stories.
4. Compensation for free lance writers: 25 per cent of agreed price at time of contract; balance on delivery except in case of originals where paid on acceptance.	4. Upon delivery of completed adaptation and treatment first drafts or final screen play a "specified amount" shall be paid the writer. No provision for payment of balance. "Specified amount" to be agreed upon in advance.
5. Producer may take option agreements for successive operations in the preparation of final screen play, but must specify, the number of days within which the option may be exercised.	5. Granted.
6. Termination of week to week contracts: one week's notice.	6. A free lance writer who has worked for a producer on a week to week basis for not less than ten consecutive weeks at a salary of $500 per week, or less, must give and receive one week's notice.
7. Lay-offs: A. Where a producer has arbitrary option: (1) One week's notice in writing must be given. (2) Lay-off period not more than 12 weeks in one year, or proportionate period for longer or shorter contracts. (3) Lay-off for minimum of 7 days and notice must specify duration. (4) Writer not on call during lay-off and may do other work. B. Where option is granted because of "strikes and unavoidable casualties," etc.: (1) Period limited to one week for each three months of contract at no pay and one week for each three months of contract at one-half pay.	7. Lay-offs: A. Where a producer has arbitrary option: (1) Five days notice in writing unless writer "voluntarily accepts" shorter notice. (Waiver invited.) (2) No provision. (3) Minimum of 7 days but notice not required to state duration. (4) No provision. B. Where option is granted because of "strikes and unavoidable casualties," etc.: (1) No provision. "Basic agreement" specifically states not to apply to such cases.
8. Travel time: Full pay and all traveling expenses back and forth while on location outside of city where producer has studio.	8. No provision.
9. Loans: must have writer's written consent.	9. No provision.
10. Plagiarism liability: no liability for costs, expenses or attorney's fees of producer if plagiarism not established.	10. Granted.
11. Waiver: any attempt at waiver is void.	11. No provision.
12. Arbitration: disinterested arbitration; writer to pick organization to act for him.	12. No provision. Even minor disputes must be adjusted by litigation.
13. Black list: prohibited.	13. No provision.
14. Agreements between producers to prevent competitive bidding for writers forbidden.	14. No provision.
15. Enforcement: producers bind themselves by contract with a representative writer body to continue to give whatever they promise.	15. Litigation.

Melville Church of Patents Co. Dead

Melville Church, Washington attorney, conspicuous in the affairs and battles of the screen world in the days of Motion Picture Patents Company which he served, died October 10th in the Massachusetts General hospital in Boston. He had been one of Washington's leading patent lawyers for more than fifty years.

Mr. Church, who was 78 years old, was actively engaged in his law practice until early in the summer months, when he went to Massachusetts for a vacation. Taken ill in July, he went to the Boston hospital for an operation.

A native of Utica, N. Y., Mr. Church went to Alexandria, Va., after the Civil War to be with his father, Truman Kilborn Church, a captain in the Union Army. He studied at St. John's Academy in Alexandria and at the old Columbian College (now George Washington University), where he received his law degree in 1879.

With his brother, the late J. B. Church, he founded Church & Church, which represented a number of large manufacturers, including the General Electric Company, National Cash Register and General Motors.

A son, Durant Church, now an attorney in the firm, young and athletic, was once excitingly and strenuously active in connection with Patents Company raids on infringers.

Funeral services were held in All Souls Episcopal Church in Washington. Burial was in Rock Creek Cemetery.

ODLUM AND LEHMANS BUY LARGE PART OF RCA'S CONTROL IN RKO

Move Points to Early Transfer of RCA's Entire Controlling Interest to Investment Companies Now in Five Concerns

Broadening of the activities of Floyd B. Odlum in the motion picture industry and early reorganization of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation with Mr. Odlum playing a dominant part in the future of the company are indicated in the announcement in New York over the weekend that Mr. Odlum's Atlas Corporation and the investment banking house of Lehman Brothers had purchased a substantial part of Radio Corporation of America's controlling interest in RKO. It was learned that RCA sold one-half of its holdings and gave an option on the remainder.

The announcement points to early transfer of RCA's entire control to the investment trusts, and it was learned that the securities purchased and those covered by option comprise the parent company's controlling interest. The transaction gives Mr. Odlum and his Atlas Corporation an interest in a fifth motion picture company, having already considerable investments in Paramount, Warner, Fox Film and Loew's, Inc.

The announcement made jointly by the Atlas president and David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation and chairman of the RKO board, said the purchasers had been given an option to buy the remainder of the holdings. It also said that "it is expected that a plan of reorganization will be promulgated shortly" under Section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act.

These statements, considered together, are taken as pointing to developments in the near future in which Mr. Odlum and his $110,000,000 investment trust, the largest in the country, will emerge as the leading factors with Lehman Brothers in the RKO reorganization.

Film circles recalled that Atlas and Lehman Brothers figured prominently also in the reorganization of Paramount, and Mr. Odlum and John D. Hertz, a partner in Lehman Brothers, are members of the Paramount board.

This affiliation was emphasized by Frank A. Vanderlip, who resigned from the Paramount board last week, in testifying before the Sabath Congressional committee investigating the Paramount reorganization, in New York this week. Asked by committee counsel who "behind the scenes" had been responsible for the election of John E. Otterson as Paramount president, Mr. Vanderlip named Mr. Hertz as one of two directors so responsible.

Judging from information he had received, Congressman Adolph J. Sabath, chairman of the committee, commented during the hearing that Atlas Corporation is "now getting control of RKO just as they did of Paramount."

However, Mr. Odlum not long ago was quoted as saying that he did not seek to enter the film business, but merely considered the industry a good field for investment.

The brief announcement concerning the RKO deal disclosed none of the details, but said that "Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of RKO, expressed his gratification with the closing of the transaction." It is considered probable that whether or not the investment companies exercise their option for the remainder of the stock, they will exert sufficient influence in the reorganization to elect Mr. Odlum chairman of the board, retaining Mr. Aylesworth as president.

It was ascertained by Wall street interests that the securities bought and covered by option to purchase comprised the entire RCA holdings of 1,259,463½ or 48.6 per cent of the outstanding 2,593,992 no par common shares of RKO, in addition to $9,786,655 or 84 per cent of the RKO 10-year 6 per cent debentures of which $11,600,000 were outstanding at the end of 1934. Radio Corporation then carried on its balance sheet an investment in RKO of $14,644,614. At Monday's closing market prices these holdings had an aggregate value of $15,695,338.

Completed Part for Cash

When Mr. Odlum began negotiations for the sale early last spring it was reported he had offered $5,000,000 in cash for the entire RCA investment, with Mr. Sarnoff insisting on payment dollar for dollar. While the amount could not be ascertained, it was learned that the completed portion of the transaction was for cash.

As a result of the deal, gains were scored by Radio Corporation stocks in active trading on the Stock Exchange on Monday, and the stock market reflected the widespread belief that consummation of the acquisition of RCA's controlling interest would facilitate the elimination of arrears of dividends on the Radio Corporation Class B preferred stock.

Joseph R. McDonough, president of Radio Pictures, arrived from the Coast last weekend for conferences with Mr. Aylesworth and other home office executives pertaining to the sale. Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation, and William Mallard, RKO general counsel, also attended the conferences, arriving from St. Louis, where they had been called by the federal antitrust trial. It is understood reorganization plans for RKO also were discussed at the meetings. Mr. McDonough was scheduled to leave for the Coast this weekend.

Sees Old Policy Applied

Financial comment in the New York Times regarded the sales of blocks of stock to the investment trusts as in line with the policy of the Radio Corporation adopted several years ago to break up the various activities of the concern and allow them to go it alone.

"Instead of a great corporation controlling the manufacture of radio sets, the motion picture business, the transmission of wireless messages, and other activities, Radio will carry on the communications business, which eventually may be merged with the cable companies if the law is changed to permit," said the Times.

Report Odlum To Be Chairman of Board with Aylesworth Continuing as President; Radio Corporation Stocks Rise

The same commentator said that while Lehman Brothers have been interested in RKO for many years, "Atlas is a newcomer in the picture, after careful study of the prospects for a medium-term investment of its substantial cash holdings."

At June 30, 1935, the investments of Atlas and investment company subsidiaries in motion picture securities comprised certificates of deposit for $219,000 Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation 6 per cent bonds due in 1947 and for $235,000 of Paramount Publix Corporation 5½ per cent bonds due in 1950; $800,000 of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., 6 per cent debentures due in 1939; 29,800 new Class A common shares of Fox Film Corporation; 19,500 Loew's, Inc., common shares, and certificates of deposit for 17,500 Paramount Publix common shares.

Radio Corporation acquired a controlling position in RKO in 1931. The company was placed in equity receivership in January, 1933, which was superseded in June, 1934, by Section 77B proceedings. RKO now is in the hands of the Irving Trust Company, appointed trustee by the federal court.

Critics AMPA Guests At Weekly Luncheon

F. H. RICHARDSON'S

BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO GOOD OPERATING AND QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTING

A new Blue Book by Richardson is always an event of signal importance to the motion picture industry. It is being issued at this time to meet the truly urgent demand of thousands of users of the old Blue Books for an accurate, modern evaluation of the changes and refinements in the art and science of sound reproduction and projection including all the apparatus. Richardson's expert knowledge of the craft he has taught and followed for more than three decades makes this latest treatise, in the opinion of leading authorities, the most comprehensive, most useful projection manual ever published.

700 Pages of Text, Charts and Data

The new Blue Book contains nearly 700 pages and 153 illustrations—photographs and schematics of every description. It is 6x9 in size with large readable type for easy visibility in the projection room under all conditions. It is entirely original from cover to cover, not a line of type from any of the many previous editions being used. Its low price of $5.25 and its handiness in one volume are among the many innovations.

1 IN ONE HANDY VOLUME

The new Bluebook is complete in one handy volume. It is a great improvement over the former expensive and cumbersome three-volume sets.

2 COMPLETE and UP-TO-DATE

The new Bluebook does a three-fold job: (1) it gives a detailed description of the construction, wiring and functioning of every piece of sound and projection apparatus used in a modern projection room. (2) It gives all the instructions for the operation and maintenance of this equipment and (3) it contains a complete trouble-shooting department as a first-aid in breakdowns.

3 QUICK-FINDING INDEX

An extremely simple but comprehensive indexing system makes the new Blue Book a truly great aid to working projectionists. Whatever problem comes up in the day's routine is covered on the instant with hardly more than the twirl of your thumb. Projectionists of long experience in the projection room will be first to appreciate this remarkable time-saver.

4 QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTER

And it is, within its 700 pages, a practical trouble-shooter, which alone entitles it to a place in every projectionists tool kit.

DOWNTOWN BUSINESS FALLS, SUBURBAN UP

Grosses in Business Centers Decline 33 1/3 Per Cent; Neighborhood Houses Reopening

Typical of the situation elsewhere is the sharp trend of attendance away from the downtown first-runs to the neighborhoods in Greater Kansas City, where there are now more suburban theatres in operation than at the peak of prosperity in 1928-29, while at the downtown first-runs the crowds have dwindled.

With the exception of a couple of colored houses, all suburban and subsequent-run situations are open, and a subsequent-run theatre has been newly constructed in downtown Kansas City, Kan., offering low-price competition to the two established first-runs for the first time.

On the other hand, four large theatres in downtown Kansas City, Mo., have been dark for several years and no one is hazarding a prediction of their reopening. One is the Orpheum, formerly an important RKO operation.

Grosses at the large downtown houses have declined by one-third or more, while at the same time business in the neighborhoods has been such as to encourage reopenings and a considerable expenditure for new equipment and remodeling. With four or five exceptions, all neighborhood houses have remained under the same operation throughout the business recession.

The Business District Association, composed mostly of real estate owners and managers and heads of the large stores, is seriously concerned over the downtown theatre situation since it directly affects realty values and store revenue. The Association has been discussing moves to stimulate theatre attendance. If night life in the downtown area is ever revived to oldtime proportions, attempts will be made to reopen the theatres now dark.

Factors in Neighborhood Cheer

The factors operating to increase suburban patronage to the loss of the downtown section are the same in Kansas City as in other centers which have had the same experience —low prices, neighborliness of the management, proximity to the residential sections, ample parking space and frequently free parking lots, and the comfort of not having to "dress up" when attending a neighborhood show.

Another drawback to the downtown area is the large falling off of transient patronage and weekend holiday crowds since the depression. Cited also as neighborhood draws are the double bills, giveaways and chance game promotions, though exhibitor opinion is divided in general on the ultimate results of these policies.

Downtown theatres long ago attempted to stem the ebb tide by slashing prices, and one, the Publix Newman, has adopted the box office promotions in vogue in the outlying districts. But while the downtown first-runs this year are sharing in the general business upturn, they are still at a disadvantage considering that there are only four such theatres as against 50 or more suburban runs.

The downtown theatres have been aided in the last year or so by the issuance by the local traction company of tickets—passes, they are called—good for an unlimited number of rides on streetcars or buses during the week. This has eliminated or reduced the cost of transportation for many going downtown for their entertainment. The suburban theatre owners have objected to this privilege, claiming it has hurt their business.

However, general opinion is that the neighborhoods will consolidate their gains over the downtown first-runs.

Board Proposed For Labor Issues

There was virtual quiet on the theatre-labor front this week, developments of any consequences being confined to New York, where a union controversy has been raging for months, and to Kansas City and Madison, Wisconsin.

In New York, establishment of an arbitration board of three members appointed for ten year terms to settle wage scale controversies between the city circuits and Local 306 has been proposed, according to report, and it is said to have met with considerable support from both circuit and union representatives. The designation of such a committee is being considered, it is understood, as a result of a virtual abandonment by both the circuits and union of moves for a ten year contract.

Arbitration Board Proposed

Under the arbitration committee plan, according to report, wage scales would be submitted to negotiation by the customary circuit and union representatives every two years. If such negotiations failed to end in an agreement, the subject would go to an arbitration board of three members, one of whom would be designated by the circuits, one by the union and the third by mutual agreement of the two. The same three would continue as arbitrators for a full ten year period.

Statements by two circuit officials that ten year contracts had been closed by Loew's and RKO with Local 306 were denied by Joseph D. Basson, president of the local. The circuit officials who made the statements have been active in the new wage scale negotiations with Local 306 for the past two months. They declared that a definite agreement on a ten year contract had been arrived at and that the new pacts would be signed as quickly as a few remaining details of minor importance had been disposed of.

Avoidance of a jurisdictional fight involving all construction—studio sets and theatres—in the industry was reached when a fight within the American Federation of Labor threatening to split building unions into two camps was adjusted. The peace plan calls for the naming of a committee of six members representing each of the two building union groups with George M. Harrison, president of the Railway Clerks, as neutral chairman. The chairman would vote in the event of a tie.

Benjamin F. De Agostino, president of Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union, has been denied an injunction by New York Supreme Court Justice Edward S. Dore against the Edjomac Amusement Corporation, operator of the Eltinge Theatre. Mr. De Agostino sought the stay on the ground that the Eltinge operators were not members of his union and that this was a violation of an agreement between the corporation and the union.

In Brooklyn supreme court before Justice Albert Conway there was a hearing on an injunction sought by Karl Sohnen and Lawrence Epstein, operators, against Mr. de Agostino to prevent the union from ousting the plaintiffs from membership therein. Decision was reserved.

Holmden in Kansas City

Harland Holmden, third vice president of the IATSE out of Cleveland, is in Kansas City holding conferences with downtown and subsequent run managers on labor matters involving local operators. Mr. Holmden, who participated in the New York labor settlement, and who still is in charge of the Chicago situation, is in complete charge of operators' Local No. 171 and is handling all negotiations with theatre managers and owners in Kansas City.

This move followed the reaching of a stalemate between the local, which had asked a 20 per cent increase, and downtown houses; and the inability of the local to secure contracts with suburban and subsequent theatres during the past three years. Labor matters for the latter group have been and are now being handled by the Kansas City Theatre Owners Emergency Council, composed of L. J. McCarthy, Fox Midwest circuit; Jay Means, chairman, and E. Rolsky for the independents; Ed Dubinsky of Dubinsky Brothers, and C. A. Schultz of Commonwealth Amusement Corporation.

The Madison Musicians' Union is demanding a raise in the "stand-by" wage from $37.50 for each three day performance of any stage show to $67.50, and has threatened to put the Orpheum, capitol and Parkway theatres on the unfair list unless the demand is met. Exhibitors have declared that the theatre will meet the "stand-by" wage increase, but would pay the additional $30 only under protest. The controversy between the musicians and the managers has been waging for the past three weeks and was brought to a head with the threat of the unfair list.

Coast Newspaper Advertising Gains

Amusement page advertising has been increasing steadily in the past few weeks in San Francisco, with nearly all first-run houses taking more lines every week. The presence in the town of two roadshows at legitimate houses, with a third in prospect, has also swelled the advertising space.

United Artists Theatre, re-opened a month ago by Herman Cohen, is using a large amount of space in the newspapers to feature "Dark Angel" during a second week, with prospects for a third. The Warfield is a close second in the field on expenditure, benefiting considerably on space devoted to its next attraction, "Shipmates Forever," by the space given Warner Brothers pictures in the two San Francisco Hearst newspapers.

In the legitimate field the Curran and Geary theatres are buying space for the roadshows, while Minsky interests, which recently opened the Columbia Theatre, have spent thousands of dollars during the past two weeks advertising "Life Begins at Minsky's," now playing to full houses at a $2.20 top.

AGITATION TO DROP QUOTA INTENSIFIES

Exhibitors Favor Reduction to 10 Per Cent; Producers with U. S. Outlet Want Abolition

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Agitation for reduction or even repeal of the Quota is being intensified now that provisions of the Cinematograph Films Act are in force in their final and, as regards exhibitors, their most onerous form. Both exhibitors and distributors now must carry 20 per cent of British films in their programs, which means that they must offer for distribution, or exhibit, one British film for every four foreign.

Basing their case largely on the fact that the new provisions for the first time level up the demand on exhibitors with that on distributors, the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association is shaping an appeal to the Government based on suggestions resulting from branch discussions of the quota problem. Indications are that a majority of exhibitors want, as a maximum, a reduction of their quota to 10 per cent and, as a minimum, the retention of the previously existing practice of maintaining the exhibition quota at a lower level than that on distribution. (Last year they were 15 per cent and 17½ per cent, respectively.)

With the Board of Trade's request for an "agreed" trade policy a leading fact in the situation, the actual form of pending amendment of the Films Acts remains uncertain. Producers generally want a minimum cost clause, and might accept a reduced exhibitors' quota to obtain exhibitor support for that policy. On the other hand, some big producers, particularly those who, like G-B and London, are established in America, begin to regard the quota as a hindrance to their business and may eventually be found backing the policy of complete abolition. The only present certainty seems to be that the "20 per cent all around" quota will be given at least a year's trial by the Government.

Booking Circuits Discussed

Foreshadowed conferences between the Kinematograph Renters' Society and the Exhibitors' Association on the subject of booking combines came to first realization in a more or less informal lunch table discussion between representatives of the distributors and exhibitors. John Maxwell, ABP, met with Sam Eckman, Jr., MGM, and W. J. Hutchinson, Fox, met with Richard Dooner, President, Theo. Fligelstone, vice-president, and Thomas Ormiston, J. Pollard and Fred Prior, Council members of the CEA.

British Lion - Republic

At a special shareholders' meeting the capital reconstruction plan of British Lion Film Corporation, Ltd. (detailed in the HERALD issue of September 28), was approved after S. W. Smith, managing director, had given details of the terms on which the contract for British distribution of the Republic output had been obtained.

Mr. Smith said that he had been in competition for the Republic output with "one of the largest film corporations in England" (British International Pictures) and that he had obtained it largely through the influence of N. L. Nathanson. Mr. Nathanson, with Andrew P. Holt, also advanced the deposit of $250,000 demanded by Republic on the signing of the contract as half of a total deposit of $500,000 called for as a condition of the four years contract with British Lion.

Details of the reorganization plan appeared in the September 28 issue of the HERALD.

GTC Plan Carries

Preference shareholders of General Theatres Corporation, Ltd., who entered an appeal against the decision of Justice Eve, approving the reconstruction plan, have withdrawn their action. The reconstruction plan, the essence of which is a capital reduction combined with a renewal management agreement with Gaumont-British, will now come into force and a meeting has been called for October 28 to authorize the necessary alterations in Articles of Association.

No Royal Variety Broadcast

The efforts by the entertainment industry to prevent the broadcasting of the Royal Command variety performance on October 29 have been successful, the Variety Artists' Benevolent Fund having accepted a contribution from the CEA, West End Managers' Association and other theatrical interests, which is considerably in excess of the £500 ($2,500) received last year for the radio rights from the British Broadcasting Corporation. The BBC is believed to have refused to raise its figure to £750 and the entertainment interests' offer is understood to be in the neighborhood of £1,000, which is regarded as a cheap price at which to buy freedom from a counter-attraction so powerful as the all-star variety bill.

Woolf's Plans Shape Up

Preparations for active operations on the part of General Film Distributors, Ltd., are so far advanced that this new concern, of which C. M. Woolf, recent G-B chief, is head, is holding its first sales conference this week, while plans already are completed for new headquarters for GFD in a building which seems likely to create yet another new and very important film center in Wardour Street. Five floors will house GFD, British and Dominions, Herbert Wilcox Productions, Capitol Films, United Productions and Garrett-Klement Pictures. The product of the whole of these companies will eventually be distributed by GFD.

Baird Reorganization

Baird Television, Ltd., is proposing a reorganization of capital as part of a plan to provide further funds for expansion. The present capital of £875,000 in 200,000 A ordinaries, 2,100,000 10 per cent preferred ordinaries and 1,200,000 deferred, all of 5/- value. It is proposed that holdings in the preferred shares shall be reduced 58 per cent and the deferred 28 per cent; that their special rights shall be abolished and that the capital shall be consolidated into 3,500,000 5/- ordinary shares. The surrendered shares will be distributed at the rate of 7¾ to 1 to holders of "A" shares, which at present carry rights to half of the profits. The excess of 4,000 surrendered shares will be marketed. Later £300,000 extra capital will be issued and offered to shareholders.

Montague A. Pyke Dies

Montague A. Pyke, who died in a London hospital, pioneered luxury cinemas in London over 20 years ago, established one of the first circuits, and by initiating the practice of free teas for afternoon patrons, did a lot to make cinema patrons of women.

Exhibitors Active With Conventions

There was unusual activity during the week in organized exhibitor quarters, the problems of the theatre owner in the conduct of his business being the general topic of discussion on convention floors, and elsewhere, in many places.

Allied in Boston met on Tuesday, and compulsory block booking was again a lively topic in Allied circles. Ohio's owners were asked to rally against threatening admission tax legislation. Kansas-Missouri exhibitors met in regular session to hear Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, and conventions were held in Nebraska-Western Iowa and by the Tri-States organization in the south. Pennsylvania owners were to meet Friday, and Allied Amusements of the Northwest set October 25th as the date for their 13th convention.

Admission Tax Fight Renewed

"Compulsory Block Booking Abolished! Music Tax and Score Charges Reduced! will be heralded in the trade press of our industry," said Frank Lydon, former Boston Code Authority official and national head of Allied, in the latest bulletin of the Independent Exhibitors of Masachusetts, "only if exhibitors take full advantage of the possibilities now at hand. Committees are now being delegated to interview Senators and Representatives in the interest of the Pettengill Bill and the Duffy Bill."

In Columbus another admission tax campaign is being started by the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio because the present three per cent rate expires in January and the twelve per cent schedule returns automatically.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, stressed the increasing difficulty of both circuit and independent theatres to make a profit, since all the money is going to producers, in an address Friday before the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association in Kansas City.

The directors elected John Stapel, MPTOA director for his district.

New officers of the Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City also elected last week to fill the vacancies resulting from the resignation of Jay Means and other officers are: E. Rolsky, owner of the St. John and National Theatres, president; E. S. Young, first vice-president; Mrs. A. Baier, second vice-president; Ed Hartman, secretary; Charles Potter, treasurer, and Bill Fulton as head of the executive committee.

The following officers were elected at the annual convention of the MPTO of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee at its two day session this week at the Hotel Chicas in Memphis.

President, M. A. Lightman, Memphis; R. X. Williams, Oxford, Miss., secretary-treasurer; W. E. Elkins, vice-president for Mississippi; W. F. Ruffin, vice-president for Tennessee; H. D. Wharton, vice-president for Arkansas, and Emma Cox, board chairman.

Board members for Arkansas chosen are: Henry Sanders, Cecil Cupp, J. F. Norman, M. S. McCord, Sidney Nutt, O. E. McCutcheon; for Mississippi: W. A. Rush, J. A. West, W. S. Tyson, H. W. Evans; for Tennessee: F. D. Moore, Tom Tallas, Col. Cecil E. Vogel and W. L. Henricks.

Affiliation with the MPTOA was unanimously voted last week by the MPTO of Nebraska and Western Iowa at its convention Omaha. Charles E. Williams was reelected president for the sixteenth term, while H. F. Kennedy of Broken Bow, Neb., was chosen first vice-president; Dale Goldie, Cherokee, Ia., second vice-president, and R. E. Falkenberg, Lexington, Neb., third vice-president.

COMPLETE TESTIMONY IN ST. LOUIS ANTITRUST TRIAL

At the beginning of last Wednesday's session, the jury was excluded while attorneys argued whether the court should grant RKO Distributing Corporation's request for subpoenas duces tecum to compel Mr. Arthur to produce all the correspondence between his companies and RKO relative to showing of pictures at the St. Louis theatre in the exhibition year 1933-34, when Famous Amusement Company operated the St. Louis.

Jacob M. Lashly of counsel for RKO argued that the defense of RKO to the conspiracy charge was based upon its unfavorable business relationship with Famous Amusement, saying, "We don't deny we sold pictures to Warner Brothers. But we do deny that we did it for an illegal purpose. We have the right to show what our real purpose was. It has direct bearing on the attitude of mind of the company and Mr. Ned E. Depinet when the pictures were sold to Warner Brothers."

The subpoenaes were opposed by Ernest L. Wilkinson of New York City, counsel for Mr. Arthur. He said his chief objection was that no proper showing had been made that the matters were relevant and material to the trial.

Judge Moore then sustained the motion by Wilkinson without prejudice. This will permit the defense to seek new subpoenas on more specific grounds later or to work in the evidence during its cross-examination.

Former Senator James A. Reed, of counsel for Warner Brothers, interposed an exception to the court's finding, commenting: "The defense has the right, if the Government has examined a witness in reference to any matter and we consider that a further examination of that matter will weaken the force and effect of the direct testimony or any inference that may be drawn from it, to go into it on cross-examination. And if we are able through such cross-examination testimony or any inference that may be drawn from it to benefit the defense, then I can see no earthly reason why that testimony should not be produced. The rule of law is this as I read it, that where evidence from which an inference unfavorable to prisoner is brought on direct examination then everything within the knowledge of the witness to rebut may be brought out on cross-examination. Anything brought out by the Government from which an unfavorable inference may be drawn, we have the right to go into to the fullest extent possible to bring out all of the facts.

"Now let's see what the Government did here. It is contended that because of this alleged conspiracy on the part of the defendants the complainants lost money. Yet we are denied the right to show that they reduced their admission prices in rebuttal as to why they lost a lot of money.

"Also as to who owns the Fox and St. Louis theatres. The F & M Theatre Company of Missouri operated the St. Louis and Fox theatres. I contend that we are entitled to go into all these matters fully, if for no other reason than to show the witness' interest in this case."

Question of Prices Ruled Out

Judge Moore responded that he was trying to hold the trial to the issues involved and not admit to trial a lot of collateral things that were not at issue. He added that he did not see how they should go into the question of admission prices at all of the first-run theatres, saying it was not clear to him how that could have any effect on the charge that defendants had combined in restraint of trade.

DOUBLE FEATURES ENTER TESTIMONY

Former Senator James A. Reed, of defense counsel, protested when Judge Moore sustained an objection to questioning regarding admission prices at the Missouri theatre, where two features and vaudeville had been shown on a single program.

"The lower prices may be the reason he lost money," said Mr. Reed to the court. "And it may be the cause why the producers may not want to do business with them. . . . A man who cuts prices and gets into a war may soon be losing money."

"One reason we will show is that these theatres were improperly managed," Mr. Reed responded, "that the complainants started a price war, put on double features bill."

Judge Moore: "I will not go into the question of prices. I don't believe it is collateral."

Frederick H. Wood, of Warner counsel: "I would respectfully suggest that the court withhold a ruling until we ask the questions that will show the materiality of the evidence."

Judge Moore: "I have already ruled. Bring the jury back. I will pass on questions as they arise."

Wood Cross-examines Arthur

Mr. Wood then proceeded with the cross-examination of Mr. Arthur:

Q. Mr. Arthur, you testified that in the period 1930 to 1932 you held some executive position with the Fox Theatre Company?

A. I was under contract to the Fox Film Company but assigned to work for the Fox Theatre Company.

Q. When did that employment begin?

A. In April, 1930.

Q. When did it terminate?

A. In the fall of 1932,

Q. You said that you came here periodically during that period to confer with the persons operating the Fox Theatre here?

A. Yes sir.

Q. The persons here made reports to you concerning what was happening at the theatre in St. Louis?

A. Yes sir.

Familiar with Theatre Situation

Q. So you acquired a familiarity with the theatre situation?

A. Yes, in a general way.

Q. You at least knew what other first-run theatres were operating from April, 1930, to February, 1932?

A. Yes.

Q. You knew that in April, 1930, Loew's were operating the Loew's State, Fox Pictures the Fox, RKO was operating the St. Louis, and Skouras Super Theatres Corporation was operating the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres?

A. No, sir. Warner Brothers were operating the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central. He then explained that he did not have actual supervision of the St. Louis house until the fall of 1930.

Q. Well, let us move up to the fall of 1930. You certainly were familiar with the situation then?

A. Yes, sir, but I could not tell who were actually operating the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres. I was told that Charley Skouras was operating the theatres, but that Warner Brothers were the owners.

Q. You knew that Warner Brothers had a large investment in these theatres; you knew that they had paid Skouras Brothers a large price for their holdings?

Tilt Over Price Paid

(Russell B. Hardy, special assistant to the United States attorney general, objected, contending the price paid was not immaterial.)

Q. The fact is they did pay a large price?

A. They paid out stock.

Q. You knew about this transaction when it took place?

A. I knew about it afterwards.

(At this point Judge Moore again reminds the attorneys to dispense with their colloquy and to conduct themselves with the courtesy the occasion required.)

Mr. Arthur added that he knew Warner Brothers had issued a lot of stock but did not know it had large value. "I didn't know its value," he said.

Q. But you did know that a large amount of stock was issued?

Says He Was Told Afterwards

A. I was told that afterwards by a man who received some of the stock that had been issued. But I did not know it was a lot of stock.

Q. But you understood, didn't you, that a large amount of stock had been issued to Skouras and was told by him that it was a large amount?

A. Skouras told me that he sold his interests for stock in Warner Brothers.

(An objection by Hardy was sustained.)

Mr. Wood, excepting to this ruling, pointed out that on direct examination Hardy had asked the witness if he wasn't familiar with the motion picture situation in St. Louis.

Judge Moore then permitted further questioning on that point

Q. At least you knew that the Skouras interests in these properties were a large amount?

A. No. I haven't been informed to this day what it was.

Q. You didn't know that they had built the Ambassador theatre; that Warner Brothers, when they acquired the equity of Skouras, acquired that theatre?

A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. You knew also that when they acquired the Skouras equity Warner Brothers also acquired the St. Louis Amusement Company?

A. No, I didn't know it.

Mr. Hardy objected to any testimony that Warner Brothers had acquired control of the St. Louis Amusement Company.

"It is certainly part of the picture situation in St. Louis," Wood replied.

Q. In your capacity of supervising operations of first-run theatres here you certainly had information concerning the second-run theatres that made you familiar with them?

QUESTIONED ON SKOURAS INTEREST

A. Very little.

Q. You did know of the St. Louis Amusement Company?

A. Yes, but I did not know who was operating the theatres.

Arthur then explained that when Skouras was "fired" by Warner Brothers late in the fall of 1931 he told him what he had done in the St. Louis motion picture field. He added that he did not take over the operation of the Fox theatre here until the fall of 1930 and that he ceased such operations in the fall of 1931, when he went to the Pacific Coast.

"Well, what I asked you applied to the period 1930 to 1932," Mr. Wood responded.

Q. I now ask you whether at some part of the time you were operating here you hadn't understood or been told that the St. Louis Amusement Company owned a considerable number of theatres?

A. I knew they owned some.

Q. You testified the other day that they owned something over 20; when did you first learn that?

A. Skouras told me.

Q. When was that?

A. About 1931. I don't believe he told me the exact number. I don't know now whether he told me the number or I based that estimate on my own conclusions.

Q. You knew that a chain of theatres had been put together by Skouras?

A. That's what he told me or I drew my own conclusions.

Q. And he told you: "I sold out to Warner Brothers?"

A. I knew that they had acquired whatever Skouras had.

Q. He told you enough for you to understand that the deal gave Warner Brothers control of his first-run theatres in St. Louis?

A. No, I didn't know that.

Q. You knew that Skouras was in control?

A. No, I didn't know that.

Finally, after considerably more oral sparring with Wood, Arthur finally agreed that he knew that Skouras had sold Warner Brothers his interest in the first run theatres and the St. Louis Amusement Company.

Q. How long have you been with Fanchon & Marco, Inc.?

A. I have been associated with Fanchon & Marco since September, 1933. I became vice-president shortly thereafter.

Q. There has been some reference here to Marco. I now ask you if there is such a man as Marco, and if so, who is he?

A. Yes. He is Marco Wolf.

Q. Is there such a person as Fanchon?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is Fanchon?

A. Marco's sister. Fanchon Simon.

Q. Where are the principal offices of Fanchon & Marco?

A. In New York City.

Q. Did Fanchon & Marco have a representative resident in St. Louis?

A. I think they had a man named La Blanc.

Q. Did they have an office here?

More Wrangling

This question produced another of the periodical wrangles between Arthur and Wood as to what Wood meant by office and finally Arthur said he thought Fanchon & Marco conducted their business in this section from the Fox Theatre. "You and I seem to have considerable difficulty over dates," Wood added.

ARTHUR DEFINES "SLOUGH" FILMS

Harry Arthur, under cross-examination by the defense, was called upon to give a definition of "sluff" or "slough" pictures after he had used the word several times in his testimony. Finally Frederick Wood, cross-examining him, demanded: "What do you mean by slough pictures?"

Mr. Arthur replied:

"I mean that it is a picture you would rather slough off and avoid running if you had a better picture with a greater box office appeal to show in place of it."

Q. You went with Fanchon & Marco in September, 1933, and have been with them ever since?

A. Yes.

Q. Call it a business or not, there was a place here at which Fanchon & Marco did something; you didn't think I had reference to their social or artistic activities; a place where someone did something for them?

A. Yes, several. He then listed several persons employed by Fanchon & Marco at that time, including Mr. LaBlanc, Harry Singer et al.

Q. When did you first come to St. Louis?

A. Either in October or November, 1933.

Q. At that time were Fanchon & Marco engaged in the operation of any motion picture theatre in St. Louis?

A. They did not become so engaged until November, when they took over the St. Louis.

Q. When did you begin operations at the St. Louis.

A. It was some time in November. I can give you the exact date from my records.

Q. Was it along about the 10th of November, if I may refresh your memory?

A. Probably it was.

Q. Did you come to St. Louis before that?

A. I think I made one trip prior to that in connection with the negotiations on the lease of the St. Louis. He said they made the lease and started operations in a few weeks.

Q. Did you come alone or were you accompanied by some one?

A. I think Marco came with me.

Queried on Louis Cohen Affiliation

Q. Do you know Louis Cohen?

A. Yes.

Q. Is he associated with your company?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was he then?

A. I would have to go to the records.

Q. He was at one time?

A. Yes, for a short time.

Q. Did Cohen come with you on that trip?

A. No, I don't think he did.

Q. At what hotel did you stay when you came here?

(Mr. Hardy's objection to this question was sustained.)

Q. When you got here, did you meet anyone?

He said he thought they met Mr. Singer and some other representatives of the company.

Q. Had there been any correspondence relative to a suggestion by some person on a possible lease of the St. Louis?

A. Singer or Marco suggested it.

Q. Was the suggestion oral or in writing?

A. I think it was on the telephone.

Q. Singer knew why you were here?

A. I don't know whether he did or not.

Q. When you got here did you have any conversation with Mr. Singer?

A. Yes.

Q. Who else did you have conversations with about the St. Louis theatre lease?

A. Julius Straus and Emil Glaser.

Q. Did you see Harry Koplar about it?

A. No, sir.

Q. When you were here did you see Harry Koplar about the St. Louis theatre?

A. I saw Harry Koplar at one meeting with Julius Straus and Emil Glaser.

Q. Why didn't you tell me that before?

Mr. Arthur responded that although Mr. Wood seemed to be injecting Mr. Koplar into the deal for the St. Louis, he had absolutely nothing to do with it, that he was told that Koplar had held some second mortgage bonds on the property and had been practically wiped out, that he had done business with Straus and Glaser and that Koplar was present because Straus and Glaser wanted him to look after their interests because of his past experience in the theatrical business.

At this stage of the proceedings the original lease on the St. Louis was put into the record along with several amendments thereto, including a copy of a court order by Circuit Judge O'Neill Ryan permitting Edmond Koeln and James T. Blair, receivers for Theatre Realty Company, owners of the Fox theatre, to pay $1,000 a week to the F&M Theatre Company of Missouri. This $1,000 a week was then applied by that company to paying the rent on the St. Louis theatre, which is dark at present.

The lease on the Fox theatre, dated Jan. 30, 1934, was put in as Warner Brothers exhibit No. 6.

Q. Is this the only paper or writing of any description between the interested parties relative to operating the Fox theatre?

A. There was the lease between the Fox and Eden company. That was the paper I gave you before, which is on file in the circuit court and dated November 14, 1934.

Q. This was an order of court permitting an extension of the $1,000 a week arrangement with the Fox for another year from August, 1934.

Arthur Nettled by Questioning

At this stage Wood seemed to have considerably difficult in getting Arthur to understand just what other paper he was inquiring about.

Q. Since you may have misunderstood me before, I am now asking whether there is any paper or other written instrument executed between the parties to the lease in any way affecting the operations of the Fox theatre or the obligations of the receivers of the Eden Theatre Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that paper?

A. A letter between the parties setting forth what the court is. He added that this letter was in the hands of the receivers for the Theatre

COUNSEL TILTS WITH COURT FREQUENT

Realty Company, but that he saw a copy of it.

Q. Is that paper signed by the receivers and the Eden company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it signed in duplicate?

Mr. Arthur, apparently nettled at the pressing by Wood at this point, said: "Mr. Wood, I never saw the paper. I saw a copy that had no signatures. That matter was handled by the local parties here. I understand that the receivers have the original."

Q. The Eden theatre Company only has a copy of it?

A. That was my understanding of it.

A copy of the court order relating to this extension of the $1,000 a week arrangement was then introduced in evidence.

Q. Who is Mr. Chasnoff?

A. Attorney for the Eden Theatre Company?

Q. Is that one of your companies?

A. Yes, sir.

Chasnoff Represented Landlords

Mr. Arthur explained that the legal details of the St. Louis theatre lease had been handled by Herman J. Wiseman. Mr. Wiseman was counsel for Fanchon & Marco.

Q. Mr. Jacob Chasnoff organized the Eden Theatre Company around the date of the lease?

A. Mr. Chasnoff represented the landlords.

At this stage Mr. Hardy, who had objected and had had his objection sustained, protested that a persistence in this line of questioning was a colossal waste of time.

Judge Moore responded: "I will take care of myself."

Mr. Arthur then explained that Mr. Chasnoff represented the bondholders of the St. Louis theatre when the Eden Company leased the St. Louis, and his clients then became half owners of the F&M Theatre Company of Missouri, that all the negotiations relative to this lease were conducted in either St. Louis or New York, that in these conferences Herman J. Wiseman had represented Arthur's company, that when the lease was made Chasnoff drew up the papers for the Eden Theatre Company.

Q. That company belongs to the F&M Theatre Company?

A. Yes, and half of that company belongs to the St. Louis theatre bondholders.

After the noon recess resumption of the cross-examination was undertaken by Mr. Wood.

Q. Mr. Chasnoff was the attorney for the Eden Company and that was the company owned by Fanchon & Marco and others; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir. Mr. Wilkinson told me during the recess that he had engaged Mr. Chasnoff to represent me here. (This was in connection with the objection to the subpoenas duces tecum sought by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and affiliated companies and individuals which Judge Moore had ruled against on October 8th. Mr. Wood then proceeded to explain at detail that when he used the terms "you" and "your company" he did not mean Arthur personally, but some of the companies he was interested in or represented.

Judge Moore cut short this detailed information, saying he had heard enough of it.

Q. Was the lease of October 25, 1933, signed in St. Louis?

A. No, it was sent around to the various parties interested.

Q. Was the execution of this lease preceded by any other meeting at which it was discussed and at which any of the gentlemen you have mentioned were present and at which you were?

A. Yes.

TIME OFF FOR JURY TO INSPECT ADS

Judge Moore poured a caustic word or two into the proceedings when after a long passage at words over newspaper advertisements used by the Missouri theatre, Russell Hardy, heading the prosecution, suggested that the jury be shown all the advertisements that had been discussed. Frederick H. Wood, of Warner counsel, said that he would do so if the judge did not object to the time it would take.

"Go ahead," responded Judge Moore. "Time seems to be immaterial."

Q. Where, in the office of the St. Louis theatre?

A. Yes.

Q. When?

A. A few weeks or 10 days before the meeting I discussed.

Q. Who were present at that meeting?

Lists Those at Meeting

Marco, Julius Glaser, Emil Straus, Harry Koplar and myself. I think maybe Harry Singer was there. The second meeting was at the office of Aaron Waldheim at which these persons were present.

Q. How long after the meeting at which the St. Louis lease was signed was it before the theatre opened?

A. The theatre was closed two weeks before. He added that all of the negotiations he had mentioned took place between September and the date of the lease.

Q. At which of the meetings was the agreement reached?

When Mr. Hardy objected to this repetition, Judge Moore sustained the objection saying, "It seems whatever happened developed into the lease."

Mr. Arthur injected that if Mr. Wood did not ask "these long detailed questions," less time would be required to answer them. Wood didn't like this.

Q. Have you any recollection of what happened at that meeting?

Arthur responded that he was a bit hazy on some of the details, adding: "When I came down there were still a few points at dispute and these were ironed out at the second meeting. I verified that Louis Cohen was present at that meeting by long distance telephone calls to New York and Los Angeles during the noon recess."

Q. You said that Harry Koplar had nothing to do with making of the lease?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, if he had nothing to do with the making of that lease, why did he sign it twice?

Kaplan Again a Factor

A. Harry Koplar had claimed that he owned some of the second mortgage bonds and we insisted that he sign it. He had nothing to do with the lease.

Q. You said Koplar nothing to do with making the lease or outlining its terms, yet he signed it twice?

A. I didn't conceal anything. I thought that you were asking who were representing me.

Q. Then Koplar did attend the meeting, he took an active part in the proceedings and signed the lease?

A. I will agree with everything you say but the "active part."

Q. Did you see Koplar today?

A. Yes, sir. This morning.

Q. Isn't it a fact that Mr. Koplar originated the entire transaction?

(Objection by Hardy sustained.)

Q. Isn't it a fact that Koplar first proposed to some one that your company should lease the St. Louis theatre?

(Objection sustained.)

Senator Reed then arose: "The witness said Koplar had nothing to do with the making of the lease. Now when asked if he did not originate it, the Government objects. The cross-examination has a right to show his interest.

Mr. Wood proceeded: "Isn't it a fact that Mr. Koplar wrote a letter to you, your company or some one connected with it suggesting that you lease the St. Louis theatre? (Objection sustained.)

Q. Isn't it a fact that one of your representatives in St. Louis wrote a letter to you or to your company saying that Mr. Koplar had suggested to some one that your company lease the St. Louis theatre? (Objection sustained.)

Mr. Wood: "Does your honor rule that the question is not proper cross-examination? The question and answer is intended to test his recollection and memory as well as his credibility.

Judge Moore: I don't think that the matters are material to the issue.

Mr. Wood: "They go to the veracity of the witness. Your honor, I desire, with all due respect to the court, to renew the questions.

The Judge then allowed Wood to repeat each of the questions and in turn he again sustained Hardy's objections to the first two.

When he overruled Hardy's objection to the third of the series of questions, Wood asserted his exceptions to the ruling from force of habit, apparently, and sheepishly excused himself when he discovered his mistake.

Arthur replied that he didn't know whether Koplar had written such a letter.

Wood asked if Arthur had made a search through his records for the letter.

He responded that he didn't know the letter was wanted in the proceeding.

Q. Well, you were served with subpoenas over a week ago for all correspondence and records that related to the lease of the St. Louis.

A. Your subpoenas gave me a long set of papers and records and I didn't know what you wanted, I didn't know whether you wanted all of the correspondence relating to the lease of the St. Louis theatre. I never knew what was wanted in your subpoenas and do not know now.

Arthur Addresses Jury

Then, turning directly toward the jury, Arthur put over one of his stirring impromptu talks that have helped to make this trial so unusual for a proceedings in a United States district court.

"I don't want this jury to think that I want to conceal anything. I am willing to tell you about anything you want, who was there, what was said, what was done, and so forth."

Mr. Wood objected to this.

Judge Moore responded: "Mr. Wood, all of this has been gone into over and over again. We will never get anywhere with this case at this rate."

Q. Isn't it a fact that some representative of your company wrote a letter that Mr. Koplar had suggested your leasing the theatre?

SEEKS TO PROVE MONOPOLY MOVE

A. I don't believe I ever saw such a letter if it was written. I don't know whether such a letter was written or not. But I do know that was not the way the deal originated.

Lease to Stage Shows, Inc.

Q. This lease runs to Stage Shows, Inc., of Delaware?

A. Yes, that was the name of the F & M Theatre Company of Missouri before we changed it.

Q. One is a Delaware corporation and the other is a Missouri corporation; yet you say they are the same?

Mr. Arthur responded that he wasn't sure of those details. "I thought your recollection was a bit faulty," Mr. Wood ironically responded.

Q. Who is the Stage Shows, Inc.?

A. Fanchon & Marco, Inc., own all of the stock.

The leases before Mr. Wood indicated that Stage Shows, Inc., proceeded to operate the St. Louis theatre under the original lease until March 26, 1934, when a new lease was made to F & M Theatre Company of Missouri. He asked Arthur if that was a correct supposition.

A. I believe it did so until the date we begin to operate the Fox theatre or until January 25, 1934.

Q. On that date half of the stock in the F & M Theatre Company of Missouri was held 50 per cent by Fanchon & Marco, Inc., and 50 per cent by the Metro Realty Company; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Names Several of Stockholders

Q. Who are the stockholders of the Metro Realty Company?

A. I don't know all of them.

Q. Know any of them?

A. Yes, sir. Waldheim and Glaser represented the heirs of some estate who held the majority of the bonds; the holders of the bonds were the landlords (Apparently Mr. Arthur referred to the heirs of the estate of late David Sommers, who was said to have been interested in the St. Louis theatre prior to his death several years ago).

Q. Was Mr. Koplar one of the stockholders?

A. I understood he was a stockholder. He held a considerable portion of the second mortgage bonds of the theatre.

Q. Who was operating the St. Louis theatre before you took it over?

A. The landlords.

Q. Who was operating the St. Louis theatre at the time you began the discussions about leasing it?

A. These people—the bondholders, the Metro Realty Company.

Q. When was it that the Famous Amusement Company operated the theatre?

A. I don't know the exact date. Some time in the fall of 1933. It was the same operation as the Metro Realty Company.

Q. Who was the president of the Famous Amusement Company?

A. I don't know.

Q. Would it refresh your memory if I showed you this document? Wood then handed Arthur a paper which he looked at.

A. Yes, sir. It is Harry Koplar.

Again Questions on Koplar

Q. You don't know when Harry Koplar first became interested in the company of which he was president on November 2?

A. I don't know.

Q. How long had the St. Louis theatre been closed?

A. Don't know.

Q. You were not interested in the theatre sufficiently to inquire how long it had been closed before you leased it; that didn't make any difference with you?

The reply was that he had made no such inquiry.

Q. Did you make an investigation to ascertain whether the house had been a money maker?

A. Mr. Straus said it was a very profitable money-maker for RKO.

Q. RKO didn't seem to think so; they didn't hold on to it?

A. RKO didn't hold on to anything, anywhere.

Q. Did the bondholders make money with the theatre?

A. Koplar said they had lost money. That was the reason why they leased it to us.

Q. How long before January 25, 1934, when you took over the operation of the Fox theatre, did the negotiations for the lease start?

Try to Prove Monopoly Move

Mr. Hardy objected to this question, and when he asked that Mr. Wood show what he proposed to prove by the answer to this question, Wood and former Senator Reed came forward to the bench of Judge Moore, and there outside the hearing of the jurors, who were in the room, Wood dictated an offer of the proof he sought to make: "We offer to prove, among other things, that Harry Arthur together with Harry Koplar, as early at least as the early part of 1934 had worked out a program the purpose of which was to establish a monopoly of first-run theatres in St. Louis, to acquire possession of the St. Louis Amusement Company, to drive Warner Brothers out of business and to use this power and control for the purpose of dictating terms to all producers and distributors of motion pictures. In the course of such program they had said that if they could effect such a monopoly they would have Warner Brothers over a barrel, they would have all producers and distributors of motion pictures over a barrel and would own the ——— town."

Mr. Hardy refused to accept the offer. Judge Moore announced that he would rule on each question as it came up. Apparently this opened the door for Mr. Wood to prove his offer, for he immediately began a line of questions with that end in view.

Mr. Hardy had suggested that Wood add to the offer an explanation of the means that were to be used to effect the alleged monopoly planned by Arthur and Koplar and state whether or not it was an unlawful monopoly he was undertaking to prove.

Mr. Wood continued: "We further offer to prove that Harry Koplar was the originator of this project, a part of which was to drive Warner Bros. out of business, and that Arthur was at all times cognizant of that purpose and of all the activities of Koplar related in the opening statement of Senator Reed."

Mr. Reed added: "That the witness was not only cognizant of these schemes and purposes, but was a party to them, and to all of the reasons as to pertinency which apply to this, there is the additional reason that we have the right in this cross-examination to show the interest of the witness and his prejudice."

When Mr. Hardy renewed his objection, Judge Moore ruled that the defense in a general way was entitled to develop whether the witness had any prejudice toward Warner Brothers, but the court still questioned that a detailed inquiry along those lines should be permitted. Mr. Reed argued, however, that the defense was entitled to go at length in the details of such alleged prejudicial interest of the witness.

Negotiations Began Earlier

Mr. Arthur then finally answered that the negotiations for the Fox theatre had started several months before.

Q. Before or after in relation to the lease for the St. Louis?

A. We tried to make a deal for the Fox before that.

Q. This lease on the Fox theatre runs to the Eden Theatre Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the stockholders of the Eden Theatre Company?

A. The F & M Theatre Company of Missouri.

Q. Who were the stockholders of the F & M Theatre Company of Missouri?

A. Fanchon & Marco, Inc., held 50 per cent and the Metro Realty Company 50 per cent, they were interested in the St. Louis theatre building.

Q. You told as much as you know about who were the stockholders of the Metro Realty Company?

A. Yes.

Mr. Wood then developed that March 26, 1934, when the Eden Theatre Company took over the lease of the Fox Theatre was the same date that F & M Theatre Company took over the St. Louis.

Q. The effect of these two transactions consummated shortly after Jan. 1, 1934, was that your company came to control the operations of both the St. Louis and Fox theatres?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What picture contracts from outstanding companies did you hold for exhibition at the St. Louis?

A. RKO and Columbia.

Q. What pictures did you have for showing at the Fox theatre?

A. Fox.

Q. Did the St. Louis show any other pictures?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did the Fox show any other pictures?

A. I don't know. He added that the St. Louis may have bought one or two independent pictures and that the same was true of the Fox.

Q. Then after you came into control of both theatres didn't that place at your disposal the product of the pictures you have named for exhibition in either theatre?

Pick of Film in Fox Theatres

Mr. Arthur replied that the selection of the three companies was put into the Fox, that his companies used the pictures to the best advantage.

Q. That is the usual practice of good business?

A. Yes, sir. If I had good product I would rather have it in a theatre where it will get the best results.

Q. Did your company have the right by contract to show RKO and Columbia pictures?

KOPLAR'S NAME OFTEN INJECTED

A. The Famous Amusement Company was entitled to those pictures. It had control of the pictures and with the consent of the producers assigned the contracts to F & M Theatre Company of Missouri.

Q. The October lease on the St. Louis theatre provided for a rental of 10 per cent of the gross receipts up to $10,000 in any one week, with $1,000 as the maximum rent, plus 50 per cent of the profits after deducting the expenses of operations, while you were to get a 5 per cent allowance for management. Do you regard that a fair charge for the management privilege? (An objection by Hardy was sustained.)

Objects to "Partnership"

Q. Well the substance of this arrangement was that you did not have to pay any specific amount of money as rent and that you really went into partnership with the landlords, you taking 5 per cent before the net profits were figured up?

A. We owned the company 100 per cent. I object to the word "partnership."

Q. Well, suppose you correct it for me. Can you find a minimum clause in this lease?

Mr. Hardy was on his feet expressing his views on Mr. Wood's questions.

Judge Moore interposed: "Are you making an objection?"

Hardy: "Yes."

Judge: "Sustained."

Mr. Wood: "I now desire to read to the jury article 30 of the lease." He then proceeded to read the provisions for a rental of 10 per cent of gross receipts with a maximum of $1,000 in any week, plus the 50 per cent net profit after deducting the 5 per cent of gross receipts for the management overhead with a maximum of $750 a week for that purpose, and then he came across a provision that Harry Koplar was to receive $150 a week for "services rendered."

Mr. Arthur was then suggesting that Mr. Wood read the entire lease and finally, after much conversation, was permitted to point out the minimum rental clause of $100,000 per annum which was to figure over a 52 week period proceeding June 1 of each calendar year and the provision was to the effect that if the rental actually paid in any year was less than $100,000 the landlord had the right to terminate the lease.

Q. Then the landlord could put you out after 1934?

Mr. Arthur said that was true if at least $100,000 was not paid.

Fox Theatre Lease Reviewed

Wood then took up the lease on the Fox theatre.

Q. You consolidated the Fox and St. Louis theatres in January, 1934?

A. No, we didn't consolidate them. We had charge of the operations and each was run independently.

Q. And you made the receivers for the Fox pay you for that?

A. No, sir, we did not.

Q. They paid you $1,000 a week for a privilege you already had by contract; you had the right to show RKO and Columbia pictures in the Fox?

A. No, sir, we did not.

Q. This lease provided that the lessee was privileged to charge $1,000 a week to be paid to the F. & M. Theatre Company of Missouri before the net profits on the Fox theatre were figured?

A. The receivers were given the right of selection over all of the Fox, RKO and Columbia pictures to be exhibited in the Fox.

TAKES EXCEPTION TO POINT HE HAS WON

There was a grand confusion for a moment, accompanied by several discreet smiles, when Frederick Wood of Warner counsel took exception, by force of habit, to the judge's overruling of an exception taken by the prosecuting attorney.

Mr. Wood softly excused himself when he discovered his mistake.

He added that the receivers think that they have a very equitable proposition and were tickled to death to do it.

Q. Yet you had the right to show RKO and Columbia pictures in the Fox?

A. We had the right, but it would have been unfair to the landlords of the St. Louis theatre to do so.

Q. And you charged the Fox receivers $1,000 a week for that right?

A. You are wrong, it was only $500. Don't forget that we were entitled to half of the net profits on the Fox, and half of that $1,000 came out of our pockets.

Whereupon Reed Objects

At this point Mr. Reed objected to Mr. Arthur's remarks, saying, "Never in my long experience have I seen a witness take charge of the conduct of a case."

Mr. Wood then brought out that the Fox lease provided for a rental of $1,350 a week plus 50 per cent of the net profits after deducting the operating expenses and $1,000 to be paid for rental on the St. Louis through the F & M Company of Missouri.

During the passages concerning the $1,000 payment to the St. Louis and whether all of it came out of the pockets of the Fox receivers, Mr. Wood protested that Mr. Arthur should answer questions without qualifying his answers. It was brought out that the $1,000 a week arrangement was continued beyond August 31, 1934, by a subsequent order of the circuit court.

During further questioning regarding the St. Louis theatre lease of Oct. 25, 1934, previously referred to in the cross-examination, Wood took another fling at Arthur, saying: "Yet your memory was so clear the other day on something that occurred six months before that you could repeat word for word everything that was said by the various Warner Bros. officials and employes. Your recollection was not so clear about this paper as it was about that conference."

Q. I asked you about the records of pictures shown in your theatres. Have you such a list?

A. I will have a complete list of pictures by tomorrow morning.

Q. Well, you did finally make the landlords of the St. Louis theatre come in with you as partners in the Fox lease?

Mr. Arthur admitted that this interpretation was probably true.

Q. Who managed the St. Louis theatre for you?

A. Charley Kurtsman, Harry Greenman and Harry Koplar.

Q. What did Koplar do for his $7,800 a year?

A. Well he gave the boys the benefit of his experience. He went from one theatre to another and made suggestions but the boys didn't always do what he said. They had their own ideas.

Q. Did he give any advice to you?

A. No, sir. I didn't need it.

Q. Well, you did talk to Koplar about the general situation in St. Louis?

Mr. Arthur "wasn't sure."

Q. You talked to him about the first-run situation in St. Louis in January, 1934?

A. I don't think so.

Q. You were not interested in the first-run situation?

A. No, sir, only in my own theatres.

Q. Did you have any discussions with him regarding the Ambassador and Missouri?

A. Yes.

Q. When?

A. I think I talked to him every time I was here.

Q. When did you first meet Allen L. Snyder?

A. About the same time; January or February, 1934.

Q. How did you come to go in with him on the deal for the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres?

A. The invitation came through his attorney, John S. Leahy. He talked to me about the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central before I met Snyder.

Q. Where and when was that?

A. Here in St. Louis on January 25, 1934, or a few days before. I know I talked to Leahy.

Q. Wasn't that before Snyder made his proposal to the bondholders' committee?

Says Proposal Already Made

A. I was told that he had already made his proposal before I was invited to join. I did not meet Synder until I said on January 26 or 27 to Leahy that I would go in. He said that he had called Leahy by long distance telephone January 26 or 27 from New York and told him that he would go in with Snyder.

Q. When was it you first met Mr. Snyder?

A. A little time before the fifth of February. I know that I didn't meet Mr. Snyder until after I had agreed to participate with him in the deal.

Q. With whom did you make the agreement to go in with Snyder?

A. With his attorney, Mr. John S. Leahy.

Q. When did you first learn that Koplar was in on the deal?

A. Spyros Skouras told me.

Q. When did he tell you?

A. Some time in December, 1933, or January, 1934.

Q. You were told by Skouras that Koplar was in on the Snyder deal?

A. No, I was told by Skouras that Koplar was in on his own.

Q. You were told that Koplar was trying to get the theatres for himself?

A. Yes.

Q. When was that?

A. Before I saw Leahy in St. Louis.

Q. When did you learn that Koplar was with Snyder or going in with him?

A. About January.

Q. Well, January is a long month?

A. About the middle of January.

Q. Before or after talking to Leahy?

A. After.

Q. Leahy did tell you that Koplar was in on Snyder's deal?

A. Not at that time.

DECLARES OPERATION WAS SEPARATE

Q. Subsequently?
A. Yes.

Talked With Koplar

Q. Did you have any conversation with Koplar about the theatres?
A. I had a conversation with him right after Skouras told me he was trying to get the theatres.
Q. How many conversations did you have with him?
A. Three or four in December and January.
Q. Before you had any conversation with Leahy?
A. About the same time.
Q. Now which one of these gentlemen did you talk to first?
A. Skouras.
Q. After Skouras?
A. I am not sure. It may have been that I talked to Koplar and Leahy the same day.
Q. You don't remember which one first?
A. No.
Q. Isn't it a fact that Koplar wanted you to join up with him and Snyder and take over these theatres?
A. He wanted me to join with him.

At this point Mr. Arthur suggested that if Mr. Wood would permit he would work out the sequence of events. "Permit me to conduct the examination, please, I am a little afraid of your sequences."

Q. You couldn't tell which one; if it was Koplar or John S. Leahy you saw first?
A. Well, Mr. Wood, you've got me so twisted up. You keep trying to put words into my mouth. I am trying to give you the facts as they occurred.
Q. When did you first learn that Koplar had gone in with Snyder?
A. When I came here to close the deal.

These questions pressing on the alleged connection of Koplar with the Snyder deal apparently nettled Mr. Arthur, for he suddenly exclaimed:

"You folks always keep referring to Koplar, and dragging him into this deal. Koplar was never in on it at all. He told me so. He said he was merely representing a Dr. Probstein. That's his brother-in-law, I understood Koplar."

At this point adjournment was taken until Thursday morning.

Independent Operation

Mr. Wood resumed the questioning of Mr. Arthur.

Q. You testified yesterday that you operated the St. Louis theatre from November, 1933, to January 25, 1934, with its operation combined with that of the Fox theatre?
A. No, we operated both independently of each other from January 25 on.
Q. You told us that the negotiations for the Fox theatre had been started some time preceding the leasing of the Fox that resulted in the merging of the operations of the St. Louis and Fox under your management although the two theatres were operated independently?
A. Yes, the negotiations were carried on for some time.
Q. And during the same period that those negotiations were being carried on, the negotiations for the leases on the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central were underway?
A. No, after that.

KOPLAR NOT PARTY TO DEAL: ARTHUR

Again Harry Koplar of St. Louis came frequently into the testimony over the weekend, in questions put to Mr. Arthur by defense counsel in cross-examination.

At one time Mr. Arthur answered that although Frederick H. Wood of Warner counsel seemed to be injecting the name of Mr. Koplar into the deal for the St. Louis theatre, Mr. Koplar had had nothing to do with the negotiations.

Q. You advised us that the lease on Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central was agreed to on January 27 or 28.
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then within a day or two after the combination of the Fox and St. Louis an agreement had been reached whereby you were to take over the other theatres?
A. At no time did we combine the operations of the theatres. And an agreement was reached for us to take over the management of the houses but they were not combined. All were to be operated separately and independently.

Q. Yes, and with Fanchon & Marco operating all five?
A. Yes, sir. They were to be operated by us if we got them.
Q. You did get them?
A. Yes, about six months later.
Q. Your bid was accepted about February 20?
A. It was subject to the approval of the court.
Q. The lease on the Ambassador and New Grand Central runs to the St. Louis Ambassador Company, Inc.?
A. Yes.
Q. And the leases of the Missouri theatre to the St. Louis Missouri Company, Inc.?
A. Yes.
Q. Do I understand that the operating control was merged with Fanchon & Marco furnishing the management for the operation of the three theatres?
A. Yes.
Mr. Hardy objected. Judge Moore: "I don't see what all this has to do with the case. Sustained."
Q. How many other theatres were showing pictures first-run in St. Louis then?

Moving in Circles, Says Judge

Mr. Hardy objected that all of this matter had been gone over and over again. Judge Moore sustained the objection, saying: "We have already spent more than two days on the testimony of this witness, much of that time being taken up by cross-examination. It appears to me that we are moving in circles and not making any progress. I don't see the materiality at this time. We have gone into these leases numerous times and at great length. The court has been very lenient and permitted considerable cross-examination that did not appear proper. The questions about contracts, names of pictures and length and places of their display may be very interesting, educational and instructive but I don't see the materiality at this time. This inquiry has gone too far afield and touched too many collateral matters. You have already gone entirely too far from the original issue. The court has purposely granted the greatest leeway, but you must follow a proper line of cross-examination." The court indicated that he did not look with favor upon a theory of defense that appeared to be based upon the contention that someone else had committed another conspiracy.

Attack Judge's Stand

When Judge Moore concluded his observations, Mr. Reed arose and made the objection that these remarks made in the presence of the jury were prejudicial to the interests of the defendants, saying: "I am sorry that I must object to the remarks of the court in the presence of the jury as highly prejudicial. We have some authorities to show we are entirely within the rules of cross-examination in every respect. I protest against the idea that we cannot show any circumstance affecting the acts of the defendants. The fact that some other person committed a crime may not be a proper defense. But the fact the other person committed a crime may be pertinent to the defense of the person on trial. You can show any act influencing the conduct or attitude of mind of the defendant.

"Do I understand the theory of this court to be that the defense may show any act of another affecting the conduct of the defendant if it is an innocent act, but that we cannot show it if it happens to be a crime? That's nonsense."

Judge Moore responded that he had made no such ruling.

Booking Records Up Next

At this point Mr. Wood took up the booking records of the Missouri, Ambassador, New Grand Central, Fox and St. Louis theatres. Mr. Hardy asked for and was granted permission to examine them before the cross-examination was resumed.

Wood asked if they were the booking records of the various theatres and Arthur responded they were.

Q. You testified the other day that with the exception of "The Belle of the 90's" all other pictures you had shown at the Ambassador theatre were "slough" pictures?
A. I think I did say that.
Q. Yes, and you said that slough pictures were something other than first-class pictures?
A. Yes.
Q. So slough pictures are not first-class?
A. Not in my opinion.
Q. Are there any intermediate classes of pictures between first class and slough?
A. Yes. There are lots of intermediate grades.
Q. So between July 21, 1934, and January 10, 1935, of all the pictures shown at the Ambassador theatre "The Belle of the 90s" was the only one that was first class?
A. Yes.
Q. Would you mind looking over this list to see whether you wish to modify that answer in any way? Wood handed Arthur a list of Ambassador bookings and he glanced through the list. He then said he wished to make some modifications.

Modifies Listing

He said that "One Night of Love" was a first class picture but that it had been moved into the Ambassador after running for four weeks at the Fox.

A. "Imitation of Life" is first class, though the results at the Ambassador did not justify that classification. The same answer goes for "White Parade."

ARGUE OVER VALUES OF PICTURES

Q. I don't want you to make a speech with each answer.

A. Well, I want to say what I said with the proper qualifications.

Q. Then you wouldn't classify any other pictures on that list as first class?

A. No, with the exceptions I have made. (He then repeated the names of the pictures.)

Q. What sort of pictures were shown at the Missouri?

A. Slough.

Q. All slough?

A. I would like to look at the list. (Wood handed it to him, and he examined the list of pictures shown at the Missouri before continuing with his answer.) "The Belle of the 90s" is the only one that is first class. Some others I might classify as a little above slough. But the "Belle of the 90s" was the only big picture on the list

Says " 'Handy Andy' Flopped"

Q. Would you call any on the Ambassador list as a big picture?

A. I would give the same designation to the "Belle of the 90s."

Q. You opened the Ambassador theatre with "Handy Andy." That was a Will Rogers picture, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say that it was second class; not first class and not slough?

A. "Handy Andy" flopped.

Q. What do you mean by slough picture?

A. I mean that it is a picture you would rather slough off and avoid running if you had a better picture with a greater box office appeal to show in place of it.

Q. Let's take "Of Human Bondage." Was it slough?

A. No. That was a piece of cheese. Its subject matter was such it should never have been shown.

Q. Didn't you advertise it to the public of St. Louis as one picture in a decade?

A. We did it erroneously on the advice of RKO.

Wood then asked if Arthur didn't know what kind of a picture "Of Human Bondage" was before he so advertised it.

Says He Saw It in New York

A. I saw it in New York, but the exact date I don't know. It was some time during its release.

Q. Well, it was released on July 20 and it was shown in the Ambassador on August 24, 1934?

Arthur then explained that pictures very often have very lengthy first run showings in New York City and this run is regarded as the release date.

Wood next took up a large Fanchon & Marco advertisement that appeared in the St. Louis newspaper and addressed to "Mr. and Mrs. St. Louis: Dear Friends," etc. That's very intimate isn't it?

A. Yes, too intimate. I am highly ashamed of that advertisement.

Q. Do you know how long "Of Human Bondage" played at the RKO Music Hall in New York City?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Who were the stars of that picture?

A. Leslie Howard and Bette Davis.

Q. What kind of an actor is Howard?

A. He is a very good actor. The same is true of Bette Davis. Both are high class.

DEFENSE WINS POINT ON FILM TESTIMONY

The defense won a point when by a ruling of Judge Moore on an objection of Ernest L. Wilkinson, counsel for Harry Arthur, the defendants will be permitted to seek new subpoenas on more specific grounds later to work in the evidence during its cross-examination of prosecution witnesses.

The subpoenas were asked to compel Mr. Arthur to produce all correspondence between his companies and RKO relative to the showing of pictures at the St. Louis theatre in the exhibition year 1933-34 when Famous Amusement Company operated the theatre.

Q. Do you know that the motion picture critics were generally agreed that "Of Human Bondage" was a fine picture?

A. No. I didn't read the criticisms.

Q. How about "The Gift of Gab" which opened at the Ambassador in October and was advertised on October 7 as the musical smash of the season. A Universal picture. Was "The Gift of Gab" the musical smash of the season?

A. No, sir! Far from it. We only told the public what the producers claimed for their pictures.

More Queries on Films

Q. "Great Expectation" was advertised by you as a magnificent picture; was it a magnificent picture?

A. The Universal cuts were used in the advertisement.

Q. Well, don't you screen pictures before they are shown?

A. Where that is possible, yes. But many times it is impossible to do so. We don't get the film until just before the show is to begin.

Q. So you don't tell the public your own opinion of the pictures?

A. If we did that, nobody would come to the shows.

Q. So you have been putting out false advertisements?

A. No. We have been putting out what the film companies told us about their pictures. Then the reviewers came in, looked at the picture and wrote what they thought of it and the public didn't know whether the picture was good or bad.

Q. The Missouri played "Chu, Chin, Chow." Was that the most lavish musical production ever witnessed on the screen?

A. It was a very lavish production, but I couldn't say whether it was the most lavish ever witnessed on the screen.

Q. Judge Moore: "I don't see the purpose of this line of testimony. It was not gone into on direct examination."

Wood: "Your honor, the witness said he couldn't operate these picture theatres without anything but slough pictures."

Arthur cut into the conversation to make some remarks on his own account to the effect that it was practice for the entire motion picture industry to use the same kind of advertisements as put out by Fanchon & Marco in St. Louis, and that if they would indict him for the Ambassador and Missouri ads they would have to indict the whole industry.

Objects to "Speeches to Jury"

Mr. Reed arose and announced that he objected to Arthur making speeches to the jury.

Q. You showed at the Missouri "Young and Beautiful" and the "Return of Chandu, the Magician." Were they knockouts?

A. I would say they were, but not in the way we intended the public to regard them. We were merely trying to get the public into the theatre to see them.

Q. The Missouri played "The Caravan." Was it slough?

A. Yes.

Q. Wasn't it a first class picture?

A. No, sir. Not according to the box office results.

Q. Well, you advertised that it was a picture that would "exalt, entrance and sweep one's soul to ecstasy." Did it do all that?

A. Fox said so.

Q. You never intended to stand behind the advertisements you ran?

A. Unfortunately the public thought we stood behind them.

Wood then handed the ad on "The Caravan" to the jury.

Hardy suggested that the jury be shown all of the ads that had been discussed.

Wood said he would do so if the judge didn't object to the time this would take.

Judge Moore: "Go ahead. Time seems to be immaterial."

The jurors then spent several minutes inspecting the ads.

Q. Getting back to "Handy Andy." Was it one of the finest pictures Rogers ever made?

A. Well the producers said so. And I believe that at the time they so regarded it.

Q. Then it was the producers who were responsible for the false advertising you put out to the public?

A. Well, the producers told us what they thought of their pictures and we use that in our ads.

Q. Well, it was false advertising?

A. Most of it was.

Cites Ad on Theatre Deal

Wood then took up a large advertisement that appeared in the St. Louis papers on August 5, 1934, announcing that Fanchon & Marco were about to take over the management of the Ambassador and Missouri. This ad was addressed to Mr. and Mrs. St. Louis as "Dear Friends" and stated how happy Fanchon & Marco were that they were about to become a necessary part in the lives of Mr. and Mrs. St. Louis, adding that they felt justified in making a clear statement of the manner in which they proposed to operate the houses. "And speaking of advertising. We know our only chance to win and keep your confidence is to tell the truth about each picture. Tell you what we honestly think of each picture, good, bad and indifferent."

Arthur admitted the company ran such an ad.

Q. Did you ever tell the truth in any ad of any of the pictures you classified as slough?

A. Yes, sir. On some. We accepted what the film companies told us about the picture and put it in the papers.

Q. You testified that the Grand Central was closed at the time you took it over to January 11, 1935.

DOUBLE FEATURES AND PRICES AIRED

Arthur said he didn't recall he had so testified.

Q. It was closed when you got it?

A. Yes.

Q. It had been closed for a long time?

A. No. It was not closed so long. I don't think it was closed when we leased it.

Q. Don't you know that after the construction of the St. Louis, the Fox and the Ambassador theatres the Grand Central was closed a large part of the time?

A. No, I thought it has been used as a slough house.

Q. You made no inquiry to see whether the St. Louis was open or not?

A. The St. Louis was closed in the Spring of 1933 and opened in the Fall of 1933.

Q. When it was operated it was operated at a loss in the fall of 1933?

A. The people who were operating it so informed me.

Q. The Fox had been operated at a loss for a long period of time before you leased it?

A. No. I wasn't told that.

Q. Didn't the receivers for that theatre tell you that?

A. The receivers were not putting out much information about their experience in operating the theatre.

Q. Well, didn't the receivers report to the circuit court that they had been continually losing since March, 1933, as one of the reasons why they desired permission to lease the theatre to you?

A. Didn't know that as a fact, but I assumed that they were.

Theatre Had Been Losing

Q. So, Mr. Arthur, when you took over the St. Louis theatre that theatre had been losing money?

A. Yes, for about six weeks.

Q. And when you took over the Fox Theatre it had been losing money without paying any rent?

A. I assume that what the receivers said was correct. However, the Fox theatre is a fine property, the most valuable motion picture theatre in St. Louis. It has a fine location. I would take it over tomorrow and it would make no difference whether some other person did or did not make money with it.

Q. What inquiry did you make whether the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central had been making money?

A. I was told they had been very highly profitable. Particularly the Ambassador. Mr. Skouras told me it was the finest theatre in St. Louis. He told me that dozens of times.

Q. Did you know that Skouras lost over $80,000 over a period of a little over a year with those houses?

(Objection by Hardy was sustained.)

Mr. Reed contended that this was permissible inasmuch as Arthur had testified that Skouras said the Ambassador was the finest theatre in St. Louis.

Judge Moore then sustained objections by Hardy to questions concerning Arthur's conversations with Harry Koplar.

Q. Did Koplar state that if you could acquire the three theatres you could compel all distributors of motion pictures to give you their pictures and dictate the terms to them?

A. No. That's silly because I knew different.

Wood: "I ask that the witness be instructed to answer the questions and not argue this law suit. I move that his comment be stricken and the jury be instructed to disregard it."

Judge Moore: "The motion to strike out is sustained and the jury will disregard it."

Q. Didn't he say that in a conversation at which you were present and at which Mr. and Mrs. Harry Singer were present?

A. No.

Q. What would your answer be if I eliminate Mrs. Singer?

A. The answer will still be no.

Q. Did you say to Koplar you would have the motion picture companies over a barrel?

A. No.

Q. Did Koplar say that?

A. No. I never discussed any such thing with Koplar.

Q. Never?

A. No. I had only one conversation with Koplar in St. Louis. All my other conversations were with him over the long distance telephone and if any other person heard what was said they must have listened in on the line. He was positive that he has never had any conversation with Koplar at which Mrs. Singer was present.

He added that he had only one conversation with Koplar about the theatres and that was in December, 1933, or January, 1934.

Q. When you took over the St. Louis theatre you showed two feature pictures and vaudeville on the stage?

A. Yes.

Q. The St. Louis is a fine motion picture theatre?

A. No, I would grade it as a fair theatre.

Q. Had double feature pictures and stage shows ever been shown together at any other first run motion picture theatre before that?

(Objection sustained.)

Q. What was the admission price?

(Objection sustained.)

Reed Objects to Ruling

Mr. Reed objected to this ruling, saying that on his direct examination the witness had testified he had lost money and gave the implication that he had lost money because he would not get first class pictures.

"The lower prices may be the reason he lost money," Reed continued. "And it may be the cause why the producers may not want to do business with them. We have the right to ask what are the occasions for the losses. The producers must take into consideration the kind of business that is being operated. A man who cuts prices and gets into a war may soon be losing money. And as the producers get a percentage of the profits on their pictures they have a direct interest in the kind of business a man is conducting. We claim that pictures were not denied for the purpose of injuring anyone."

Hardy cut in to remark that they were not trying a damage suit.

Reed: "Oh! I know it isn't a damage suit."

Judge Moore finally reversed himself once more and overruled Hardy's objections.

A recess was then taken until 2 p.m.

When Arthur resumed the witness stand, Wood asked if he had the picture contracts that had been asked for.

"I got most of them," said Arthur.

Wood then suggested that he go through the contracts and select what he desired to use. Hardy objected to the making of any tabulation.

Arthur stated that the contracts were private business secrets and some of the parties to them might object to giving out what was in the contracts. Hardy responded that it wasn't what Arthur wanted but what the government wanted that should be considered.

Judge Moore stated that any objection by Hardy should be properly presented to the court.

Wood then resumed his questioning:

Q. Had double feature pictures and stage shows together ever been shown before at any first run show in St. Louis?

A. I don't remember.

Q. What prices did you charge at the St. Louis?

A. Twenty-five cents, forty cents and fifty-five cents. We charged 25 cents in the afternoon and 40 and 55 cents at night.

Q. You say that the top price was 55 cents?

A. Yes sir. That's the information I had.

Seats 3,878

Q. How large is the St. Louis theatre; what's its seating capacity?

A. It has 3,878 seats.

Q. Didn't I understand you to say that when you were in the Warner Bros. offices on March 6, 1934, that Mr. Koplar was not interested with you in any way in the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres, that he was not interested in any way in those theatre properties?

(Objection sustained.)

Q. What is the fact? Was he or was he not interested in those properties?

(Objection sustained.)

Jim Reed then walked up to the bench with a transcript of Arthur's testimony on direct examination, and showed a passage to Judge Moore. The judge read and then remarked: "After examining the examination in chief I will reverse that ruling," and Arthur proceeded to answer.

A. Koplar was employed by me at the St. Louis and Fox theatres. In the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres he represented Dr. Probstein.

Q. His brother-in-law?

A. Yes.

Q. Snyder took in Dr. Probstein?

A. Yes.

Q. Through Koplar's influence?

A. I imagine so.

Q. Your organization gave it out to the world that Koplar was interested in the theatres?

A. He had been employed by me to help in the management of the theatres I mentioned.

Q. Your organization gave out to the world that he was one of your associates in these theatre properties?

A. I haven't given out anything to the world.

Hardy: "I don't think what he gave out to the world about Koplar has any bearing on this case. I don't believe it is material. There should be some restriction to this cross-examination. Otherwise we will be here for six months."

Defense counsel contended that Hardy had opened the door for the admission of the evidence to show Koplar's interest and activity.

BARS QUERIES ON CAPITAL SESSION

Judge Moore: "You opened up that subject and I think it is material."

Hardy: "We've gone into Koplar in the widest ramifications yesterday. Your honor has some discretion in this matter and I submit it ought to be exercised."

Wood: "The purpose of this cross-examination is very plain. This witness has undertaken to minimize Koplar's connection with these theatres. Yet he has given out publicity that magnified Koplar's connection. We have the right to ascertain whether the witness told the truth."

Judge Moore: "You opened up the subject of Koplar, Mr. Hardy."

Wood then questioned Arthur about an article that appeared in an issue of Variety under a Los Angeles, Cal., date line, and asked him whether his organization had not put out the article. The story appeared to be based on advices sent to Los Angeles by Koplar and touched on the deal for the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres.

The story says it emanated from Koplar.

Hardy Objects

Hardy objected to the introduction of the article contending that it was the rankest kind of hearsay, and that it would prove very injurious to the Government's case if everything that may come up is put in. "There is no way for us to meet it unless we have the man who wrote the article."

In the meantime Arthur had read the story.

Q. It has a Los Angeles date line?

Hardy interjected that the witness had read the article.

"Yes, the witness read it and he misread it. He failed to read something that was in it," Wood replied.

Hardy sought to answer, when Judge Moore cut him short, saying: "Mr. Hardy, make your objections instead of making speeches."

Hardy then made proper objection.

"Overruled," Judge Moore responded.

Q. Does it or does it not bear a Los Angeles date line?

Finally after some more oral sparring with Wood, Arthur admitted that it did.

Q. Were the facts stated in that article based on telegraphic advices from Koplar to someone in your organization?

A. Positively no.

Q. Well wasn't your company the only one with an office in Los Angeles?

A. No. All of the motion picture companies have offices in Los Angeles.

Q. Well, of all those interested with you in this deal yours was the only company interested in those theatre properties that had an office in Los Angeles?

A. That is correct.

More on Koplar

Q. Do I understand that Koplar on March 6 was an employe of yours and that his brother-in-law was a stockholder in the Ambassador and Missouri companies?

A. Yes.

Q. Who were the other stockholders in those companies?

A. Fanchon & Marco, Inc., Allen L. Snyder, Harry Greenman and Charles E. Kurtzman.

Q. How was the stock divided?

A. 50/105s to Fanchon & Marco, 25/105s to Allen L. Snyder, 25/105s to Dr. J. D. Probstein, 2½/105s to Charles Kurtzman and 2½/105s to Harry Greenman.

Q. Have you any financial interest in the outcome of this case?

A. If I don't get pictures I am finished financially. As a matter of fact I am about finished now.

"I'LL TAKE CARE OF MYSELF," SAYS JUDGE

Russell Hardy, prosecuting the case for the Government, who had been giving the defense counsel during cross-examination a taste of what he had experienced under the frequent interruptions of the attorneys for the defendants during the direct examination of Harry Arthur, was checked up by Judge Moore when he protested that the line of questioning by the defense was a colossal waste of time.

"I will take care of myself," Judge Moore said.

Q. If the government should win this case it would inure to your private gain and profit?

A. No, not at all. All I want is pictures to run my theatres.

Q. Well, you will benefit from the success of this suit?

A. If I get pictures I will.

Q. Well, then, you have a financial interest in the outcome of this case?

A. Well, if it means getting pictures I think I have.

Q. And you are trying to secure a conviction?

A. I am not trying to secure a conviction. I am here at the request of the Government. I am here to tell all of the facts and am telling them.

Q. Then you have a financial interest in the outcome of this case?

A. I think I have my very existence at stake. In fact I have been told that.

A. And you have also been told that if you secure a conviction in this case it would lay the foundation for a suit against the defendants for treble the damages you claim to have sustained?

A. I don't believe that I was told that.

Q. Well you know that is one of the provisions of the Sherman Act?

A. I know that to be the law, that you can sue at any time.

Q. You knew that it was the law when you and Leahy went down to Washington to see Mr. Hardy?

A. I knew it was the law when my lawyer told me.

Q. When was that?

A. After I had been down to the Department of Justice.

Q. How long ago did you first find it out?

A. I don't recollect just when. I had several conversations with him to learn where I was headed for and the possibilities of getting out. He told me that a damage suit would take years and years and years to try, and advised me to try and get pictures.

Q. And he told you also that if the Government got a conviction it would make out a damage suit for treble the damages you claim?

A. No, he didn't tell me that but I am certainly glad to hear it.

(This response caused considerable laughter throughout the court room, and the bailiff had to rap for order.)

Q. Did he tell you that the Government is really trying this case for you; that it is really trying to get triple damage for you?

Hardy objected to this question and Wood announced that he would frame it differently.

Q. Your lawyer never told you that when the Government tried this criminal case it was trying a case that would result almost automatically in an award to you for triple damages if a conviction is secured here?

A. No, sir, he did not. My lawyer always advised me to obtain a settlement and try and get pictures for the theatres.

Q. Who is your lawyer?

Wilkinson His Attorney

A. The only lawyer I have is Ernest L. Wilkinson of New York City.

Q. Did you ever talk about this anti-trust damage suit matter with Mr. Leahy?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Mr. Leahy appeared with you at that conference in the Plaza hotel in New York you told about the other day?

A. He appeared with me but he represented Allen L. Snyder. He also represents the receivers for the Fox theatre and represented them in August, 1933.

Q. Didn't Mr. Leahy threaten Mr. Depinet with the Sherman Act if he carried out the commitment to sell RKO pictures to Warner Bros.?

A. Mr. Leahy told Mr. Depinet that it was illegal and asked him if he realized the consequences of his actions. I believe that during the course of the discussion the Sherman Act was mentioned.

Q. How soon after that was it that you and Mr. Leahy went down to Washington to get this prosecution started?

Hardy's Objection Sustained

Hardy: We object to any testimony touching on what was told to the Attorney General of the United States by anyone, or who got this prosecution started. (Objection sustained.) Hardy added that every prosecutor had enjoyed the privilege not to expose anything as to who brought a case to him. It is the most ancient common law, hundreds of years old, he said.

Judge Moore: "It must be very ancient. I am not familiar with it, Mr. Hardy. I will withhold a ruling on it."

Counsel for the defense had argued that while what was told to the Attorney General might not be admissible they could show how soon it was after the New York hotel meeting with Depinet that Arthur and Leahy went down to Washington. Hardy finally withdrew his objection to that form of inquiry.

Arthur responded that it was a little more than two months after the meeting with Depinet.

Back to Koplar

Q. How long have you known Mr. Koplar?

A. I met him five or six years before I signed the St. Louis theatre lease with him. I didn't know him before that.

Q. Before you agreed to go into the deal to lease the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres did you make any investigation into the results of the operations of those theatres for the year or two preceding the signing of the leases?

A. No, I made no such investigation.

Q. You knew at the time when you had the conference with Abel Cary Thomas, Herman Starr and Gradwell Sears on March 6, 1934, that Harry Koplar had been very active in his hostility to Warner Bros. in St. Louis.

QUERIED ON KOPLAR—WARNER TILT

A. I never knew anything about it except that Koplar had lost the law suit.

Q. You never made any inquiry about that?

A. No.

Q. Did anyone ever tell you that it was a very bitter law suit?

A. No, I was not told that.

Q. Were you told that Koplar brought receivership suits against all of the Warner Bros. theatres in St. Louis?

A. I discussed it with only two persons. I was told that Koplar had cost the Warners $80,000. Sam Jeffries, local counsel for Warners told me that, but I understood from what Mr. Jeffries said that everything had been ironed out.

Q. Didn't you know that there had been a court record in that case censoring Koplar's conduct?

A. No, I didn't know that.

Q. Didn't you know that at the time of your conference with the Warner officials that Koplar had had trouble with Warner Bros.?

A. Yes, but Jeffries told me that it was all over and that everything was all right.

Q. You never made any inquiry into that?

A. No. I didn't know that Warner Bros. were the bidders for the theatres.

Q. Didn't you know that Warner Bros. had a large equity in the properties?

A. No. I thought Warner Bros. had lost everything they had in the property.

Q. You knew that there had been no foreclosure at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ask your lawyer about that?

A. No, I did not. I knew that the receivers had been appointed for the properties.

Thought Interest "Washed Up"

Q. Did you think that the appointment of a receiver terminated the interest of the original owners?

A. I thought their interest was all washed up as was all these watered stock.

Wood then started to ask Arthur something more about his knowledge of Koplar's troubles with the Warners at the time of the March 6 meeting, when Arthur volunteered: "All I know is that I went there to find out what the fight was about."

Q. Answer the questions I ask you.

A. Well if you would ask me questions that I could answer, instead of putting words in my mouth, I would be glad to answer.

Wood then appealed to Judge Moore to direct Arthur to answer questions and not argue, saying: "I don't need Mr. Arthur's assistance in conducting the trial of this case; if he'll quit wisecracking and answer my questions, we'll shorten this proceeding."

Arthur at the same time was trying to get the ear of the Judge to tell him just why he was objecting to Wood's questions.

"Shut up!" Wood shouted at Arthur and the witness did so.

Q. I will now ask you if Mr. Jeffries didn't tell you all about Warner Bros. troubles with Koplar in the Winter of 1931-32 in New York?

A. I wasn't in New York in the winter of 1931-32. I was in Los Angeles.

Q. When was it you were there in conference with some of the directors of the Metropolitan company?

RETORT COURTEOUS ON FILM VALUES

"So you don't tell the public your own opinion of pictures," Frederick Wood challenged Harry Arthur, after a verbal exchange over newspaper advertising wordage.

"If we did that, nobody would come to the shows," Mr. Arthur retorted.

A. In the summer of 1931, but Mr. Jeffries didn't mention it to me.

Q. Mr. Arthur, did you or your organization buy any of the bonds of the Central Properties Company while it was in the hands of the receivers?

(Hardy objected, contending that if they bought all of the bonds it would be relevant. The objection was overruled.)

Arthur replied that he had purchased $15,000 of the various different kinds of bonds that were out on the properties. And added that he may have made the purchase before the receivers were appointed.

Q. Is that all?

A. I think so.

Q. How about Marco?

A. I don't believe Marco ever bought a bond.

Q. Were your bonds deposited with the committee?

A. They were turned in and paid off.

Q. Did you make a profit on it?

A. Not yet.

This completed the cross-examination by Wood on behalf of Warner Brothers.

Gentry Takes Up Questioning

After a short recess, William R. Gentry of counsel for the Paramount companies took up the cross-examination.

A. You said your company bought the "Belle of the 90s" for exhibition at the Ambassador and Missouri theatres?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it a first class picture?

A. It was. We gauge our opinion by the results obtained with a picture.

Q. You state in your direct examination that on March 5, 1934, you had lunch in the Tavern Restaurant in New York; you will recall that was the day before the publication in the Film Daily and Motion Picture Daily of March 6, 1934, of the articles telling of a theatre war in St. Louis? You do recall that the day preceding those articles you were at the Tavern for lunch? Do you remember that afternoon calling up George Schaefer?

A. I called him a day or two before.

Q. Well, it must have been some time between February 20 and March 6?

A. Well I know that I left Chicago on February 20 or 21, and that I called up Schaefer after that. He added that there were three dates very vivid in his memory: February 20, when he signed the contract in Chicago; March 6 when he was at Warner Bros. offices and April 7 when he was at the Plaza hotel.

At this point an adjournment was taken until Monday. In the meantime the attorneys are to look into the legal authorities touching on the question of whether Mr. Arthur must tell what he told to Hardy when he went to Washington.

Ridder Tells AMPA Of Relief Problems

The problems of the Works Progress Administration, which he took over this week from General Hugh H. Johnson, as administrator, were discussed at last week's meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers by Victor Ridder, one of the publishers of the Staats-Zeitung.

His chief problem at the moment, Mr. Ridder said, was to get pay envelopes into the hands of those who need them. He promised there would be no more personalities involved in the conduct of the work. One of its important problems, he said, was to work out projects which can be finished before the end of the federal fiscal year in June.

In reply to the questions about jobless members of the association and approximately 750 former advance men and agents for the legitimate stage, Mr. Ridder said these groups were "comparatively small" and that he hoped to get around to them after some of the others had been cleared up. At present, he continued, he is trying to obtain a modification of the rule against giving relief work to more than one member of a family, so that family acts can be employed in theatre relief.

Anita Louise, screen star, also was introduced at the meeting, which was held in Jack Dempsey's restaurant. The entertainment consisted of a burlesque fight manager act put on by Leo Wibberman and a partner.

Cincinnati Operators Maintain Own Service

Headquarters of Operators' Local 327 in Cincinnati is now conducting a sound and maintenance service for all exhibitors on the basis of two regular monthly calls, in addition to as many emergency calls as is required, for a flat monthly rate of $15. A completely equipped sound truck is used in the service and parts, where required, are supplied at cost price.

The service is cooperative and not conducted for profit, Arthur H. Fix, president of the local, has explained, and the only financial objective is to break even. Mr. Fix also stated that the motive behind the service is to help operators become more proficient in their work and to create a better feeling of understanding between them and exhibitors.

Kenneth Pitt is in charge of the service and prior to his coming to Cincinnati he was division superintendent for Electrical Research Products, Inc., with headquarters in Atlanta.

Manhattan Moon

(Universal)

Comedy Drama

There are several elements in this picture that should prove helpful to showmen and permit them to display their talents for exploitation. There is music, Ricardo Cortez, the radio reputation of Dorothy Page, who has the leading feminine role, a supporting cast of well known players, and the whole picture is shot against the background of Broadway with its theatres and night clubs.

There are several thrill packed sequences, though one or two of them are not new. The comedy, of which there is quite enough, is capably handled.

Miss Page plays a dual role, another fact which might well be remembered in planning campaigns. Her singing here is better than in her previous pictures and she appears to be more at east before the camera.

Ricardo Cortez, with several recent successes, is the big name. He is cast as a suave, hard-boiled night club operator and the role fits him like a glove. Others in the cast besides Miss Page are Pinky Tomlin, Hugh O'Connell, Luis Alberni, Henry Armetta, Regis Toomey and Irving Bacon.

The direction keeps the action moving at a consistent pace and the photography is good.

The story tells of an imported French star who falls in love with a Manhattan night club operator after the double, whom she has hired to impersonate her in public, becomes involved with him.

Dan Moore is a big shot in New York's night life. He has worked his way up from the tenements to where he has everything but social position. Reggie Van Dorset, scion of a socially prominent family and a frequenter of Moore's club, has given Moore a bad check. To wipe the debt clear, Moore decides that Reggie shall introduce him to the "right" people. They go to a theatre and Moore falls instantly in love with Yvonne, elusive French star featured in the revue.

Moore decides to meet the star instead of Reggie's family and orders Reggie to arrange the introduction. Thinking Moore will be none the wiser, he substitutes Yvonne's double, Toots Malloy, who is in love with Eddie, a taxi driver. Reggie impresses her with the fact she must discourage Moore, which she does, and after the escapade she tells it all to Yvonne.

Yvonne, however, remembers that Moore owns the apartment in which she lives and ordered her to move because her singing annoyed him, so she tells Toots that in the future she will keep her own engagements. Instead of punishing Moore as she intended, she succumbs to his charm. Eddie, the taxi driver, who thinks that Toots, posing as Yvonne, is being untrue to him, goes to the night club where Moore is giving a party and accuses him of stealing his girl, exposing the whole plot to humiliate the owner. When Yvonne reneges on her promise to sing at the party, however, Moore becomes suspicious. The situation is all cleared up, however, when Yvonne realizes her love for Moore is stronger than her desire to humiliate him and she reveals her identity and sings her love song to Moore himself, while Toots and Eddie are reconciled.—BAEHLER, New York.

Hands Across the Table

(Paramount)

Comedy Romance

This is the kind of picture which, because little ballyhoo was given it during production stages, has not attracted much attention. Judging by the preview audience reaction, however, the situation is quite likely to be reversed upon presentation and in addition to becoming a widely talked about attraction, the show is potentially promising of exploding into a box office surprise. "Hands Across the Table," in appeal of story content, value of substantiating production features, quality of acting and class of direction technique, is of the stuff that makes such an assumption logical. Basically it's semi-sophisticated farce comedy romance geared to mass appeal. As such it includes the essentials which intrigue the intelligentsia and at the same time whip the common garden variety of picture fans into enthusiasm.

Marked by some of the smartest dialogue heard in a long time—human chatter that endows the many intimate situations with a peppy, punchy comedy vein—the show is a fast-moving adaptation of a typical Vina Delmar story. As such there's a continual atmosphere of risque daring to it, an entertainment and commercial quality of undoubted value which gives the yarn a unique, catchy verve. This quality has been so intelligently handled that it automatically debars any censorship tendency.

In the yarn Regi Allen (with a performance establishing comedy as Carole Lombard's popular forte) is a manicurist. Her dream is to marry a wad of dough. The possibility is right in her lap in the person of Allen Macklyn, a kindly disposed but crippled wealthy patron, but she cannot see it. Instead she goes on a wild goose chase seeking to trap Theodore Drew, 3rd, whose wealth is but a memory. Following a night of hectic revelry, Regi learns the truth, but as Ted has moved into her apartment to maintain his position, there isn't much she can do about it. They fall in love; Regi in a terrified sort of way and Ted legitimately. Their intimate association over a period of days and nights is packed to the hilt with fast and furious semi-racy fun. Highlights are Ted running around in his shorts; his giving a prospective suitor the quick bounce; the faked up telephone call from Bermuda to his fiancee, and the tucking in bed incident. In the end, however, as the fun pace is maintained effectively, Regi's avaricious illusions are shattered, as is Macklyn's roseate dream, when real love triumphs and the fate of coin tossing dictates that Ted get a job so the married couple can exist.

The material with which the picture deals, the personalities, Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray, whom it features together with the supporting cast; the prestige of writing, adapting and directing credits, should form the substance for a colorful interest-creating advance campaign. Word-of-mouth advertising, nevertheless, is the factor that probably will be most influential in bringing in business. Thus plans should be made to have the biggest possible audience present for the first performances and then rely upon their comment to carry the main load of follow-up advertising.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Stormy

(Universal)

Western

Properly handled, this picture is quite likely to show surprising results. Essentially, it is a different kind of western. While preserving the established formula of this type entertainment, it embellishes it with an engaging human interest drama. It tells an appealing story of youthful love; it also tells a story of a boy's love for a horse and the horse's almost human understanding and appreciation of his affection that gives the show an unusual character. While the picture is photographed against the beautiful backgrounds of the Painted Desert, it climaxes its drama with one of the most sensational wild horse stampedes ever seen.

In the story, Stormy, a half-starved lover of horses, is tossed off a freight train. Found and befriended by Trinidad, a kindly rancher, he becomes the central figure in a controvery involving Trinidad and his arrogant domineering brother, Deem. The train on which Stormy was riding is wrecked, the mare which he loved is killed, but Stormy rescues her colt. A bond of affection immediately is established between the two which, when the boy finds Kerry, Deem's daughter, caring for the colt, leads to romantic friendship between them.

The horse, Rex, is turned out on the range with Trinidad's herd, which Deem wants slaughtered in order to devote the pastures to cattle raising. Captured by Deem's henchman, Deem narrowly escapes death as he tried to Planning a roundup to rid the range forever of Rex and his wild horse mates, Kerry intervenes and her actions stampede the herd. The action is super-thrilling as hundreds of frenzied animals dash up the narrow canyon, threatening to grind Deem under their hoofs, until Stormy, mounted on Rex, makes an effort to save his enemy, only to be shot for his trouble. With the breath-taking stampede as a background the story moves to a smashing but happy ending.

Storm Over the Andes

(Universal)

Action Drama

Action is the keynote of this Jack Holt production. The story centers around Holt and presents him as a professional soldier aviator, who currently has hired himself to one of the belligerent factions in South America. Holt's attitude towards war, his superior officers and women is decidedly flippant. The time comes, however, when at a gay fiesta he falls in love with a chance acquaintance. His bitter disappointment when the chance acquaintance turns out to be the wife of Holt's immediate commanding officer, and the enmity of Holt's superior towards him as the result of this misunderstanding, is all straightened out after heroic jungle and air fighting ventures.

The name of Jack Holt stands for action and this picture allows him ample opportunity to prove it. Supporting players include Antonio Moreno as Major Tovar, commanding officer of the air base; Mona Barrie, Tovar's wife; Gene Lockhart, Holt's mechanic and the principal comedy relief of the picture, and Grant Withers, contestant with Holt for air laurels. The air fights are capably handled and a point to be emphasized in the selling campaign. Another item of interest is the locale, which is in the Gran Chaco territory in South America, scene of recent hostilities.

The plot is weak and leaves much to the imagination. The outcome of the war, one between Bolivia and Paraguay, is necessarily left in doubt.

Holt, soldier of fortune, joins Bolivia in the Gran Chaco war. Injured in an air engagement he is sent to a base hospital to recover. Irked at the enforced inactivity Holt leaves the hospital to mingle with the crowd outside, enjoying the annual fiesta. He meets Mona Barrie, wife of Moreno, unaware of her identity. Holt flirts with Mona and for the first time falls seriously in love.

Moreno arrives to fly Holt back to the air base. At Moreno's home Holt discovers Mona's identity. Holt promises never to see Mona again, but Moreno, who has overheard part of the conversation, is outraged, as he is well aware of Holt's reputation for philandering. On the way to the air base, Moreno tries to crash the airplane by freezing to the controls but Holt knocks him unconscious and succeeds in landing the plane without mishap.

Moreno, on a dangerous mission, is forced to bail out in the jungle. Holt rescues Moreno, they agree to patch up their differences and after some stirring air fights arrive back at the air base. Moreno and Mona are reunited and Holt, wounded, is flown to the hospital.—Mooney, New York.

The Guv'nor

(Gaumont-British)

Satirical Comedy

[To be released in America by GB Pictures under the title "Mister Hobo"]

George Arliss' second British picture is out of the rut both in theme and in its characterization. It is a satire of modern financial charlatanry and Arliss has the role of an old tramp who becomes involved in the schemes of an insolvent banker and, by a mixture of sheer unworldliness and naive cunning, brings them to naught.

The big appeal of the picture will be to the somewhat sophisticated public who can best appreciate the travesty of the type of business which lives on mahogany, plate glass and the gullibility of the general public, but for the mass there is a sufficiently emphasized note of sentiment. Arliss fans, as such, will find their idol as ever a polished actor and, in this case, one often content with the background. The old tramp's rags strike a new Arliss costume note, but let it be said that Arliss wears them as convincingly as he wore the decorations of Disraeli or Wellington; his "guv'nor" is a real man and a lovable one.

The story—previously filmed in France—is a clever one. An old tramp, with the humorously inappropriate name of Rothschild, falls with a fellow-poacher, into the hands of the police. The authorities get into touch with the simon-pure Rothschilds, who investigate the tramp's history, find he is harmless though unconnected with "the family," and give him a cheque in charity. The tramp presents the cheque at a bank and is accepted as an eccentric millionaire. The managing director, aware that the bank is in difficulties, sees an opportunity of exploiting the tramp's name and his simplicity, and persuades him to become president.

The banker, on the strength of a secret report showing a new lode of metal in a supposedly worthless mine, is plotting to buy the property for a song from its owners, a widow and daughter. Rothschild, in his tramp capacity, has been befriended by the girl, and tries to prevent her and her mother from selling control. The girl discovers his dual capacity and thinks him a swindler, and the mine is sold. Rothschild, however, using his name and bank position, goes in for a spot of hectic market manipulation and buys the tricksters' own holding company over their heads. Then he presents the lot to the girl and her fiance and takes to the road again.

It is in the incidents showing "Rothschild" in the unusual environment of big business that the humor is at its best; Arliss, without the slightest suggestion of overacting, gives the satire it's full flavor. He is well supported by Gene Gerrard as a fellow tramp, and Frank Cellier, well cast as the blustering banker-crook.

Arliss can be sold in a fresh type of characterization and the picture as a humorous exposure of Business, big to the bursting point. The Rothschild name will suggest plenty of ideas to the live showman.—Allan, London.

Dr. Socrates

(Warner Bros.)

Melodrama

Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak and Barton MacLane, the big three of "Scarface," are reunited here in a picture that fairly overflows with showmanship values into which an exhibitor can dive and come up with a number of angles for excellent exploitation campaigns.

The film has stars, a real story and author, and production values. The three principals again are playing roles created by the pen of W. R. Burnett, known for his "Dark Hazard" and "The Whole Town's Talking" as well as "Scarface." "Dr. Socrates" has the added value of having been published recently in serial form in Collier's Magazine.

The story is that of a neurasthenic surgeon who pits his scientific knowledge against the brute strength and guns of a gang of bank robbers, captures them and turns them over to the G-Men. The G-Men element of the picture thus exists, but in such an ephemeral form that its use in exploitation to be accurate must be of a secondary nature.

The production values are excellent. The background is a typical midwestern town and the characterizations on the part of the supporting cast, Robert Barrat, Helen Lowell and Raymond Brown in particular, greatly enhance the film's values.

Paul Muni's characterization of the young surgeon whose career was ruined by a nervous affliction is up to the standards he has set in "Black Fury" and "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang." Director William Dieterle never allows the action to lag.

Dr. Lee Caldwell, a famous surgeon whose career has been wrecked by death of his financee, has established an office in the town of Big Bend. Dr. Ginder, who controls the town, has made it impossible for Dr. Caldwell to get either patients or credit, and has nicknamed his younger rival Dr. Socrates because of his love for philosophical books.

Red Bastian, gang leader, and his girl, Muggsy, force their way into Dr. Socrates' home and at the point of a gun compel him to treat the bandit for a bullet wound.

Ben Suggs, the town's banker, then asks the young doctor to examine his daughter, Caroline, who is suffering from an imaginary ailment.

Bastian and his gang then decide to hold up Suggs' bank and on their way pick up a girl hitchhiker, Josephine Gray. The car roars up to the bank. Josephine escapes, but is shot as she runs away. Dr. Socrates takes her to his home for treatment.

As the Big Bend residents organize a squad of vigilantes, Bastian and his gang kidnap the young doctor and take him to their hideout to treat two wounded men. Lee recognizes the owner of the house where the gang is hiding, and when, on returning home, he discovers that during his absence Bastian has kidnaped Josephine, he notifies the sheriffs' office, where the G-Men are waiting, of the bandits' location.

Dr. Socrates then hurries to the hideout, convinces the gang chief and his men that they have been exposed to typhoid fever and that they must be inoculated. He gives each a hypodermic of morphine. He isn't quick enough, however, and the G-Men and vigilantes close in on the house and the gun battle starts.

Gradually the fire from the house ceases as the gangsters fall under the spell of the dope. Dr. Socrates' strategy thus is successful, the gang is captured and he and Josephine are rescued. As Big Bend's hero and most prominent physician, he and Josephine plan their wedding. —BAEHLER, New York.

The Passing of the Third Floor Back

(Gaumont-British)

Mystical Drama

This British production offers only one serious problem to the American exhibitor, and that is whether its English accent—largely low London—offers too big an obstacle to a given public. This apart, it is first class theatre material offering many opportunities for unusual exploitation and with a very definite appeal to church communities.

Jerome K. Jerome's play, toured by Sir Johnstone Forbes-Robertson for many years, was an infallible draw because of the cleverness with which it dramatized the Christ-Devil conflict in modern surroundings and dress without infringing censor rules against the introduction of sacred figures. The film has the same mystico-religious appeal and shows the same skill in the use of suggestion. Its acting is on a very high level, with a brilliant characterization by Frank Cellier as its outstanding feature, and there is definite and strong story value outside of theme appeal.

To a London boarding house filled with the usual miscellany of inmates, comes a mysterious stranger, gentle and soft-spoken, who begins to exercise a strange influence over his fellow guests, chief of whom are a wealthy speculative builder, a penniless middle-aged couple who are willing to sell their pretty daughter to the builder, a frustrated spinster, an embittered musician, a young artist in love with the girl, and an elderly woman snob. The landlady is a money-grasping shrew who torments the overworked maidservant, engaged cheaply from a prison school.

The stranger takes all the guests on a holiday trip on a river steamer. His influence is felt by all; the girl's father decides to break off his daughter's engagement to the builder, the artist and musician determine to abandon the prostitution of their talent, the spinster gallantly plunges into the river and rescues the servant girl from drowning.

Effective and powerful allegory and realistic as a study of overriding human impulses, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," in any district in which it is usable, is definitely a picture to be handled in a very special way. It is a case where the interest of community figures, prominent members of the churches and publicists can be excited and where serious debate can be created as to the exact meaning of the origin of the Stranger and in regard to the clash of the good and evil principles in modern life. There need be no doubts of its screen qualities; Conrad Veidt, Frank Cellier, Mary Clare and Beatrice Lehman, to mention only four of a fine company, act with real brilliance. —ALLAN, London.

Produced and distributed by Gaumont-British. Directed by Berthold Viertel. From the play by Jerome K. Jerome. Screen play by Michael Hogan and Alma Reville. Camera, Curt Courant. Sound, F. McNally. Running time, 90 minutes. "G."

Melody Trail

(Republic)

Western

Showmen should rejoice in the prospects offered by this, the latest of the Gene Autry series of musical westerns, because it is packed with those elements that allow them to spread out in preparing their campaigns.

There is not only the usual amount of hard riding, fighting, shooting and cattle rustling found in this type film, but the added popularity of the star, because of his radio reputation as a singer of cowboy ballads, is one of the picture's extra assets. Smiley Burnette, co-featured with Autry over the radio networks, has a similar part here, with excellent handling of what comedy he has.

There are several novel twists with which to increase audience interest.

Gene Autry, nationally famous radio star, has been engaged to entertain the patrons at a large rodeo and for extra excitement he enters the broncho riding championship event. He is matched against Matt Kirby, foreman of the ranch belonging to Timothy Thomas, whose daughter, Millicent, has attracted Gene. The singer wins the $1,000 prize money. While he and his pal, Frog, are sleeping the money is stolen by Black Frantz, a gypsy.

Millicent, in the meantime, has persuaded her father to hire girl cowhands to replace those fired by Kirby for attending the rodeo against orders. In the meantime, when Millicent and her father start home for their ranch, their dog is left behind in town and on his way home the animal stops off at a gypsy camp, picks up Black Frantz's baby and carries it to Millicent, who then tries to locate its parents.

Gene gets a job as cook on the Thomas ranch in order to be near Millicent, but fears he has been following the wrong trail when he assumes the gypsy baby to be hers.

Matt Kirby and the discharged cowhands drive off the Thomas herd for revenge and Thomas and his daughter go to town for the sheriff, leaving Gene and Frog to mind the baby. Frantz comes for the child and Gene, thinking it to be Millicent's and that the gypsy is a kidnaper, gives chase. The gypsy thinks the cowboy is after the stolen money and turns it over. On the way back home Gene discovers the herd and rounds up all the fired cowboys and Kirby, their leader. Then he persuades Thomas to take them back on the condition they marry the girls they are displacing. A group wedding is planned and when Gene discovers he is mistaken about the baby he and Millicent patch up everything and join in on the ceremony.—BAEHLER, New York.

Death from a Distance

(Chesterfield)

Mystery

Aided by good direction, production values and character portrayals, this pictures moves along at a lively clip. It isn't a pretentious picture, by any means, and the comedy falls quite flat at times, but the basic idea behind the story, one that deals of astronomy, is novel and should prove a good hook on which showmen can hang their exploitation campaigns.

That particular element on which the story depends appears to have been suggested by the opening of the World's Fair in Chicago by light rays from the star Arcturus, something on which exhibitors should be able to capitalize.

The cast lacks outstanding marquee names, but those featured should not prove entirely unfamiliar to most audiences. Russell Hopton, Lola Lane and George Marion, Sr., are featured.

While a select invitation audience is listening to a lecture on stars at the Trowbridge Planetarium by the eminent Professor Einfeld, the guests are startled by a pistol shot. When the lights go on, Dr. Stone, a wealthy drug manufacturer is found dead. Lieutenant Mallory of the homicide squad is summoned with his crew of investigators.

Witnesses disagree as to where the shot was fired from, but it is finally decided it came from the back of the room. Kay Palmer, reporter, is present at the killing, having been sent to cover the lecture by her paper. She is delighted at having an exclusive story, but furious at Mallory, who refuses to allow her to phone her newspaper.

As a consequence, when she does get past Mallory she writes a vitriolic version of the happenings at the observatory, hinting at the inefficiency of the police. Her paper continues the scathing attacks as Mallory fails to find the murderer and the district attorney's office reprimands the detective.

Mallory has been working on the murder quietly, however, and is afraid to make his accusations too quickly because several suspects are being watched.

In the meantime Kay's articles have endangered the life of the Professor, and the girl, in trying to right the wrong she has done, realizes that Mallory is miles ahead of her in crime detection. They then combine forces and, working along with the Professor in a novel and smashing finish, capture the real killer. The romance, which has started between the detective and the reporter, blossoms out into full bloom.—BAEHLER, New York.

For Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht, the authors, carved their play from the authentic stuff of history . . . Here is San Francisco of the '49ers, city of dreams, violent, audacious, misted in fog, lifting itself from the mud to the stars.

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

RENDEZVOUS

MGM

In advance stages this production looks like something that will open doors to new and powerful interest creating showmanship. The ingredients necessary are amply provided. For its fundamental motivating theme it utilizes a subject, the screen entertainment value of which has been hardly scratched, the activities of the cryptographic bureau—that department of the U. S. Secret Service which was entrusted with the coding and decoding of friendly and enemy cipher messages during the World War. In comedy romantic love interest contrast, it follows the formula so effectively established in "The Thin Man."

The story, which, authentically and for the first time, gives an insight into the workings of the Cryptography Bureau, is by Major Herbert O. Yardley, who was head of the department during the war period. His writings as appearing in novel form as well as serially in Saturday Evening Post and Liberty, as well as recent radio broadcasts, have already interested the public in the subject. Direction is by William K. Howard, who made "Evelyn Prentice," William Powell's first picture after "Thin Man," also "The President Vanishes" and "Vanessa."

With the starring of William Powell, last in "Star of Midnight" and "Escapade," the featured lead opposite him which carries the comedy romance interest is occupied by Rosalind Russell, seen previously with him in "Evelyn Prentice" and also featured in "Reckless" and "China Seas." Other important players are Binnie Barnes, a luminary of several Universal pictures; Cesar Romero, currently in "Snatched"; Lionel Atwill and Mickey Rooney, currently in "Midsummer Night's Dream." Supporting players of name value are Samuel Hinds, Henry Stephenson, Frank Reicher, Charles Grapewin and Sterling Holloway. Minor roles are filled by Leonard Mudie, Howard Hickman and Charles Trowbridge.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY

20th-Century-Fox

A topical feature, motivated by a crime that recently made headlines in the nation's newspapers, there is much in this to whet showmanship imagination. The literal meaning of the title tells the story, a kidnaping case that serves as the basis for a thrilling, action drama of the most sinister menace to human happiness. The cast contains names that permit exhibitors wide latitude in the exploitation of personality values. The author, Kubec Glasmon, wrote one of the most vivid of the first gangsters, "The Public Enemy." He collaborated with Henry Lehrman on the screen play. Production is directed by George Marshall, recently credited with "Life Begins at Forty" and "In Old Kentucky." It is being produced by Darryl Zanuck, who during his stay at Warner Bros. first popularized this vivid character of entertainment.

The story is a theatrical adaptation of the recent Weyerhauser kidnaping. As it concentrates on the suspense and drama of that incident, it develops a romantic angle concerning a young married couple and their baby who become the unexpected prisoners of the criminals. As the Government agencies enter to set a trap with the serial numbers on bills, which results in the kidnapers' apprehension, the yarn develops an exciting man-hunt character which precedes an uniquely contrived suspense filled climax that should thrill every human emotion and sympathy.

Cesar Romero and Bruce Cabot, who was last seen in "Let 'Em Have It," are the super criminals. Rochelle Hudson, whose performances in "Curly Top" and the forthcoming "Way Down East" have won her much favorable prestige, shares the romantic angles with Edward Norris, a newcomer previously seen in "Queen Christina." Comedy is contributed by the two gangster henchmen, Warren Hymer and Edward Brophy, currently outstanding in "Remember Last Night." Supporting players listed are Herbert Rawlinson, Robert Gleckler, William Davidson, Charles Wilson, Frank Conroy, Edythe Elliott, William Benedict and Orrin Burke.

COUNTRY BOY

(Tentative Title)

Warner

In character this story is a character drama. It's the story of a man who rises from the status of laborer to an important executive position in a great steel works. It's made vividly dramatic as, in a human natural sort of way, it details the career of a man who carelessly or innocently lets success go to his head as he seems to forget his old pals of the sweating toil ranks to take on a thin veneer of sham aristocracy. Punch is added by the conspiring activities of a jealous pair who, in making a heel of the hero, only serve to set the stage for a smashing sensational reversal to natural form that climaxes the production in a suspense packed finale.

The story is an original by Dawn Powell, with screen play by Bertram Milhauser and directed by William McGann.

In the picture the lead role is taken by Barton MacLane, who leaped into audience notice by his graphic portrayal of the heavy in "Black Fury" with Paul Muni, and subsequently has been seen in several similar roles, most recently exhibiting a comedy flair as a gangster in "Page Miss Glory." He is supported by Dorothy Peterson, as his wife; Mary Astor and John Eldredge, a conniving pair who team to strew MacLane's path with as much broken glass and rocks as possible; Joseph Crehan and John Qualen, a couple of loyal pals who refuse to permit the chimera of success to alter their estimation of their old co-worker; Joseph King, Joe Sawyer, Graig Reynolds and Florence Fair.

The story has a powerful interest gripping character. As it pictures the workings inside a steel mill and also the social domestic aspirations of the hero and his enemies, it devotes itself to elements that have proved their entertainment and showmanship worth.

HUSK

Radio

This is the story of a man who was afraid. As it binds within itself the elements of drama, dangerous adventure and romantic love interest that make for a well balanced entertainment feature, it's the story of a cop who quit, turned yellow, if you please, but when thrown into a situation that meant his life or a criminal's, met it with a brand of courage and daring that only those who fear greatly can know.

The yarn is an original by Thomas Walsh, with screen play by Rian James and direction by James Flood. Modern and semi-tropical in theme, it plunges right into the exciting activities that go to make up the ordinary daily routine of almost every policeman in the land. In a way, it heroizes the flatfoot who more often than not is satirized and ridiculed to make screen entertainment. As such it affords a favorable contact possibility with local police departments.

Entirely cops and robbers in its theatrical accompaniment, the production is a unique character drama in which the power of love leads a man to find himself. As it concentrates on the effects of fear on a man, it also tells an appealing human interest love story. Developing its climax, it creates an atmosphere of suspense and foreboding that should have audiences on edge in dramatic, action-saturated suspense.

Preston Foster, currently featured in "Last Days of Pompeii," plays the title role. Jane Wyatt, a newcomer, accounts for the inspiring romantic love interest. Other players to be seen include James Gleason, now in "Hot Tip," Arthur Hohl, John Arledge, Jane Darwell, Moroni Olsen, Mischa Auer, Harold Huber, Christian Rub, Hattie McDaniels and Charles Wilson, in roles characteristic of their screen personalities.

CORONADO

Paramount

Comedy with music is the tune to which this production moves. The idea of it in its straight story trend, and one which is laden with showmanship significance, is that of two hard-headed, stiff-necked fathers trying to direct their offsprings' romantic destinies. With a lot that tends to mix up everything intervening, the dads are confounded and the real lovers, neither one of whom suspects who the other really is, get together.

The yarn which has for its locale Coronado Beach, exclusive southern California playground of the elite, is an original screen play by David Boehm, directed by Norman McLeod, whose specialty in view of previous credits is comedy. Music and lyrics are by Richard Whiting and Sam Coslow.

The leads are quite new to picture audiences. Johnny Downs, who is one angle to the romantic situation, was previously seen in "Virginia Judge," while Betty Burgess is entirely new. A promising personality, who seems to have more than the usual amount of "it" quality which attracts attention, she is also an accomplished vocalist and sings several numbers. Another screen newcomer presented is Eddie Duchin, orchestra leader, with whom the public has become familiar through his night club engagements and radio broadcast work. The supporting cast, however, lists many well-known screen names. Berton Churchill and Leon Errol are presented as the respective fathers, with Jack Haley, Alice White and Andy Devine featured in the comedy contrast roles. Other players to be seen are Jameson Thomas, Nella Walker, James Burke, James Carson, Jacqueline Wells and Guy Rennie.

Youthful in spirit, the production has a potential appeal to the more youthful of audience contingents which dictates that an exploitation campaign seeking to direct the utmost enthusiasm among this group should be given consideration. In this instance, the name of Duchin and his band should be given much attention.

100 CITIES ON NEW MPPDA "GOOD WILL" TOUR FOR NEW PRODUCT

Bureau for the Evaluation of Films Is Formed by Kansas City Churches, after Forum Urges Selection by Parents

Continuing extensive public relations contacts in the field which were inaugurated last year, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America is sending representatives into key cities throughout the country to gather information for the Hays office files and at the same time to create goodwill for the current crop of pictures. About 100 cities in every film distribution territory are to be covered.

In conferring with newspaper critics and editors, film men, leading exhibitors, civic and business leaders, heads of religious groups and others, the MPPDA envoys are obtaining a cross-section of public reaction with regard to films, the industry and the Hays office activities generally. The work includes also the stimulation of goodwill for the industry and the promotion of public opinion for better pictures.

No definite plan is followed in making these contacts, and no campaign of promotion as such is underway, but the MPPDA directors feel it is a valuable activity in behalf of the industry. The results of the surveys are held confidential, available only to the MPPDA staff and to the organization's directors.

Preparing for Tour

Lupton H. Wilkinson, an assistant to Will H. Hays and in charge of public information on the West Coast, has been at the New York offices preparatory to starting a tour of the South following a week's vacation on which he left last Friday. In his absence Tom Pettey of the New York public information department is substituting for him in Hollywood, and on Mr. Wilkinson's return Mr. Pettey will go on a similar mission. Mr. Wilkinson plans to contact 16 key cities in the South, and later will probably resume his field trips.

John Boettiger, special assistant to Mr. Hays, recently completed a coast-to-coast trip in which he contacted eight principal cities en route to Los Angeles.

An important public relations function of the MPPDA is the contacts with churches and religious groups being conducted by the Rev. Irving E. Deer, a national church leader, who resigned as executive secretary of the Kansas City Council of Churches to take his present position in the public relations department under Carl E. Milliken.

Asks Selective Attitude

Primarily Mr. Deer's work is to present a picture to church groups of the MPPDA activities and to answer criticisms commonly expressed among churches and reformers against the industry and the Hays office. Mr. Deer has been addressing audiences in church auditoriums and groups of ministers and civic organizations in many sections of the United States.

One of Mr. Deer's suggestions, which he carried out himself while with the Council of Churches in Kansas City, is that churches can help to bring about a higher standard of motion pictures by stimulating a more discriminating attitude toward films. Mr. Deer's activity in Kansas City embodied the creation of an enlightened view of films and the industry among ministers and church members. He was responsible for the creation of a motion picture bureau in conjunction with the Council of Churches whose function was to maintain a file of reviews on the basis of which an evaluation of current films could be made. Thus, church members or groups could obtain information on films such as their suitability for the family by contacting the Council of Churches.

Forum at Kansas City

Just prior to joining the MPPDA, Mr. Deer conducted a forum on motion pictures over a period of five weeks as part of a project in adult education of the Kansas City Presbytery. Some of the conclusions of the discussion were:

"As a result of our discussions we have come to the conclusion that censorship, either local or state, is of little if any value in producing better pictures. Federal censorship at the point of production might help some. However, we believe that the most objectionable features in motion pictures are to be found in the essential attitude toward life, the fundamental spirit of the story and its portrayal. We believe that in this field the producers themselves can accomplish the largest results, and that they should be held responsible for their product.

Urges Greater Discretion

"We believe that:

"1. Parents should exercise far more discretion in the selection of pictures which their children see.

"2. Parents should accompany their children to the movies, and in conversation correct any erroneous views or attitudes toward life that might be shown in the picture.

"3. More emphasis should be put on educational measures to give people greater ability to judge pictures.

"4. Churches should adopt some method by which their members might have more accurate information concerning particular pictures shown in the community.

"5. The Kansas City Council of Churches should be commended for its plan to make available to church people the best information regarding the qualities of motion pictures, but suggest that some more aggressive method be adopted than merely having the information available when asked for. We suggest that if possible some more vigorous plan of disseminating this information be adopted, and that the ministers and parent-teachers' associations be encouraged to use this service.

"6. We should not deceive ourselves into a thoughtless acceptance of any ready-made short-cut in the journey toward better films, but should address ourselves to the long and laborious task of raising the standard of public taste, and through our church organizations give voice to the demand for better pictures as rapidly as the demand is created."

Cullman Planning Roxy Reorganizing

Howard S. Cullman, operating trustee of the Roxy in New York, and Sydney S. Cohen, an advisor on the bondholders' committee, constitute one of seven groups understood to have formulated reorganization plans for Roxy Theatres Corporation, rehabilitation of which may be undertaken early in 1936.

Meanwhile an application for an $800,000 loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitted several months ago, still is pending in Washington.

When Mr. Cullman was appointed by the federal court as operating receiver for the Roxy, on Dec. 15, 1932, he recalled this week, "it was definitely suggested to the court that it would be cheaper to close the house and lose $150,000 a year than to keep operating at substantial weekly losses."

Mr. Cullman went on to say that he had applied "business principles" to the Roxy, the keynote of which was the radical trimming of the budget which had been well in excess of $40,000 weekly. In the first year Mr. Cullman was receiver the average weekly gross at the house was $23,830.

This week he announced that since June 13, 1934, the period during which the Roxy has been operating under Section 77-B, operating earnings have been more than $200,000.

Mr. Cullman also credited revision of admission scales to meet the demands of a bargain hunting public, consistent but flexible management, and aggressive showmanship as contributing factors in the process of bringing the Roxy out of the red.

Columbia Pictures Sued On Grace Moore Film

A suit to restrain Columbia Pictures Corporation from continuing to exhibit "Love Me Forever," starring Grace Moore, has been filed in the supreme court of Manhattan by James Whittaker, who alleges that the film is based on a scenario written by him called "The Dove." Victor Schertzinger, author of the picture, is also listed as a defendant.

Mr. Whittaker, who alleges that he already has been damaged to the extent of $50,000 by the showing of the pictures, declares that he wrote "The Dove" in May, 1931. He says that early that year he was with RKO Radio when Mr. Schertzinger was employed there and he further alleges that it was then that Mr. Schertzinger became acquainted with the story.

The defendants deny that their picture is similar to Mr. Whittaker's story or was taken from it, but the complaint charges that the picture "uses in some cases substantially the same characters, set-up, business and props."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

MAJOR CHANGE AT EVERY STUDIO IN YEAR
200 DADS AND SONS MEET FOR FROLIC
MANY STARS OF YESTERYEAR RETURNING
SEVEN FILMS STARTED, THREE ARE FINISHED

STEADY flow of big pictures continues undisturbed, though every studio in Hollywood has seen a major change of personel or of control in the past year.

MGM and Warner-First National are the two least affected, though David O. Selznick has left MGM, and it was little over a year ago that Darryl Zanuck withdrew from Warner to form Twentieth Century with Joseph Schenck of United Artists.

Now Winfield Sheehan, so long the iron hand in control of Fox, is momentarily inactive. Jesse Lasky has withdrawn from the Fox fold. Mr. Schenck has withdrawn from United Artists, and, with Zanuck and Sidney R. Kent, is operating the new Twentieth Century-Fox.

Changes and More Changes

United Artists is springing to new activity with greater energy than it has demonstrated in years, with Charlie Chaplin announcing productions other than his own starring films, Samuel Goldwyn increasing production, Selznick International announcing six pictures with impressive financial backing, and the newly formed Pickford-Lasky unit preparing more specials. In addition, it is expected that Pioneer, after finishing the contracted two Technicolor features for RKO-Radio release, will swing into heavy production for United Artists.

Merian C. Cooper, once chief at RKO Radio studios, now is with Pioneer. Kenneth Macgowan, one of the ace RKO Radio producers during five different administrations of that studio, is in a top production spot at Twentieth Century-Fox. And, as this goes to press, Hollywood circles are wondering whether there will be any changes in RKO Radio now that Floyd B. Odlum's Atlas Corporation has acquired a sizeable slice of RCA's holdings in RKO.

Ernst Lubitsch succeeded Emanuel Cohen as chief of all production at Paramount.

Sam Briskin's new affiliation is awaited.

Walter Wanger has set up his own production unit for Paramount release.

The signing of David Loew by Hal Roach indicates major developments in the feature and financial program of the veteran comedy producer.

Fred S. Meyer has succeeded Frank Mastroly as general manager at Universal, with Carl Laemmle, Jr., in and out of the top production spot.

In the past year Monogram combined with M. H. Hoffman to form Republic, and very shortly thereafter Nat Levine threw his Mascot pictures in with them, creating one of the strongest groupings of independent producers the town has known.

Fathers and Sons Meet

Two hundred studio personalities and their boys met last Sunday at the Uplifters Ranch for the second Fathers and Sons Breakfast. The first was held a year ago at the invitation of Sol Lesser. Now a permanent organization is being considered.

Charles Irwin did the master-of-ceremony stunt and introduced as speakers Dr. A. H. Giannini, Joe E. Brown, Mr. Lesser, Jack L. Warner and Freddie Bartholomew, who represented for the sons. Comedy was provided by Chic Sale, Taylor Holmes and Vince Barnett, who tried to pass off 330-pound Bill Casper as his little boy.

"The Great Hollywood Merger," a sketch written and acted by a group of the sons, had Bud Lesser, Jack Warner, Jr., Jack Stanley, Art Lewis, John Rogers, Dick Landau and little Bobby Breen as "Junior, Jr." The six-year-old twins of Charles Starrett did a realistic job as the fighting sons.

In a baseball game the Pops won, 15 to 12½, with the help of Joe E. Brown's coaching and Joe Rapf's umpiring. Bobby Breen made the half-point score. Jack Warner, pater, was home-run king, Mr. Briskin twirled fancifully and Mr. Wurtzel climbed trees chasing fouls.

The honorary committee included Joseph I. Breen, Briskin, Brown, Lesser, Rapf, Warner, Wurtzel, Henry Ginsberg, James Gleason, Alfred E. Green, Jean Hersholt, Henry Herzbrun, Al Kaufman, Jesse L. Lasky, Cliff Reid, Hal Roach, Charles R. Rogers, Edwin Schallert, B. P. Schulberg and Edward Small.

The Return Parade

Many players whose names once blazoned across marquees are coming out of retirement to play roles in current productions. The list, which is growing every day, now includes Francis Ford, Jack Mulhall, Clara Kimball Young, Lois Wilson, Pauline Frederick, Nigel de Brulier, Pat O'Malley, Monte Blue, Stuart Holmes and others. The new theory is that an artist who always has given a good performance will be welcome any time on any screen.

Directors, too, have been returning to work after long absences. In the last few months, George Marshall, Alan Crosland, Fred Niblo have picked up their megaphones, and Marshall and Crosland already have turned in creditable productions.

Changes in the Paramount studio personnel continue. Walter Quinlan, former head of the electrical department at Fox, has accepted a similar position at Paramount, and O. C. Stratton, also formerly of Fox, has become head of the property department. . . . Following a special meeting of local independent theatre owners on Southern California coin giveaways the ITO appointed a committee to work toward total elimination of the chance games. Fox West Coast and Warner Brothers are continuing to install giveaways in their circuits. . . . The Better Business Bureau here has been campaigning against giveaways for the last two weeks through radio broadcasts. . . . Keith Johnson, former assistant to J. J. Sullivan, FWC film buyer, has been made sales manager of Principal Pictures by Sol Lesser. He succeeds Louis Hyman, who has joined Far West Exchanges. . . . H. J. Yates and W. Ray Johnston have gone to New York. J. R. McDonough likewise planed East.

Seven Pictures Start

As seven new pictures went into work, Paramount was the only studio to start two features. Only three productions were completed.

For its more important feature, Paramount started "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," to be made in color and to feature Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney, Fred MacMurray, Fred Stone, Raymond Walburn, Fuzzy Knight, Edward Ellis, Beulah Bondi, Spanky MacFarland and many others. Henry Hathaway will direct. In the second feature to go, "Drift Fence," a Zane Grey story, the cast will include Larry Buster Crabbe, Katherine DeMille, Glenn Erickson and Benny Baker. Otto Lovering is directing.

At Roach Studio "The Bohemian Girl" started. With Laurel and Hardy featured, the cast includes Jacqueline Wells, Antonio Moreno, Mae Busch, Jimmy Finlayson and Darla Hood. James W. Horne is directing.

Twentieth Century-Fox started "Professional Soldier." The cast lists Victor MacLaglen, Gloria Stewart, Freddie Bartholomew, Walter Kingsford, Lumsden Hare, John Whalen and Henry De Cordoba. Tay Garnett is directing.

With James Cagney and Pat O'Brien teamed in the leads, Warner Bros. put "Ceiling Zero" in the work. The supporting cast includes June Travis, Stuart Erwin, Henry Wadsworth, Craig Reynolds, Richard Purcell and Robert Light. Howard Hawks is directing.

Universal's contribution to the new work is "Sunset Power," a Buck Jones feature. Helen Splaine, Charles Middleton, Donald Kirk and Ben Corbett are listed in the supporting cast. Ray Taylor is directing.

Last of the newly started features is "Frisco Waterfront," a Mascot production for Republic release. The cast is headed by Ben Lyon, Helen Twelvetrees, Rod LaRocque and Russell Hopton. Arthur Lubin is directing.

Three Films Completed

Mascot finished "$1,000 a Minute," directed by Aubrey Scotto. The cast features Roger Pryor and Leila Hyams, supported by Sterling Holloway, Edward Brophy, Edgar Kennedy, Lee Phelps, Fern Emmett, Herman Bing, Purnell Pratt, Arthur Hoyt and Lloyd Whitlock.

"Buccaneer" was completed by Twentieth-Fox. The cast presents Claire Trevor, Kent Taylor, Paul Kelly, Pauline Frederick, Helen Wood, Colin Tapley, Henry Kolker, Frank Dawson and Thomas Beck. George Archainbaud directed.

Warner Brothers finished "Meet the Duchess." In this, Warren William, Dolores De Rio, Viva Tattersal, Louise Fazenda, Herb Mundin and Olin Howard will be seen.

TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK QUESTION NO. 287.—This question, from J. L. Tompkins, Kansas City, Mo., is of such wide interest that I shall ask no other question this week, but will attempt to have the engineers of various representative sound companies set forth their ideas. Mr. Tompkins writes: "I have good reasons to believe your Bluebook School is very widely read by not only projectionists but also by theatre managers and many exhibitors. May I therefore have the privilege of submitting this question as one of the series you now are running: Disregarding the large, deluxe theatres, what points are for and against, first, the large, elaborate and more costly sound equipments for theatres of moderate and small seating capacity and, second, for and against the smaller, less elaborate and hence less costly equipments?"

Answer to Question No. 281

Bluebook School Question No. 281 was: (A) What in your opinion is the most frequent cause of trouble in the projection room? (That is to say, is it most frequently due to mechanical or electrical failure, or to some detail overlooked by the projectionist?

The replies to this one were woefully few. Don't quite know what happened, but less than 200 were received, and but few discussed the question very well. G. E. Doe says: "This is a difficult question to answer for the reason that much would depend upon the excellence of both sound and visual projection equipments, and while visual equipments are in the main much the same, sound equipments vary through a wide circle, from the very best that can be made to those in which cheapness is the ruling factor.

"I believe it may be assumed that by far the greater amount of trouble has its seat in electric equipments, for two reasons. First, there are many more of them in a projection room than there are mechanical apparatuses. Second, many electrical equipments have need for very fine adjustments in some of their parts, whereas in mechanical apparatus there is nothing subject to very fine adjustment except the projector intermittent movements and those elements controlled by the projector mechanism train of gears connecting the shutter and intermittent movement cam shaft.

"Also aside from wear there is little of the mechanical to get out of order, once it has been properly adjusted, whereas electricity, on the other hand, 'does stunts' and those stunts not infrequently raise what our friend and editor very aptly calls 'His Satanic Majesty's Dominions' with things.

"I do not know that any records have been kept, but my guess would be that electrical troubles outnumber mechanical ones at least three to one."

H. Edwards replies thus: "I think electrical troubles outnumber those purely mechanical several times. Mechanical apparatus can be adjusted and locked into place. While it may change, it is not at all likely to do so, if properly lubricated, except as use wears its parts paratus, on the other hand,

nds of things can happen
/s. I can properly adjust, ermittent movements, keep ed (which means often ie right grade of oil) and ıg the intermittent sprocket teeth under a magnifying glass each Monday before work, pay no further attention to them for fifteen days, and we run from before noon to after midnight. But that don't serve with electrical doodads. In order to sidestep possible trouble I must either watch them or expect something to go haywire, and plenty. Just what the difference is I don't know, but I am certain mechanical apparatus is very much less likely to shake hands with Old Man Trouble, than are the electrical devices we have to wrestle with."

A. F. Sprafke says: "There are many and various places for trouble to develop in a projection room. I have often wondered (more so since I got into this Bluebook School business) just how much of it may be classified as unavoidable, and how much just plain failure in the matter of attending to duty.

"Before sound came we used to believe that in order to avoid trouble our knowledge and skill (if we had any) were taxed to the utmost. Now we know how wrong we were. I, for one, can see that 99 per cent of the troubles of pre-sound days were due to faulty checking, or to no checking at all, since most mechanical devices show defect or wear quite plainly (if it is really looked for) before finally letting down.

"But today is a very different story. Amplifier tubes, condensers, grids, coils, etc., usually show signs of weakening that may be detected by careful daily inspections and tests, and replaced before trouble arrives. But also they may let go prematurely and without much if any warning. However, such happenings may be kept very low by proper inspections and tests.

"The thing that I have found to be a source of constant worry and trouble (and I am afraid always will be) is rectifier tubes. They may test up perfectly and then, without warning, leave you flat. Line voltage is often blamed, but recording instruments do not always show this to be the seat of the trouble. We have not infrequently found ourselves working without spare tubes, with fingers crossed, believe you me. This has been my one biggest worry. I am curious to know whether or not it is the same with others."

All of which does not quite answer the question directly, but may easily be analyzed as saying that electrical faults are by far the greater source of trouble, in which conclusion at this stage of development I must fully agree.

The new Bluebook is now actually on the press. By November the first books should be in the mail. I may also say, backed by opinions of several projectionists of high standing who have examined sections of the page proofs, that this is the first real "handbook" ever published. I say this for the reason that not only is it thoroughly reliable, but also because it contains an index system which is wholly my own invention, making it possible to find anything the book contains in the least possible time. In the past you have found the Bluebook thoroughly dependable, as thousands of letters have attested. You will find the forthcoming book to be even more so. I expect my books to carry their own endorsements, which they have successfully done through seven editions, not counting the first edition (1907), though more than 75,000 of them were sold to projection equipment manufacturers, film exchanges, and so on.

Purchases Additional House

E. B. Sturdivant, operator of the Silver Crest Theatres, Inc., has purchased the Calipatria theatre, Calipatria, Cal. The deal also included the adjoining property which is used as an airdrome during the summer. According to plans, it is said, Mr. Sturdivant will lease the house to Billy Gunn, who has been operating in Calipatria for several years.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Park Rapids, Minnesota.

Dear Herald:

This town of Park Rapids quite evidently saw better days back when the lumbering business was at its best, and we surmise that at that time its best was pretty good. Just now it has the reputation of being one of Minnesota's famous fishing resorts, for the town is surrounded almost entirely by beautiful lakes and it is here that a great number of the anglers come to spend their vacations and to get a real fish story to tell the boys when they get back home.

Out east of Park Rapids about three miles is Long lake, and it was well named because it is about nine miles long by about three-fourths of a mile wide and it looks like it was a real place to catch some of the big ones. Sherm Fitch owns a cottage on the north end of Long lake and you ought to see it. It is fitted up on the plan of the Waldorf-Astoria although it lacks some few things that the Waldorf-Astoria probably has, although we have never been in that famous teepee, and likely never will be, and in fact we don't care very much if we never are since we have been in Sherm's cabin.

Then It Rained

Sherm, you know, is the man in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, who is furnishing the exhibitors of South Dakota and eastern Minnesota with RKO service and that probably accounts for the very satisfactory business they are all doing. But as we said before, Sherm owns a cottage on this lake and he drove us around to see some of the boys and we wound up at his cottage for a few days fishing while Mrs. Fitch looked after the cabin and incidentally caught enough fish for the table, (which she did, otherwise we would have had to chew beefsteak).

We got to Sherm's cabin on Monday night and the next morning the wind was from the north and blowing a gale and rain began to fall and so all thoughts of fishing was out. Doggone the doggone luck anyhow. Sherm proposed, since we couldn't fish, that we drive up to Winnipeg, Canada, to wait until the weather settled. So we drove up there and called on as many of the boys on the way as we could find at home. The season was just open for chicken hunting and the most of them were out looking for chickens. At Crookston we called on C. L. Hiller, who operates the New Grand theatre. C. L. is a brother of Mr. Miller who operates the State theatre at Marshall, and our guess is that neither Marshall nor Crookston folks find it necessary to leave town to see a good show, at least they can be proud of their theatres, and also their managers.

Bagley is located right in the heart of the deer country, that is, the forest around Bagley looks like it would be a good place for deer. Anyhow, if they don't want to go deer hunting around Bagley they can always find a good show at the Family theatre, which is presided over by E. R. Wright, who is also a very constant reader of Motion Picture Herald, which probably accounts for his excellent knowledge of the show business. We didn't have time to stop long enough to see Mrs. Wright, although we are assuming that there is a Mrs. Wright. If not, there ought to be. We judge that at one time Bagley was a very prominent lumber town.

C. J. Nyland still operates the Idle Hour theatre at Stephen. C. J. operated it when we were there something like four years ago and his memory didn't seem to be a bit impaired, for he knew us as soon as we called on him. We told him we would stop and see his brother on our way back from Winnipeg but we couldn't find him when we got to his town. In fact we were able to find but few of the boys, since the chicken season was open, and in northwest Minnesota we were told that there are about four counties where there is an open season, and the only place that we know of in the whole United States where they have an open season, but they might as well open the season the year around, for there won't be any chickens left anyhow.

We stopped at Halleck to see the exhibitor there but couldn't locate him. We called there a few years ago and at that time he had gone to some other town with a ball team or something and we missed him then. He's a hard guy to find.

Winnipeg, Canada.

This town has a population of something around 200,000, maybe a few more and maybe a few less, mostly Canadians, although we saw a few there from the States. We are going to say this for Winnipeg, it's the best looking city for its size we have seen anywhere, and we have seen quite a few. We know of no city of the size of Winnipeg that has as many and as handsome buildings as she has. We found the city the most live spot we have seen in a long time and if there is a business depression up there we saw no evidence of it. There is this we'd like to tell the manager of the Royal Alexandria hotel, and that is to put a sign on the place so people can find it. We drove around for an hour trying to find it and then happened to stumble onto it. After one once finds it he will say that no hotel in the States has anything on the Royal Alexandria.

Winnipeg is at the north end of highway No. 81 which runs from Winnipeg to Mexico City, through southern Canada, both Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas and on to Mexico. And if you don't think that is a long highway you should come out here and travel it. We have traveled almost every inch of it as far south as San Antonio, Texas, and a lot of it several times.

Sherm says he is especially fond of Winnipeg because up there when you see the King's crown on a bottle you don't have to fear that a bootlegger had anything to do with it.

We believe that the girls of Winnipeg are almost as goodlooking as the Texas girls, although we are not an authority on beauty. Sherm called our attention to the fact that they wear their dresses longer at both ends than they do in Ypsilanti, Michigan; we hadn't noticed it.

There is this about Winnipeg that makes us pretty strong for the town, and that is that we didn't see a single woman leading a poodle around on a string, not one, like they do out in Hollywood, and should we go out there and they give us a job leading little Fifi out for his morning's exercise and letting him smell of the shrubbery we are going to draw the line on kissing him like the two stars did in "David Copperfield," darnedfeedont.

We wanted to call on the exhibitors when we got in town but had to drive around the most of the evening trying to find the Royal Alexandria, and the next morning it was cold and looked like it was going to snow, so we drove back to Sherm's cabin on Long Lake and when we got there the wind was so high from the north that we couldn't fish and it didn't go down for a couple of days so we drove back to Sioux Falls. Gee whiz, doggone it anyhow.

On our way back we called on John De Marce of the De Marce theatre at Benson but couldn't stop for but a few moments because Sherm was getting chilly. However, we found John and his theatre all that Benson ought to wish. There ought to be more like them scattered around the country.

Wear a Shamrock

Don't talk Polish, Swede, Norwegian or Bohemian to V. S. McCarty of the Monte theatre at Montevideo, wear a shamrock and a green tie, but be sure to call on him, and when you call on him try and meet Mrs. McCarty. They're two delightful folks. We met Mrs. McCarty this time and have been sorry ever since that we didn't meet her before. Mac, old boy, we have you listed as a mighty good picker. Good luck, and we hope to meet you again some time.

This cold north wind reminds us to quote

"When the leaves begin to turn
And the summer days are past,
And the golden sunbeams bend to kiss the dew—"

But then we just heard Ernie say, "Oh, for gosh sakes, Colonel, why in —— don't you ring off?"

A THOUSAND DOLLARS A MINUTE

By EVERETT FREEMAN

ON BROADWAY they still talk about that bet. And let me tell you, it is something to talk about—but something! Seven hundred and twenty grand in nice clean American money. Seven hundred and twenty grand in the finest of working order. One thousand dollars a minute for twelve hours!

How the bet starts is something which I am able to tell you. My name is Benjamin Weehel, but when I first hook up with Big Jim Papalino, somebody gives me a moniker which sticks. The moniker is like this: Benny the Shill. I am very much on the inside of the whole thing, for a reason which you will find out later. But in order to tell about it and to make it clear all around, it is necessary for me to start with the poker game which is taking place one night in a back room of Big Jim's gambling place.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—This picture made to order for coal mining sections. Pleased 100 per cent every way. Running time, 97 minutes. Played September 18-19.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—One of the greatest pictures of the kind ever made by any company. The star great, story wonderful and not impossible. If you haven't played it buy it and it will satisfy the audience. I haven't got room to tell you how good it is.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Here's a box office natural. With ordinary advertising this picture brought the best Sunday night business in ten weeks. Good follow-up crowds Monday and Tuesday. Why don't the producers make more worth while comedy features? People knew by this title that it would be funny and they were not disappointed. If more money were spent on making pictures that would make patrons laugh, and less money on problem dramas, business would be better, exhibitors would be happier and patrons generally would have a more pleasing outlook on life. Running time, 83 minutes. Played October 6-8.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

GB Pictures

JACK AHOY: Jack Hulbert—This very British comedy is hardly strong enough to single and is best suited for double feature programs. Fair audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MAN OF ARAN: An unforgettable masterpiece. Awe-inspiring photography of the sea and a people who wrest their livelihood from it. This picture's nameless cast forced us to double feature it, but it received all the glory and many appreciative remarks. —J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Liberty

BORN TO GAMBLE: H. B. Warner, Onslow Stevens—This is an extra good program picture, different than the rest and very interesting. A splendid cast of characters played on a double bill, but will stand alone and satisfy.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS: Sidney Fox, Paul Kelly—We played this picture to capacity houses and our opinion is that this picture drew most of the younger patronage and it is a pleasing picture and will satisfy. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 4-5.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibhing, Minn. General patronage.

Mascot

HARMONY LANE: Douglas Montgomery, Evelyn Venable—Beautiful singing, real harmony. Very well done, audience well pleased, but Montgomery hard to understand. Splendid Sunday picture. Did well the second night. Some of the audience came twice. Running time, 90 minutes.—Fred J. Case, La Balle Theatre, La Belle, Fla. General patronage.

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp —Had more compliments on this western than any for a long time. It just seems to click and that's all there is to it.—L. G. Tewkshury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

Mayfair

WHAT'S YOUR RACKET?: Regis Toomey, Noel Francis—One of the worst pictures ever produced. So badly and cheaply done that the patrons took it as a joke. A child in kindergarten could have written the story, and the acting is a nightmare.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Metro Goldwyn Mayer

AGE OF DISCRETION: May Robson, Madge Evans —This is a splendid entertaining picture. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Rohert Taylor, Eleanor Powell, Una Merkel—This is my first contribution to this department. But the goodness of "Broadway Melody of 1936" prompts me to write it. You exhibitors who have this picture bought should start patting yourself on the back right now. I believe you are going to agree with me that it is the most outstanding musical ever produced. Your patrons will eat it up. Watch Eleanor Powell who, in my opinion and the opinions of those with whom I have discussed the picture, far outshines Fred Astaire. Watch Jack Benny as the wise-cracking columnist. The tunes will stay with you long after you've seen the picture. Exploit and advertise "Broadway Melody of 1936" for all it's worth. I've seen it three times and I'm going to see it again. Just wait and see if you don't share my enthusiasm. Running time, 101 minutes.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: All Star Cast—Business not what I expected. The young crowd stayed away on Sunday and there aren't enough of the older ones to come to take their place. But those that did come said it was the best they ever saw.—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

HIDE-OUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—One of the best little pictures I've played in a long time and patrons were very pleased with it.—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Franchot Tone—A splendid picture with three fine stars; story good entertainment. We played it too old to get best results at the box office, but it did fairly well at that, and gave splendid satisfaction. Could not help it with this cast. Played September 29-30.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur—This is certainly a good picture, story very good. Acting great by the stars and all the cast, gave splendid satisfaction.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell—Ordinary. Harlow not good in this and story not so good. Running time, 99 minutes. Played September 29-October 1.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—A good airplane picture that did above average business, but far from a sell-out. Poor Beery, he always gets his bumps and then makes a comeback.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilhury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery—A very good picture. Book this one. Played September 20-21.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—Picture O. K. Pleased all, also the box office. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 29-30.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—Went to town on this one and it is a well produced air picture. Patrons like this type here.—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

Monogram

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley—One of the best Monogram pictures we have played. Ralph Bellamy gives a standout performance as the healer and is capably supported by Karen Morley, who suffers from bad photography. Fine audience response. J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley—Very good picture. Did not do any business and heard a lot of people say they did not like the title so thought the picture would not please them.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—Well, boys, here is a picture to be proud of; bring out your S. R. O. Already we have to shout about when a picture can stand up five days to capacity business. We have to take our hats off to Monogram Pictures because here is a little company that is coming to the front fast, and here is one company that gives the independent theatre a break. We will be more than satisfied if the "Keeper of the Bees" will do the same business as "Girl of the Limberlost" which we played in February. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 28-October 3.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn. General patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Carl Brisson, Mary Ellis, Edward Everett Horton—Personally, we considered this an exceptionally good feature, well acted by a competent cast. However, we did the smallest business we had had in years. Played September 25-26.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: George Burns, Gracie Allen, Jack Oakie, Lyda Roberti—This picture, not unlike an overlong trailer, is the successor to "International House" and "Hollywood Party." From all appearances, Paramount gathered together all the available talent, hurriedly concocted a story, rushed the filming, and then turned the film cutter loose. Most of the big names are seen only briefly and, in some instances, hardly seen at all. The comedy is far from clever and there is very little originality in the music. Only a glimpse of lovely Ina Ray Hutton is seen, while the rough house antics of Willie West and McGinty are repeated often. If the patrons will come, not expecting too much, this should provide average entertainment, but it is far from being colossal or half so good as the first "Big Broadcast."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan, Sir Guy Standing—Nice little action picture for week-end. People enjoyed it.—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Ray Milland—Somewhat of a disappointment, but a good picture. For some reason this picture did not draw well. Played September 13-14.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Amhrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West, Paul Cavanagh—Mae's best picture, but business the poorest in six months.—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Cesar Romero—A very entertaining picture and went over fine here. Appropriate. Not very much football. Just enough to be good. Played September 25-26.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott, Evelyn Brent—The finest Zane Grey we have had. Good crowd first night, but better the second night. Very good cast. Scott, of course, always good. Coogan did very well. This is a knockout for Saturday night, small town, and is the type of picture everyone enjoys. Running time, 60 minutes.—Fred J. Case, La Belle Theatre, La Belle Fla. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—Well produced picture and business O. K. Zane Greys are generally always good drawing cards.—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—Another one of those government men pictures and it seems to me it is as good a "G Men" picture as we have ever had. Business very good three days last part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Fair picture. Too long in getting into the action. Too much talk for the average patron.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—We had many compliments on this picture and it is full of laughs all through. Played September 6-7.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—Very fine sophisticated picture, but not so good for rural districts.—Fred J. Case, La Belle Theatre, La Belle, Fla. General patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie, Grace Bradley—A weak sister. Patrons shied away from it. My people do not care for Raft.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

WAGON WHELLS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—The best gate receipts we have had so far. Satisfies all classes of fans, even those looking for the rough westerns. Played September 27-28.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—Even a showman could not think of enough descriptive adjectives to give a description of this wonderful production. To say it is a riot of color does not do justice to it, because it is also beautiful. But those patrons that I inquired, some said, "Oh, it's nice." Others said it hurt their eyes, and while color has arrived, it has not received the public's acclaim. Business more than poor the first four days of the week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

CIMARRON: Richard Dix, Irene Dunne—We played this picture third run in Hibbing and will say that we played to capacity three days. Play it again as it will never grow old. It is one of those pictures that will never die out and our advice to exhibitors is to play it again and you will never go wrong. Running time, 126 minutes. Played June 23.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn. General patronage.

DOG OF FLANDERS, A: Frankie Thomas, O. P. Heggie—A clean, beautiful picture that nobody wanted to see.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ENCHANTED APRIL: Ann Harding, Frank Morgan—Almost every patron commented that this was the dullest picture they had seen in months. It is so old-fashioned it creaks and it talks the patrons to sleep.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson, Mary Carlisle, Fred MacMurray—An average program picture which received satisfactory audience response, but meant little at the box office.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

JALNA: Kay Johnson, Ian Hunter, Jessie Ralph—"Jalna" is the best picture of its kind ever made. It seems to me it is even better than "Little Women." Jessie Ralph brings a new personality to the screen. She may never be any better in any other picture than in "Jalna," but she has arrived and we will look forward to seeing her again soon. Business very, very poor four days first part of week. A tip to exhibitors: "Jalna" has a marvelous Christmas scene, and will be more than good for Christmas bookings.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—A good show with plenty of entertainment. Well received. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 13-14.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PRISON SHOWINGS OF FILMS REVIEWED

"Our motion picture season got under way last Saturday, and, from reports of inmates who have been here for a number of years, it seems that the reception accorded the opening program equals or surpasses that of any previous performance," writes J. A. Reynolds, recreational director of New Jersey State Prison at Trenton. "Since it can safely be asserted that no audience anywhere is more picayunish or hard to please than the one to be found at a prison show, the fact that not a single dissenting remark was, or has been, heard, is in itself a great compliment to the films displayed.

"In selecting the films for display here at the prison, I have found the Motion Picture Herald indispensable. Not only have I used your film reviews as a guide, but I have found excerpts from 'What the Picture Did For Me" invariably proving the deciding factor if and when a question may arise as to the picture's real entertainment value.

"Perhaps, in view of our unusual audience, a report of how a particular picture was received here might prove a worthwhile contribution to your columns. Frankly, any picture which meets with the approval of the majority of these hard critics can be booked without fear by any other exhibitor."

Reports on product by Mr. Reynolds appear in the "What the Picture Did For Me" dapartment in this issue.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable—Just so-so. Not good and not bad. Old people did not care for it. Younger generation seemed to like it. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 27-28.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—Very fine picture with general appeal. Lederer's sincerity outstanding. Ginger Rogers seems to be a success in everything she does lately, but why separate her from Astaire? They have anything in the world beaten when they are together. This picture, however, received plenty of praise. Running time, 70 minutes.—Fred J. Case, La Belle Theatre, La Belle, Fla. General patronage.

SHE: Randolph Scott—Big production and well acted, but there is something missing and it will not give general satisfaction.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

SHE: Randolph Scott—Very elaborate, but failed to gross film rental. Sound was not so good. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 16-17.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Taxes. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—An excellent program picture to fine audience response. Good for action days.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—A very fine picture, but did not play it until it was so old we done a very poor business on it for a special. Nothing against the picture, it is a good one, but they have to be played hot nowdays when you put them on as specials, as the large towns are double featuring the biggest of them. Played September 22-23.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—The best all-around picture to play here; it has everything. I would say that it has a perfect cast. This is one picture that has everything that the producers claim for it and then some. Don't fail to advertise it everywhere. Running time, 109 minutes. Played September 27-28.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Jane Withers—Drew better than normal business and pleased everyone. Played September 18-19.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland—Fair. About on a par with other Chan stories. Action a little slow. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 20-21.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Exceptional entertainment. Pleased old and young. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 22-25.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Patrons said as good as any she has made. Box office very good. Would like to have her teamed with Jimmie Dunn again. How about it, Fox?—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N D. General patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clark—Light comedy, newspaper story, which did only average business. Really silly in my opinion. Fox makes better than this one. Played September 16-17.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke—Good summer entertainment that pleased our patronage.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Many of our patrons liked this feature better than they did "Life Begins at Forty," although our business was less for "Doubting Thomas." Played Octover 2-3.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—I was ashamed to admit my audience to this one. Billy Burke ruined the picture and as my patrons remarked Will Rogers himself seemed to show his disgust at her silly attempt to act. However, they came to see it as it will be the last Rogers picture to show here. Running time, 87 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Broke all house records. Picture pleasing. Running time, 73 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers, Billie Burke, Alison Skipworth—Business better on this than any of his previous pictures, but it is not as good. Patrons thought it his weakest.—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

DRESSED TO THRILL: Clive Brook, Tutta Rolf—Poor. No story. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 26.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor—A very fine production. Splendid entertainment. Well liked. Running time, 91 minutes. Played September 15-17.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Entertaining picture. Story is different and Lederer is different and so it pleases the patrons. Good acting by Frances Dee in a difficult role.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye,

James Dunn, George White—Pretty good. Consider them better than last year. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 21-22.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

GINGER: Jackie Searl, Jane Withers—This was a surprise to many who had seen Jane Withers as the meanie in "Bright Eyes." She really gave a remarkable performance. Normal business. Played September 21.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—Nice little picture but not much drawing power; just did get over after a three-day struggle. Word-of-mouth saved it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 3-5.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—The poorest Shirley Temple to date; plot too heavy for this little star. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 20-21.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—Nice picture. A plot that most patrons like. Hope to see more of Dixie Lee. John Boles always a good bet. —L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—Baxter swell in this and a fairly good picture for week-end.—E. J. LaQua, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—An exceptionally good production from every standpoint. Business a trifle above normal. Played September 28.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

United Artists

CALL OF THE WILD, THE: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—This proved to be the best 20th Century production we have yet bought. Its drawing power was terrific and it gave satisfaction. Patrons seemed to think that Jack Oakie and the dog stole the show; but that's as it should be. The leading character in the book was really the dog, and so it should be in the picture. Clark Gable and Loretta Young did the best they could, but their opportunities were not very great. The scenery was magnificent. Running time, 91 minutes. Played October 3-5.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD, THE: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—Wonderful, colossal and all the other adjectives. Should do business in any hamlet on the globe. Play it by all means if possible.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

CARDINAL RICHELIEU: George Arliss—One of the finest of the costume pictures. Beautifully produced and intelligently acted. Better than average at the box office.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HELL'S ANGELS: Ben Lyon, Jean Harlow, James Hall—We played this picture on April 24-25, which was third run, and it certainly drew well at the box office, and again we played it on September 4-5 and which was the fourth run in Hibbings and played to capacity both nights. This is positively the best aviation picture ever produced by any film company. We advise you to play it as the prints are new and Elliott Film Company is nice people to do business with. Running time, two hours. Played September 4-5.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibbings, Minn. General patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce—A credit to its producers and the theatres which show it. Meaty entertainment, cleverly produced. Splendid patron reaction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THUNDER IN THE EAST: Charles Boyer, Merle Oberon—This picture, formerly titled "The Battle," is a graphic and timely filmization of Oriental fortitude and determination and is my idea of a completely satisfying screen show. It is the tragic, simple story of a Japanese officer and his unflinching devotion to his country, even at the sacrifice of his wife and home. The film is not directly concerned with war, although there is an exciting sea battle which is faultlessly photographed and directed. My enthusiastic opinion of this picture was not shared by everyone who saw it, as several patrons found it tedious at times and resented Charles Boyer being cast as an Oriental. Unfortunately, this film belongs in the class picture category, if for no other reason than that it has an unhappy ending.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—Good picture, but failed to draw. Worst Sunday-Monday business in long time. Running time, 93 minutes. Played September 22-23.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

RAVEN, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—A real good horror picture that brought us business. Some fainted, but good publicity. They like horror pictures in this town. Played Sunday midnight, September 15. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

TWO SHOWMEN JOIN REPORTERS

New contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week are from Indiana and West Virginia. They are:

Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Indiana.

Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, West Virginia.

Read the reports of these showmen in this issue.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones, Noel Francis—Our audience was deeply disappointed to see their favorite western star cast as the proprietor of a barroom and gambling joint. It will hurt the prestige of Buck Jones in this town for some time to come. Business normal. Played October 5.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—A show that completely silenced the numerous men who were all set to say "I told you so." Joe E. Brown has never been popular here before, but this laugh riot has won him a place among the popular stars here. (Please do not interpret that as an insinuation that Joe should be here among us!) A great comedy that had 'em bouncing in their seats.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Adolphe Menjou—Plenty of entertainment in this one. Drew well and satisfied. My patrons tell me Dick Powell gets better with each picture and I agree with them. Musical numbers were so cleverly introduced that they seemed part of the story. Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 30-October 2.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—Good entertainment. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 27-28.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

Vitaphone

BETTER THAN GOLD: Fifi D'Orsay—Very poor. A hopeless conglomeration of dull music, insipid story and, with the exception of Miss D'Orsay, uninteresting personalities.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

JUST CONCENTRATE: Lulu McConnell—A clever comedy which our patrons enjoyed.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MEXICANS FRIENDLY TO AMERICAN TALENT

Delegation of Industry Wins Protest Against Dismissing Cameraman; Federal Review Likely

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

That there is far more friendship than animosity for Americans who come to Mexico to work for native production companies was demonstrated by a scene enacted the other day in the offices of the minister of the interior. The offices were crowded with representative and rank and file members of the Mexican cinematographic industry—executives, clerical employees, technicians, players and even laborers.

This delegation urged the minister to call off the watchdogs of the immigration department who were all for giving Ross Fisher, American cameraman, an ignominiously free ticket back home because there had been a complaint that his manner of entering Mexico had been irregular. The Mexicans told the minister that Mr. Fisher's troubles were purely due to a grudge somebody had against him; that it would be a loss to the Mexican film industry if he were dismissed from the country, and that he is well liked. The minister investigated the case and found out that the delegation was correct. The immigration authorities were told to leave the American alone and Mr. Fisher was given an official apology for the trouble that had been caused him and advised that he can remain working in Mexico as long as he cares to. Mr. Fisher has done camera work on most of the pictures produced in this country by Mexican interests.

Review Department Set Up

Mexico intends that pictures produced in this country shall be the real McCoy as far as authentic atmosphere, history and customs are concerned. To that end, the ministry of the interior has established a department of review for all pictures that are made here, both by Mexicans and foreigners. These productions will be closely checked for accurate details before they are given approval for export. The department also will be obligated to keep such pictures as individual and as purely Mexican as possible by pruning them of too much foreign influence, especially American.

Mexican producers are irked by what they call an embarrassing situation for them arising from the demand of distributors of their product in the United States that they do all the cutting of these pictures. The native producers say that this procedure puts their product in an unfavorable light before the American public. They charge that the cutting is not done intelligently, that the distributors know little if anything about Mexican psychology reflected in the pictures, and throw regard for continuity out of the window. The producers are seeking means for remedying this situation.

MEXICAN THEATRES IMPORT OWN FILMS

The picture shortage has become so acute in Mexico City that some theatres are closed and the finance ministry has decided to allow theatres to import directly films other than those handled by distribution companies in the Mexican capital.

The strike that has tied up practically all theatres is still confined to employees of American distributors in spite of the efforts of labor organizations to stir up sympathetic walkouts.

Two more deluxe downtown cine-theatres are in the offing for the Mexican capital. One of these, a 1,500-seater, is already under construction, and ground is being broken for the other. Backers of both propositions have apparently hearkened to demands that organized Mexican thespians have made upon the Mexico City government that all cinemas under its jurisdiction be obliged to present stage shows as a means of relieving unemployment among the players.

But End Is Not Yet

At the same time that distributors were at odds with the Government over assessments, new methods of exacting still more money from the companies were being studied. Most recent of these was the proposal to the Government that a National Institute for the Cinematographic Industry be formed, with a state endowment of 2,000,000 pesos ($560,000 U. S.). The recommendation followed disclosure of earnings figures gathered by the Ministry of National Economy.

The ministry figures concerned nine companies distributing foreign product: United Artists, Fox, Paramount, MGM, Radio, Universal, Warner, First National, German Camus & Co., and Columbia. The combined capital of these companies was given as 469,440 pesos. From 1929 to 1933 these companies imported films and discs to the value of 3,032,455 pesos while expending 522,697 pesos for salaries (40 per cent to executives, 33 per cent to white collar help, and 27 per cent to other workers) and 200,000 pesos for publicity and exploitation.

In the same period, the Ministry was informed, the companies sent their home offices 7,901,940 pesos, of which 5,690,773 were subject to income tax, for a net profit of 3,061,000 pesos for the distributors.

Budget Increases Planned

That the local producing industry in Mexico is planning to increase budgets to an average of 100,000 pesos ($28,000) a picture, from the present 60,000 pesos, was reported to the Department of Commerce at Washington by Assistant Trade Commissioner Horton Henry at Mexico City. The move, Mr. Horton said, was decided upon to regain ground lost in recent months in business done at the theatres.

Fifty features will be made this year, it was estimated, for the 350 theatres operating, 200 of which are sound-equipped. The extension of production activity has been steady, from four features in 1932 to 27 in 1934. Total investment in studios now is placed at 500,000 pesos. Under construction is a three-stage studio with a modern laboratory and latest sound equipment. Seven companies are regularly about the business of production.

Hoyt Named President Of Cinaudagraph Corp.

John Sherman Hoyt has been named president of the Cinaudagraph Corporation, to replace Dr. Freeman W. MacDonald, who died recently in the Albany General Hospital. Other officers of the company are Harold W. Harwell, vice-president; Howard C. Sherman, treasurer, and Sherman Reese Hoyt, secretary.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE OLD SHELL GAME

No, sir, gentlemen, don't you believe it. Don't care what the doctors and scientists say about its nutritive value, cooking qualities and vitamin content.

Don't care if folks where they grow it eat nothing else but. Even if some exhibitors believe it a medium of exchange, our opinion still stands.

You can't eat peanuts three times a day.

Member, married, good showman, ace appearance and pleasing personality reports angling for job at new house to open soon. Spot is semi-suburban near metropolitan center and aims to cater to wealthy folks living thereabouts.

Exhibitor wants manager to run house without an assistant, supervise, exploit, handshake and check billing, the manager to run his own car in performing all these duties.

The salary—peanuts, slightly roasted, plus promise of bonus, when and if.

Paying off in peanuts is another variation of the shell game and it isn't the manager who is always left holding the bag.

WHERE ARE THEY?

There may be all sorts of animated displays going the rounds, but we haven't heard of many in quite a few moons which brings forth the query—why?

Is it because animation in theatre display is becoming a lost art? Or do those cutdown ad budgets make it necessary to leave off these always compelling attention-getters.

Any tricky gadget in store window or theatre lobby has yet to want for large and curious audiences of onlookers. The animated display is distinctly a crowd stopper and crowd stopping, my friends, is still accepted by smart showmen as one of the most efficient methods of stimulating circulation up to the box office.

SAVVY ALSO DOES IT

Though we are always happy to recount on this page the good things that happen to our members, we are more than pleased to set down today the recent advances of Round Tablers Ralph Lawler and Jack Purves.

Because, Ralph's promotion to the post of manager of the Newman, Kansas City, comes so soon after his winning of the July Bronze while at the Orpheum, Springfield, Ill.

Because, Jack's recent appointment by J. J. Fitzgibbons to manager of the Orpheum, Winnipeg, and also to supervise stage shows in Western Canadian houses, brings to mind this member's humble start in Toronto not so long ago and his steady forging ahead to the present important assignment.

Being a relative and marrying into the boss' family are still excellent ways to get ahead. But the above instances point to a conclusion that general savvy and keeping on top of the ball are not yet to be discarded in struggling up to a higher spot on that slippery ladder.

CHALLENGE WELL MET

With the final fadeout of Warner Brothers' "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the New York Hollywood Theatre premiere, the thought came upon us that here was an attraction to challenge the very quintessence of showmanship—a production with background, prestige and atmosphere rare enough to cause every exploitation-cell center to tingle.

The ace selling job executed by Charlie Einfeld and his crew on the "Dream" is early and first evidence of how well this challenge is being met.

And now, according to Red Kann's Motion Picture Daily, out in Pittsburgh the Warnerites rise again to the heights with the very fancy stunt suggested by one of Harry Kalmine's managers wherein the theatremen themselves have taken over the house for the Pittsburgh premiere, have agreed to sell all the tickets and will be on the door to greet patrons at the opening.

It appears that the "Dream" is to be responsible for a wealth of inspired exploitation activities.

They tell the story of a manager who had been trying unsuccessfully for an OK to repair a leaky waterpipe staining his office wall. The unfortunate theatreman sat disconsolately at his desk one morning when the phone rang. It was his district manager preparing quotas for a coming circuit drive.

"What's your expectancy for the next four weeks?" barked the D. M.

"Rheumatism," moaned the manager.

Oversized Card Sent to Marion Davies by Kuehn

One of the highlights of Rudy Kuehn's "Page Miss Glory" campaign at the Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, was oversized postcard addressed to Marion Davies and to be mailed to Hollywood, which was planted in lobby three weeks ahead and on which all patrons were invited to sign their names. Message congratulated her on first Warner picture. Papers came through with story and photo of Rudy delivering the tremendous card to mail carrier.

"Called while you were out" cards were distributed with copy giving theatre telephone number and instructions to page Miss Glory. All lady patrons received photos of Marion Davies and through tieup with laundry folders on the picture were inserted in all outgoing bundles.

Kid Amateur Auditions Contest Held by Corkery

Every Saturday afternoon Maurice Corkery, Central Square Theatre, Cambridge, Mass., has been holding an amateur auditions contest for children under the direction of Bob Mills. The winners are chosen by the applause of the other kids and are selected to appear the following Saturday morning on his daily broadcast.

With his current showing of "Every Night at Eight," which features the amateur hour craze, Maurie announced that the winners of the kiddie auditions contest would be guests of Major Bowes' unit appearing in Boston. Winners were driven over to theatre where the Major held forth, met the national winners and had their pictures taken with them. Stunt broke papers with stories and photos.

Sells Five Pages of Co-op Advertising

There's no daily newspaper in Wellsboro, Pa., the press being represented by a weekly with a not overly highpowered advertising department. And thus Larry Woodin, manager of the Arcadia, became his own solicitor to sell five whole co-op pages of advertising in one issue which featured his "Bright Lights" Quigley Award campaign that won him the bronze for September.

Larry made a deal with the weekly by buying the space outright and was successful in selling it to the merchants at a higher rate and specifying that every ad tie up directly with the picture. Interest was stimulated with a series of misspelled word contests for which passes were awarded, thus insuring advertisers that pages were read.

For one of his window displays Larry planted a 20-inch burning candle as the basis of a guessing contest. Tickets offered for those coming closest to exact time candle went out. Injecting a little humor into his campaign Woodin further advertised that he would give away Joe Brown neckties to men attending shows. The gag being that the comedian wore a shoestring instead of a tie in the picture.

At his kid matinee a Brown yelling contest was engineered, opening night band played atop marquee (see photo), even the old barrel stunt with copy inside worked for Larry. Week ahead a parade with band and banners toured shopping districts, stopping at various points to give fifteen minute concerts while theatre p.a. played hits from box office. Also helpful were telephone installations made in store windows with girls calling subscribers about opening and lighting displays atop buildings further sold the picture.

The newspaper in appreciation for the unexampled amount of extra advertising secured by Larry devoted columns of reading matter to his campaign which fully described his activities.

Fire Truck Ballys Brown's 'China' Date

Promoting his local fire department to carry theatre banners on "China Seas" during trial runs of ladder-truck was one of the featured stunts in Dick Brown's winning Quigley Award campaign at the Rowland Theatre in Wilkinsburg, Pa. Accompanying photo shows bannered engine with Chief and fireman, a reported first time for his town. Hook and ladder truck with full crew was used and fire sirens sounded at street intersections.

On tieup with local Chevrolet dealer, advertising battleship truck was used for street bally, with theatre staff dressed in naval uniforms, usherettes handing out China tea balls promoted from local market. During run of picture busses operating within radius of ten miles stopped directly in front of theatre, cars carrying signs on both sides reading "this bus will take you to the Rowland."

For his window tieups Dick tied in with florist, who featured a Jean Harlow dahlia, leading market displayed bowl of beans, offering tickets to closest guessers and druggists featured cosmetic tieups with stills of Harlow and picture copy.

A Clark Gable contest was run in a shoppers' guide, tickets offered to those submitting best answers to what contestants considered the star's best production and why. All guest checks in chain restaurant stores were imprinted with theatre copy on reverse side, as were market's shopping bags.

The above are the highlights of Dick's campaign at his subsequent run theatre, situated in the suburbs of Pittsburgh.

The result encourages us now in this issue to roam further afield in detailing the theatre activities of Paramount International, the overseas organization that functions so effectively under the supervision of that able executive, John W. Hicks, Jr. The following pages are given over to Paramount theatres' doings in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Sweden, Brazil, Australia, Spain and Japan. With these accounts are set down articles on operations by the executive theatre heads in some of the various countries.

Houses in Great Britain Standard For Exploitation

by J. C. GRAHAM
Managing Director,
Paramount, Great Britain

The Paramount Theatres in Great Britain are exploitation theatres in every sense of the word. Some nine years ago, Mr. Zukor when visiting these shores, decided to build the Plaza Theatre, Piccadilly as a first-run, pre-release theatre in the heart of London so that Paramount pictures would have a permanent home in the West End. Later on, we found that we also needed a long-run house in which to play giant productions, so the Carlton Theatre was born.

These two theatres did so much for the trade generally and for Paramount pictures as regards lifting film exhibition to a very high standard, that the scheme was carried further into the larger provincial cities and now Paramount has its show houses in all the big exchange centers.

Paramount has religiously adhered to its original scheme of not competing in any way with exhibitors but simply to have its wonderful light-houses in each territory to project the magnificence of its product in these great centers and set a high standard of operation and exploitation generally.

"Bodyguard" Nets Windows

Presentation of the Spanish-dubbed version of "Her Bodyguard" at Paramount's Coliseum Theatre in Barcelona spelt window tie-ups to Manager S. Romero. Particularly tie-ups with jewelry windows, since the picture displayed excellent technique for taking care of valuable jewelry.

The result was that stills from the picture, nicely mounted in modernistic frames, with an accompanying card identifying the theatre, were taken for display by several of the leading jewel houses of Barcelona.

WHY PARAMOUNT HAS THEATRES OVERSEAS

Theatres Serve as Show Windows for Exhibition as Well as Distribution Department

by JOHN W. HICKS, JR.
Vice-President,
Paramount International Corp.

> Mr. Hicks has devoted the major portion of his film career to the building up of Paramount overseas distribution and exhibition. Head man in Australia for a number of years, the Paramount International vice-president is now in charge of the company's general foreign affairs, and has been kind enough to tell us something of his organization's theatre activities. —A-MIKE

Paramount's theatres abroad, although their number is small when contrasted with the units of other chains, are nevertheless situated at extremely strategic points of the international scene. They are up-to-the-minute houses in every possible respect, and because of their strict adherence to the matter of popular film taste, they are extremely well patronized throughout the year.

The prime purpose of these theatres is that they serve as show-windows not only for the Paramount distribution department in the territories in which they are located, but for the exhibitors also. In territories small only by virtue of area, and where one may go from end to end of the land in a matter of a few hours, such a presentation of a film in a key-center house is a national event. The manner of its presentation, moreover, predicates the success not only of the company releasing the film, but every exhibitor subsequently running it.

Paramount's overseas theatres in the main have been moulded from the plans of successful houses in the United States. They embody every tried and tested feature making for the comfort of the patrons physically and visually. Paramount initiative and enterprise in this phase of the film business have stimulated local effort; and local enterprise in turn has snowballed to such an extent that the entire motion picture industry throughout the world has advanced so materially, particularly in the exhibition end that Paramount's efforts over many years must be entitled to a goodly share of the credit.

Theatres Exploitation Pioneers

Effort so far as Paramount is concerned has not stopped at exhibition, for an indissoluble partner of exhibition is exploitation, and in this field the chain of theatres owned by this company throughout the world has also been a pioneer. Campaigns involving the most ingenious and compelling showmanship ideas have been put over in England, Australia and France on behalf of films which have been tremendously aided by such work. Spain, Sweden and Brazil are constantly coming to the fore with stunts and exploitation devices which command attention in the lands of their origin and admiration in this country long regarded as the home of exploitation. And all of the time the work performed is done within the legal statutes of the land: there are no official repercussions, no police warnings; nothing to mar the excellence of the created idea's effectiveness.

When a new theatre is opened by Paramount, it is an event of national importance. The highest dignitaries of the land attend. Stars and industry executives of many major companies are there in person. And that opening night's receipts go intact to some deserving charity.

Paramount's overseas theatres are not numerous; but they are dynamically effective, and local exhibitors are mightily thankful for their pace-setting propensities.

Ties Champ Wrestler To Paramount Pictures

Wrestling in Japan is almost as important as football and baseball in this country, according to Tom Cochrane, general manager for Paramount in the Orient. Tom says the matches start at seven in the morning and finish at six at night.

The wrestlers wear handsome aprons, and at one of the big bouts Tom offered as a prize the apron shown in accompanying picture. Apron was displayed in window of chief department store for weeks prior to the big match and actual presentation was filmed by all newsreels and given tremendous newspaper space.

Theatres' General Manager Has Exploited in the Field

by EARL ST. JOHN

Director, Paramount Great Britain Circuit

I think I can modestly refer to myself as one of the pioneers of exploitation in British picture theatres. Before Paramount had any key theatres of their own, I toured the length and breadth of the country exploiting in other peoples' theatres the big Paramount pictures just after the war, and have handled in this country every big Paramount picture since 1918.

Now that we have a theatre chain, I do not have the opportunity to give as much time to this end of the business as I should like, but I never let it get entirely away from me as I feel that intelligent exploitation is the life's blood of the theatre business. I pass all campaigns myself, sitting in with Armstrong and the boys. I mention this point to show the great regard in which we hold exploitation generally in British theatres. All of our managers, apart from their other training, have a most thorough training in this department, and although a lot of the material is sent to them from Head Office, they have a great deal of scope in their own theatres as regards laying-out their local press ads, as regard planning their local editorial matter and as regards arranging their lobbies and fronts. The photographs which we are including give some small idea of the type of stuff we are doing over here.

We are in a very advantageous position in many respects to our American friends as we have the advantage of seeing a lot of their material before we start on a campaign, usually we adapt what we have seen in American tradepapers and in the materials supplied by New York, but often we are left to our own initiative and comparatively, I think, the boys get fairly good results. We are very pleased to have had the opportunity of having a show in Motion Picture Herald as we feel it will be a stimulant to our boys to carry on and still improve their efforts.

Star's Last Film Gets Grand Air Ovation

Outstanding piece of exploitation work for "Tango Bar" at the Suipacha Theatre, Buenos Aires, Argentina, was a half-hour broadcast from the lobby prior to picture's start. The film is the last motion picture made by the late Carlos Gardel, beloved star of all South American and Central American audiences, and at its Suipacha premiere all of the stage and radio stars of Argentina assembled in the theatre's lobby and paid brief but glowing tribute to Garden over air.

Broadcast was heard throughout South America, according to John B. Nathan, Paramount's managing director, and materially aided the film not only in Argentina but other republics also.

Radio Tribute to Noel Coward in Sydney Broadcast

Unusual nature of Noel Coward's first starring picture, "The Scoundrel," called for unusual publicity and exploitation methods in Sydney, Australia, when the picture opened its very successful season at the Prince Edward Theatre. General Manager Mel Lawton, who ascended to his post in the Carroll house from the ranks of Paramount exploiteers, grabbed the idea of a Coward tribute to go out over the air, not only in behalf of the Prince Edward, but for all Australian fans.

He selected Station 2UE for the distinction and that station assigned script writer Leona Deane to work with Lawton in preparing the text of the broadcast. The script stressed Coward's first film appearance, his great work in the theatre and his ability as an actor on the legitimate stage. The broadcast was picked up in all states, but particularly it aided business greatly at the Prince Edward.

A presentation copy of the script was placed on display in the theatre's lobby prior to being sent to Mr. Coward in London.

"Black Pearl" for Fifth Manchester Anniversary

The Manchester (Eng.) Paramount Theatre celebrated its fifth anniversary October 3rd and by way of celebration staged an impressive Francis Mangan revue entitled "The Black Pearl." Mangan's stage productions are "the tops" in England and France, and this particular presentation is claimed to have topped them all.

Reproduces Painting For 'Crusades' Front

The teaser advance slogan used for the date on "Crusades" at the Carlton, London, was "Prepare for the Crusades," used on screen, billboards and all newspaper ads. Then when the title broke, another line, "Bigger than Bengal Lancer," was added to the advertising, this last being an invaluable asset, as that picture was one of the most successful shown in London recently.

Well in advance, thousands of heralds were distributed with programs of all London Paramount theatres. On the opening day John Armstrong reports the biggest poster in London was erected in the heart of the West End and in prominent parts all over town, men in armor were stationed carrying teaser announcements on the shields they bore. (See photo below.)

The front of the theatre was given unusual treatment, the keystone being a magnificent panorama in oils, a reproduction of which is carried on a preceding page of this section. The artist who undertook to do the job in sixty hours was fortunate in locating an old mezzo-tint of the famous painting of the Battle of Ascalon. The picture depicts a group of Crusaders in conflict with the Saracens, the central figures being Richard the Lion Hearted and Saladin.

The finished picture measured 35 by 14 feet, 65 pounds of color were used to cover the area of 444 square feet and there were 35 figures and 14 horses in the foreground.

Under the marquee, giant cutout letters over a foot thick blazed the title "The Crusades" across a 30-foot span and the rest of the front comprised of stills, colored enlargements in addition to heraldic crests in color of France and England.

The foyer was made over into a medieaval fortress and patrons bought seats through the windows of this ancient edifice. As a final touch, the whole of the theatre staff was suitably costumed in armor and dress of the period.

Warsaw Goes Strong For Giant Cutouts

One of the best pictures in years for cutout purposes, according to overseas showmen is "The Crusades," and in many of the European countries the theatre managers are playing this fact to the hilt. Czaban illustrating how a giant figure, made from a blow-up from the picture's six-sheet poster, literally covered the front of the Apollo theatre.

LAND OF EXPLOITATION SNAGS

Path of British Exploiteer No Easy One, Says Armstrong, in Describing Publicity Obstacles

by JOHN ARMSTRONG

Advertising Director,
Paramount Great Britain Theatres

First of all, a film advertising man in England is faced with a problem that, I believe, is peculiar to this country. Every town of any consequence in England has a newspaper of its own—except London! There is no paper printed that deals with news only about London, and, while the various suburbs are catered for by local weeklies, the metropolis, as such, is unrepresented.

The big newspapers published in London are national newspapers, and are distributed all over the country, so that a man in the provinces will be a regular reader of a "London" paper. To appreciate fully the intricacies of this "national" business, one can best liken the position to a man in Chicago regularly reading a New York daily. In consequence, the national newspapers over here achieve colossal circulation.

With such a huge public supporting the newspapers, it can be understood that space-rates are very high, and, therefore, a film advertising man is forced to take small spaces; otherwise he will find that his appropriation for the year is swallowed up in a few months.

Small ad-spaces, when one has much to say, are a handicap, so we surmount our difficulties by building up what I can only describe as "atmosphere"—old superlatives—"colossal," "gigantic," "amazing"—are not enough. We have got to go deeper and analyze and find out what combination of billing, catch-phrasing, pictures and layout will best create the most typically attractive atmosphere of the celluloid product.

Cites Actual Cases

A case in point was Mae West's film, "I'm No Angel" which was put over entirely by a catch-phrase—"Come up and see me some time"; a phrase which I decided ideally summed up Mae's allure and all it stands for. This phrase was the main prop of our campaign, and its success was so complete as to stagger us, for not only did it make the film one of the box-office winners of the year, but it has passed into the English language.

Another case is that of "Bengal Lancer." Here I chiefly commercialized, among many other angles, its imperial aspect, tying that up with the Jubilee of His Majesty King George. Truth compels me to say that the association was a little thin, but it caught the public imagination—fired by the spectacle going on all around them of the Silver Jubilee Celebration—and the film was a riot.

The film which I am at present exploiting in London is "The Crusades." Here, I am relying largely on atmosphere in my advertisements, resisting any wording or type-arrangements that might conceivably look anything but dignified, typically English, and restrained. I shape my adverts to give a suggestion of heraldic device; curving the lay-out to convey a sub-conscious impression of a shield. Little things, maybe, but they all count at the box-office.

Coming back to this question of snags, England, although she is gradually growing up in this respect, darn nearly manufactures enough red tape to trip up and hang all the show men in the world. Boys, if you have not started stunting in Great Britain, believe me you ain't seen nothing yet. Nor do you realize what a walk over you have in comparison.

Exploitation Difficulties

For example, our biggest theatre, the Carlton, is on Crown property and the supervision of the Royal administrators—who, incidentally, are but one of three bodies for ever after our blood, the other being the Westminster County Council, and the London County Council, not forgetting also, the police—is so strict that we cannot even change the color of a row of electric bulbs without special permission. Quite recently we erected a skyline sign on the top of the building and, when the Inspector came around to approve of it, he solemnly trooped on to the roof, measured the sign carefully with a foot-rule and finally told us that it was three inches above the limit allowed for that sort of thing.

To cut off those three inches meant completely rebuilding the whole sign!

Once upon a time it was possible to send men through the streets in funny costume to advertise a film. Now, a bylaw prohibits this unless the costume is such as might reasonably be worn by a man in everyday life. On the other hand, we were able to get away with a Crusader driving through the West End of London one charger in full armour; because although it was obvious he was advertising "The Crusades" film, and although by no stretch of imagination could his kit be considered normal for everyday wear, he was carrying no printed, and therefore direct, advertising. "Do you follow me, boys?"

Now, in the same way that this snag about high newspaper advertising rates is forever keeping our brains knife-sharp—so easy to get slack and give 'em the same old hokum when advertising space is cheap and star value is high—so again all the red tape about exploitation stunts keeps us forever toeing the line and up to the scratch—so easy with practically no restrictions to fall back on the old circus street ballyhoo. As it is, we have to substitute cunning for "Barker" ballyhoo when thinking up exploitation stunts.

Now, in conclusion, boys, don't think we have gone all high hat—not a bit of it. But I am proud to feel that the boys over here heavily handicapped though they are, are keeping abreast of America's best.

THE CAPITOL IN MELBOURNE

Conduct of Prominent Australian Paramount DeLuxer Is Described; Operates on Reserved Seat Plan

by J. L. THORNLEY
General Manager

This theatre is the only one in Australia under the direct control of Paramount International Corporation. Situated in the heart of the City of a million people, opposite the City Hall, it is the prize theatre location of any city in Australasia.

During all the changes and vicissitudes in the industry over the last twelve years, the Capitol having made an international name in the presentation of its shows, adhered strictly to a single feature policy with short subjects, orchestral and stage presentations. During the course of time and changes in popular taste, and due to conditions existing in Australia, this Theatre adopted a policy of double bills plus orchestral stage presentations. With the advent of sound featuring vocal and instrumental presentations on the film, this new phase of theatre operation was faced by the management in acceding to the popular taste for double feature programmes. Instead of continuing a policy of expensive stage presentations, concentrated effort was made in selling the orchestra, it being featured on stage in proper settings, and the development of a name personality in band leaders.

Unique Reservation Plan

The Capitol theatre has a seating capacity of 2150, and operates under a policy of three distinct shows per day. The first performance commences at 10.45 a.m., the second performance at 2.15 p.m., and the evening performance at 8 p.m. Admission charges are from one to two shillings for the morning, to a top of five shillings for Saturdays and holidays. No Sunday performances are permitted.

A system of advance booking has been in operation at this theatre for the last twelve years that is rather unique. A patron can purchase a ticket in advance at the Theatre Box Plan Office for any performance six days ahead. The seating plans for the whole of the theatre are open for any performance and this system is one that proves of immense value in increasing grosses when any production of outstanding value is playing. The theatre is divided into two sections, stalls and dress circle or balcony. On the floor of the house three distinct prices are obtained, depending upon the location of the seat in respect to the screen.

The Capitol Melbourne House Staff

Situated in the heart of the City, where, it is estimated that upwards of 200,000 people per day pass the theatre doors, concentrated effort is made by the management on attractive lobby displays. Being an accepted pattern in city showmanship, this theatre avoids at all times anything in the nature of flamboyant ballyhoos, but concentrates on high-class and dignified appeal in its lobby displays.

A note of originality is always struck in the Art Display Department, as it is under the direction of one of Australia's foremost artists, Mr. Wm. Rowell, who by the way won the recent Centenary prize for an Australian Subject, painted in oils, valued at $1,000.

Under the direction of the writer this department is in charge of F. V. Kennebeck. The policy of the Theatre is to concentrate on newspaper advertising. Being in the fortunate position of cheaper rates than overseas cities of similar size, 60 percent of the advertising budget is appropriated in newspaper advertising. Bill Boards are freely used. Radio is also employed.

A publication of 20 pages is issued by the theatre—"Capitol News" and is sold on the City Book Stalls and in the theatre at the price of 3d per copy. This publication carries the current programme and advance publicity news of coming attractions.

The City of Melbourne has the strictest city ordinances in respect to street advertising of any city in the world. Street ballyhoos of any description are absolutely taboo. Any exploitation has to be executed with the city fathers' ideas well in view, but advantage is taken of window tie-ups on every occasion, and regular store windows display prominently the Paramount photographs and usual ad sales.

Sniping is Prohibited

Sniping is prohibited and each day bill or single sheet poster must be of a permanent nature and be approved of by the various authorities. In spite of all the restrictions ample coverage is possible and the exploitation department of the business runs more to cultivate with all responsible authorities civic bodies and leading stores a goodwill on a co-operative basis. Operating on this definite policy the theatre stands in the splendid position of obtaining support for any dignified publicity stunt that it may wish to achieve.

An instance of this co-operative effort with responsible authorities was evidenced by the co-operation of the police, street car and education authorities on the season of "Disraeli" where over a period of six weeks upwards of 70,000 children were brought into the City by special street cars for the morning performance, each school and district organized with the co-operation of the Melbourne police department.

THOSE KENNEBECKS BORN EXPLOITEERS

There are three Kennebeck brothers —John E., Frank V. and Paul, who have been or are at present concerned with the exploitation of pictures. John Kennebeck went to Australia in 1923 to serve as Paramount exploitation manager in that country. He later succeeded to the post of managing director.

Frank Kennebeck is the exploitation manager of the Capitol Theatre, Melbourne and the third Kennebeck, Paul, is a motion picture exploiteer in the United States.

Havana's Sloppy Joe Helps Paramount

Every American who has been to Cuba's capital knows Sloppy Joe's. Mr. Sloppy—or is it Mr. Joe, or perhaps Mr. S. Joe?—has set all of his famous drink recipes down in a booklet which is obtainable to all arm-benders, and it is Paramount's suggestion that you turn at once to Page 13 for the recipe of one of the heftiest and heartiest drinks north or south of the equator.

In other words, Sloppy Joe has there set forth the recipe for a "Paramount Cocktail."

Bally "Bengal" Uniforms

The use of the Bengal Lancer uniform for exploitation purposes exercised a thoroughly international appeal. Here it is being put to use by General Manager James L. Thornley for the presentation of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" at the Capitol Theatre, Melbourne, Australia. Thornley also used the idea of mounted lancers patrolling the streets, a fine idea for Melbourne's wide streets, as it was also for the widespaces of many other parts of Australia.

A group of over three hundred Melbourne police attended a private morning screening of "Car 99" at the invitation of James Thornley, managing director of the Capitol Theatre there. Convention Supplement Featured by Melbourne Paper

In conjunction with Paramount's annual Australian Convention, held in Melbourne the early part of September, there was produced a mammoth supplement devoted to the product, policies and general personnel of that organization. The section totaled 20 pages and constituted the finest publicity break ever given any film company in Australian history. It appeared in "The Star," September 3rd.

Major expense of art work, cuts and typesetting was borne by the newspaper, the cost to the film organization being negligible.

Stunt was engineered by Hermann Flynn, advertising manager, and Reg. Kelly, publicity manager for the film company. Paramount's Capitol Theatre, its history and personnel, of course, received big space in the supplement.

"CAPTIOUS ADS BOOMERANG"

Executive Says Sincere Selling of Pictures at Coliseum Theatre Has Brought National Reputation

by M. J. MESSERI

Managing Director, Paramount Films, S.A.

An A-1 showman is a rare species of human being that knows everything by heart, including an entire issue of a whole encyclopaedia edition. He knows when it is going to rain or sun-shine; he can smell an earth-quake, the social position of the country, strikes, political upheavals, elections, etc., and can tell to a cent his public's spending purse. But above all he has a perfect flare for buying product, and at that he always hits the bull's eye, in judging the ever-changing taste of his patrons. And, By Jove, he even knows what kind of product the Hollywood Studios are going to deliver long before the pictures are made. Anyone who doesn't believe this description is hopeless and doesn't know the show-business.

A little over ten years ago, our Company took over the Coliseum theatre in Barcelona, and the first picture we had to exhibit here was Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last." The American methods of publicity were applied immediately, and needless to say, it was a show by itself for the people here. As a matter of fact we had two shows, one inside the house showing the picture, and one outside with the crowds gazing at the front publicity stunt. From then on, we have been able to see theatres in Spain develop the same idea for the benefit of the exhibitor and distributor alike.

Condemns Misleading Publicity

It has always been the happy but responsible lot of our Company to be the leaders in this great international industry, both in distribution and in exhibition, and it has always been the feeling of this responsibility that has made us think and ponder before putting our thoughts into action.

There isn't a more mortiferous boomerang in the business than that of misleading the public through captious publicity. The exhibitor may think he has got away with it, but in the long run he pays tenfold for such a fault. An intelligent publicist is the one that truly describes to the public the value of the goods he is trying to sell, and in this instance we are proud to have fulfilled this task honorably. We are still gathering the fruits of our sincerity of purpose in this direction. We shall continue to do so as long as we keep within this line of conduct.

Theatre Is Show Window

Our Coliseum theatre in Barcelona has been run exactly along the lines above. The Coliseum Theatre, besides a show for the public, is a show window for the rest of the motion picture exhibitors in the country. The Coliseum has been an example to them, and at least forty percent of the exhibitors in our territory look forward to the Coliseum theatre for their own guidance. In my opinion, nothing better can be applied to the show business than the saying "Renew or Perish."

A theatre in many respects can be compared to a news-paper. It has to renew itself day in and day out. You can't give the public today the same news you gave them yesterday; with the ideas and thoughts always in constant renewal, the best exhibition is secured for a successful house. Every decent and therefore clever stunt in showmanship must carry the stamp of approval of the theatre-going public, because we know by experience what the public will do when misled through trick publicity. If our business was simply a passing caravan, then we could safely say that every means justifies the end. But we are in this business to stay, and the showman will have to choose between staying in decently or finding another means of living. There is no place for bad faith in this industry, when you have to face the public.

For the reasons above, and many others which will take volumes to write, we justify the reason why we have been such successful operators in this country. Naturally, the biggest reason of them all is that we give the public, year in and year out—"The Best Show In Town."

Glasgow Paramount Restaurant Opens

Scots picturegoers in Glasgow can now get entertainment from the Paramount Theatre there even while they are eating. The house has added a modernistic restaurant-grill, to which the music of the orchestra and the organ are piped. This gratuitous entertainment does not, however, include a free preview of the film's sound track. But it does include spoken announcements from the manager's office concerning coming attractions, and a few words about the policy of the Paramount Theatre, which has been found to be of advantage.

Theatre Head Gives Information on Exhibition; "What's What" in Franco-Belgian Circuit Houses

by ANDRE ULLMANN
Director-General

If we can't compare by the number of picture-houses the French and Belgian Paramount theatres circuit with the American one, we can compare them to the point of view of the quality and we can tell that in France as well as in Belgium the Paramount theatres show the "style" to all the exploitation.

Located in key-towns of the exploitation these theatres are real "samples" for the rest of the country as they use for their exploitation the same methods and respect the same basis that the American Paramount theatres without neglecting the customs of the people living in both countries.

The man who goes to a theatre attached to the Paramount circuit always attends the best show in town, either this theatre is, to begin by the one which must be named first, The Paramount-Paris lighthouse in the city of light, the Familia-Paramount in Lille, in the midst of the North, the Paramount-Toulouse under the blue sky of the South, the Opera-Paramount in Reims, the famous champagne's city, the Broglie-Palace in Strasbourg, situated in our recovered Alsace or The Coliseum in Bruxelles, the Belgian Metropolis.

Their number of seats varies between one and two thousand and all shows run from two to two and a half hours.

Paris Has Grind Policy

In Paris, the shows run on a grind policy from nine-thirty a.m., to two-thirty a.m. In Brussels, the theatre opens at ten and closes at 12 midnight. In other Paramount theatres there are permanent shows in the afternoon only; an evening show with booking seats policy takes place every day at 8.30 p.m.

The Paramount-Paris was the first theatre in Europe to remain opened from nine-thirty a.m. the day before Christmas till two-thirty a.m. the day after. The non-stop projection totalizing 41 hours. We could make out the number of admission at 20,000 during these 41 hours and the staff won the "world endurance championship." The Coliseum in Brussels does the same as Paris every year with the same success.

Among all six, the Paramount of Paris is the only one to have a symphonic orchestra of 45 musicians, a troop of girls and stage shows.

The Paramount Theatre in Paris

Other theatres only present films including mostly (as well as The Paramount Paris) films of the French production and dubbed pictures from the American Paramount Production. Occasionally The Coliseum in Brussels shows American pictures in original version.

At The Paramount Paris the show usually begins with the News-Reels, a short subject, then, comes the orchestra with an overture or a selection, a talky-cartoon, then the stage-show.

In other theatres: the news-reels and very often two big pictures or, then a few short subjects, a cartoon replace the first feature.

Booking-seats are between seven and 20 francs for Paris and 5 and 13 in other towns, including Brussels.

With the exception of the Paramount-Paris and Coliseum Brussels which give first released pictures all the other theatres begin their show every Thursday.

We can say that all other theatre circuits followed the Paramount theatres for the best way to exploit a picture. They copied Paramount theatres in their advertising and management.

Newspapers advertising is mostly done by way of ads. Nearly all newspapers in France and Belgium issue a "picture page" every Friday.

The police-rules forbid throw-aways giving in the main streets in Paris as well as in Brussels but in other towns we use this way of advertising. In Brussels, the mail delivers them. Nearly all theatres use wireless advertising. Often Paramount pictures are broadcast through the country.

Paramount trackless train is the talk of town wherever it goes. In some small towns we have heard about school teachers giving the day off to the children to go and see that uncommon stunt.

To make a long story short every one in the country has heard about the Paramount organization. The foreigners coming to Paris always pay a visit to the three big monuments: The Eiffel Tower, Notre-Dame and . . . the Paramount theatre best show in town.

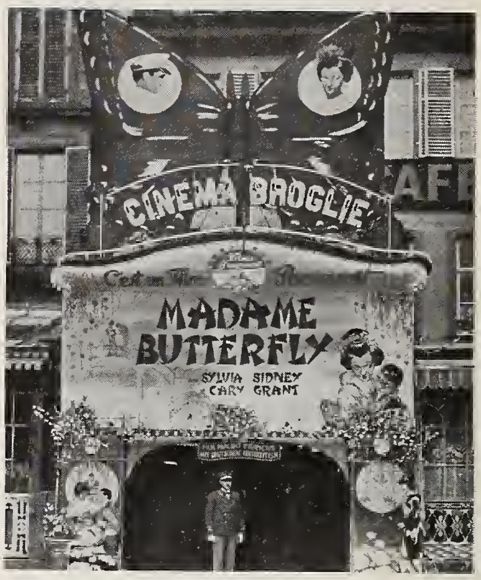
Noel Coward Boosted In Stockholm

Currently experiencing a long-run season at Paramount's China Theatre in Stockholm is Noel Coward's first film appearance, "The Scoundrel." So important is Noel regarded in the Swedish capital that his name is decked out in electric letters, six feet tall, on the side of the theatre. The marquee is flanked with English and American flags, and the audiences are very enthusiastic.

The picture has a much longer marquee name in Sweden than it has here. It's "Miraklet vid Cherry Street" ("Miracle in Cherry Street").



BUTTERFLY FRONT. For his date on "Butterfly," Manager M. Muller of the Broglie Palace, Strasbourg, France, made up this effective Japanese atmospheric front.

European Letters Carry Franked Publicity

The practice of using meter-franking machines for cancelling letter postage is growing apace in Europe and is being utilized to the full by film organizations with messages to offer. Paramount is a steady user of this medium, employing both silhouette designs of stars and the company trade mark.

A current example, franked in red ink, is in from Berlin with a message concerning "Die Spanische Tanzerin," the Marlene Dietrich film made and released in this country under the title "The Devil Is a Woman."

Another example, from Budapest, carries simply the four Paramount names which mean the most in that part of the world. They are De Mille, Lubitsch, Dietrich, Kiepura.

Paramount Theatre Part of Sao Paulo Civic Development

by JOHN L. DAY, JR.

General Manager, Paramount, South America

To Sao Paulo in Brazil belongs the distinction of possessing the only Paramount-owned theatre in the entire South American continent. The thriving coffee city acquired the theatre in the midst of a great campaign of civic development, and South America thereby secured a film theatre built to conform with prevailing American standards and capable of all of the performances of a film house in the United States.

Sao Paulo's Paramount began to take shape just after the great revolutionary development of sound films and thus with its completion was the most up-to-the-moment photoplay theatre on the continent, and one of the finest in the world. Given this staff of leadership it has consistently kept pace with the world not only in projection and presentation, but in all forms of publicity and exploitation.

We are extremely proud of the fact that the Paramount Theatre has become a national institution in Brazil, one of the first places to be seen by visitors to Sao Paulo.

Knitting Wool Giveaways In Poland for Dietrich

Polish wool-manufacturing firm tied in with Paramount for the release of Dietrich's "The Devil Is A Woman" by first of all naming their wool "Marlena" in honor of the star. They then announced prizes of admission tickets for the skein wrappers, the tickets being good for certain performances at the first run theatre showing the film.

Elaborate window displays announcing the stunt were also prepared, and an item of major importance is the fact that the wool manufacturers bore the total expense.

U. S. Ad Slants Moulded to Fit Swedish Angles

by CARL P. YORK

Managing Director, China Theatre, Stockholm

In the China Theatre's seven years of life (it opened in 1928 for Svensk Filmindustri) we have sought to make every individual presentation of film and stage show a self-contained entertainment. The house has shown more than 80% of Paramount product since its inauguration as a film show-window for the entire Scandinavian territory, therefore it has been of the utmost importance that every presentation be in the mood of the picture.

To this end we have drawn liberally on the ever-informative columns of Motion Picture Herald and other publications in addition to the channels of our own organization's publicity, and have moulded the best of the material to our local needs.

The China Theatre is amply staged for presentations and we have used distinctive prologs whenever the occasion has demitted distinctive title announcements from manded. The exterior of the house has pertime to time (as in the case of "The Devil Is a Woman," illustrated herewith).

The clientele of the China Theatre is an extremely high-class one. They heavily patronized "Private Worlds" for a season of three weeks, and at the time of this writing they are loudly acclaiming Noel Coward's "The Scoundrel."

We sincerely believe that the Scandinavian send-off which the China gives every picture presents the film with the sincerest aid it can have.

NEWS NOTES FROM CHICAGO SECTOR

CONFERRING with the new president of United Artists—Mary Pickford, to you—we learned that she will return to the Coast from New York the last of October to get things started on her new picture, which she is making with Jesse L. Lasky. It probably will be a French romantic—comedy starring Francis Lederer. Mr. Lasky bought the play while in Europe. "Casanova" is being prepared by the Pickford-Lasky unit, but Miss Pickford was not sure that it would be made this season. Production on the first picture is to start December 15.

Speaking of Jesse Lasky reminds us that he is one of filmdom's busiest men. He arrived in Chicago from Montreal on Friday night, left Saturday noon by plane for Albuquerque where he met Mary Pickford. He returned as far as Chicago with her and then left an hour after his arrival here, via the Chief, for the coast. That's traveling.

The early part of the week was a busy one for celebrity stopovers here. In addition to Miss Pickford and Mr. Lasky, among those here waiting to catch the Chief, the Century, or United Airliners were: Max Reinhardt, Mary Astor, Chester Morris, Joan Bennett, Thomas Meighan, Louella Parsons, Joseph M. Schenck, Merian C. Cooper, Dorothy Jordan, Al Lichtman and Al Jolson.

Great States—Alger Deal

A deal to end years of bitter rivalry between two Illinois theatre circuits is now being consummated between Great States and Alger. A pooling deal involves five theatres, the Majestic, La Salle and Roxy in La Salle and the New Star and Peru, in Peru. The new company would be known as La Salle-Peru Theatres, Inc., with E. E. Alger, president; Jules Rubens, vice-president; Abner Kline, secretary, and E. H. Upton, treasurer.

The Rialto theatre, burlesque house, is doing a terrific business. The stage shows are being given special attention and many of the production numbers are on a par with those offered at other loop houses. Comedy dialogue has been cleaned up a great deal and this helps, according to reports from those in charge. The girls in the company are younger and prettier than the usual burlesque type and this too is one of the reasons why the house is packed five times a day at good prices. The Star and Garter, deluxe burlesque house on the west side of town, folded after three weeks.

Nate Blumberg, RKO theatre executive, was here over the weekend looking after business. He is making a tour of midwestern key cities.

Max Goldstein, a motion picture executive in Chicago twenty years ago, was a visitor to the HERALD offices this week. He is back in Chicago after several years' absence.

PIONEER SOUTH SIDE HOUSE GOING MODERN

One of the oldest houses on the South Side will soon be dressed up in the most modern fashion. The Drexel, at 858 E. 63rd St., will be thoroughly remodeled, according to Max Gumbiner and Art Young, the owners.

Ted Morris, manager of the houses, said that a new front will be installed, a new boxoffice, a larger lobby, the latest lighting fixtures and all new carpeting. In addition, some space adjoining the theatre has been rented and a ladies' lounge will be built. The work will take about 30 days.

A change in plans puts Paramount's "The Crusades" into the Roosevelt following "Broadway Melody of 1936," which is doing record-breaking business. "The Crusades" was slated to go into the United Artists at a $1 top. This price will hold for the Roosevelt.

Raymond Kenny, chief of service at the Capitol gets the assistant's job at the West Englewood. Vance Schwartz, assistant at the West Englewood, goes to the Capitol in a similar capacity.

Emma Abplanalp, Film Board secretary, spent the weekend in Indianapolis attending her sister's wedding and visiting with her family.

Michael Romano, raven haired assistant state's attorney and one time legal counsel for Valentino, has been signed by Universal and is coastward bound to start a film career. SMASH HIT

JUDGE Super X Negative solely on the basis of its reception by users. Placed on the market only a few months ago, it is already being employed in the majority of feature productions, as well as for various purposes of a special nature. Either of its striking advantages... greater speed, generally improved photographic quality... would have justified this swift, widespread adoption. Verdict of the industry: a smash hit. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

This is how the New Omaha Theatre in Omaha, Neb , looked before having its "face lifted" by the installation of a new Pittco Theatre Front.

A modern, good-looking Pittco Theatre Front is one of the best means on record of getting people to patronize your theatre. It catches the eye, arouses the interest, issues a special invitation to every potential movie-goer that passes. And consequently, it increases patronage, boosts your profits . . . usually so materially that the new front soon pays for itself.

Pittco Store Front Products, already widely and successfully used in the store front field, have been found by theatre proprietors to be equally successful when applied to theatre remodeling. Why not investigate them for your theatre? If necessary, you can obtain financial help in remodeling (up to $50,000) by applying to your local lending institution under the National Housing Act. We recommend that you retain an architect to design your new front . . . and our staff of store front experts will gladly cooperate with him in design and proper application of Pittco Store Front Products.

Do you want an idea of Pittco Theatre Front costs? Complete information? Illustrations of how Pittco-remodeling has helped the business of other theatres and stores? Sign and mail the coupon below for our free booklet . . . today!

Buying Electric Power for the Theatre

1.—THE FACTORS DETERMINING COSTS AND THEIR CONTROL

BY EDWARD B. SILVERMAN

WHEN IT COMES to the question of analyzing power costs many theatre owners and managers are more or less at the mercy of others. For them this article has been written, setting forth in summarized form certain of the major factors bearing on the cost of electric service in the theatre, along with an analysis and discussion of the usual billing procedure, the methods and the terminology used by various utilities. Knowledge of these items is of practical value for every theatre operator and manager anxious to get as much service value as possible from every electric dollar paid out, and eager to take every advantage of the electric service he buys to attract more business.

It is a fact that there still exists a very definite lack of detailed knowledge in the theatrical world as to the items that go into the dollar paid out for electric service. Quite generally it is unknown whether or not the maximum service value is being secured from the expenditure, whether operating routine is as efficient as it might be, whether the best rate is being applied, and finally, whether by change in operation, style of equipment or otherwise, electric cost reductions can be brought about.

The electric utility business, like the theatre, has over a period of years developed a rather specialized language which, while perfectly plain to an electrical engineer or one directly associated with the industry, often is Greek to the theatre owner.

With a definite knowledge of operating data indicated by such terms, evaluated for the particular situation under observation, along with complete details of existing and proposed electric service usage and costs, as well as the operating characteristics of the load obtained by recording meters showing actual use for every minute of typical maximum, minimum and average usage days, it is a relatively simple matter to determine the efficiency of electric service as being used and to compare results with those being obtained elsewhere. In connection with the latter item—comparative results—care must be taken that local conditions be reasonably evaluated so as to avoid misleading and mistaken "yardstick" conclusions.

With this in mind, the following summary of common terms has been prepared.

Power and Energy—

1. Kilowatt or horsepower.
2. Kilowatt hour.

Billing Procedure—

1. Demand load—either in kilowatts or horsepower.
2. Connected load—either in kilowatts or horsepower.
3. Kilowatt hours.
4. Prompt payment discount.
5. Forfeited discount.
6. Quantity discount.
7. Term discount.
8. Fuel clause.
9. Power factor clause.
10. Guarantees.

Other Terms—

1. Demand factor.
2. Diversity factor.
3. Load factor.
4. Power factor.
5. Delivery voltage.
6. Seasonal service.
7. Short term service.

Principal Rate Forms—

1. Flat rates.
2. Straight-line meter rates.
3. Step meter rates.
4. Block meter rates.
5. Demand and block rates.

First set up your own records so that they show the facts. Most existing records of theatre electric service cost and use are not designed to give a complete over-all picture of the situation. With this in mind, it is suggested that records be set up so that a relatively complete history of the case is always available to executives for study. Such a record might be set up as shown in Figure 1. A further record of installed lighting and power load that should be periodically checked is illustrated in Figure 2.

DEFINITIONS

In order to "translate" the above utility terminology, as well as to point out its specific bearing on the cost and application of electric service, the following explanations and suggestions are submitted.

POWER AND ENERGY. Power is the rate at which work is done. The unit of power is the watt, defined as the power developed when a steady current of one ampere is caused to flow by a difference of potential of one volt. As the value of one watt is very small and inconvenient to denote the power of equipment in commercial use, the practical unit of power is the kilowatt (1,000 watts).

The unit of energy is the kilowatt-hour and is the product of power in kilowatts, and time in hours: An electric company makes power available to a customer by connecting its wires to the energy consuming devices of the customer, but no energy is used until the customer actually makes use of this available power through a period of time.

In this connection, the term power should not be confused with a similar term in common use to designate the use of electric service for the operation of motors, as contrasted with that of service for lighting and heating. One of the most frequent errors in the use of electrical terms is to use the word kilowatt when the speaker means kilowatt hour. Power and energy in kilowatts and kilowatt hours are, respectively, the principal units by which charges are made in rates.

CONNECTED LOAD. Electrical equipment is rated by the manufacturer according to its capacity; in other words, the power required to operate it; or in the case of motive equipment, the power it can produce. Such ratings are usually expressed in watts, kilowatts, or horsepower, although they are sometimes given in other terms. The sum of the ratings of all electric energy consuming devices—lights, motors, heating devices, etc.—is known as the connected load.

DEMAND LOAD. The maximum power required at a single time is known as the demand load. If the entire connected load were all operated at full load capacity, the connected load would be equivalent to the demand load, but this rarely happens except in installations of one or a small number of electrical devices.

The demand load is measured by instruments called demand meters. These meters are set to register the average demand for a definite period of time, the most common period being fifteen minutes. In this connection it should be noted that the demand figure so recorded—for example, 100 kilowatts or horsepower—may not be the maximum momentary power requirement during the period, but is the average. To cite an extreme example: if 200 kilowatts of power were used for 7½ minutes of the 15-minute period and none the balance, the average would be 100 kilowatts. These surplus and extra capacity requirements are absorbed on the utility system lines and averaged out.

With the continued trend toward larger motors throughout the theatre industry, occasioned by installation of air conditioning equipment, there becomes an increasing possibility of controlling the average demand to a certain extent by use of so called demand limitors, which automatically throw off certain loads when predetermined average peaks have been set up after thorough analysis and is truly of operating conditions and needs. Where rate application takes into consideration measured demand load, use of demand limitors should be considered, where local conditions make this practicable.

It is apparent from the above, that in power usage contracts, where charges are established on maximum demands, that the efficiency of operation depends largely upon the care used in avoiding the building up through operating procedure of excess peak loads.

DEMAND FACTOR. The demand factor of an installation is expressed in percentage and is the ratio between the demand load and the connected load. Comparable theatre operated efficiently usually show similar relationship between demand factor and connected load. For example, a theatre carrying a total connected load of 6$$ kilowatts—power, lighting and heating—might show a 60% demand factor (ratio of demand)—that is, the 15-minute recorded demand might approximate 360 kilowatts. Where the connected load is, say, 400 kilowatts, the ratio might be 65%, usually increasing as the connected load decreases.

Such rule-of-thumb checks give a quick estimating factor for indicating whether something is radically wrong with efficiency of operation insofar as building up peak demands is concerned. Such factors must be considered with full knowledge of existing conditions prior to final statement as to whether or not the operation is completely out of line with the practice that is usually followed.

LOAD FACTOR is expressed in percent and is the ratio of the average demand load during a certain interval of time to the maximum demand load established during that interval. For example, a theatre using 2,400 kilowatt-hours in 24 hours has an average load during that time of 100 kilowatts. If the maximum demand load during that day was 200 kilowatts, his daily load factor would be 100 divided by 200, or 50%.

This same method of reasoning applies to monthly and annual load factor. For example, in the latter case, a theatre having a maximum 15-minute power requirement of 287 kilowatts, used 771,700 kilowatt-hours per year. Then the average demand is 771,700 ÷ 8,760 (hours per year) = 88 KW, and the annual load factor is 88 ÷ 287, or 30.7%. Usual theatre annual load factors in various parts of the country range from 16% to 35%, dependent on connected load, type of connected load, climatic conditions, location and operating units.

POWER FACTOR. This is expressed in percentage and is the ratio between actual and apparent power. Actual power is measured in terms of kilowatts, and apparent power in terms of kilovolt-amperes. Where the power factor is less than 100%, the current (amperes) is greater than is necessary to perform useful work, but must be supplied. The subject is complicated and a book could be written about it alone. A frequent homely analogy to illustrate power factor is a glass of beer—now with us again—consisting of part beer and part foam. The power factor of a glass of beer is the ratio of the real beer in the glass to the full capacity of the glass. As in the case of electric service supply where power factor is low—less beer—it still is necessary to supply the entire glass; so, too, must generators, wire, etc., be supplied. With this in mind there is usually reference to power factor in electric rates and adjustment made, either plus or minus, depedent on the power factor of the operating load.

DELIVERY VOLTAGE. This is the voltage at which the power is made available to the theatre. Various terms not infrequently used are "primary" and "secondary" voltage, primary voltage being that at the input or powerhouse side of the trans-

MAKING THE DEAFENED PATRONS AGAIN

2.—Selling the Service

Setting forth major considerations in merchandising and administering group hearing facilities—concluding a series

THE JOB OF selling special sound facilities to the people of a community who have impaired hearing may be divided into two functions: making them continually aware of these facilities, and so installing and administering the apparatus that they are conveniently and inconspicuously accessible.

In both, the method must be nicely adjusted to the sensitiveness of most of these people with respect to their affliction. Many people with hearing noticeably impaired have gone through life without admitting it, avoiding, on some spurious pretext, situations in which their deficiency might be revealed. But even among those who, because concealment is impossible or because they have philosophically accepted their condition, are quite frank about it in public, must be approached with due regard for the fact that at least they do not want themselves pointed out as being different from the normal. This matter of delicacy is so important to the merchandising of hearing devices in the theatre that it may be well to repeat here a few words on this point from a recent article on the subject by Rupert Hughes, the writer, who has been deafened for years.

"I can usually hear music because the sound is sustained and usually amplified, but I was losing the precious privileges of the theatre. . . . I would spend a good deal of money on equipment and wait till the house was dark before I would slip the earpiece into my ear. I would snatch it out again as the lights went up. I could not have been more ashamed of being caught in my underwear."

Mr. Hughes, being a rather frank interpreter of life anyway, ultimately overcame his "shame," and there is every reason to believe that just as most people have now come to accept devices for strengthening their vision, so, too, will they pay little attention to hearing aids. Until that time comes, however, those with defective hearing must be regarded as being peculiarly sensitive concerning their affliction.

This calls for "exploitation" methods almost precisely opposite those usually employed by the theatre. Quietness is probably the guiding thought. Inquiries among theatres which have had hearing equipment for some time disclose several specific procedures to have been found generally effective. These are (1) to gain the co-operation of the local or State organization of the deafened, (2) to maintain a mailing list, (3) to form a theatre club of the hard-of-hearing in the community.

ORGANIZATION SUPPORT

The national organization, the American Society for the Hard-of-Hearing, which has offices in Washington, D. C., has branches throughout the nation, and is eager to co-operate with theatres. In a statement to BETTER THEATRES, Miss Betty C. Wright, head of the national society, gives these assurances:

"The American Society for the Hard-of-Hearing is vitally interested in modern developments improving the status of the hard-of-hearing. The progress being made in the field of group hearing aid equipment is hailed with delight by all who believe in rightful opportunities for those with failing ears.

"The national organization has noted the effects of the rapid transition to the talkies upon the hard-of-hearing. When sound pictures came, many of them felt the withdrawal of perhaps the one form of entertainment in which those with dull ears were on equal footing with those of normal hearing. There was a consequent feeling of resentment and of being left out of things.

"Theatres noted the box office effect of this. It is estimated that there are approximately ten million people in the United States with impaired hearing. This number is worthy of consideration from a financial standpoint alone.

"I have noted with gratitude that some theatres in various cities are installing up-to-date equipment for the use of the hard-of-hearing. Science has made it possible for them to hear sound pictures and again they have a feeling of being with the crowd. With the aid of artificial devices that bring to them the gift of sound, they enjoy pictures."

Thus there is a ready-made movement for the theatre operator to take advantage of in an effort to restore to his business a sizeable patronage which became lost to it with the coming of sound.

TRAILERS, LETTERS, ETC.

Local and State organizations, which sponsor many activities among the deafened, will aid making direct contacts with members living within the drawing area of the theatre. Augmenting this effort, or in lieu of such assistance, the introduction of hearing facilities can proceed through the use of dignified program and advertising announcements and trailers. These should explain as casually and as briefly as possible, just how and where the headsets may be procured. With a beginning made, a mailing list can be developed and continually added to.

Such a list represents the chief method employed at the Music Hall in Rockefeller Center. There, although no charge is made for use of the headsets, a deposit is required the first time. The patron signs a receipt, including his or her address, giving the theatre a permanent record. Then a few days later the patron receives a letter from the theatre, stating that the patron is welcome to use of the hearing facilities at any time without making any deposit. This has the touch of personal interest and a loyal friend of the theatre is made.

Some theatres have found special performances at convenient times other than those of the regular shows, to be an effective means of publicizing group hearing facilities. Attracted to the theatre in this manner, the deafened bear it in mind when they have opportunities to join friends or other members of the family with normal hearing in going to the theatre.

LOCATION OF CHAIRS

Important to the merchandising of this equipment, because it determines the convenience and effectiveness with which it may be used, is the location of the chairs so wired. In a recent survey made by the RCA Manufacturing Company, however, there was a variety of opinion on this point. The theatre operator naturally prefers to wire chairs that are less desirable to his regular patrons—those nearest the screen or at the extreme sides. In this connection it should be remembered that the deafened patron does not necessarily go to the theatre alone or only with persons similarly afflicted. Certainly to be avoided is the isolation of an entire block of wired chairs in some one part of the seating area. This leads to the conspicuousness that is to be carefully avoided.

Perhaps the most effective plan places the wired chairs in successive or alternate rows, either directly in front of each other, or in a diagonal line. Double taps can be made at each point of a single channel for the wiring of chairs in pairs, thus permitting two deafened persons to sit together or with one or more of normal hearing.

Where possible, it is better to have an usher plug in the headset. Some theatres provide for the reserving of wired chairs by telephone, and where loges are wired, this system has been found best.

MODERNE IN A THEATRE FOR A NEIGHBORHOOD

[The following description of the Plaza theatre in Oklahoma City has been prepared by the architect, Robert O. Boller, of Kansas City.—THE EDITOR.]

THE PLAZA Theatre in Oklahoma City, a one-floor house located at Sixteenth Street and Gatewood Avenue, is one of a series of motion picture playhouses opened in the State capital by Standard Theatres. This newest showhouse offers family programs in a middle-class residential district, and forms a unit in a shopping area centering about this particular corner.

In leasing the theatre to the present operators, W. T. Laughlin, owner of the building, made a number of shops at either side of the lobby integral parts of the architectural treatment. The picture house is built from an L-shaped plan, the theatre proper, with overall dimensions of 50 feet x 140 feet, being placed on the rear lot. A long lobby, with overall dimensions of 18 feet x 60 feet, connects the auditorium with the main entrance on Sixteenth Street. Free parking for approximately one hundred cars is provided on nearby ground for the use of patrons.

AIR-CONDITIONING

The Plaza was erected under a general contract by the Charles H. Moureau Company of Oklahoma City. It is a fireproof building, using a washed air ventilating system in summer, in conjunction with an indirect hot air system of heating serving the auditorium in winter, the same ducts serving both operations. Heat is furnished by a battery of six gas-fired burners, so arranged that burners are automatically turned on and off according to the severity of the weather. Gas-steam radiation furnishes heat for the lobby, foyer lounge, and toilet rooms.

Floors on the ground level are of concrete on earth, while the floors above this area are of 2½-inch reinforced concrete supported by latticed steel joists. Meeting the requirements of local ordinances requiring fireproof construction, this is an economical method of safely lightening the structure, thereby cutting costs.

FRONT

Approached from the east or west on Sixteenth Street, the animated neon lighting and triangular attraction board which constitute part of the large vertical sign are seen above the marquee proper as dominant features of the front. A narrow sidewalk and limited space on the marquee facing made this position for the changeable letter sign advisable. It is placed so as not to conflict with neighboring signs, and is visible for a considerable distance.

The V-shaped vertical sign of black enameled metal carries the theatre name in illuminated channel letters. The marquee, also of black metal, is banded by aluminum mouldings. The background for these advertising features is a front of rose and buff textured stucco, trimmed with buff cast stone.

A small open vestibule, 16 feet wide by 13 feet deep, surrounds the box office. The floor in this section is of terrazzo, with recessed mats, and the walls are utilized for display space.

Passing into the long lobby, which has inside dimensions of approximately 16x50, one is introduced immediately to the moderne note which is emphasized throughout the entire interior. The large semicircular mirrors, cut by severely tailored drapes of light green hung from the side ceiling beams, add apparent width to the narrow lobby, and promote a feeling of spaciousness in an area which might otherwise have a tendency toward a pinched or cramped atmosphere. The plain drapes, painted designs, unique lighting fixtures of bronze and etched glass on the ceiling and bronze and Lumiline tubing on the side walls, combine with a colorful carpet to constitute the entire decorative scheme of the lobby. The theatre office, 13x15, is on the second floor, over the lobby located so that the manager may have a clear view of the entire stage as well as of the foyer-lounge.

In the views across the two pages the Plaza is shown from entrance area to auditorium. The bottom view on the opposite page is of the lobby, and immediately above is shown the unusual foyer-lounge, entered at one end from the lobby, with the auditorium at the right, and the projection room at the left. The detail at right on this page is of a spandril adjoining the proscenium.

FOYER-LOUNGE

Passing through the lobby the patron enters the foyer lounge, which is done in moderne simplicity dressed with painted designs, a mirror or two, unusual lighting fixtures, and a few well placed draperies of green. Walls of smooth plaster, under the decorator's brush, shade from rust color to canary yellow, each tone being separated from its neighbor by a horizontal moulding in a darker shade. Decorative panels in the ceiling feature harmonizing designs in bright colors. A moderne fireplace dresses one end of the lounge. Separate smoking rooms for men and women, adjacent to toilets, open off the foyer lounge.

An unusual feature of the projection room is its location over the low ceiling of the retiring rooms, so that the ceiling of the foyer-lounge may reach the full height possible beneath the arched roof trusses. The wall separating the lounge from the auditorium has been kept down to such a height that the projector rays pass over it, without interference, to the screen. The room itself is 13x20 feet and fireproof.

AUDITORIUM

Passing into the auditorium, one notices the arched ceiling beams and decorated insulation board treatment without realizing that, besides offering a decided acoustical advantage in design, the arched top and bottom chords of the crescent-shaped trusses supporting the roof give an additional height of 5 feet at the center of the room, and at the same time an equal amount of side wall height is saved.

The roof above this section is a built-up slate surface over 1 inch of insulation board on steel deck plates supported on latticed steel joists resting on the arched trusses. This forms an economical, lightweight, yet fireproof construction.

The auditorium walls are decorated in light green, separated from a plain ceiling, treated in shades lightening toward the center of the room, by highly colored panels which correspond with the panel treatment in the foyer lounge.

The proscenium opening, 28 feet wide, is draped in gold with a green valance.

The Plaza has a capacity of 750. The majority of the fully upholstered chairs are 20 inches wide. Seats on the aisle are 19 inches. Rows are spaced 32 inches, back to back. The chairs are by International Seat Corporation.

ENGINEERING IN THEATRE MANAGEMENT

The motion picture theatre is a highly mechanized retailing instrument. How much of a technologist should its manager attempt to be?

MOTION PICTURES are an illusion, an illusion founded on technical developments and mechanical inventions. Although there need be no effort to turn theatre managers into engineers (and I have never stated that engineers should manage theatres), it is, however, obvious that a theatre manager is responsible for the proper functioning of an assembly of mechanical equipment, and also that in order to do justice to himself and the theatre, it is necessary for him to know something more about mechanics than could properly be expected of the manager of a store.

Another thing about motion picture theatres that complicates the acquisition of engineering knowledge by the manager, is that there are more kinds of engineering practice making up motion picture theatre operations than you will ever find collected under one roof, other than a laboratory. So in order to be a good theatre engineer one has to be pretty much of a jack-of-all-branches of engineering, with the possible exception of aeronautics,. bridge building and submarine work. Knowing how difficult it is for one sincerely interested in theatre engineering and without the responsibility of any one theatre on his shoulders, to keep abreast of developments in the many lines, it has never entered my mind to attempt to develop engineers from theatre managers by any short cuts, series of articles, or royal roads to rule-of-thumb knowledge.

As earlier stated, the present order of things demands that every theatre manager become conscious of his mechanical or engineering responsibilities—and "more than a passing knowledge" means that he must know more than just to be able to distinguish a boiler from a water tank or a compressor from a generator.

TECHNICS WITHIN THE MANAGER'S JOB

NO ONE NEED tell me that it is a hopeless task to try to get managers to understand the rudiments of mechanics and engineering as applied to theatres, because I won't accept it. Managers, on a general average, have acquired a surprising fund of knowledge about projection and sound reproduction, and, frankly, those two branches in themselves are very much more complicated than the rest of theatre engineering. If managers would only approach the remaining technical problems with the same "do or die" spirit with which they jumped into sound seven or eight years ago, they would surprise themselves with the rapidity with which they would acquire a sufficient, practical and workable knowledge of their entire plant.

The best means of acquiring knowledge of any sort is to start at the beginning of a subject and learn the basic fundamentals of that subject. The same method is necessary in order to acquire a workable knowledge of the various branches of theatre engineering. Too frequently managers discount the necessity of learning basic principles, and then they wonder why no one is able to explain their problems to them. Fundamentals must be understood in order to have a "passing knowledge" of any subject. Without an appreciation of the basic principles there is no knowledge. As a matter of fact, even with an understanding of the basic principles, one does not necessarily qualify as an expert. Experience is the result of the practical application of the basic principles to the problems at hand.

STORY WITH A MORAL

A theatre manager recently asked me to explain to him the particular air conditioning plant that he had in his theatre. Among other things, I began to talk about B. T. U., wet and dry bulb, latent heat, water vapor and dew point. He quickly interrupted me, saying:

"I'm not interested in all that, what I want to know is about air conditioning."

That manager certainly did not have the slightest knowledge of what air conditioning means, not even enough to recognize that I was talking about air conditioning. One can't describe how to make cake without talking flour, eggs, butter, sugar, etc. In that same manager's theatre I inspected the boiler—it was shut down for the summer, yet the steam pressure gauge registered four and one-half pounds. Upon suggesting to him that the gauge should be repaired, he replied, "That's not necessary, we never use it anyway—my fireman knows when we are carrying five pounds of steam." There may be some psychic mediums or mystics who are earning their livings as theatre firemen, but I have not run across them yet. So I called for the fireman and asked him how he knew when he had five pounds of steam, and he replied:

"Well, sir, when I have no steam up the gauge reads four pounds; when I have five pounds up the gauge reads nine pounds." That was reasoning of a sort, besides it belied the manager's statement that they did not make any use of the gauge.

At this point I decided to make an experiment. I shut all the valves on the steam risers and all other outlets from the boiler and turned on the city water boiler water feed valve. In other words, I put a water pressure test on the boiler. City water is usually between 45 and 60 pounds pressure, and the safety valve on a low pressure steam boiler is usually set by regulation at 15 pounds, which means that when the boiler fills up with hot water and the pressure rises to 15 pounds, the safety valve will "pop off" and spray water all over the boiler room. In this particular instance we watched the pressure gauge carefully. After about ten or twelve minutes the safety valve "popped off" and the pointer on the gauge had not moved so much as a hair's breadth. I'll ask you: Do you think the engineer or the manager of that theatre had anything like a passing knowledge of the boiler plant?

Instances of this sort emphasize the benefits of boiler insurance and the protection that the public really gets from the inspections by insurance representatives, and the advantage that the theatre owner derives by collecting on his insurance policy when accidents happen. Unfortunately for us, we can't get the same sort of insurance on all our motors, fans, air washers, generators and plumbing systems.

LEARNING THE LANGUAGE

I am sure that those of you who have followed these articles in BETTER THEATRES have become aware of the rudiments of theatre engineering. A glossary of engineering terms as applied to the theatre might enable us to go deeper into the subjects and make further progress. Every branch of business and every profession has certain terms or expressions peculiar to that business or profession. One can only go so far in describing engineering principles and facts by using what might be termed every-day language. The language of the theatre engineer is, or certainly should be considered, standard equipment for theatre managers. In learning the language of the engineer you will, without doubt, broaden your knowledge of theatre engineering. When you are really able to talk to an engineer in his own language, then you have acquired more than a "passing knowledge" of theatre engineering. Though you may never become an engineer, and you may have no inclination to become an engineer, if you can talk the language you will have your mechanical and engineering responsibilities well in hand. If theatre managers understand engineers, from the operating man up to the consultant, there won't be many times when he will be fooled by their recommendations. When managers can intelligently appraise mechanical problems, and with some ability pass on technical recommendations, they will be able to effect savings in operations.

There is a dearth of real engineering ability within this industry, particularly in the exhibition branch. The exhibitors of the country have never sincerely recognized the necessity for really well-trained technical men in their theatres. Consequently the circuit operators and other theatre owners have been at the mercy of outside engineers, who do not understand our business, to tell them what is best.

THE TWO FUNCTIONS OF MANAGEMENT

SOME DAY some smart operator is going to realize that theatre management divides very definitely into merchandising and operation, and he will build his organization around those two functions. Then and only then will we have well-operated theatres. Advertising, exploitation, promotional campaigns, the programing and scheduling of shows are all part of merchandising, and a man who can do those things well has an entirely different sort of brain and temperament than an operating man. But of course there are those exceptional persons who can with ability handle both merchandising and operation.

As for group theatre operation, I think that most of our trouble today is due to antiquated methods of organization. Has any one seen anything different in organization today from what it was in 1925? Yes, we have a few less names on the payroll, other than that the methods are about the same: A manager and a small staff comprise the personnel of a theatre; a group of theatres for a district or division, supervised by a district or division manager. The district or division managers still make flying trips into the towns and high-pressure the managers, who in turn almost become neurotics trying to meet the expected grosses and therefore DUCT HOLES IN WALLS: I have frequently found holes cut through brick walls for air ducts, or fresh air intakes, or for access without any reinforcement being provided. This is bad construction. Walls are made of masonry for strength or for retarding fire, and whenever a hole is cut in that wall it defeats one or both of these purposes.

Whenever it becomes necessary to cut through a brick wall, be sure to investigate to see what that wall is supporting, then if it is absolutely necessary to cut through, do so in such a way that the wall is not weakened. It is customary to reinforce the wall above the hole by a beam of steel or wood—steel is much more desirable. This steel support is called a lintel, and it can be a channel iron, two angle bars, an I-beam, an H-beam or any combination of these standard steel shapes. The steel lintel should span the entire opening and have a bearing on each side of a brick and a half in the wall.

It is generally believed that the lintel actually carries a dead weight of masonry equal to the weight of the brick triangle, the width of the opening with a height to the triangle equal to one-half the width of the opening and, of course, the thickness of the wall. The theory is that without the lintel the bricks forming this triangle would fall out of place, while the bricks above the triangle would form their own natural arch. Lintels always should be installed where openings are cut in masonry walls.

WINTER AIR WASHING: With the approach of cold weather many theatres will shut down their air washers, drain the tanks, and depend entirely on direct radiation to provide a comfortable temperature in the theatre. Moisture or humidity in the air during the summer time causes discomfort. Moisture in the air up to 45% or 50% relative humidity in winter is the means of providing more comfortable conditions and more healthful conditions for our patrons. That is not all. It's a fuel saver and a maintenance saver. Most of the drying out of our theatres takes place in winter. Wood trim becomes loose, furniture becomes loose at the glued joints, and paint on walls and furniture cracks and peels. One of the greatest hazards is the loosening of large pieces of ornamental plaster, which is likely to fall and injure someone.

Air washers, when used in winter, are a humidifying device and they should be used as such. Of course, unheated air below the freezing temperature cannot be passed through the washer without first heating it to remove the hazard of freezing up the spray. Heating coils, of course, can be installed between the fresh air intake and the washer. But the greatest economy for winter operation will come from an arrangement whereby the air within the theatre (already warm) can be continuously recirculated through the air washer—frequently this can be done cheaply.

For winter operation of this kind, the fan should be slowed down so that it handles only about one-tenth the quantity of air which it handles in the summer months. This probably will mean another set of pulleys, and another belt or set of belts. This is a minor expense and I am sure that the cost will be offset in one season in cheaper maintenance, operation and greater comfort.

ERADICATING ODORS: The use of ozone for the removal of odors from air, and the chemical purification of recirculated air, is going to be the next refinement to be seriously considered in theatre air conditioning. Ozone generating equipment has been greatly improved during the last ten years, and today efficient machines are on the market which are low in initial cost, and the cost of operation amounts to practically nothing. These machines can be connected to any type of central fan air circulating system. Ozone is a form of the oxygen molecule. Mechanically, or more correctly, electrically-produced ozone is created in a machine by discharging high potential current between two cylinders with an air gap between the two.

have little patience when it comes to maintenance expenditures or the solving of a mechanical, projection, air-conditioning or electrical problem.

OPERATIONS MANAGERS

Running a theatre is a two-man job. Operators are going to tell me that they have assistant managers in their theatres now. Quite right, but the assistant manager of today is the run-around-boy for the manager. He was selected because he was a good usher or doorman, had lots of energy, and was willing. Well, that is not the type of man I am talking about at all. The operations manager should be mature, with a technical background, working on a par with the merchandising manager, but entirely and solely responsible for the operation and the physical upkeep of the theatre, including building and equipment and personnel.

Technically trained men, due to their methodical thought-habits, have proved highly successful as organization operators. The real showmen then fall into the class of merchandising managers, and if one theatre does not occupy their full time, then they should be assigned one or two more theatres. The merchandising should be held responsible for the grosses, and the operations manager for the payrolls, repairs, renewals, supplies, electricity, and the proper safe-keeping of the property, including funds and box office receipts.

The operations managers, then, because they were selected first as technical men, and second as organizers, could be expected ultimately to know theatre engineering. Their progress would be from the smaller theatres through the larger theatres. Confine the showmanship in the merchandiser, and the practical engineering, organization and functioning of the theatre to the manager who is in charge of operations.

Some circuit owners or operators of course, are going to say this is the same as having two theatre managers with another salary on the payroll. In that case there is no necessity for the assistant manager as he now exists, so a small salary is removed and a larger one added to the payroll. If the type of man suggested as the operations manager can't save his salary in any theatre then I would like to see that theatre.

The livest, most dividend-producing asset of the business of motion picture exhibition is its manpower. At least it should be, since we have such an intangible, mechanical thing called entertainment to sell. If there are cases where the manpower is not the greatest asset, then it is due to poor selection, indifferent training, or cheap labor policies. It has been noted on many occasions, and particularly during a prolonged series of bad pictures, that the theatre group with the highest morale and best trained personnel always does the most business. Manpower does pay dividends!

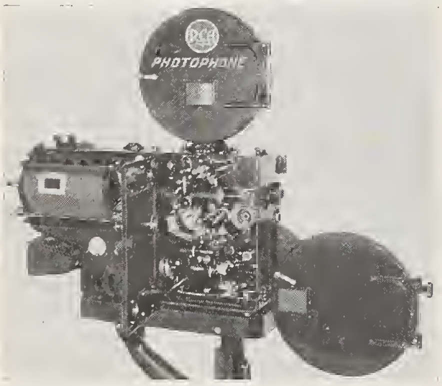
COMBINED SOUND AND PROJECTION UNIT

• A unified projector-reproducer, including lamphouse, on a single casting, has been brought out by RCA Photophone. The soundhead is identical, in principle and method, with standard "High-Fidelity" reproducers, utilizing the rotary stabilizer unit and optical systems. The projector mechanism is the product of the International Projector Corporation, manufacturers of Simplex and Simplex-Acme projectors.



New RCA sound-projector.

The lamphouse is built in, but there is a choice of incandescent lamps or 30- or 45-ampere reflector type arcs. The unit may be had on either a three-point or five-point pedestal.

The lamphouse is 18 inches long, 12 inches high and 10 inches wide. The projector casing is of cast aluminum throughout. The doors on the film side of the projector are so constructed that by opening half of the door, the entire film operating mechanism and sound reproducing system are exposed for threading (see accompanying photograph). On the non-operating side of the mechanism, a front section door exposes the mechanical parts, and the rear section encloses the input and output supply panel.

All belts and chains in drive transmission have been eliminated in favor of gears. The motor is built in. It is provided with a flexible coupling on the driving side to take up the sudden shock of starting and to aid in reducing impulses from the line frequencies.

The shutter is located between the arc and aperture and is equipped with a fan, attached to the shaft, for forcing air over the entire rear section of the equipment containing the lamphouse.

In the lubrication system the oil is not fed directly to the shaft of the rotating part, but by manifolds leading to a porous bronze bearing.

COIN CHANGER OF SINGLE KEY OPERATION

• A new model change making machine, requiring the depression of but one key to make change for any amount up to one dollar, has been marketed by the Brandt Automatic Cashier Company of Watertown, Wis., The machine is adapted to making change for amounts involving pennies, and the operating mechanism is so designed that only the key corresponding to the admission price need be depressed.

The delivery chute is of noiseless type, the coins rolling on edge into the cup. An automatic guard prevents short-changing and signals the need of refills when the supply of coins in any channel runs low. The case is of black baked enamel.

MANUAL REWINDER OF TWO-SPEED TYPE

• A two-speed rewinder for manual operation has been developed by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago, with distribution by the National Theatre Supply Company. The two-speed feature has particular significance with reference to the 2,000-foot reel, which now awaits approval in Hollywood. The starting ratio is 4.25 to 1, the operating ratio 2.75 to 1.

Hertner low-voltage motor-generator and related type rheostat.

The reel is mounted at an angle, eliminating reel clips, as in other Golde rewinder models. It has a milled slot, with pressed-fit drive keys. The entire casting is of close-grained gray iron of weight calculated to carry an unbalanced load without vibration.

NEW LOW-VOLTAGE MOTOR-GENERATOR

- A motor-generator set designed to operate at low voltage has been developed by the Hertner Electric Company of Cleveland. This model of the Hertner Transverter is a result of the introduction of the Suprex arc, although sets are available in this same new model to operate at from 50 to 70 amperes and 60 volts.

The unit is of close-coupled design, the rotor and armature being mounted on the same shaft, which is equipped with ball bearings. The armature and pole structure are designed to eliminate all trace of harmonic effect at the arc. In a statement commenting on the factors influencing the design, John Hertner, head of the company, points out that the purpose was to build a generating set with a voltage output as flat as possible and at the same time quiet in operation, particularly with respect to the prevention of a tone in the arc. He adds:

"It might be mentioned that there are some important advantages in the use of motor-generator sets for projection work. One is low maintenance cost, another is absence of flicker as a result of line fluctuations. In an induction motor not too heavily overloaded, the drop in speed is negligible with a fluctuation in line voltage of 10%, or even more, below the normal. Other converting apparatus where there is a direct connection from the a.c. to the d.c. side, the d.c. drop is proportional to that on the a.c. side so that in any district where the supply is subject to disturbances, the results will many times be satisfactory only if a motor-generator is installed. With careful design, the arc hum is eliminated, since such harmonics as exist are of very low amplitude and are so mixed in frequency that no definite tone is possible."

Along with the new low-voltage Transverters, there has been developed a special line of rheostats. These are constructed of a ribbon resistance alloy wound over cores of refractory insulating material and are very conservatively rated.

INCREASE GROUP HEARING INSTALLATIONS

- As a result of trials in two theatres of the Mortimer A. Shea circuit in Ohio and Pennsylvania, RCA-Sonotone equipment for the hard-of-hearing is being installed in ten more houses of this circuit. Four of the theatres have RCA Photophone, while the others have sound reproduction systems of other manufacture. RCA-Sonotone was also installed in the Hollywood theatre in New York for the run of Warner Brothers' "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The building shown above was erected recently on the outskirts of Boston of Transite and cinder block, with a roof of cinder block and concrete. SIMPLE CALCULATIONS IN ACOUSTICS

By W. W. WALTZ

How to estimate your absorption requirements—the first of two articles. The next will deal with decoration factors in acoustic treatment

THE MANY and varied reasons for acoustically treating theatres have been presented by many able writers. However, there is a dearth of readily understandable material on the "how" of such work. The subject is not necessarily complex, and a brief acquaintance with the simpler details should be advantageous to the great body of theatre owners. Unnecessary terminology, so often merely confusing, will be eliminated.

We can best start by defining, for the benefit of those who may have forgotten, one or two of the necessary terms used in acoustics. It may be well also to point out here that the only adverse condition with which we need be concerned is that known as reverberation; echoes and other effects are not, in general, common, nor are they taken care of in the same way as excessive reverberation. Where they exist the problem may warrant a special analysis of the condition.

Reverberation is the reflection of a sound, or sounds, between surfaces; it is the reverberation in a theatre which causes sounds to persist and hence to destroy the quality or intelligibility of the speech emanating from behind the screen. Reverberation time is the time in seconds required for a sound of specified intensity to die away to zero. Some degree of reverberation must be present. A totally non-reverberant house would be as unpleasant as one in which the reverberation time was much too high; consequently, a compromise must be effected.

Scientific research has proved that for theatres or other auditoriums the correct reverberation time is a function of the size and of the number of the audience. That is, for any given size of auditorium there will be a correct reverberation time for half-audience, and for full-audience. If, then, the reverberation time of a theatre is found to be excessive, for either half- or full-audience, the obvious remedy is in acoustic treatment. The table reproduced below (from the U. S. Bureau of Standards) gives the acceptable reverberation time for houses of various sizes, and for both half- and full-audiences.

TABLE I

Volume, in cubic feet	Acceptable limits of reverberation time, seconds Half-audience	Full-audience
10,000	0.9—1.2	0.6—0.8
25,000	1.0—1.3	0.8—1.1
50,000	1.2—1.5	0.9—1.3
100,000	1.5—1.8	1.2—1.5
200,000	1.8—2.0	1.4—1.7
400,000	2.1—2.3	1.7—2.0
600,000	2.3—2.6	1.8—2.2
800,000	2.5—2.8	1.9—2.3
1,000,000	2.6—2.9	2.1—2.5

For the sake of illustration, let us assume a set of conditions and see just how the procedure for determining acoustic correction is carried out. Suppose that our theoretical theatre is one of 900 seats; the dimensions are, length 100 feet; width 55 feet; and the height—which is not the same throughout the entire house due to floor slope—averages 35 feet. The volume of the house in cubic feet is, then 192,500 cubic feet.

Professor Sabine, one of the great authorities on acoustics, gave us a rough rule which says, in effect, that if the ratio of the volume of the theatre in cubic feet to the average audience is greater than 150, then the theatre will probably be too reverberant. This means, for our theoretical case, that the ratio of 192,500 to the average audience—which we will assume is 600—will be 321, far in excess of the permissible 150. The house will probably need corrective treatment.

We will assume further that the walls and ceiling of this theatre are of plaster, and the floor is of wood; if the theatre is for motion pictures only, there will be no stage opening to consider. Now let us observe the sound-absorption characteristics of a number of materials and other elements of the theatre:

TABLE II—SOUND ABSORPTION

	Per Square Foot
Concrete	0.015
Glass	0.03
Marble	0.01
Open window	1.00
Plaster	0.033
Stage opening (depending on furnishing)	0.25-0.40
Ventilators (50% open space)	0.50
Wood	0.03
	Per Seat
Seats, wood	0.1
Seats, upholstered (depending on material)	1.0-2.5
Seats, leather over hair padding	3.0
Seats, damask over hair padding	2.3
	Per Person
Audience	4.7

The exact method of carrying out the initial calculations is tabulated below; it will be seen that the problem thus far is simply one of obtaining some areas and multiplying them by some appropriate factor, which is found in Table II.

SAMPLE CALCULATION

(1) Volume of theatre (length times width times average height): 100 x 55 x 35 equals 192,500 sq. ft.
(2) Area of wood floor (length times width): 100 x 55 equals 5,500 sq. ft.
(3) Area of one side wall (length times average height): 100 x 35 equals 3,500 sq. ft.
(4) Area of one end wall (width times average height): 55 x 35 equals 1,925 sq. ft.
(5) Area of ceiling (same as floor): 100 x 55 equals 5,500 sq. ft.
(6) Total area of plaster surface: (5) plus twice (3) plus twice (4) equals 16,350 sq. ft.
(7) Absorption of wood floor (5,500 x 0.03)—165.
(8) Absorption of walls and ceiling (16,350 x 0.033)—540.
(9) Absorption of 450 seats (450 x 0.1) —45.

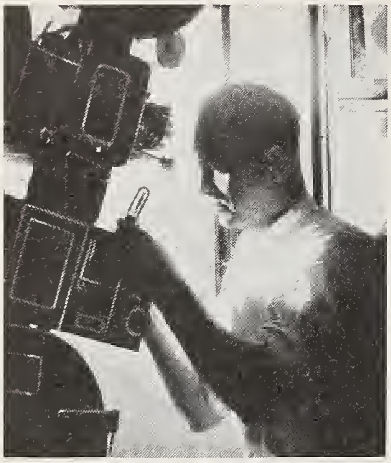
Operators Let Us Help You



General Scientific Corporation manufactures the famous Lumotron Photo-Electric Cells and the widely-used Graf Projection Lenses. Our experience with problems of both sound and picture projection is broad and practical. We welcome an opportunity to assist in solving any difficulties you may have.

Lumotron Cells

When a projection machine is equipped with Lumotron photo-electric cells, you know that every cell will give exactly the same sound output. Amplifier adjustments are minimized. And you will have no more embarrassing trouble from differences in sound intensity when fading from one projector to another.

Only Lumotrons give you this security. For only Lumotron Tubes are available in "Matched Output." An exclusive process enables us to record the performance of every cell. And all cells on each individual order and any subsequent order will have identical performance characteristics.

Graf Lenses

The highest grade projection lens is the Graf Super Lumo which is made in half size (series 2) and quarter size (series 1). These lenses represent an improvement on the Petzvall system and they have been developed and patented entirely by Graf opticians. Their advantage is due to a short back focus which results in collecting all of the light emitted through the gate and transmitting it to the screen with practically no loss.

High quality Graf lenses are also available for projectors designed for the Petzvall type lens. They are manufactured to the highest degree of efficiency permitted by this optical system and are furnished in quarter size (series 1) and eighth size (series 0).

Lens Repairs

To complete the service in this field of optics, General Scientific repairs, reconditions and changes the focal length of projection lenses of every type. Hundreds of lenses considered useless by their owners have been reconditioned in the Graf Service Department and returned in condition to give new lens service.

General Scientific products are distributed by leading theatre supply dealers, or write to us at 4829 S. Kedzie Ave., Department 1013, Chicago.

(10) Absorption of 450 persons (450 x 4.7)—2,115.
(11) Absorption of 900 persons (900 x 4.7)—4,230.
(12) Total absorption for half-audience: (7) plus (8) plus (9) plus (10) equals 2,865.
(13) Total absorption for full-audience: (7) plus (8) plus (11) equals 4,935.

In order to determine from these data the reverberation time, we shall make use of a very simple equation. This equation states, in effect, that the reverberation time in seconds is equal to 5/100 of the volume of the theatre divided by the total absorption. Mathematically, it is written:

$$t = \frac{0.05V}{A}$$

In our problem for half-audience, A is the quantity determined in step (12) above (2,865). Putting this value, along with the volume of 192,500 cubic feet, into the equation:

$$t = \frac{0.05 \times 192{,}500}{2865} \text{ or } \frac{9625}{2865}$$

Carrying out the indicated division gives us 3.36 seconds as the reverberation time for half-audience.

Similarly, for full-audience we use the total absorption which we found from step (13). Our equation then becomes:

$$t = \frac{0.05 \times 192{,}500}{4935} \text{ or } \frac{9625}{4935}$$

This gives us 1.95 seconds reverberation time for full-audience.

Referring to Table I, we find that a theatre of 200,000 cubic feet—the nearest to our theoretical theatre—should have a maximum reverberation time of 2.0 seconds for half-audience, and a maximum of 1.7 seconds for full-audience. Obviously, our theatre exceeds these limits—by 1.36 seconds for half audience and by 0.25 seconds for full audience.

The next step is to find how much the total absorption of the theatre must be increased to bring the reverberation time within the limits specified. We can do this by changing the formula, which we used to calculate the reverberation time; mathematically, it will then become:

which means simply that 5/100 times the volume in cubic feet, divided by the reverberation time in seconds, will give us the absorption necessary to secure the desired reverberation time. We already know that 5/100 times the volume of our theatre is 9,625; from Table I we have found that our reverberation time should be under two seconds. So, to be on the safe side, we will give it a value of 1.9. Dividing this into 9,625 gives us, as the absorption which the theatre ought to have, 5,065 for half-audience. For full-audience we will divide 9,625 by 1.6, and arrive at 6,015. These values, 5,065 and 6,015, mean that we must increase the absorption to these points to get satisfactory reverberation times.

To find the amount of absorption necessary we subtract our original values, 2,865 and 4,935, from 5,065 and 6,015. This gives us 2,200 for half-audience, and 1,080 for full-audience.

Obviously, we cannot plan to re-arrange the acoustic conditions to take care of changing audiences. The only thing to do —as in all engineering work—is to effect a compromise. So, we will take the average of these two values, or 1,640.

Following these steps, the kind of acoustic material must be selected. Just what kind to use will depend upon so many factors—fire department requirements, cost, decorative effects, etc.—that we cannot go into any discussion of the question in the space of this article. It is sufficient to say that there are many satisfactory materials, ranging all the way from simple "pads" to plasters and tiles which practically remake the interior of the theatre. Regardless of what kind of material is chosen, it will have a certain absorption per square foot (the manufacturers will be glad to supply this information). This value of absorption per square foot divided into the amount by which the total absorption of the theatre is to be increased, will show immediately how many square feet of the material will be needed.

To conclude our problem, let us suppose that considerations lead to the choice of a material which has an absorption of 0.40 per square foot. Dividing this into our required increase of 1,640 shows that 4,100 square feet of this material will be required.

The placing of the material usually follows well defined rules. In general, the treatment is applied across the entire back wall, then extended equally down both sides. Where there is a balcony, the material may be omitted underneath the balcony—especially as the balconies often effectively "shade" the rear wall—and applied on the rear wall above the balcony. In any event, the material should start at a height above the floor which is just at the head level of the seated audience. From this point it can be extended as high as feasible on the walls.

The actual method of applying the material can best be learned from the manufacturer; his recommendations will, in all probability, be made with due consideration of the artistic effects. However, one further word of caution: Don't paint over the acoustic material without consulting the manufacturer or a competent acoustics engineer on whom you can rely.

FHRichardson

A HIGH POINT IN FILM MUTILATION

THE TIME seems to have arrived when something effective must be devised to end outrages against film—outrages, as it were, against the profession of projection and against the motion picture industry. Before me lies a piece of film, of which a reproduction has been made to accompany these paragraphs (See page 20.) This was sent by a projectionist, whose name, for obvious reasons, I choose to withhold.

We will assume that the first outrage consists in the huge triangles, which would certainly seem to be fairly visible on almost any screen. But the next chap wanted to be doubly sure not to miss fire, so he added eight round holes, two in each of four frames, with four of them impinging upon the sound track. Surely with such changeover signals in both image and sound, he could not miss!

But to the third butcher this last seemed doubtful, so he inflicted ten scratch marks extending clear across the sound track and into the picture as well, which would make a total of 17 visible changeover signals and 14 blasts of sound, which latter would come from the monitor; also the patrons would be treated to 14 sound eruptions that would almost knock them off the chairs.

Under present conditions and at this stage of advancment in projection there is no legitimate reason for mutilating film with scratched or punched changeover signals of any sort. Every self-respecting projectionist should make an effort to locate those who still persist in adding changeover signals of their own and to report them to exchanges.

If the theatres in which these preposterous mutilations were made, were forced to pay for the damage done, such practices, I feel sure, soon would cease.

WHY NEGLECT PROJECTION?

A THEATRE SUPPLY company in Canada is sending out a letter saying in part, "Recently a theatre that has shown profits, but which during the past year suffered a decline into the famous 'red' decided to expend money for improvements, hoping thus to aid the box office in again becoming African in receipts color. New carpets, drapes, etc., and a renovation of the theatre inside and out, ran into several thousands of dollars. The sum allotted to projection improvement was just two hundred dollars, forty of which was to be used to refinish the screen surface.

"After long argument the management was induced to purchase a new screen, new lenses and new reflectors. Today the owners of that theatre will tell you, with smiles, that the improvement in projection results is actually bringing added business to the box office."

There is more to the letter, but that tells the essential facts. The $200 out of several thousands for improvements is about the proportion frequently conceded to projection. Entirely too many exhibitors and theatre managers can find money to improve until the projection room is reached. Then—blah! The thing the public comes to the theatre to see, the thing sold to the public, the thing theatre patrons pay their money for, is grossly neglected.

Were I an exhibitor I first of all would make every possible effort to insure production of the very best possible picture and sound. That would come first—ahead of everything else, because that is what the patrons of my theatre would come to my box office to buy. All the rest is incidental, though of course important. Comfortable seats, good ventilation, nice decorations have great practical value, but the effect at the screen, in image and sound, is what the theatre chiefly is selling. Let's put projection on a proper basis in the operating budget!

COLOR AND THE LIGHT SOURCE

I HAVE BEEN discussing colored motion pictures with Mr. Earl Gordon of Akron, O.,who is an expert in both photography and in motion picture-sound projection. He has done much experimental work in color photography, and he said things that, in my opinion, should be of interest to projectionists and theatre managers.

"Recently," he told me, "I witnessed a showing of 'Becky Sharp,' the much advertised color feature, in the projection of which a high-powered, high-intensity light source was used. From this viewing I was led to believe the color values and beauty of the screen image would be much improved by projection with a different type, less powerful light source. In order that I might determine whether or not this was correct, I later viewed a projection of the same production with a 30-ampere reflector type light source. My impression was that the results were very much improved over the first projection. I then secured a print and projected it with a Mazda light source, finding the colors to be, of course, much less brilliant, but nevertheless far softer and as a whole much more beautiful.

"It is my opinion that the use of a high-powered light source in the projection of color over-accentuates their values. They are much too vivid, and therefore unnatural. We do not see such brilliant color in nature.

"As supporting this view it will be remembered that some years ago, black and white pictures were made very contrasty. The tendency later was to tone down the sharp contrast—to soften or reduce it—thus securing not only a picture that was easier on the eyes of theatre patrons, but also to produce greater realism.

"In this connection it seems it might be quite possible, now that color is coming more and more into use, that there is urgent need for some alteration in the high-intensity light source in such manner that the film photograph be illuminated with a truly white light.

"As a matter of fact, it cannot be successfully denied that when raw, white, high-intensity light is projected to the screen it has a blue-ish or purple-ish tinted appearance, commonly referred to as blue-white. This of course necessarily means that we are illuminating various color shades with an added tint that does not belong, which naturally cannot possibly be done, and reproduce the shades of color as they originally were.

"It is possible this fault might be corrected by alteration of the chemical compounds with which the H. I. carbons are impregnated. Also it perhaps might be done with heat-resisting color filters, though that would of course mean some additional waste of light."

It seems to me this argument is well deserving of very serious consideration especially by carbon manufacturers, color film producers and projectionists. I have myself very often observed exactly the effects described by Mr. Gordon. With the high power H. I. light source, the colors are quite unnaturally brilliant. Common sense tells us we cannot have exactly the true color shades so long as the film photograph be illuminated with anything but pure white light. There can be no possible argument on that point.

With a less brilliant light source of approximately pure white tone to me the screen image appears decidedly more beautiful than it does with unnaturally brilliant colors. I'll back Brother Gordon up in all that!

It appears reasonable that the powers-that-be should give this matter very serious consideration. It also seems to me that high-intensity would have added value as a projection light source for both black and white and color if the blue-white tone can be reduced to purewhite. I've seen so many can't-be-done things done through my span of years that I'm not much inclined to agree that the impossible cannot be accomplished merely because some one says it cannot. My reaction now is that they've not tried quite hard enough.

THREE-PHASE ROTATION INDICATOR

I AM ADVISED that General Electric has just put out a new type of phase rotation indicator by means of which the phase-rotation (clock-wise or counter-clock-wise) is indicated. This instrument should be of large value to installation men. It is small, weighing less than one pound, size 3 x 3.5 x 5.5 inches. It should have value in 3-phase testing, as well as in installation work—testing 3-phase motors and meters, for example; installing 3-phase motors.

It employs two neon glow lamps and a very simple circuit that requires no adjustment, may be used on 110-, 220- or 440-volt circuits. Having connected the instrument, you press a button to light both lamps. Releasing the button causes one of the lamps to go out, thus indicating the direction of the phase that is undergoing the test.

SELECTING PROPER LIGHT SOURCES

I RECEIVE several requests a week from theatre managers for advice as to just what light source they should install. Some send adequate information but in most cases I am obliged to write or wire for futher details.

To avoid needless effort a few things should be clearly understood: First I do not and will not give advice as between different makes of equipment. I will be glad to give advice as between types of equipment. Second, to form intelligent judgment as to what type of light source will be best in any individual case I must have the following information:

(1) Exact width of seating space at both front and rear row. (2) Is there a balcony? If so what is the distance from screen to rear balcony seats, and what is the projection angle, approximately; also, height of rear balcony seats above screen horizontal center line. (3) What kind or type of screen will be used, and will its surface be kept in first-class condition? (4) What kind of light tone is preferred, white, blue-white, or a soft light?

You may wonder what some of these things have to do with type or kind of light source. Let me explain, briefly. The exact width of seating at front and back determine the type of screen surface that should be used, and that has much to do with the light requirement. If a specular surface screen can be employed, much less light will be necessary than would be the case were a widely diffusing surface needed. Projection angle tends to waste light for the reason that if the angle be high a considerable percentage of the light will be reflected downward and lost. This of course is important to the balcony seats, and the higher the seats the more important it is. Hence with a heavy projection angle and a high balcony, a light source of decidedly higher power will be necessary than would be the case were the reverse true.

The diffusive screen demands more light than would one of specular type, area being equal. Also if the surface be permitted to deteriorate in reflection power by accumulation of dirt or by chemical discoloration, naturally there must be a reserve light producing power available.

OPPORTUNITIES IN PROJECTION

JOHN L. JAMES of St. Paul, Minn., says, "I am trying to study projection technique while finishing my school days. I hope thus to prepare myself to enter what I have noticed you term—and rightly, I believe—a profession, and finally do work of which I may justly be proud. But I fully realize there is much to learn, and a long while must pass before that time comes. May I ask of your kindness that you give me some information?

"Recently I overheard sound engineers discussing filters. They spoke of three different kinds; namely, low-pass, high-pass and 'brute force' filters. I asked them to explain what they were, but was shooed away and told to 'go ask a druggist.'

"Now I know druggists have filters, but I also know there is such a thing in sound apparatus. Will you explain them to me? I asked two St. Paul projectionists. The answers were not very satisfactory, though I think they both did try to tell me. I think they did not understand too well themselves. In closing may I also ask you whether or not, in your opinion, there is any future for a young man in the projection field."

A filter is a device containing an electrical network which, when connected into a circuit, will either reduce the power of electrical frequencies that are not wanted in that circuit, or will exclude them wholly.

A "brute force" filter is a large filter, usually employed to reduce or eliminate generator or rectifier current ripple, "ripple" being slight unevenness of voltage due to imperfect rectification of a. c.

A "high-pass" filter is one that either reduces or eliminates all frequencies below a certain predetermined value. It permits only the higher frequencies. A "low-pass" filter permits only the lower frequencies to pass through. Either high or low-pass may have different points of cut-off. There also is a "narrow band" filter having two points of cut off. It cuts off both high and low frequencies, permitting only a medium frequency band to pass through. This band usually is rather narrow.

And now as to a future in projection. I like this youngsters' attitude. His is exactly the right spirit and viewpoint. I most sincerely hope he holds to it. The best way is to have a real, vital interest in one's work, whatever it may be. No man ever is successful in any work unless his work holds his interest. Just what future there may be in projection neither I nor anyone else can possibly say. However, I hold it to be an excellent field for a young man who takes interest in the work, is willing to study, work hard and apply his brains to it. But he must clearly understand that success means work.

Yes. I believe there is at least some "future" in projection for a young man who is willing to climb slowly a long, long, steep hill. It may not be a big future, as such things go, but at least it should be well above the average, in that the work is steady and fairly pleasant as compared with other lines of human endeavor that offer no greater reward.

CAUSES OF 'FRYING' NOISES

THOMAS F. BOCHERT, projectionist of Lancaster, O., writes, "Glad to learn through BETTER THEATRES, of the Academy's approval of the 2,000-foot reel. Let us hope that within not more than one year the 1,000-footer will have joined those other ghosts of the past and be only a memory, at least so far as has to do with multiple reel productions.

"By the way, when you first advised us of the new DeVry steel spring reel my employer agreed to buy a set for the projection room. Believe you me, Mr. Richardson, I bless the day they arrived. These reels will stand a terrific amount of abuse (not that I subject them to it except occasionally in demonstrating their utility to some interested party) without any damage. One may even step on their sides while the reel lays on the floor, smashing their rims flat together. When one steps off they spring back into absolutely perfect shape. No damage of any sort, We have thrown them down, and not gently, on a concrete floor. No damage at all.

"In the August 24th issue, you asked for suggestions as to possible causes of 'frying' noises in sound. Here are a few: (1) Any filament control rheostat that is dirty or corroded. (2) Dirty or corroded tube prongs. (3) Dirty, wet or dusty A-battery tops. (4) Water too low on plates of A-batteries. (5) Charging A-batteries when water does not entirely cover plates and then placing them in immediate use. (6) Grounded output wires in fader. (7) Grounded photocell wires. (8) B-batteries that need replacing. (9) Any plate current or filament current switches that make poor contact or are corroded. (10) Dirty fader contact points. (11) Dirty points on gain control.

"There. That uses up my list, which I trust may be of some help."

Thank you, Friend Bochert. Yours is the first response to my request, and a very good one, too. Doubtless there will be many more later. Such a summing up is helpful to our readers.

SOME RULES FOR PREVENTING TROUBLE

RECENTLY in the "Bluebook School," running in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the question was asked, "What is the best means for insuring trouble-free operation of equipments in charge of projectionists?" There were many excellent answers, one of which is brought to your attention here with the recommendation that it be read very carefully by both projectionists and managers. It is by another Bochert—F. Bochert—of the Palace theatre in Lancaster, Ohio.

"The best way," writes Brother Bochert, "to insure trouble-free operation of projection equipments is, first, to observe the instructions supplied by the manufacturer of the equipment, on the assumption that the manufacturer knows as much about it as he possibly can.

"Second: The life of equipment will be shortened and less excellent quality of production will result if there is too much experimenting with equipments, or any experimenting at all until the projectionist is very sure indeed that he thoroughly well knows exactly what he is about, and at least approximately what the result will be.

"Third: Never use unauthorized parts. A small saving in price may result in great and more or less permanent damage to the equipment.

"Fourth: Do not be lazy and neglectful. Inspect the various equipments at regular intervals, varying from daily to perhaps as much as semi-weekly, according to need. Keep everything tight and ship-shape. Immediately correct anything that may be found wrong.

"Fifth: See to it that all adjustments of equipment and equipment parts are exact. Any equipment showing symptoms of being in any way abnormal must have immediate attention, even though the trouble be but small. Let it go and soon it will be plenty big. Everything about the exciter lamp, its optical system, and the photocell must be in precise adjustment—emphasis on the precise. No filament sag. No coating on exciter globe. Beam at film track in exact focus and precisely at right angles with the line of film travel. Vacuum tubes showing bright spots replaced with new ones. Keep all meter readings exactly where they should be. If any one of them cannot be brought to proper value, investigate and remedy whatever is wrong immediately.

"Sixth: Never operate tubes of any sort at other than their specified voltage and current values. This is especially important with Mazda projection lamps and with sound tubes. The wrong value with the latter will mean damage to results in sound.

"Seventh: Never install fuses of other than specified capacity. If too low they may blow. If they are too high serious damage may be done to an equipment or line they are supposed to protect.

"Eighth: To protect equipments, never operate switches in other than the specified sequence.

"Ninth: Never use oil other than that specified by the equipment manufacturer. Never under- or over-oil bearings. Damage results from too little or too much oil —often very serious damage, too! Never oil 'oil-less' bearings.

"Tenth: Keep all equipments and the whole projection room scrupulously clean. This is of paramount importance.

"Eleventh: When in doubt do not act until you have removed the doubt by consultation with a competent service engineer or otherwise. Know what you are doing before you try to do it."

FILM SCRATCHES MADE BY IDLER ROLLERS

ELMER BRYANT projectionist of Brevard, N. C., writes, "Greetings from the Land of the Sky and from an old-timer as well. Been shooting shadows since 1919. There is but one theatre here, hence no opportunity to discuss projection problems with colleagues in the profession. I therefore turn to you for aid, assistance, help or what have you.

"My projectors are Powers, equipped with the improved gate. DeForest sound. My trouble is scratched sound track when projecting certain makes of green film. The emulsion piles up on the intermittent idler roller and the gate guide roller as well, whereupon there is friction and scratching of the track. It often is so bad that holes are dug clear through the emulsion. You therefore will see how sadly I need your help. Have tried every possible adjustment without benefit.

"Believe the solution lies in lubricating or waxing the films. The Fox films are thus treated and give no trouble. Films of some other makes are not, and believe you me I dread to see them come in the door. I wrote two film producers about this matter, but received no answer.

"Recently in an article you said there was no voltage in or on an open circuit attached to a live power source. Agreeing with you, I laid the question before our local radio club, and what a word war it started! We were about evenly divided. The session lasted far into the night."

Brother Bryant, there is a Powers idler roller that has inner flanges of slightly smaller diameter than the outer ones. If through your supply dealer you will order a set of them, your scratch troubles should cease. I however agree that all distributors should process their film, or have it done. It is unfair to hand projectionists films that are neither processed nor throughly dry, and this is all too often done. By so doing the projectionist is often to avoid at least some scratching of film, for which he and not the producer is held responsible.

CAUSE OF FILM ABRASIONS

ALLAN E. HARVEY, projectionist of Newman, Calif., writes, "Regarding the mysterious film abrasions mentioned in your Comments some while ago, I suggest the damage really did occur during projection, even though the description supplied would not seem to support that conclusion.

"I have myself upon several occasions observed such abrasions, the scars sometimes occurring in the picture itself showing up on the screen in the form of small twinkling stars of white light. At other times they are found in the sound track, where they modulate the beam at low frequencies, as reported.

"I have traced the cause of such scars to a minute burr which had formed on one of the sharp edges of the intermittent sprocket. It also is possible for such a burr to develop on the edges of a certain constant-speed sprocket, though to date I have never found this latter to occur.

"In one instance a two-reel short was received from an exchange with its sound track so badly scarred that the low-frequency noise level was higher than the over-all modulation of the variable density sound track. Such troubles of this nature as I have looked into have invariably occurred on Simplex projectors that had been fitted with 'sure-fit' sprockets."

This communication is laid before our readers without comment, except to issue warning that sprockets should be examined with a high-powered magnifying glass at regular intervals to insure against possibility of such fault appearing. As for that, however, I have many times advised examination of intermittent sprocket teeth under a high-powered magnifying glass at regular intervals, to the end that the exact condition of the sprocket teeth be at all times known.

A LETTER FROM "RECORD-BREAKERS"

F. WAYNE HAMILTON and Kenneth Shipman, projectionists of the Fox Kennedy theatre in Kirksville, Mo., join in the following most interesting letter:

"It is three years since last we addressed you, but clipping from your Comments reminds us of the many favorable comments received from Erpi regarding the non-stop run and service we have given. But we now have an even better report than was made last time. We now feel pride in the fact that we have run 21,736 hours, or six full years, without even one forced stop, using our original W. E. sound equipments, at all times maintaining our routine schedule. We have done this, using the original projectors, favored finally by Midwest in having them overhauled —the first time in nine years of service.

"We now have a new service engineer, Mr. C. R. Butler of the St. Joseph district, who makes us feel he appreciates real effort to give the best of which we are capable, and of careful care of the equipments.

"Brother Shipman and I are still trying to improve our work. We keep a 'want sheet' and ask for everything that will make chances for breakdowns more remote. Out here, relatively speaking 'in the sticks,' it is necessary that we do pretty much all the repair work, and believe me, Brother Richardson, it keeps us on our toes all the time.

"The 2,000-foot reels are O.K., we think, but rather dread their coming, as we know what their use means on tension and sprocket wear as well as you do. This letter is designed chiefly to draw attention to what co-operation between service engineers, theatre managers and projectionists can accomplish."

This communication has real value, though I am sorry to say I cannot agree with all the conclusions of Brothers Hamilton and Shipman, who are members of local union 573, Moberly, Mo., where I lived several years when I was a locomotive engineer. The long non-stop record is, I imagine, pretty nearly a world record if the truth were known. It is very much to their credit. Above all things I must commend their careful care of the equipments and the fact that they are "on their toes." Too much cannot be said in their praise on that score. Such men are projectionists in the best sense of that term. My sincere compliments.

However, while the fact that it was done is evidence of careful, intelligent work on the part of the men in charge, still I don't believe Midwest or any other company should permit projectors to remain in use any such length of time without a thorough overhauling. It is asking entirely too much of both the equipment and the projectionists. In fact, it seems rather evident that projectors should be replaced with new, up-to-date ones quite some while before nine years. In general, I very firmly believe it is a good financial proposition to do so. I hold the more up-to-date projectors will deliver sufficiently better results at sufficiently lower cost of operation (repairs, etc.) to more than cover the cost of their installation.

As to the added tension imposed by the 2,000-foot reel, if proper care be taken to adjust the upper magazine retard tension and the take-up tension, it will amount to but little. It of course will not affect the intermittent sprocket at all.

And now one other thing, but a highly important one. Projectionists like other mortals need, and save for an occasional exception, must have some encouragement if they are to be on their toes. On the toes is a straining position, either viewed literally or by the meaning here attached to it. Most men will not remain in such a position indefinitely unless some evidence of appreciation be shown. They cannot reasonably be expected to do so.

As I have said many times through past years, the wise theatre manager, while he does not "slop over" by praising continuously, is very careful to show sufficient appreciation of good work to cause the men to understand and know it is appreciated. I know my own work through many years has been improved and made better by the friendly, encouraging letters received.

Service Engineer Butler has taken a very wise position. I shall see to it that what projectionists Hamilton and Shipman have said is known by the proper persons. Too many service engineers equipped with ample knowledge and able to do excellent work, actually do great harm by failure to do as Mr. Butler has done, thus creating a friendly feeling and spirit of co-operation between themselves and the projectionists they serve. As Hamilton and Shipman say, co-operation between theatre managers, projectionists and service engineers adds very largely to efficiency and good results. Incidentally, Mr. Hamilton is chief projectionist at the Kennedy theatre.

SILVER AND WHITE SCREENS

N. JACOBSON, projectionist of Montreal, writes at some length regarding screens. Boiled down, he asks as to the relative value of "silver" screens and "white" ones, which is a query reaching my desk quite often, sometimes from managers, other times from exhibitors and, perhaps less often, from projectionists. I shall therefore take the liberty of discussing the matter for the benefit of all.

First of all the "silver" and "white" is a bit indefinite, though it is almost invariably the form the questions take. By "silver" I shall assume a metal or semi-metallic surface is meant, and that "white" refers to either paint, calcimine or combinations of non-metallic reflection surface.

The metallic surfaces usually have comparatively high reflection powers, which may be through narrow or wide angles, as desired. As a rule they produce a rather harsh light tone unless some softening element is added. Their chief point of objection is liability to chemical change after extended exposure to the air. Such change may be quite slow, or it may be quite rapid. Cases have been known where, especially in damp climates, metallic surface screens have been ruined through chemical change (usually some form of oxidization) in just a few weeks. That is, however, extreme and rare. Reliable guarantee against such change for a reasonable length of time, say at least one year, should be exacted by purchasers of metallic surface screens.

The "white" surface screen is usually one having rather wide angles of reflection. The surfaces as a rule reflect well while new, but collect dust and dirt more rapidly than do the metallic surfaces. They are not, also as a rule, subject to much ozidization or chemical change. The light reflected, unless the white is toned by color pigment, is usually pure white, and, if not too brilliant, pleasing and easy upon eyes of the observer.

If the white be calcimine it may be washed off at comparatively frequent intervals and an entirely new surface applied, without (provided the work be well and efficiently done) any appreciable contraction of the perforation area.

If the white be paint, the reflection power (assuming a proper mixture is made) will be excellent, and again a frequent thin coating may be applied, thus providing a new surface easily and cheaply. However, at each application some diminution of perforation area must be expected. This will be but slight at each recoating if the work be well and carefully done, and only a thin coat be applied after thorough washing of the old surface to remove all dust and dirt, thus enabling a good covering with a relatively thin paint.

As to the many and various "patent" white surfaces, it would be quite impossible to comment, except to say that they may be of such nature that the light will be reflected in either wide or narrow angles, as desired; also, we may safely assume the light will be white (unless color pigments be added), and, if not too brilliant, pleasing to eyes of observers.

However, it is only fair to state that like other white surfaces these will absorb or collect dust and dirt and lose their brilliancy and power of reflection with greater or less rapidity, according to the character of the surface and the condition of the atmosphere in which it is used. That is true, and recoating usually is not a very cheap operation. Such surfaces may be cleaned, but not so that 100% of the original reflection shown will be obtained. Moreover, with each such cleaning there will be some added loss in reflection power.

That is about all I feel can be said. It is a rather complicated subject. My own viewpoint is and always has been that a new surface is needed about every ninety days in places where the air is exceptionally dirty—large manufacturing cities, for example, where the air is filled with carbon dust from fuel combustion; that, aside from places where the air is very dry and free from impurities, new reflection surfaces are needed much more often than they are supplied.

SOME QUESTIONS ABOUT DRY CELLS

FROM A COLORADO projectionist who asks that his name be not published, comes a series of questions relating to dry cells, one of which raises a most interesting and a very basic question. He asks, "Just what is a dry cell? Please explain its construction in detail. Is it really a dry cell? If not, where is its liquid? I have torn them apart and could find none. How much difference is there between the voltage of a small and a large dry cell? How much voltage and amperage is it possible to obtain from a dry cell compound battery? Is it possible to make a dry cell combination that will do copper plating?

"And now, Friend Richardson (for after following your writings and your books for many years I regard you as the one best friend the projectionist has, aside from the I. A., of course) here is one I have had arguments about. Were a copper circuit 1,000 miles long completely insulated (could not be done of course, but we will assume the impossible to have been accomplished), would a single dry cell of the ordinary type energize its entire length?"

Answering the first series of questions: Briefly, a "dry cell" is not really a dry cell at all insofar as has to do with it not containing moisture. A cell without moisture would not work at all. What we call a dry cell consists of an element of zinc., usually in the form of a container or "can," into which is packed a moist combination of powdered carbon and chemicals. In the center is a carbon element. The combination is such that when the positive and negative poles (carbon and zinc) are joined by an electrical conductor, a chemical reaction is set up between the zinc and carbon elements by or through the chemical combination, that produces E. M. F.

The voltage of all dry cells is approximately the same, regardless of size. With possible slight variations, all dry cells provide current at 1.5 volts pressure. In theory it is possible by a series connection of dry cells to obtain any voltage that can be insulated. By a parallel connection of cells any desired amperage may be obtained. However, in practice both current and voltage values are quite limited.

Yes, it is a very simple matter to construct an apparatus by means of which electro-plating may be done with a dry battery power source. Secure a suitable glass or earthenware receptacle. Fill it with pure water. According to whether you wish to plate with nickel or copper, obtain from any drug store some nickel or copper sulphate, which is not at all expensive. Dissolve one rounded tablespoonful of the sulphate to each ordinary drinking glass of water in the receptacle. Clean the article to be plated thoroughly and attach it to a wire connected to the outer (zinc) pole of the end battery. To the center pole of the other end battery attach a well cleaned piece of sheet copper or nickel, according to what kind of plate you want. Suspend the two in the liquid, not too far apart and not in physical contact with each other. A coating should begin to show in from 15 minutes to half an hour.

And now comes something for you all to study. I have submitted the last question about energizing to several highly competent electrical engineers, as well as to the Bell Laboratories, which latter is as high an authority as I know of. The latter assure me that if a sufficiently delicate instrument could be found, with a 1.5-volt power source (conditions as outlined) there would be current flow at the end of the circuit. They also say, however, that such an instrument probably could not be found; also, they agree to a statement I made to them, that unless some current flows there would be no possible way in which it could be proved that voltage existed at the line's end.

Then another question occurred to me. I have never before seen it stated. It is this: Assuming a copper circuit charged with a.c., its lines so separated that inductive effect could not exist between them. Now assume this circuit to be attached to a live a.c. power source of any voltage, but so thoroughly insulated that absolutely no current could flow. There then is absolutely no electrical connection between positive and negative. Query: Would or would not those lines be surrounded by lines of magnetic force—a magnetic field? I suggest, gentlemen, that even the best of you study that for a while before attempting an answer. Several electrical engineers have agreed it is to them a new and very interesting question.

A BIG LESSON FROM A LITTLE HEN

SO MANY complain that they have "tried to do the right thing" but can see no advancement in projection, that I am led to print the following verses, suggesting that projectionists hang them on the wall of their working quarters and read them occasionally. They tell very much of the tale of success and failure.

Success in any field comes with, and as the result of, hard work spread over long periods of time. In projection it means constant, careful work. It means study. It means selling yourself to theatre managers in the sense of impressing upon them the fact (it must be fact) that you not only produce results of superior merit, but that you produce them efficiently. In other words, he who would really succeed must "scratch," as did the old black hen, heroine of the following verses. The author is unknown to me. But here they are:

Said the little red rooster,
"Gosh to goodness things are tough!
Seems that worms are getting scarcer
And I can't find half enough.
What became of all those fat ones
Is a mystery to me;
There were thousands through that rainy
Spell, but now where can they be?"

The old black hen who heard him
Did not grumble or complain.
She had gone through lots of dry spells;
She had gone through floods of rain.
She just jumped up on a grindstone
And gave her claws a whet,
As she said, "I've never seen the time
There were no worms to get."

She picked a new and undug spot;
The earth was hard and firm.
The little rooster jeered, "New ground!
That's no place for a worm!"
The old black hen just spread her feet
And scratched both fast and free;
"I must go to those worms," she said,
"They will not come to me."

The rooster idly spent his day,
Through habit, by the ways
Where round, fat worms had passed in squads
Back in the rainy days.
When nightfall found him supperless
He growled in acents rough:
"I'm hungry as a fowl can be,
Conditions sure are tough!"

He turned then to the old black hen
And said, "It's worse for you,
For you're not only hungry,
But you're awf'ly tired, too.
I rested while I watched for worms,
So I feel fairly perk,
But how are you, without worms, too,
And after all that work?"

The old black hen hopped to her perch,
Her eyes half closed in sleep;
She murmured in a drowsy tone,
"Young man, hear this and weep!
I'm full of worms and happy,
For I've dined both long and well.
The worms are there as always
For those who scratch like Hell!"

I repeat, gentlemen, the foregoing carries a powerful lesson to those able to understand. "Scratching" was the old black hen's work and she did her work well. She succeeded, as may any man who has the energy to work. In the projection field, however, the work is largely mental. There is little hard physical effort required, but much hard mental effort is essential to success—that and time. The wide awake, energetic man who really applies his energy and keeps right on applying it will in the end find himself repaid.

Acoustical Products and Engineering

PROPER acoustics is today a subject of outstanding importance in motion picture theatres. Talking pictures require specific acoustic conditions.

Almost all problems of poor acoustics may be solved by applying the proper type and amount of acoustical (sound-absorbent) materials on walls or ceiling. The necessary acoustical correction may be calculated upon exact scientific basis, and precise recommendations may be made from a study of plans and interior furnishings, even in advance of construction. Acoustical materials of various types are available and can be quite readily harmonized with any style of interior.

Advertising Novelties

THE thing to be accomplished through the use of advertising novelties, of one type or another is the chief consideration in their selection. Among the popular novelties, however, which have been used by theatres for stimulating matinee business, building up juvenile performances or bolstering business on week nights are balloons, thermometers on which are imprinted pictures of stars, buttons, badges, pennants, confections, toys, etc. A popular children's matinee stunt can be obtained by giving away a variety of novelty toys. These can be had in boxes containing toys ranging in value from 5c to 15c.

Air Conditioning and Ventilating Equipment

AIR CONDITIONING in the theatre has already arrived at a degree of importance making it one of the necessary adjuncts of the modern motion picture theatre. Because in the theatre people are closely associated physically in great numbers, and for the purpose of realizing enjoyment, the atmospheric conditions of the auditorium especially must not be dependent upon the weather or on any other chance factor. Enjoyment of the entertainment is closely connected with comfort, and the popularity of the theatre is of course influenced by its effect upon health.

Air conditioning does not only mean facilities for cooling a theatre during the hot months, but involves distribution of fresh, clean air at proper temperatures and pressures, and without drafts in the breathing zone. This may mean that the system should be capable of functioning in connection with the heating apparatus as well as with the cooling facilities.

Local conditions influence to some extent the kind of an air conditioning system required in any specific theatre. Some could achieve comfortable, healthful air conditions with simpler, less costly ventilating equipment. Others require more elaborate systems, perhaps employing mechanical refrigeration.

Air Filters, consisting in a dust-collecting material of cotton or other type of fabric or mesh on rollers (for automatic cleansing) or fixed in a metal frame, are designed to filter dirt out of the air introduced into the theatre through the ventilating system. They are not only advised for the complete air-conditioning system, but are effective in connection with a simple ventilating system. Dirty air represents a maintenance problem. Air filters, properly installed, minimize this problem.

Ventilating grilles, which are located at the wall openings of air ducts through which the air is introduced into or removed from the interior of the theatre are to varying degrees ornamental and thus prevent these openings from being unsightly. This was once the principal function of grilles, but today a scientifically designed grille gives direction to the air flow, diffuses the air stream and regulates the quantity of air passing through. Grille design has been found an important factor in minimizing or amplifying the mechanical noise of the system. Thus selection of ventilating grilles has an important bearing upon the efficiency of the air-conditioning or ventilating system.

Anchors for Chairs

THESE ARE KNOWN as Theatre Style Expansion Bolts. In a leading type improved anchor consists of an especially long tapered fin head bolt, conical cup, lead sleeve, washer and hexagon nut. For best results these should be placed into a hole ½-inch in diameter. It is suggested that one use a 17/32-inch diameter drill to allow for wear. The bolt is set head downward into the hole. The setting tool furnished with each order, is a hollow piece of rod, which is slipped over the bolt against the washer, and when driven with a few blows of a hammer, expands the conical cup which spreads out, increasing the diameter of the head of the bolt to the absolute diameter of the hole and thereby allowing no lead to be driven past the head of the bolt, and at the same time expands the lead sleeve into every crevice in the concrete. This feature makes this new bolt hold more, even though the hole in the concrete has been drilled oversize to make up for drill wear.

These bolts come packed 100 to the box, and are completely assembled with the exception of the nuts which are placed in a separate container inside the box. Assembling the bolts in this fashion, without the nuts, saves considerable time in installation by eliminating the necessity of removing the nut from each bolt. After the bolt is securely set in the concrete, the hole in the chair leg, is placed over the bolt and the nuts screwed down tight.

Arc Regulators

AS THE NAME implies the arc regulator regulates the voltage at the arc through automatic feeding as the carbon is consumed and the gap between the carbons increases. The result of this automatic action is a steady light on the screen pronounced superior to that which it is possible to produce by hand. The arc control, as it is frequently called, feeds the carbons in an even manner.

Architectural Materials, Decorative

THESE ARE to be obtained in great variety today, owing to additions made through modern chemical and manufacturing technique. The average person is familiar with such decorative architectural materials as marble, terra cotta, etc. Available now are such other products as those made from glass, chemicals and metals. Prominent among those representing the chemical group are Formica and Catalin, which are known as phenolics. They may be obtained in a variety of colors and patterns. Among the glass products, such materials as Vitrolite and Carrara are colored throughout their composition, while in the case of a glass material like Fyrart, the color is painted on the outer surface and baked in.

Materials made of wood or having the appearance of wood are also being widely adapted to modern decorative schemes. Flexwood, for example, is a veneer available in a number of different woods. Flexboard, on the other hand, is of asbestos composition and is therefore fireproof.

Tiles of ceramic type and also of glass are obtainable for a wide variety of decorative uses in the construction of theatres. Glass tiles are particularly effective in the construction of theatre fronts, being well adapted to novel illumination displays in connection with program advertising.

Batteries, Storage

ONE OF THE principal uses of storage batteries is to supply direct current to the projection and sound equipment —for both the arc and sound system, or for either one. The batteries are of course charged through current rectification equipment operated from the main power lines.

Another important use of batteries in motion picture theatres is in emergency lighting systems which augment the regular source of light power as a safeguard against breakdown of the local system. They are installed for instant service upon such a breakdown, being placed in operation automatically. Besides giving the necessary power for lighting, they are capable also of affording the projector motors power for some time. Prices depend on the nature of the installation.

Box Offices

KEEPING PACE with advancement in theatre design the box office has been developed from a rather unsightly necessity to a thing of beauty, modernly equipped for speedy and accurate sale of tickets. It is frequently designed in harmony with the design of the theatre and the display frames.

Attractive box offices are now available to exhibitors as separate units, which means that a theatre owner may obtain a modern ticket booth without necessarily remodeling his entire theatre front. These new box offices are constructed of materials designed to give life and color to an otherwise drab entrance. While it has been an accepted tradition that box offices should harmonize with the general architecture and treatment of the theatre exterior, development in box office construction indicate that the separate box office can be fitted suitably into any theatre design.

Brass Rails and Ornamental Bronze

BRASS RAILS have many uses in motion picture theatres—for separating sections of the lobby and foyer for proper control of traffic, as a means of protection at the edge of the balcony, around the orchestra pit, and so on.

Ornamental bronze has extensive use in motion picture theatres, sometimes merely decoratively, as in the form of plaques, but most commonly for a combined utilitarian and decorative purpose, as represented by organ grilles and other gratings, box office wickets, lighting fixtures, display cases, etc.

Carbon Savers

THESE ARE devices designed to permit the use of positive carbon stubs otherwise too short to be adapted to the requirements of the projection arc lamp. The technique of their use consists essentially in the clamping of a copper cap to the carbon stub, then attaching it in proper electrical contact to a rod having dimensions similar to those of the original carbon. In this way carbons may be used up to within an inch of their original length.

Carbons

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons are required for projection in most motion picture theatres (all except those using Mazda light sources).

Modern projection demands the best in quality in projection carbons today, and this demand is being met by the carbon manufacturers through their scientific and research departments with products that have kept pace with modern progress.

The newer development of a positive carbon of different core composition than previous types, smaller in diameter, and non-rotating, has resulted in the attainment of a much whiter projection light at low and medium amperages than is obtainable from low-intensity and hi-low arcs. This carbon, used with a negative carbon

Carpets

BECAUSE of the hard wear to which theatre carpets are subjected it has been found that there is no saving in the selection of cheap carpets. Generally, floor coverings and carpets should give an impression of stability and foundation upon which one may walk with security.

The following are standard weaves of carpets, listed in order of price from the highest to the lowest:

1. Chenille.
2. Saxony.
3. American Oriental.
4. Winton.
5. Axminster.
6. Velvet.
7. Tapestry.

Any of the grades from Saxony to Axminster, inclusive, have been used successfully in theatres.

Carpet padding used under the carpet not only provides a softer and more comfortable feeling to the foot but reduces friction and adds many years to the life of the carpet by keeping it away from direct contact with the hard floor.

Carpets also should be selected with a view to the acoustics of the theatre.

Chairs, Theatre

CHAIRS should be so chosen and the seating layout should be so planned as to ensure the maximum seating capacity consistent with comfort, safety, facility of entrance and exit, compliance with local or state building requirements, proper sight lines, elevations and other mechanical adaptations and adjustments.

Talking pictures have injected another element into the problem of seating for higher efficiency, i. e., acoustics. The acoustical properties of the theatre chair are now very important, and for sound-equipped houses upholstered seats have become a necessity due to their sound-absorbent quality. Veneer backs and seats are likely to induce sound reverberation of obnoxious character and may easily mar an otherwise perfect acoustical condition.

There are several things that should be borne in mind in connection with the use of chair covers. It should be remembered that auditorium and balcony chairs as a rule require two distinct and different styles of covers. The auditorium chair should be equipped with a cover which covers the entire chair back while the balcony chair need only have a quarter back. This is because of the slope on which balcony chairs are placed.

Working from blue prints provides the most satisfactory way of assuring a perfect fit of the cover for each chair.

Chair Fastening Cement

CEMENT of this kind is for firmly attaching into the floor the metal pieces to which the theatre chair is bolted. Into a hole made in the floor, the metal piece itself, or bolt for its attachment, is inserted, then around it is poured the melted cement. In about ten minutes this cement hardens and holds the metal piece or bolt firmly in place.

When used in reseating, the old metal piece or bolt is removed, a new one inserted and the cement poured around it.

Condensers (Lenses)

CONDENSERS are single glass lenses, unmounted. They are made in various diameters from 2¼ inches to 7¼ inches in diameter; the 4½-inch and the 7¼-inch are the sizes used mostly in motion picture work. The condenser is located in the front end of the lamphouse to gather the rays of light from the light source, and bend them, or condense them into a spot of light on the aperture. They are made in different shapes, some being Plano Convex, some Meniscus or Moon shape, and others Bi-Convex.

Focal lengths for motion picture work are usually 6½-7½-8½ and 9½ inches; condensers 5 inches, 6 inches and 8 inches in diameter are usually used for spotlight projection.

Curtain Control Machines

FEW THINGS leave a finer impression on the theatre audience than the smooth and silent opening and closing of the curtain. This is accomplished by curtain control machines which operate automatically. The curtain can be controlled from the booth or from back stage by the simple process of pressing a button.

Curtain control equipment consists of track equipped with cable and snaps to which the curtain is fastened. In opening and closing the curtain may be stopped at any desired point across the stage and may also be reversed at will.

The motor for operating the curtain is usually placed on the stage or it may be placed in the grids or mounted on a platform. This permits the machine, track and curtains to be flied in addition to open from the center.

Cutout Machines

THIS IS A DEVICE for making various kinds of exploitation cutouts and lobby and marquee displays. The design for the desired cutout display is traced on ordinary wall board and with this device, the cutout is easily made by guiding the machine over the pattern. A small motor is used and the current from the electric light socket furnishes the power. The machine is convertible into a saw by substituting a saw blade for the chisel to handle harder and thicker materials.

Electric Measuring Instruments

THE DEVELOPMENT and improvement in theatre lighting and projection have thrown onto the shoulders of the electrician, as well as the projectionist, many responsibilities. At their command are factors which make or break the show. With enormous switchboards to control, emergency lighting plants, motors, generators, arcs, dimmers, transverters, magnetic appliances and many other involved and sensitive electrical instruments, it devolves on the theatre to provide adequate equipment for their correct operation. In the list of necessary measuring instruments are ammeters, voltmeters, vacuum tube testers and the like.

Film Cabinets

THERE ARE various types of film cabinets having storage capacity from three to twelve reels per unit of various forms of construction so that the reel is elevated or brought within grasp by the opening of the cover. They are generally of double metal wall construction, so that should one reel become ignited in the cabinet, the others are insulated from this heat, and thus saved from any damage. Some of them are constructed so that they can be ventilated to the outside by means of piping.

Fire Prevention Devices, Projector

IMPORTANT equipment has been developed which it is said definitely prevents a film fire in the projection machine. This equipment is a safety control device, that is easily installed and which is operated on the regular line voltage. The main control unit and dowser are mounted on the cone of the lamphouse and act as the main light cut off, taking the place of the regular dowser. The dowser is operated from five distinct points of contact, covering every avenue through which a fire could start in the projector while it is in operation or at a standstill with the film in it. All contact points are very sensitive, and the dowser is instantaneous in its action, yet does not depend upon springs to actuate it.

Floor Surfacing Materials

MANY PARTS of a theatre are suited to use of floor covering other than woven materials, and often composition flooring may adequately take the place of expensive tiles, terrazzo, etc.

Composition flooring is made by a number of companies specializing in this product, and all have their own processes. It may be said, however, that the basic materials are cork or rubber, and natural gums.

Composition floors, due to their resilience, afford comfort underfoot, durable and easy to maintain. Manufacturers offer them in a wide variety of colors and designs so that it is possible to harmonize them with the color scheme and decorative plan of any interior. Special designs can be executed in practically all of these materials, thus giving the floor distinction and individuality. Among the areas where resilient composition floors may be used are the following: lobbies, lounges, smoking rooms, dressing rooms, hallways, foyers, executive offices, etc.

Fountains

FOUNTAINS used in the theatre supply drinking water to employes and patrons, or they may be merely ornamental. If they are of latter type, they are usually incorporated in the decorative scheme of lobby, foyer or lounge, sometimes in conjunction with a pool and statuary. Those supplying drinking water are of the regular types designed for public buildings and may be head in wall (recessed or projecting) and pedestal types. They, too, are obtainable in decorative patterns and materials.

Automatic operation of drinking fountains is possible by means of a mechanism actuated by the interruption of a light beam focused on a photoelectric cell. When the patron bends over the fountain, the water begins to flow; it stops flowing as soon as the light beam is no longer thus interrupted by the patron's head.

Furniture, Lobby and Lounge

THE importance of lobby and foyer areas in a motion picture theatre for the accommodation of waiting patrons, and the demand of the public for pleasant lounges, bring sofas, chairs, table and floor lamps, etc., into the realm of theatre equipment. Because of the hard usage given it, such furniture should be of durable materials. Modern design has developed metal furniture that is entirely comfortable and easily maintained. The lobby or lounge into which it is introduced, however, should have wall and other decorative treatment that is expressive of the "modern" idea.

Heating Systems and Accessories

HEATING SYSTEMS adapted to theatres are essentially like those for other types of public buildings, but of course the system load factors are quite different because of the number of people confined in a rather small area (auditorium), and the variability of this number during the time period of the performances. Steam heating is commonly and efficiently used for the smaller theatres, but even for these it is of course not amenable to the same control possible with a duct system introducing heated air. In the latter case the fresh air is heated and otherwise conditioned before it enters the theatre, and through the use of automatic control instruments and proper supervision temperature and relative humidity may be kept adjusted to each other for the provision of comfortable, healthful air conditions. In complete air-conditioning, the heating plant is really a part of the whole ventilating system.

In heating systems employing coal as the fuel, automatic stokers not only save labor, but usually are capable of producing savings in fuel consumption because of more efficient stoking. Increase in the use of oil as a fuel has come about as a result of better designed and less expensive oil furnaces. Gas is to be recommended for some localities.

Horn Lifts and Horn Towers

A HORN LIFT is an automatically controlled electrically driven elevator to raise and lower sound horns to their proper places behind the screen. They operate on the hydraulic, cable and drum and screw lift principle, and when the stage is needed for acts, the lift lowers the horn down under the stage. The portion of the stage flooring directly above the lift is attached to the lift, becoming a part of it, and any stage setup located over the lift goes up with it and is ready for use the instant the lift returns to the low level.

Horn towers are structural steel towers on which the horns are fastened. These towers are generally on rubber-tired, ball bearing casters so that they may be moved about silently to properly locate the horns behind the screen. When the horns are not in use the towers can be pushed out of the way.

Lamps, Exciter

THE PURPOSE of exciter lamps is to supply the light energy which actuates the photoelectric cell. It is located in the sound head in such adjustment that its beam of light rides upon the sound track, transmitted or interrupted according to the variations of the track. Lamps, High Intensity

HIGH INTENSITY projector lamps are of two types—reflector type, and condensing-lens type. Their selection depends on the size of the theatre and other local factors. The condenser-lens type (so-called super-high intensity) is generally operated at from 115 to 130 amperes. The reflector type is generally operated at from 70 to 80 amperes. Lamps in the high intensity class are of the larger type or represent other conditions requiring a higher degree of screen illumination.

Lamps, Incandescent, Projection

INCANDESCENT LAMPS for theatre motion picture projection are usually of the low-voltage type for added efficiency and greater source concentration. They cannot be used on the ordinary lighting circuit without a transformer or regulator. The 900-watt, 30-ampere, T-20 bulb lamp usually provides acceptable results on good screens up to 16 feet wide at throws not greater than about 100 feet.

There are also available 1,000-watt prefocus base, and 1,500-watt bipost base, 100-120 volt, T-20 bulb lamps employing the biplane type of filament construction, which is inherently of higher cost but makes possible the requisite source concentration at ordinary circuit voltages and thus saves the cost of auxiliary apparatus. They are preferred where operating schedules are relatively short, and for projectors of the semi-portable type. Screen results equal or surpass those from the 900-watt lamp. The 1,500-watt lamp requires forced ventilation.

For portable 35-mm. projectors there are the 500-watt monoplane filament, and the 750-watt and 1,000-watt biplane filament lamps in short T-20 bulbs with medium prefocus bases. All are of the 100-120 volt type. The 750-watt and 1,000-watt lamps require forced ventilation.

For stereopticon projection there are the 500-watt, short T-20 bulb, medium prefocus base lamp; and the 100-watt, long T-20 bulb mogul prefocus base lamp. Both of the 100-120 volt types employ monoplane filaments.

Lamps, General Lighting

THE MANY TYPES of lamps available today make it possible to have light of just the proper quantity and quality. The types of lamps used to a great extent influence the cost of lighting. Lamps themselves vary in cost. Special, expensive types are often used where the more standard types would be satisfactory. Poor and inefficient lamps use up energy and do not give the light they should. Old, dirty and blackened lamps waste energy without a proper return. Lamps of the wrong voltage give too little light, or burn out to quickly.

Incandescent lamps are usually designated by wattage, voltage, bulb shapes and diameter. The diameter of the bulb is given in eights of an inch.

Colored lamps are available with inside spray finish and with natural colors in several sizes. The natural-colored lamps are specially desirable for indirect cove lighting; the inside-colored lamps for exterior displays and where the lamps themselves are seen.

Spotlight and floodlight lamps have filaments that are as concentrated as practicable, and in the prefocus types, placed very accurately with respect to the base. The lives of these lamps are 200 and 800 hours, respectively—the shorter the life the greater the light output for a given wattage. In general, the lamps have round bulbs with wattages of 250, 400, 500 1,000, 1,500, and 2,000.

Lamps, Low Intensity

THIS CLASSIFICATION is rather general, inasmuch as it refers to all types of projection lamps designed for theatres requiring light of lower intensity. Lamps in this class are Low Intensity, Hi-Low, Alternating Current Reflector Type and Suprex (the latter using alternating current carbons with direct current). All of these lamps are of the reflector type. The operating amperage for these lamps ranges from 15 to 80.

Lamps, Suprex

THESE ARE projection lamps designed for the suprex d.c. arc, which gives, through the use of a non-rotating carbon of specific composition, a much whiter projection light at low and middle amperages than is obtainable with low-intensity and hi-low arcs. At 45 amperes, the d.c. arc has a light intensity as high as 7,000 lumens, as much as hi-low develops at from 70 to 80 amperes, while the low-intensity arc has a light intensity of only about 2,000 lumens at 25 amperes.

condensing lenses. The latter are also used in projection but are placed in the lamphouse and condense the rays to a spot on the aperture. Projection lenses are objective lenses placed in the projector head.

The prime requirement of a projection less is to give a bright, well defined picture on the screen without any distortion or color rays. These lenses are made in four sizes: Eighth, quarter, half and three-quarters (diameters, respectively, of 1 11/16, 1 5/16, 2 25/32 and 3¼ inches).

The one-eighth and one-quarter sizes are furnished in equivalent focii of two inches E. F., to eight inches E. F. The half-size is furnished in equivalent focii of four and a half inches E. F. to ten inches E. F., and the three-quarters in equivalent focii of from six inches E. F. to ten inches E. F. There is also procurable a bifocal projection lens with a range of from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in focal length, designed to eliminate the change of lenses in shifting operation from sound to silent films, and vice versa. All the sizes named are standard. Focal lengths are determined by the size of the picture desired.

Letters, Attraction Board

CHANGEABLE SIGN LETTERS are widely used by theatres in the marquee and have proved especially popular, because of the flexible manner in which they permit billing of a current or coming attraction. Changeable sign letters are generally made of cast aluminum with the letter part cut out. When used on the marquee these letters can be moved to make an attractive announcement. They are obtainable in large and small sizes and, in addition, numerals, characters, word plates and spacer panels of the same character are also available.

Lights, Spot, Flood

ARE MADE in arc and incandescent types for use on stage—in the booth—in cove lighting, and for head spotting. Most spotlights on the market can be used for spot lighting and for full flood. The arc types are made in sizes of 3 ampere up to 150 ampere. They come complete with stand and attachment cord and connector. Within the last year, the high intensity spot has appeared. It is an adaptation of the high intensity lamp to spot and flood lighting.

The incandescent spotlights are in sizes of from 250 watt to 2,000 watt. The sizes usually used are 250, 400, 500 and 1,000 watt.

The small head spots of 250 watts are used for cove lighting or spotting the head of a singer or organist. The incandescent spotlights come either with floor standard or pipe hangers for border lighting batons.

In stage work spotlights are frequently banked one above the other on a stand and used for flood-lighting from the wings. Prices range from $12 to $500.

Lobby Display Frames

LOBBY ADVERTISING is an obviously effective business stimulant and in this connection the use of lobby display frames easily ranks first in appearance. With the effective display frames now available it is possible not only to obtain a maximum advertising value from their use but also to add materially to the appearance of the lobby. The front of the theatre may now be "dressed up" in excellent fashion with these frames. In the case of new theatres it is common practice to design lobby frames in conformity with the architectural style of the house.

Marquees

USE OF MARQUEES BY motion picture theatres is general. They serve a number of practical purposes. They offer theatres an excellent advertising medium while giving to the house an attractive and inviting entrance. During inclement weather they offer protection to waiting patrons.

Marquees are usually constructed of sheet metal and may be obtained in a variety of designs. They are furnished with glass roof or with steel ceiling and metal roof. Numerous interesting standard designs have been developed by marquee manufacturers especially for theatre use. These are easily installed and are shipped to theatres in convenient sections. Suggestions for attractive designs are available. Inquiries should be accompanied by approximate measurements of the front of the building where the marquee is to be used.

Microphones

MICROPHONES in theatres have a variety of uses, ranging from stage program presentations, regular and emergency announcements, to reports to patrons on sports and other timely items of interest. In most cases microphones can be added to the amplifying equipment used for sound-on-film service with little accessory equipment.

Several types of microphones are available. Carbon button and condenser types are most suitable and the least expensive for all-round theatre use. Although carbon microphones may be obtained in both single and double button types, the double button type is usually recommended for casual use in theatres as it gives clearer reproduction than the single button model and costs only slightly more.

Condenser microphones are quiet in operation and are preferred for use in stage

Motor-Generators

MOTOR-GENERATOR sets are used quite generally for converting a.c. suuply into d.c. for the arc and sound. They consist of a motor of suitable type for the service available as to voltage, phase and frequency and of the proper horsepower, connected through a coupling or on a common shaft, with a d.c. generator armature. This latter may be of a size to furnish from 15 to 600 or more amperes, and at a voltage of from 80 to 100. Ballast rheostats are used to drop this voltage to that of the arc, which varies from about 50 to 70 volts, depending upon its character. These generators are designed to hold their voltage very steady regardless of load and should be quiet operating and free from vibration.

The above describes the Multiple type unit which operates any number of arcs up to its full capacity in multiple and is almost exclusively used in this country. Where only two arcs of the same amperage are burned alternately, as on two projectors, the Series type with its higher efficiency can be used and is still sold largely outside the United States.

Organs

ASIDE from detail considerations, the important thing to bear in mind in the purchase of a theatre organ is whether or not the instrument is designed and built to meet theatre requirements. Demands upon an organ to be used in a theatre and in a church, for example, are obviously at variance. The result is that organs for theatres are built along exacting lines, expressly for the work they are intended to perform.

Perfumes and Perfumers

DISAGREEABLE odors are unfortunately a usual concomitant of crowds, particularly in such compact enclosures as the motion picture auditorium.

These odors may be effectively eliminated by the use of highly aromatic perfumes, method of diffusion is the simple one of which are diffused throughout the air. One placing the perfume in decorative cones, resembling a vase, at various places along the walls. These cones are made of clay and readily absorb the perfume, which may be said to saturate the cones, and the odor radiates from the latter to quite a large area beyond.

Another widely used method is to spray the air with a perfume at suitable intervals.

A trifle less simple and perhaps more effective method is that of placing perfume in a disseminator located at the ventilating fan so that the evaporated liquid or solidified perfume will carry its fragrance through the auditorium along with the fresh air.

Portable Projectors

PORTABLE PROJECTORS are motion picture projection machines which are designed to be set up only temporarily and not for permanent installation in a regular theatre, as a rule, although used there. They are particularly adapted for use in schools, clubs, etc., and may be obtained for installation in connection with leading makes of sound equipment or with sound apparatus built in. There is a model with a heavy pedestal for permanent installation.

Semi-portable projectors are standard motion picture machines which may be utilized for either temporary or permanent installations. That is to say, these machines, while sturdily constructed, are comparatively light in weight and may bemoved from rooms or buildings easily. Sound apparatus specially constructed for portable machines is available. Also available are sound-on-film unit projectors of portable type for both 35-mm. and 16 mm. film.

Poster Projectors

THESE MACHINES are projectors operated similarly to stereopticons, except that instead of employing transparent slides, matter printed on opaque surfaces can be projected upon a screen. They are used in the making of posters for lobby displays and similar purposes. The artist projects a drawing or photograph from a press sheet or other prepared advertising matter, upon the surface on which he is to make his own drawing, controlling the image size by moving the projector nearer to or farther from the objective. The system of mirrors and lenses in the projector gives an image of the same direction and proportions as those of the original. The artist then merely traces along the projected lines, filling in the colors as indicated.

Poster projectors usually allow the use of original subjects as large as six or seven inches long by five or six inches high. Subjects larger than that can be projected and copied in sections.

Projection Booths and Equipment

THE PROJECTION room, or booth, because of the fact that it is one of the nerve centers of the motion picture theatre, is becoming standardized. Not in size, naturally, but in general construction, and the high standard of equipment, etc. The projection room, because of the very nature of the purpose it serves, must be fireproof and ideally ventilated.

There are many things to keep in mind in the purchase of projection room equipment. Certain parts of this equipment must conform to the building codes, it must be practical, it must satisfy the projectionist and it must lend itself to better projection.

The design and layout of the projection room should have the careful attention of the architect or builder at the time the plans for the theatre are being prepared.

The desirable projection room may vary in size but to accommodate two projectors, it should be at least 15 feet by 10 feet, with 12 foot ceiling. This size will also care for a spotlight and slide dissolver. By all means toilet facilities should be provided and a shower bath is highly desirable.

NO MACHINE is stronger or more efficient than its parts. Replacements in projection machines are a more important phase of showmanship today than ever before, with the constantly growing demands of both the industry and the public for the best possible projection of motion pictures. Projectors, Motion Picture

PROJECTORS HERE referred to are the standard non-portable machines designed for permanent installation, usually in theatres. It is the expressed belief of theatre owners and projectionists that practically ideal projection is possible with equipment available at present, provided it is in the hands of a competent operator. Modern projection machines are the result of many years of improvement and development to meet the ever-growing requirements for the best possible screen results.

All late model standard projectors are either constructed specially for sound picture projection or are readily adapted to any make or model of sound apparatus, either for sound-on-disc or sound-on-film.

Public Address Systems

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEMS provide a means of electrically amplifying the voice. The microphone picks up the ing to the original sound waves, these "words" are carried through amplifiers to the speakers, where they are transformed into their original physical form as sound waves, only now of much greater intensity than when merely created by the human vocal mechanism. Public address systems are used principally in the theatre for announcements, though it is adaptable to many related purposes. Microphonic attachment may be made at several points in the system, making its function available to the manager in his office as well as backstage.

THERE ARE VARIOUS types of these made, from the 10-inch, as used by film exchanges, to the accurately constructed type used on the projector machines. Some have machine embossed sides, wire welded sides, and still another type has die cast sides. Most of the types offered for use on the projectors have large diameter film hubs, which greatly aid in relieving the strain on the projector as well as giving more even take-up tension.

Reflector Shields

REFLECTOR SHIELDS are themselves really mirrors for the projection arc, but are so much less expensive than reflectors that they are recommended by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers as a protection against pitting. They were developed following the introduction of the Suprex arc, which causes considerable pitting upon the surface of the reflector.

Rewinders, Film

THIS DEVICE is used for rewinding films after they are run through the projectors, and are made in two general patterns, the bench and fire-proof enclosed type. The bench or open rewind is made in one piece types with the dummy and geared end complete in one unit, and others are made so that they can be clamped to a bench or shelf, while some are permanently fastened by means of bolts. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings.

The enclosed rewinds are made in various patterns, both hand drive and motor drive models. The motor drive type is generally automatic in its operation, stopping at the end of the film or should the film break. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings. Some motor drive types also have multiple speed ranges and accommodate either one- or two-thousand-foot reels. One type also has a detachable grinding and polishing attachment.

Rheostats

AN IMPORTANT item of projection equipment is the Rheostat. A rheostat may be described as a resistor provided with means for varying resistance (opposition). The resistance may be varied by having a contact lever or slider moved over a number of stationary buttons or segments between which sections of the rheostat are connected, by compressing a number of carbon or graphite disc or parts, by using a number of levers or knife-switches for cutting in and out resistance.

Safe, Box Office

THIS IS A SAFE anchored inside the box office into which the cashier may drop silver coins and bills as received from patrons beyond what is needed for purposes of making change. This type of safe has been developed as a result of the many "stick-ups" of theatre box offices in which the robber has obtained receipts running into several thousand dollars. It is widely used in several other trades, the idea, in brief, being that with this type of safe in the box office a theatre is likely to lose only the amount which it is keeping exposed for making change.

Box office safes are made of steel and provided with a slot into which surplus receipts are placed as received, or are equipped with a chute through which the surplus receipts may be dropped. Safes of this type usually make possible the lowest rates of burglary insurance.

Screens

THERE ARE FOUR types of motion picture screens. This classification is based on the character of the finished surfaces, as follows: Metallic, Matt White, Beaded and Translucent (or rear projection). The latter type is not in general use, and for the purposes of this description will require no further mention.

Sound screens are of two types, porous and perforated. A porous screen is one on which a reflective surface is built on a loosely woven fabric, leaving the openings in the cloth unobstructed to permit the passage of sound. A perforated screen surface is applied on a closely woven fabric, first making an opaque sheet, which is then perforated with minute holes to permit the passage of sound.

Screens should be selected largely by the width of the theatre and its projection equipment or light source.

Screens are again classified as to their reflective properties into three general classes: Diffusive (matt white), semi-diffusive metallic (silver or gold fibre), and directive (beaded). The white is the only one of the above types which could be used satisfactorily in a theatre of any size, and only then with high intensity projection. Because it diffuses the light almost equally to all the seats, it is a necessity in the extra-wide auditoriums. Due to their higher reflective properties, the metallic and beaded surfaces will produce satisfactory brilliance and detail when used in conjunction with

Screen Masks and Modifiers

LARGER SCREENS HAVE come into rather general vogue recently, due to the elaborate type of productions now being produced which, with the use of special lenses have enabled theatres to present outstanding scenes with greater effect and scope. The many opportunities to use the full screen to give added value to important scenes have brought about the development of the screen modifier, or mask which, automatically operated, permits framing of the screen at any desired size. The screen modifier, or mask, was first used in connection with sound-on-film to compensate for the sound on the edge of the film. This equipment is now being used in many other ways, especially in achieving ingenious opportunities for titles, announcements and special trailers.

Screen Resurfacing Service

TO INSURE proper screen illumination without increasing power consumption or incurring the risk of glare, the screen surface should be kept as reflective as possible. In spite of regular cleaning routine, however, screens gradually get soiled, and in instances in which it is not felt that a new screen is warranted, one has recourse to resurfacing.

Exhibitors have used a flat white paint to resurface their screens. However, due to the greater necessity today for an immaculate screen, the practice of resurfacing is increasing, and as a result specific materials and expert methods are available. One of these materials is sprayed on, after the screen is washed, and is of such character that it does not clog the perforations, and that it restores to the screen a high reflective power. One of the characteristics cited in a resurfacing material now on the market is its penetrability, causing it to permeate the texture of the screen fabric, restoring its original tightness.

Signs, Electric

THE THEATRE operates and prospers with the help of its electric signs. They carry the name of the theatre, they announce the attractions, they direct traffic within the theatre. Because of this importance of electric signs in theatre operation, steady has been their improvement, in both effect and efficiency. Attractions boards, for example, can now be more legible with less lamping. Impressive combinations of incandescent and gas-tube lighting are available. And instead of the electric signs of today being mere appendages, they form integral parts of the architectural and decorative pattern, both inside and outside the theatre.

SLIDES ARE DIVIDED into four different classes: Song slides, advertising slides, announcement slides and special advertising slides. Song slides have come into vogue within the last few years.

A patented slide, having a paper frame and a composition transparency flexible enough to be placed in a typewriter, permits the management to prepare its own slides, at a moment's notice if need be, and is thus particularly useful for special announcements.

Speakers and Horns

HORNS AND SPEAKERS used in sound installations are air columns with a belled outlet, or magnetic or electro-dynamic cones (in baffles or horns), used to project the sound waves created by the amplified electrical pulsations. They are attached to amplifiers and usually number two or more, depending on the size of the theatre.

Stage Scenery and Draperies

DRAPERIES ARE an important feature of theatres today. They accent color and give softness and richness to an interior. Architectural lines of doorways and archways are usually distinctively hard and draperies are the mediums by which these lines are softened to give a pleasing appearance.

STEREOPTICONS are used for the projection of lantern slides and effects, illumination being supplied by incandescent or arc lamps. They are made in single units and also for double and triple dissolving. Many unusual effects are possible with the modern stereopticon as developed for theatre use. They can be obtained for as low as $26.00 for Mazda type.

Switchboards

CONTROL OF LIGHTING through the use of switchboards makes possible the wonderful lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres today. Switchboards for this work are built in many capacities. Scenes for unusual lighting effects may be pre-selected by such a board and the theatre flooded with appropriate lighting scheme at a proper cue by the simple method of throwing a switch. Lighting control systems are being adopted by theatres of lesser size that heretofore have considered such installations as being only for the larger metropolitan houses.

Manufacturers of this type of equipment are glad to furnish engineering service and consult with exhibitors and architects on various phases of these lighting control systems.

Temperature Control Apparatus

TEMPERATURE control apparatus of the automatic variety can be installed on any type of heating, ventilating or air-conditioning system to maintain desired conditions. Apparatus sensitive to temperature, either inside or outside, or relative humidity, or pressure will operate instantly or with time lag, valves and dampers, or start and stop oil burners. There are two main classes of equipment, pneumatic and electrical. Pneumatic equipment requires a small compressor, a storage tank for the air which operates the various units, and the necessary pipes or tubing connecting the units. Electrical equipment requires either a low or high-voltage source of power and wire connecting the various units to be operated.

Tickets

THEARTE TICKETS are available and used in many forms as roll tickets, folded tickets, reserved seat tickets, and ticket coupon books. Roll and folded tickets of the more usual denominations are carried in stock. Tickets are commonly sold in even multiples of 10,000, the price decreasing with additional thousands ordered.

Tickets are made for use with ticket issuing machines and are consecutively numbered. This enables accurate check of tickets sold for each day. Stock tickets may be obtained for 50 cents a roll. Special printed roll or center hole folded tickets range in price from $8 for 10,000 to $158 for a million. The admission price must be printed on each ticket, by order of the government.

A MACHINE FOR punching tickets dropped in box as patron enters theatre. The ticket chopper guards against the resale of tickets. Mutilation of the ticket consists of perforations made on the ticket, which, however, is done in a manner that does not prevent accurately checking results. Ticket choppers are made in several wood and metal finishes, and are operated by electricity, or hand and foot. Prices range from $75 to $250.

Upholstery Material

USE OF SOUND absorbing upholstering on theatre seats has come into popular demand since the advent of sound pictures. A popular fabric used in this connection is mohair, which combines beauty with important sound properties. Upholstering material of this nature may be obtained in a variety of colors and executed in interesting patterns and designs. It is claimed for this material that it will not fade, does not mat down, and can be kept fresh and clean with little effort. Use of mohair for upholstering is said to produce a marked elimination of reverberations in the theatre auditorium.

This is true, of course, of any upholstering material able to absorb an amount of sound equivalent to that absorbed by patrons. Because of the necessity of creating an absorption constant, so that acoustic qualities of an auditorium are maintained independently of the size of the audience, upholstered chairs have supplanted those of veneer type in the motion picture auditorium.

As a result of advancements in the manufacture of the material, imitation leather is also to be regarded as suitable for theatre chair upholstering. New chairs may be purchased from the manufacturer or dealer finished in this material, and it is available for reupholstering. One feature of imitation leather, aside from its relatively low cost, is that it may be cleaned easily. It is procurable in a wide range of colors and also may be had in patterns.

Usher Signal Systems

THE USHER SIGNAL SYSTEM provides a sending station at each aisle, equipped with numeral push buttons that give any total of seats that aisle might have. The usher registers on this station the number of vacant seats available, which information is transmitted to the floor or head usher, depending on the size of the theatre. In the larger houses the floor usher relays the information to the head usher. The head usher sends total of all aisles and floors to the doorman who directs the people to the different sections of the house where the vacant seats are waiting.

Vacuum Cleaning Equipment

APPARATUS FOR cleaning carpeting and fabrics by suction is to be considered more or less necessary for proper maintenance of the theatre. Brooms and brushes are useful, but cannot be considered substitutes for suitably designed vacuum cleaning equipment, which not only cleanses more effectively, but does so with less time and labor.

The unusually large and elaborate theatre is sometimes best served by stationary equipment with pipes leading to the various levels, where the hose is attached. To the average theatre, however, unit cleaners of heavy-duty type with a high degree of portability are best adapted.

To make little odd jobs of cleaning easier, as in small offices, lounges, etc., it is frequently worth while to augment this larger equipment with a cleaner of the common domestic type.

KEEP DIRT OUT
KEEP PROFITS IN

The millions of particles of dirt and dust daily entering your theatre are like so many demons, eating away at your profits in a dozen ways.

An ounce of fine sand, imbedded in a carpet that has heavy travel, can ruin it in a few weeks by cutting the nap. Dust ruins decorations and equipment and makes frequent painting necessary. Dust mars motion-picture projection, interferes with stage performance and gives the theatre a "smell."

Why not remove this dirt and dust—just after the patrons leave and before it has a chance to spread?

Spencer Central and Portable Vacuum Cleaning Systems show the way. They save cleaning time, are efficient in operating and maintenance costs, and have proven their ability to produce results in hundreds of theatres.

Demonstration of The Spencer Portable on request.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Question:

COULD YOU give us the following information. Will the government finance the building for a new theatre? Whom would we get in touch with for particulars?

We are located in a town of about 1,000 population with good farming country surrounding. We are thinking of building a new building for our theatre. We do not want a large building—something about 300 seats. Could you give us an estimate on the cost of constructing a building that would seat 300? Just the cost of the building on a lot 50 x 100 feet. Then, if it is not asking too much, could you give us the cost including chairs and carpeting? But the thing we are interested in is the cost of just the building.—E. E. H.

The Answer:

I DOUBT if you can obtain federal aid for a new theatre building. However, loans up to $50,000 are made for remodeling theatres by the Federal Housing Administration. Communicate with FHA officials, whose offices are located in the capital of each state; or write directly to the Federal Housing Administration, Washington, D. C.

A lot 50 x 100 feet is large enough for a 300 seating capacity theatre. A depth of 85 feet will be sufficient, unless you require a large lobby, foyer and stage. The cost of such a building should be figured at a minimum of 18 cents per cubic foot, so a building of a size to fit your requirements would cost from $15,000 to $18,000.

The cost of chairs depends a great deal on what kind of a chair is selected. A good upholstered chair with padded back and box seat in imitation leather can be purchased and installed for $7.50. Serviceable carpets with heavy padding can be installed for $3.40 a yard.

The Question:

WE ARE INTERESTED in building a new theatre of approximately 450 seats in a modernistic design. The lot is 52 x 150. This is a town of 1,500 and it will be necessary to keep the building costs as low as possible.—T. S.

The Answer:

MY OPINION is that a lot 52 x 150 feet is too large for a theatre of a seating capacity of 450 seats. If you plan a center bank of thirteen seats with an aisle on each side, and two wall banks of six seats each, you will be able to have twenty-five seats across the width of the auditorium. This would require eighteen rows, or 45 feet. Add for lobby 15 feet; for foyer, 8 feet; and for space between first row of seats and screen, and for screen platform, 25 feet. Thus a depth of 100 feet will be sufficient.

Even if you keep the building cost as low as possible you should not figure less than 18 cents per cubic foot for general construction, plumbing, heating and electric wiring. So the cost of the building would be around $25,000.

The Question:

WE ARE THINKING of building a theatre here and wondered if you had any plans or suggestions you could offer in designing and treating the front. The size of the building is to be 40x100 feet, with a front 34 feet high. The opening to the lobby is 15 feet wide by 9 feet high and situated in the center.

The plans we have are not so desirable, so if you have any plans for a theatre of about 500 seats, 350-400 downstairs and around 150 in the balcony, please send them to us.—J. I. S.

The Answer:

SORRY BUT this department cannot furnish any sketches or plans. Its purpose is to give suggestions and advice which may lead to better theatre planning and designing. If you are of the opinion that your plans are not desirable and think that they can be improved, you have the privilege of sending them to this department for criticism and for suggestions.

Since the front is 34 feet high, it is difficult for me to advise how it should be treated without knowing more about conditions. Structural glass and Formica are very effective, but it might prove quite expensive to cover the entire front with that kind of material. Why not use it to the height of the marquee, and use a smooth buff brick above, with terra cotta or stone decorative motives. This treatment, however, is entirely up to the designer of the building.

The opening to the lobby, 15 feet wide and 9 feet high, is all right, but I doubt if you will be able to accommodate from 350 to 400 seats on the lower floor, as enough space must be deducted from the 100 foot depth to provide for lobby, foyer, stage (large enough to provide for projection screen and horns), and at least 20 feet of space between front row of seats and screen; but, if these spaces can be reduced you may get by, although I advise you not to make the lobby and the foyer too small, as standing room in many instances is as valuable as that for seats.

The Question:

HAVE TAKEN the HERALD since it started. Took the World and also Exhibitors Herald. This will be the first time I have ever had the pleasure of writing you regarding anything, except to send in some comments on pictures. Party here wishes to build me a new theatre. Lot is 44x85 feet. There are two store buildings on it now, these to be torn down, and he wants to leave a space to build two small stores on each corner of the new building. He figures he could let me have an area 10 feet wide by 15 feet deep for my lobby and foyer, and leave me 44x65 feet for seats. I have 375 seats here, but believe 350 or less might be okay for the new building. How many seats would 44x65 place (outside measurement)?

These men do not know much about putting up a theatre and will follow my instructions to a great extent, but will, I know, not spend any money they can help. I am fearful they will attempt the building without any architect. For that reason I wanted to get some idea from you as to how many seats I could get in, and any other ideas regarding the front, etc.

I would not have any stage, but would have to have some sort of a platform for screen and for some one to stand to talk from. Toilets, I believe, should be off the foyer, and could be made one on each side. Some toilets from other business rooms could be made at same point and save plumbing bill.

I wish to have an office, and figured it might be built in connection with the projection room. Building will be fireproof, inasmuch as he does not wish to use wood at all if he can help it, even to window frames. Floor will be cement. I do not know yet what kind of heat he is figuring on, but expect it will be steam.—F. G. P.

The Answer:

IF I UNDERSTAND your inquiry correctly, there is provided a space for the auditorium proper of 44x65 feet, outside dimensions, and this space is also to include platform to accommodate projection screen and horns, so the actual space left for rows of seats is 40 feet, or 16 rows. I suggest the following seating arrangement to obtain the maximum seating capacity:

Plan for a center bank of twelve seats with an aisle on each side, then two wall banks of four seats each. This will give twenty seats across the width of the auditorium, making the total seating capacity 320 seats.

I doubt if the entrance, 10 feet wide, is large enough. If you intend to place the ticket booth in front between the entrance doors, it will be too small, and even if the entrance doors are placed behind the ticket booth, there should be at least 12 feet, as no set of double doors should be less than 5 feet wide.

As you do not seem to have much confidence in the experience of the men who are to erect the building, I cannot urge you too strongly to convince them that they should employ the services of a theatre architect, as mistakes made in theatre construction can seldom be remedied after the theatre is opened.

The toilet rooms should be off the foyer and should be as remote as possible from each other and should only be used by the audience of the theatre. If other toilets for business rooms are required, they can be located near theatre toilets but should be separated from them by masonry partitions.

An office built alongside the projection room may be all right, but have it separated from it by fireproof partitions. It is a very good practice to build theatres of fireproof materials, and since there are so few windows in a theatre building, they all may just as well be fireproof.

A cement floor for the auditorium is very advisable, and good results in heating can be obtained by the use of steam.

The Question:

ENCLOSED FIND sketch of our theatre. Please give us some information on how we could make our theatre more handy. We are planning on a complete remodeling of our theatre, including a new front.—F. E. W.

The Answer:

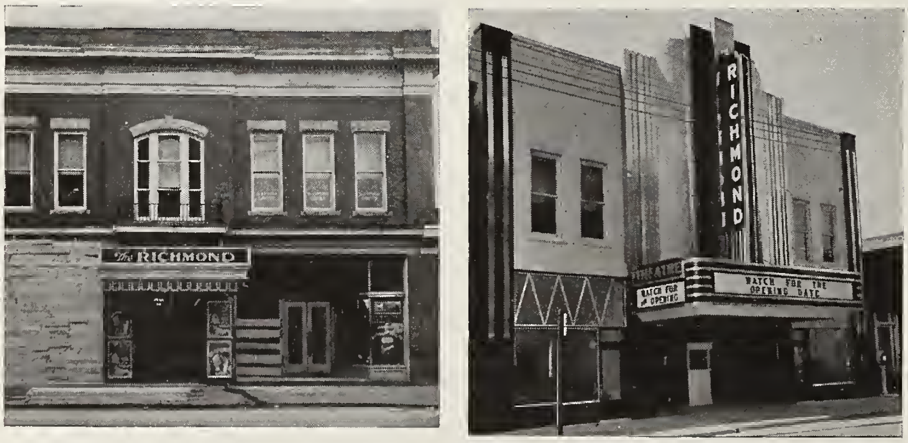
AFTER GIVING your sketch careful study, I would suggest the following to improve the plan of your theatre:

I suggest that the entrance doors be placed about four feet back from the front of the building, with a ticket booth in the center between the doors. Since there is 22 feet frontage, I suggest that the ticket office be 4 feet wide, and on each side place two doors, each 3 feet, 6 inches wide. By setting these doors four feet back, you will have room for poster frames on each side of entrance doors. This will make the lobby 19 feet deep, plus the depth of the present box office. The doors between the foyer and lobby could be three sets of double doors.

Four feet is hardly enough for the width of the foyer. I would suggest 8 feet.

I also advise that you build a wall extending to ceiling in back of seats. This wall could be provided with plate glass openings, so that the audience waiting for seats may watch the picture.

Since the auditorium is 48 feet, 9 inches wide, the best seating arrangement would be to use a center bank of thirteen seats with a 4-foot aisle on each side and two wall banks of five seats each, making the amount of seats across the width of the house twenty-three seats.



Views of the front of the Richmond theatre in Rockingham, N. C., before and after remodeling. Original metal cornices were removed and a new front built up of monel metal, copper-bearing galvannealed sheet metal, which was painted, and brick. The vertical sign was erected as part of the architectural effect. All sign work was designed and installed by Flexlume Southern, Inc. The name of the theatre is in gas-tube lettering. Gas-tube lighting is also used at the marquee corners in conjunction with monel metal. Attraction boards are of white oplex glass combined with Wagner silhouette letters, illuminated from the inside.

The exit door from foyer should be made at least 5 feet wide.

Facing the front, the entrance doors should be to the right, and the exits to the left.

Provide plenty of poster frames in lobby for display.

A tile floor and base in lobby will improve the looks, and by the use of structural glass or Formica around the entrance, the general appearance may be greatly improved.

Your sketch does not show the location of men's and women's toilet rooms. They should be off the foyer.

The sketch shows a door between a candy store and the lobby, which in several States is not permitted.

The Question:

I WOULD APPRECIATE your suggestions to effect a decorative scheme of lighting on the side walls of my theatre. The attached photograph will give you an adea of our architectural scheme and possibilities. The side walls are in rough finish of two-tone brown; the lower part of the side walls in stone block, two tones of gray. The balcony ceiling is gray-tan, with green stipple.

Indirect lights on the main ceiling are used to light the front of the orchestra and balcony. We have installed three indirect ceiling fixtures under the balcony, as shown with cross-marks on the attached photograph. The drapes have been removed from the pan lights, and pans are now used with green bulbs for decorative effect only. Single wall lights across rear of auditorium, in amber, are shielded to protect screen and effectively light the last three or four rows. Our theatre is well lighted for efficiency, with twenty-six aisle light, eight each at center aisle, five each side aisle. Aisles have depth of approximately 60 feet.

Fans on side walls have been removed and in their place we installed, as marked, lighted boxes in silhouette effect for decorative purposes. This does not give us the desired effect, and I would appreciate some suggestions from you as to possible decorative lighting for side walls.—A. P. B.

The Answer:

AFTER LOOKING over the photograph of your theatre, I find the lighting problem is not an easy one to be solved because the side walls are broken up with the boxes and brackets supporting same, so it is impossible to carry out a perpendicular lighting effect. It is my opinion that the most satisfactory results may be obtained by placing vertical indirect light fixtures in the stiles between the wall panels above the boxes.

These fixtures may be constructed out of flashed opal glass, semi-circular, about 12 inches in diameter and about 5 feet, 6 inches high. The inside of this fixture should have a light strip with 16 outlets for 10-watt lamps. These can be in varied colors, and the house lights could be placed on top. This should produce a very good effect.

Below the boxes where the fans are now located, install a flashed opal indirect fixture in fan, circular or octagonal shape. These fixtures should be placed just above the moulding over the wainscoting and run parallel with same, or you may try to hang fixtures from the soffits of the boxes instead of wall fixtures.

In any case, no matter what kind or type of a fixture you may decide on, do not use any with light bulbs exposed. With this effect carried out you may dispense with the ceiling fixtures in front of the arch.

The Question:

THE WRITER is contemplating leasing a theatre building located in a small town of about one thousand population. There is no theatre in the town, and it is a certainty that the Chamber of Commerce will renovate a cement block building 100x40 feet, 12½-foot ceiling. Projection booth may extend 2 feet higher.

The town officials have a subscription list calling for $2,500, with which they expect to tear up a concrete floor in said building and excavate for a sloping auditorium, build and construct a canopy, front doors, etc., ticket office, two rest rooms, foyer, manager's office and projection booth. In the rear of the auditorium it is the present plan to place the heating plant with equipment to force the heat over the entire building. Is this practical? Also, in the rear cooling equipment will be set up. The interior will, of course, have to be covered with some kind of wall board.

The writer expects to move into the building after it has been remodeled with seats, drapes, projection and sound equipment, screen, etc. Inasmuch as the funds for remodeling are limited, it is the plan of town not to employ an architect for the job. They have asked the writer for information that is hard to supply and I am falling back on you. Would appreciate any information you are able to furnish.

Seating capacity desired is larger than usual for a 1,000 population town, inasmuch as there is a town of 1,800 population 3 miles away, with no Sunday shows. —G. L. M.

The Answer:

I AM AFRAID that a ceiling 12 feet, 6 inches high is too low for the auditorium, and also think that $2,500 is entirely too small an amount to do all the remodeling which you contemplate. I do not see how all this work can be done for less than $6,000, and even at that price it would have to be done as economically as possible.

The heating plan will work out satisfactorily, provided the fans are large enough to take care of the volume of air which has to be circulated. There should also be provided ducts for ventilating, and ducts under floor to provide heat for lobby, foyer and toilet rooms.

AVOIDING MISTAKES LEADING TO SUITS

By LEO T. PARKER

Citing legal fundamentals commonly involved in the theatre operator's dealings with manufacturers, employes and public

NOT LONG AGO a theatre official wrote, "Please inform me if our theatre company is liable for any payment except monthly rentals if we hold the theatre building, which we lease, a few months after the lease contract expires. We leased this building for five years at $250 per per month, and our lease expires in about three weeks, but we will not be ready to move into our new quarters until about two months. Of course, we are willing to pay $250 per month rental for the time we use the building over the date the lease contract expires, but the owner of the building demands that we pay $500 additional, which we have refused to pay."

The legal advice given in regard to this simple question was to do one of these three things: (1) vacate the building before midnight of the day the lease contract expires; or (2) pay the additional $500 demanded by the owner of the building; or (3) stand the liability to pay $15,000 for use of the building, whether or not you occupy it, for another full period of five years at the old rental rate of $250 per month.

Every theatre owner, official and manager is confronted daily with important legal problems. Futhermore, the faculty of solving correctly these problems frequently results in the saving of many thousand of dollars, which includes payment of damages, lawyer fees and other associated expenses, not to mention the great loss of time and effort required when endeavoring to win ultimately a law suit passing through the many different courts.

There is truth in the assertion, "Every legal suit can be avoided." It is true because no one will enter legal controversy without a chance to gain a favorable verdict. Therefore, if theatre owners, officials and managers attain sufficient and elementary knowledge to be certain that the business will be conducted so that all legal rights are preserved, legal controversy will be avoided, or at least unavoidable suits will be won.

EXTENSION OF CONTRACT PERIODS

CONSIDER, for example, the above mentioned question presented by the theatre official. Few persons know, and evidently this official was not properly informed, how to avoid litigation on contracts which are automatically extended. In order to avoid such litigations it is merely necessary for all theatre owners, officials and managers to know that the courts have consistently held that rental, lease, employment and all other contracts are automatically extended for a period equal to the term of the original contract, providing the same relations between the contracting parties continue after expiration of the contract.

CASE

For illustration, in Magnolis v. Davidson (38 S. W. [2d] 634) it was shown that a theatre company and an employe entered into a written contract by the terms of which the former agreed to hire the latter, as manager, for one year and pay him $250 per month. At the end of the first year the manager was permitted to continue in the employment. At the termination of a few weeks of the second year the manager was discharged.

The manager sued the company to recover salary from the date of his discharge to the end of the second year. The counsel for the company attempted to avoid liability on the grounds that the company had not contracted to employ the manager the full second year. However, although a new contract was not made at the end of the first year, but the same relation between the employer and the employe continued into the beginning of the second year, the higher Court held the company liable for payment of the manager's salary for the remainder of the second year. This court said:

DECISION

"When one enters into the service of another for a definite period, and continues in the employment after the expiration of that period, without any new contract, the presumption is that the employment is continued on the terms of the original contract and that provisions and restrictions forming essential parts of the contract . . . continue in force."

Therefore, in view of this higher court decision, it is simple to understand that when an employe is employed under either a verbal or written contract for any stipulated period, the properly authorized theatre company official must notify the employe before the expiration of the contract term that the contractual relations will not be continued, or the same agreement will be automatically entered into.

This same rule of the law is applicable with respect to all contracts which have a definite term of duration, Therefore, a tenant who retains possession of leased property even one day, after the lease has expired, is liable for payment of the rent for a period equal to the full term of the expired lease. However, where a tenant occupies property under a lease, and vacates the premises at any time before midnight of the day the lease terminates he is not liable for payment of rent during the following term of the original lease contract.

NOTIFICATION

Another important point of the law is that a mere notification given to the landlord by a theatre operator that he intends to vacate does not relieve the theatre operator from liability for payment of rent for the complete following term, providing he holds over and retains possession of the premises after midnight of the day on which the lease terminates.

For example, in a leading case (135 N. Y. S. 633) a tenant signed a lease contract for twelve months. Previous to the expiration of the lease the landlord notified him that the rent would be increased for the next year. The tenant wrote the landlord stating that he would not renew the lease. However, he remained in the building one month after the lease had expired and then moved out. The court held the tenant liable for payment of rent for the balance of eleven months of the second term.

THE RIGHTS OF PARTIES TO CONTRACTS

SINCE AT LEAST 80% of the litigations involving theatre owners and corporations relate to contracts, it is well to know that no one is liable on an invalid or void contract.

The courts have consistently held that a valid contract is an agreement between two or more parties by which each party is expressly or impliedly obligated to do something, not prohibited by law, within a specified period. It is not necessary that a valid contract be in writing, excepting contracts that relate to real property, suretyship and a few others that are required by statutes to be in writing.

An expressed contract is one where the terms of the agreement are stated in so many words, and an implied contract is where the law presumes a promise on the part of one party to perform a service for the other party.

An invalid contract may not be enforced by either party and, therefore, litigation of it always is unprofitable. Consequently, considerable trouble and expense can be eliminated by readers who are able, by reference to a definite legal rule, to distinguish an invalid from a valid contract.

The courts have held that a contract is valid and enforceable if (1) one party submitted an offer which the other party unconditionally accepted in detail, (2) neither party deceived, misrepresented, or exerted unlawful influence with respect to the other party to obtain the contract, (3) both parties agreed absolutely to perform a definite act, (4) both parties were of legal age and of sound mind when the contract was made, (5) both parties had proper authority to make the contract, and (6) the objects of the contract were lawful and not against public policy.

Also, the law is well settled that either party may legally cancel any contract obtained by the other as a result of direct or indirect fraud, misrepresentation, coercion, undue influence, duress, threats, or where the contract is made without proper authority of the employer's employe, or while the latter is mentally deficient, intoxicated, under the influence of drugs, or under legal age.

WHEN CONTRACT IS RESCINDABLE

THE PRINCIPLE of the law is firmly established that all parties to a valid contract are bound to fulfill the precise terms of the agreement. The instant one party fails in this respect he performs a legal breach, and the other party has choice of doing either of these three things: (1) He may refuse to continue to perform his obligations of the contract and sue the other party for damages and profits equal to his financial loss resulting from the breach; (2) or, he may file suit and compel the other party to fulfill the exact terms of the agreement; (3) or, the parties may enter into negotiations and make a supplementary contract.

In order to avoid liability, it is advisable that theatre owners fulfill the exact terms and conditions of contracts. However, circumstances may exist under which a theatre owner may rescind the contract or legally and without liability refuse to go ahead with his obligations.

For illustration, it is well settled law that a theatre owner is entitled to rescind a contract, if he proves that he was induced to make the contract by fraudulent representations.

However, it is important to know that where a theatre owner desires to rescind a contract upon the ground of misrepresentation or fraud, he must promptly upon the discovery of the fraud, begin legal proceedings to rescind it. If he continues to treat the subject of the contract the same the right of rescission is gone, and he will be held bound by the contract.

When a theatre owner discovers that he has been deceived in a transaction he may resort to an action at law to recover damages or he may have the contract rescinded. If he chooses the latter remedy, he must act promptly, "announce his purpose and adhere to it," and not by acts of ownership continue to assert right and title over the property as though he owned it.

For example, in Fryer v. Campbell,

LAW OF EMPLOYMENT CONTRACTS

By M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

THE RELATIONSHIP of employer and employe, even in the absence of a formal contract of employment, involves certain rights and duties on the part of either party. To begin with, the employe, by implication, agrees that he is competent to perform his work. If the work demands experience, he must bring to it at least such training as will enable him to perform his work satisfactorily. Unless it be agreed upon that the employe have more than usual skill, he need only perform his work with ordinary and reasonable skill and care.

The law insists on obedience and loyalty by an employe to his employer. Thus the employe may not work for a firm competing with his employer. Not only may the employe be required to give all his working time to the business for which he was engaged, but by the terms of the contract he may be prevented from doing other work after business hours. The loyalty of an employe necessarily extends to his employer's business secrets and he is always under an obligation, sometimes set forth in the contract of employment, and always implied where not specifically agreed upon, not to divulge such matters. But if he leaves his employer and goes elsewhere, the employe may lawfully use in his new job knowledge gained in the old, provided only he does not disclose trade secrets or confidential information. An employe may be restrained by injunction from disclosing a former employer's secrets or making use of information such as customer lists, secret processes, etc.

The duties of an employer with respect to safeguarding the lives and health of his employes, hours of employment and similar matters, are in most States covered by Workmen's Compensation laws and various other regulations.

The chief obligation of the employer is to pay his employe's wages. In most States, the employe's right to such wages are protected and strengthened by statute, some making it a criminal offense to fail to pay earned wages or fail to pay wages regularly. Actions by employes for wages are usually favored by preference, in order of trial, over other cases, and usually a judgment for wages permits the employe to apply property, otherwise exempt from levy (household furniture, clothing, etc.) to the payment of such judgment.

An employe who works overtime, is not entitled to additional pay for so doing, unless otherwise agreed upon between him and the employer. On the other hand, no deductions may be made from wages by way of fines, or "docking," etc., unless a provision to that effect is contained in the agreement of employment or it is brought to the employe's attention. Consent by the employe to the imposing of fines is assumed from his continuing to work after becoming aware of such fines. In order to be legally deductible, fines must be reasonable and not excessive.

An employe is not entitled, as a matter of right to a bonus or other reward for doing his work. However, if such extra compensation is promised to the employe, he may sue for it if it is refused to him after he has earned it, by meeting the conditions upon which it has been promised to him.

An unexpired contract of employment is a property right of the employer. Accordingly, if a person induces an employe to break his contract of employment, where the contract is still in force and has a definite time to run, an action for damages may be sustained against such person by the employer. In such an action, the employer must show that the interference by a third person with the contract of employment was intended to injure the employer and that the interference resulted in such injury.

Rawlins, Wyoming, (43 Pac. [2d] 994) it was disclosed that a theatre operator purchased from the Legion theatre, a reproducer, two picture machines, screen, ninety-eight upholstered chairs, acoustical material on the walls, matting on the floor, tools, etc., together with a lease on the building.

Three months later the purchaser demanded rescission of the contract and return of the purchase price on the grounds that the seller had made certain false and fraudulent representations for the purpose of inducing him to buy the property.

The lower court canceled the contract, and required the seller to pay back the purchase price and required the purchaser to reassign the goods and to deliver to the purchaser the equipment "in as good condition as when received by the purchaser, ordinary wear and tear excepted, and to account to the seller for all profits derived from the operation of the Legion Theatre from the date of purchase to the date when the Court rendered its judgment."

The seller appealed to the higher court on the contention that a delay of three months on the part of the purchaser in demanding rescission of the contract forfeited his right to rescission, although he had been induced by fraudulent statements to enter into the contract. It is interesting to know that the higher courts reversed the lower court's decision, and made the following comment:

"The question seems to be one of election, though frequently called waiver. The contract, if induced by fraud or misrepresentation, is not void but only voidable at election of the injured party . . . A purchaser has a reasonable time in which to make election of such remedy after discovery of the fraud but he cannot, after such discovery, treat the property as his own and exercise acts of ownership over it which show and election to regard the same as still his, and at the same time preserve his right to rescission."

On the other hand, in Maurer v. Iden (242 Mich. 568) the buyers of a motion picture business took possession of it on February 8. They acquired knowledge of misrepresentations that induced the purchase, and on February 24 commenced a suit for rescission and accounting. However, they continued to operate the business until March 9, and also operated it for two additional days, March 19 and 20.

In this case the higher court held that the purchasers were entitled to rescind the contract because they had acted with promptness.

PURCHASES MADE FROM SAMPLES

QUITE RECENTLY the owner of several theatres wrote requesting information regarding his legal rights, and explained that he had purchased certain theatre merchandise and equipment from sample and the articles delivered to him were not equal in quality to the sample submitted when he signed the contract. Undoubtedly many other theatre owners have similar controversies.

It is well established law that delivery of theatre supplies or equipment which do not conform to the samples displayed, when the sale contract was signed, is fraud which entitles the theatre owner to cancel the order. Moreover, this is true although the theatre owner accepts the shipment and fails to register complaint until several months after delivery, provided he could not discover the fraud by ordinary inspection.

In one case (217 N. W. 941), a court held a theatre operator entitled to rescind a contract of sale and return the merchandise three months after accepting delivery, since testimony was introduced proving that he did not discover immediately that the supplies did not equal the samples.

Another well established point of the law is that a theatre owner always is privileged to cancel an order where the seller breaches any material part of the agreement, as where (1) the seller fails to make delivery on the date specified in the contract; or (2) fails to ship the agreed quantity or quality of goods; or (3) fails to make shipment by a common carrier specified by the buyer; or (4) where the seller refuses to accept the kind of payment agreed upon.

CASE

Probably the most unusual litigation involving the latter point is found in the leading case of Warsaw v. Woodruff, (207 N. W. 421). Here the goods were sold for cash. When the seller was ready to make delivery, instead of permitting the purchaser to specify the manner of payment, the seller wrote a letter requiring the purchaser to take up the bills of lading from a bank specified in the letter mailed by the seller.

The purchaser immediately canceled the order and sued the seller for damages, contending that the act of the seller in demanding him to make payment in a prescribed manner was a breach of the contract.

DECISION

It is interesting to observe that the higher court held that the mere act of the seller in demanding the manner in which the payment should be made was a breach of the contract, for which the seller was liable in damages. The court said:

"If one of the parties of the contract notifies the adversary party that he will not perform unless such adversary assents to the modification of the contract by the addition of certain new terms, such conduct amounts to a renunciation of the contract."

FAILURE TO KNOW CONTRACT CONTENTS

A COMMON SOURCE of controversy is where a theatre owner endeavors to rescind a contract of sale on the contention that he was not fully informed of the contents of the agreement when he signed it. It is well established that a contract is not rescindable where it is shown that only one of the parties was mistaken with respect to his assumed obligations. In other words, convincing evidence must be introduced to prove that cancelation of the contract is mutually agreeable to both parties because of a mistake.

For example, in Dixon v. Morgan (285 S. W. 558) the question before the court was whether a contract should be declared void because a theatre owner signed it while mistaken of the contents. This court explained that the general principle of the law, which runs through nearly all of the cases of this character, is that a contract made through mistake of a purchaser can be rescinded only when it can be done without interfering with any legal rights acquired by the seller, and without doing injustice to other persons.

Also, in a recent case (298 S. W. 918) the evidence disclosed that a purchaser negligently signed a contract of sale without reading it. Later he discovered that the instrument contained certain stipulations that were not explained to him by the salesman. The purchaser instituted legal proceedings to rescind the contract contending that he was mistaken of his obligations, and that he was deceived because the salesman failed to explain the details of the obligations in the contract. Notwithstanding these contentions the court held the purchaser required to fulfill the contract.

UNREASONABLE DAMAGE CLAUSES

THE OUTCOME of a suit on a contract depends upon the classification in which the contract may be legally placed by a court. For example, a contract is void by the terms of which one party agrees to pay unreasonably large damages in the event he breaches the contract. However, a contract is valid if one of the contracting parties guarantees a specified payment, in event he breached it.

Many courts have held that when the terms of a contract are uncertain or not clear as to purpose, and the contract is ambiguous, the question of the classification of the transaction will be determined from all the circumstances. And if the construction placed upon it by the lower court, under appropriate pleadings and as evidenced, is reasonable and sustainable by the language of the contract, and appears to be consistent with the true intent of the parties, the higher Court will not substitute another interpretation though it seems equally tenable. Example, where it appears that a party to a contract of employment was prevented from working by the employer, the party, though he has performed no service under it, may sue to recover the agreed compensation.

CASE

For example, in Payne v. Pathe Studios, Inc., Los Angeles, (44 Pac. [2d] 598) finally decided June, 1935, it was disclosed that the Pathe Studios and Miss Zasu Pitts entered into a contract, as follows:

"You hereby agree to render exclusive services for us as an actress in the production of a motion picture, the photographing of which includes the use and recording of your voice . . . It is understood and agreed that in the event your services are not started on or before December 31, 1930, we hereby agree to pay you the sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000), which represents the four weeks guarantee on this agreement . . ."

The Pathe Studios did not use Miss Pitts' services and also refused to pay $5,000. Suit was filed against the Pathe Studios for $5,000. The lower court held the Pathe Studios liable and the higher court sustained the verdict, saying:

"That the supplemental provision to pay the $5,000 as representing four weeks' guarantee, was neither in the nature of a penalty nor an effort to provide for liquidated damages, appears clear to us."

CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATIONS

NO CONTRACT, whether verbal or in writing, is valid unless both contracting parties are obligated to do something. For instance, suppose that White owes Brown $3,000 and Black wants to employ White, but White will not accept the employment until Black makes arrangements with Brown to forestall suit. Black and White enter into an agreement by which White agrees to pay Black, if Black will settle the $3,000 debt due Brown. Therefore, Black and Brown entered into a contract, properly dated and signed, as follows: "I, Black, hereby agree to pay to Brown $3,000 owed by White to Brown."

The question is: Is this agreement binding? The answer is: It is not, because no contract is valid and enforceable unless it is based upon good consideration as between the contracting parties. Brown had not given any consideration to Black for assuming the obligation to pay the $3,000. Therefore, Brown could not collect the $3,000 from Black, as he recently attempted to do in a New York court.

Anything of value or beneficial is valid consideration. For example, if a person promises to do something for the other who also promises to do something, that is valid consideration. Of course, if a theatre owner promises to purchase merchandise a valid contract is completed provided, of course, other elements of contract law are fulfilled.

This same rule of the law is applicable with respect to all other kinds of contracts of employment, lease, purchase of real property, advertising, and the like. Also, to a certain degree the law is applicable to patrons who claim to have lost articles or had them stolen while attending an exhibition. Although litigations of this nature are not in exactly the same legal classifications, yet a theatre owner's common law obligation to protect his patrons and his patrons' property is automatically relinquished by failure of a patron to use due care to the same extent as a theatre owner is relieved from liability under a contract not having valid consideration.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PATRONS' PROPERTY

ALL THEATRE owners have had controversies with patrons over damage, loss and theft of articles of wearing apparel such as jewelry, coats, hats, gloves, canes and umbrellas. Also, frequently litigation arises over loss or injury to articles left by patrons in care of a theatre employe. Usually, the value of the smaller articles is too small to cause much trouble, but very frequently the value of articles of jewelry, fur coats and the like is sufficient to result in serious and expensive litigations.

Theatre owners may avoid all responsibility and liability for the theft or loss of articles belonging to patrons, by using the same degree of care as is required to avoid liability for injuries to patrons.

In other words, it is the legal duty of a theatre owner to exercise ordinary care to prevent patrons' loss or injury to articles and clothing by the employment of trustworthy employes, and giving proper instruction to them. Also using modern methods will tend to avoid liability. A sign should be displayed inviting patrons to leave their valuables with the cashier, if a check room is not available. In this manner the patron forfeits his right to payment for lost or stolen articles because he failed to take advantage of the safety facilities afforded by the theatre owner.

A common source of litigation arises where a patron's property, such as wearing apparel, is lost or stolen: (1) Where such property is retained in the control of the patron; (2) or, where it is deposited in a check-room or with a theatre employe without charge; or (3) where it is carelessly left by the patron in a dresing room, or on a seat.

In the first instance, the theatre owner never is liable for loss of clothing retained in the patron's possession, unless the theft was committed by a theatre employe, or the theatre employe was negligent in endeavoring to locate the article after having been informed by the patron of his loss. Of course, a theatre owner is deemed negligent and liable for theft of goods by a dishonest employe, particularly if the testimony indicates that the theatre owner had reason to believe that the employe was not trustworthy.

It is well settled that a theatre owner, who provides a room or an employe for keeping the wearing apparel, and other valuable articles belonging to patrons, may introduce this fact in a suit to show that he has taken precaution to furnish a place in which the valuables of his patrons may be safeguarded. Also, patrons who fail to take advantage of the room or employe cannot recover for lost or stolen valuables unless, of course, it is proved that the loss was occasioned by gross negligence of the theatre employes. Furthermore, it is apparent that where a theatre owner provides a suitable place in which to deposit articles of value for safekeeping and a patron, who fails to take advantage of the service, hangs his hat or other wearing apparel on a hook, or leaves it in a dressing room, or on a seat, the patron thereby contributes to the loss and the owner is not liable.

For illustration, in the late case of Nolde (164 Atl. 804), it was shown that a patron left an expensive fur coat hanging upon a rack in a room not having an attendant therein. The coat was stolen and the patron filed suit against the proprietor to recover its value.

However, since the room in which the coat was left was not intended for hanging wearing apparel, except when the owners of such apparel were in the room, the higher Court refused to hold the proprietor liable.

formers, and secondary being that on the output or theatre side.

SEASONAL SERVICE. This is service supplied only during certain seasons of the year. It may or may not be restricted to a predetermined period. Such service might be advantageously used in certain localities for air-conditioning loads where circumstances are such that air-conditioning equipment may be utilized only a portion of the year.

SHORT TERM SERVICE, as distinguished from seasonal service, is for only short periods of time, but without regard to the time of the year. Seasonal service is ordinarily a recurring service year after year, but short term service is usually for some special or extraordinary purpose.

RATE SCHEDULE. The rate schedule is the utility's official notice of the manner and amount of its charge to the customer for the service rendered. In all States where there is a public service commission (practically all States have them today), the electric company is required to file all of its rate schedules in making charges to its customers for service. Through common usage the term rate schedule has been shortened to the brief term "rate."

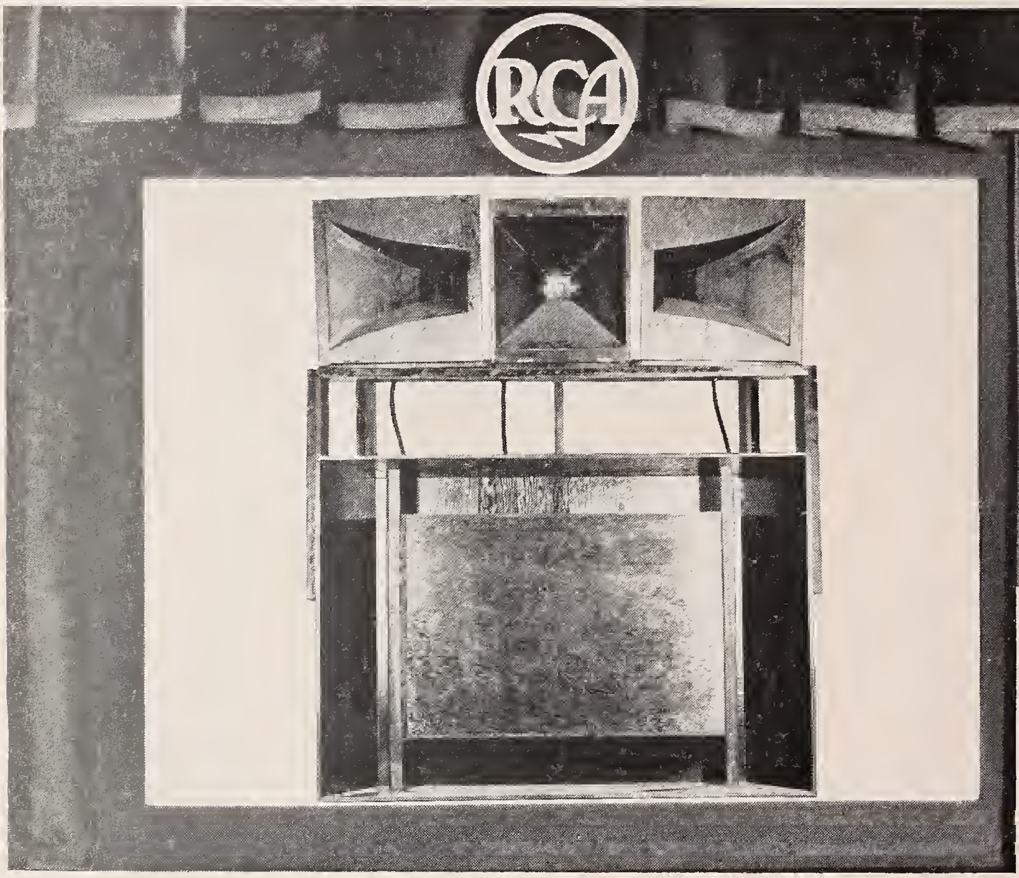
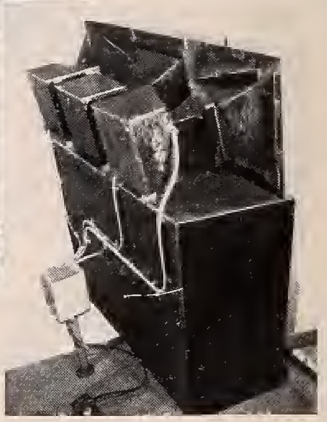
NO. 3 BOX OFFICE IN THE SPEAKERS





Sense into Dollars...

Go out front and listen. Are you conscious there is a loud speaker behind the screen? If you are, then your customers are not getting the illusion they have a right to expect and which RCA High Fidelity Photophone will give.

High Fidelity Photophone speakers are like mirrors, reproducing the original without additions or subtractions of their own. That's fundamental to good sound sense that turns into box office dollars. But in addition, these speakers show a lot of business sense too. They are built not only for good showmanship, but for showmen.

For instance, only two types of speakers are needed to cover the entire frequency range from 40 to 10,000 cycles. That's simplicity. Both types are dynamic. That's power.

Both types can be built into any combination needed to give every customer in every seat the same High Fidelity. That's efficiency.

Both types can be packed into a single flat unit, for flying with the screen or separately. That's space saving.

Both types have large cone units, with no delicate parts, so they will stand the gaff and be quickly and easily serviced if necessary. That's economy.

Thus the last unit in the golden chain of RCA High Fidelity Photophone equipment makes sound sense to ear and eye and pocketbook.

SPEAKING OF SPEAKERS

1. All speakers use dynamic cones, rugged and powerful.
2. Low-frequency 8-inch speakers reproduce 40 to 125 cycles; high-frequency, 6-inch, 125 to 10,000. Our tests indicate this the most efficient division of duty.
3. Low-frequency speaker uses a folded type horn to save space. Photophone has no space-wasting straight horns.
4. Three to seven speakers can be packed into a unit only 26 inches deep for easy flying or use on shallow stages.
5. Speakers are all in directional baffles, so sound can be placed just where needed.
6. Directional speakers not only mean perfect hearing all over the house, but often reduce or eliminate need for acoustic treatment.
7. Each speaker installation is engineered for actual conditions in your house, not only to meet them but improve them.
8. Speakers are also available for use as public address system, with microphones on the stage or wherever you please.

SERVICE SENSE

You don't want to buy equipment that takes a lot of service, and we don't sell such equipment. The reason we have such a remarkable staff of maintenance and service men is to see you get the biggest return possible from your Photophone installation. That's what we both want.

In all the commotion over sensations like a 'Midsummer Night's Dream', 'Shipmates Forever' and 'Dr. Socrates', don't forget that Warners have a lot of other swell shows coming thru every week, as regular as the calendar. This week, for instance, we've got a dandy number called 'Personal Maid's Secret' —which Variety Daily says is 'a prime cut of entertainment sweet to the last morsel'. (Watch that new boy Warren Hull, who does a grand job in this one with Margaret Lindsay and Anita Louise). Right after that we'll flash the first of a series that's likely to start a new Western cycle—'Moonlight on the Prairie' starring Dick Foran, the Singing Cowboy. Next there'll be James Dunn's first for us, 'The Payoff', with Claire Dodd and Patricia Ellis. And then we swing into Francis' 'I Found Stella Parish', 'Stars Over Broadway', and Cagney's 'Frisco Kid'—all, mind you, in 3 successive weeks. Watch for more news about this triumphant trio soon, from WARNER BROS.

CAN THIS BE

BALTIMO

OR IS IT LOS ANGELES, OMAHA, BOSTON, NEW HAVEN, WASHINGTON?

So many "Shipmates" scenes like this have come in from the country's key situations during the past week that we simply can't keep 'em straight.

This might be the Stanley, Baltimore, which Variety reported had its first "lobby lockout in nearly two years."

Or maybe it's the Hollywood or Downtown in Los Angeles, where crowds were so solid that both houses are holding over for a second week.

But on the other hand it looks a lot like the Roger Sherman in New Haven, which "topped the city and is packing 'em in aplenty."

And of course it could be Cleveland, Omaha, Portland, or any one of a dozen other record-setting engagements.

See if YOU can identify this crowd — and name the lucky theatre playing

Please don't send us any more of those exciting wires about your marvelous openings of "A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM". We're so thrilled already that we just can't keep track of all the good news that's pouring in about

COHEN TO COLUMBIA

COLUMBIA Pictures Corporation's studio administration, striving mightily to put assurance of manpower behind its flow of luck, now makes announcement of the coming acquisition of Mr. Emanuel Cohen, formerly Paramount's production chief, as a producer, and with him Mr. Bing Crosby. Mr. Cohen, reinstating himself in production, has elected a background against which his efforts can shine in contrast. With Mr. Ben Schulberg already established on the lot, the long successful and experienced school of Paramount training appears to be approaching a dominance of the Columbia production sector.

INK IMMORTALITY

"AND sudden death" came on an Illinois highway this week to take our onetime friend, Mr. Sidney Smith, blithe and debonnaire comic artist creator of "Andy Gump". Meanwhile it is given out from the offices of the Chicago Tribune that "Andy Gump" is to go on in his funny page career, through the attentions of a staff of artists trained by Mr. Smith and presided over by Mr. Joseph Medill Patterson.

That brings to mind the subject of lives and careers of those two dimensional people of the pen of whimsy. Only the other day, perhaps just publicity angling, a Lloyd's policy was sought for Mickey Mouse. It is reported that Mr. Walt Disney was informed that since Mickey was considered an immortal he could not be insured.

The fact is that the Mickey who cavorts today is the product of something close to eighty minds and drawing hands. He can of course survive as long as the organization survives and supports him.

In a fashion "Mr. and Mrs." is surviving the late Mr. Clare Briggs, the able artist whose departure from the Chicago Tribune for the New York Tribune made way for the rise of Mr. Smith in Chicago. But it is our lament that "Silk Hat Harry" and his pal, "Judge Rumhauser", passed forever from the scene with the late Mr. Tad Dorgan.

Mr. Smith's earlier character, "Old Doc Yak", was one of the earliest cartoon figures to reach the motion picture screen, after the late Mr. Windsor McCay had blazed the way with his dynosaur, "Gerty", in 1910. About 1913-4 Mr. Smith and the present editor of this page were engaged jointly and with considerable fever of debate in the processes of putting "Old Doc Yak" into animated cartoon life at Mr. Watterson R. Rothacker's atelier of the cinema in Chicago. Debate finally ended the life of Doc Yak on the screen.

FRONTIER NOTE

NORMALLY on the side of law and order, we are displeased with the judgment of the Quebec magistrate who fined a habitant $15 for taking a shot at a balloon dancer's rubber bubble with a pea shooter. The press associations' wires report a direct hit and a ricochet, both effective. It undoubtedly seemed to M. Pierre Roy an excellent idea at the moment, as indeed it was.

PLACES

BROWSING through last week's issue of Motion Picture Herald, we discover a dispatch from Mr. J. C. Jenkins from Sleepy Eye, up in Minnesota. We like the name of that town. And that brings up place names that always figure in the graphic language of showmen in such remarks as "It may be a hit on Broadway but it'll be no bargain in Snohomish". Mr. Martin Quigley's favorite citation is Bad Axe, Michigan; Mr. Colvin Brown's is Hohokus, N. J.; Mr. A-Mike Vogel picks on Okanogan, Wash., and the editor prefers Wahoo, Neb. What's yours?

COPYWRITER STEAMS

MR. JAMES RORTY, one time expert copywriter, lecturing at the New School for Social Research, remarked the other night that "advertising in its present state is 100 per cent racket." Later in his talk he admitted that advertising "is a component part of a civilization that is wrong. Any reform of advertising would be only a surface reform of society. We must apply the Marxian formula of revolution and build from the bottom." Now one must wonder why Mr. Rorty is so busy bothering about advertising—which seems to be just a detail.

DEAN Virginia C. Gildersleeve of Barnard College complains that college students are being made "illiterate" by radio and the sound picture. "Instead of taking things in through the eye and becoming familiar with the aspect of English words, they take them in through the ear. . . . This has a lamentable effect on their spelling and some other aspects of their writing."

Even if they have to get it in the ear, she ought to be glad that they get it at all.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Blows Up

The inquiry by the House Committee on Patents into motion picture patent pools and cross-licensing agreements "blew up" last Friday following disclosures that David Garrison Berger and Robert Robins, committee counsel and "clerk," respectively, were actively connected with pending lawsuits in which the patent poolings under investigation were an issue.

In dropping the investigation, Congressman William I. Sirovich, chairman of the committee, announced it had sufficient information and further testimony would be "repetitious." Will H. Hays and other leading industry figures were excused as witnesses.

What happened at the "blowup," and what Sidney R. Kent told the committee and what the committee told him, is related in the story starting on page 17.

Diehards Scream

Actors' Equity Association's peevishness because the screen and radio will not deviate from the rule of self-preservation and lend their aid to the dying stage, is becoming more intense, reaching the point this week where the obvious implication was made by headquarters in New York in the following question:

"Will it be necessary to impose a (federal) tax on (motion picture) theatre admission and receiving sets," the proceeds of which tax would be used to maintain the legitimate theatre in this country, in order "to waken these interests to the necessity or the advantages of cooperating with the legitimate theatre?"

Ironically, Equity's tirade came at the same time that reports were received both from the motion picture and radio that their business is improving further and the outlook for the future appears even brighter.

Equity's complaint and the week's developments in the theatre of the drama are explained on page 14.

Edison Memorial

Owen D. Young will serve as national chairman of the country-wide movement now afoot to honor the late Thomas Alva Edison by the establishment of a memorial program for the great inventor, it has been announced by William S. Barstow, president of the Thomas Alva Edison Foundation. National vice-chairman will be George B. Cortelyou.

Menlo Park, in the Oranges of New Jersey, will be the site of the memorial and the Edison Center for the Advancement of Youth in Science will comprise the physical setting from which a wide educational program will be developed with emphasis on the encouragement of youth in the pursuit of scientific knowledge.

The basic memorial will include facilities for the permanent care of Mr. Edison's personal library, which is said to be one of the most valuable scientific libraries in existence, his records and papers, and originals or replicas of each of the more than one thousand inventions he developed. The plans also include provision for a final resting place for the great inventor. Menlo Park, the scene of Mr. Edison's early activities, will be marked by a simple shaft, as a part of the general memorial program.

Sees Arbitration-again

Some of the troublesome problems of distributor vs. exhibitor are at last nearing adjustment in localized arbitration groups which would be vested, by the distributors and theatre owners whom they represent, with complete power to adjudicate complaints.

This is the conclusion drawn from a field study now being conducted by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in a firsthand investigation and discussions with pioneer leaders in the country, and will be presented by Mr. Kuykendall to New York next month.

Mr. Kuykendall's findings to date are presented, together with an analysis of Administration ambitions for the rebirth of the NRA, on page 13.

Editor Adventuring

This week Terry Ramsaye, editor of Motion Picture Herald, set out across the Hudson highlands on the motor trails into the interior, on another of his periodic first hand explorations of America. He will spend about two months on the road, reaching presently the north Pacific Coast and in time the motion picture community of Hollywood, returning through the South, about the year's end.

'Maxim' Ban Upheld

The Reds' attempt to disseminate Communistic propaganda on screens of the United States met its first legal defeat when Judge Theodore J. Richter in Detroit upheld the police censor's ban of the Soviet film "The Youth of Maxim," sponsored for showing by the Cinema Guild.

A highlight of the controversy was the charge that the film's American release breached the Soviet government's pledge not to spread its propaganda in this country. Labor unions and radicals protested the ban.

Significant is the fact that the Cinema Guild is among those organizations which have been attacking "Red Salute" and "We Live Again" as "anti-Communist propaganda." The story is on page 65.

How time does march on. All of a sudden this issue of the Herald brings us ornate pages from the hand of Mr. Abe Waxman to remind us that this is GB Picture Corporation's first anniversary.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Circuit Inquiry

Fraud and collusion in large theatre circuit reorganizations will be investigated by the Sabath Congressional Committee on realty bond reorganizations when it resumes hearings in New York in December, said Congressman A. J. Sabath, committee chairman.

The Congressman said more than 500 theatre leases were disaffirmed throughout the country under the cloak of receivership, while frequently the companies involved were not insolvent.

Concluding its hearings in New York, the committee moved to Boston and later will investigate conditions in Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles. See page 16.

Displacing Germans

American distributors operating in Hungary have been feeling the competition of a rising local production activity but they're optimistic nevertheless, in the expectation that in the new season they will be able to sell as many pictures as this year and under more favorable circumstances.

Twelve features were produced in Hungary in the 1934-35 and six of these were considerably successful, writes Endre Hevesi, the Herald's Budapest correspondent. Notwithstanding, American imports increased by 8.4 per cent while German importations were reduced by 21 per cent, and it's the prospect of increasingly taking the place of German product in the Hungarian market that is cheering the Americans' representatives. The story is on page 71.

Suit Set Back

Scheduled to be resumed November 4, the Government's monopoly suit against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the Music Publishers' Protective Association has been set back to January 7.

The new date was decided at a conference this week between Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard, who heard the start of the trial last June; MacAsbill of the United States Department of Justice and Nathan Burkan, counsel for the music societies.

The trial was adjourned to permit agreement on stipulations of fact which would speed up the proceedings. It recently was reported that Andrew Bennett, special assistant attorney general in charge of the prosecution last summer, was retiring from Government service to return to private practice. In that event it would be necessary for new Government counsel to familiarize himself with the matter.

ASCAP has distributed $800,500 as the largest summer dividend of royalties in the society's history. This represents a drop of $60,000 from the previous quarterly distribution, but an increase over the normal distribution for June, July and August. Publishers participated by as much as a 40 per cent gain in royalties while writers benefited by an average of a 30 per cent increase. Some of the writers received as much as $8,000 for the quarter. The gain is credited largely to the increased use of radio advertising and the boost in radio royalties last fall from 3 per cent of the gross to 5 per cent.

Marking a departure from annual meetings, ASCAP will hold its first semiannual members' meeting at the Astor Hotel, New York, October 31. An accounting to members for the last six month, discussions of classification proposals for royalty distributions, the Duffy bill and recent state enactments are expected to highlight the meeting.

Czech Gains

American product returns to the fore this season, after three years, in the number of pictures to be offered exhibitors of Czechoslovakia, taking the play away from the Germans and Austrians, writes Harry Knopf, the HERALD'S correspondent at Prague. It looks like a good year for outstanding product, he points out, but anything but the best will have rough sledding.

Domestic production is up against a three-tiered obstacle—high costs for studio rental, inferior story material and the increased foreign competition. The article is on page 78.

Exhibitors Meet

Four state exhibitor organizations in the field met this week, and a similar number set convention dates, as follows: Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, October 28; Allied States of Michigan, November 12; and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, October 28. Meetings were held by the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Allied of South Dakota, Allied of Texas and Wisconsin I.T.P.A.

The annual convention of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana will be held October 28 in the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, according to Charles R. Metzger, attorney and general manager.

Theatre executives from many Iowa cities have been invited to be guests of the independent Des Moines theatre owners at a masquerade in Hotel Fort Des Moines on November 2. The meeting is to be confined to a social gathering.

The annual convention of Allied of Michigan, originally set to be held in Detroit, October 22-23, is now scheduled to take place there in the Hotel Statler on November 12-13. The annual meeting of the board of directors will be held November 11.

The first definite announcement of a new independent producing company which is being sponsored by Allied States Association will be made at the annual convention of the M.P.T.O. of Western Pennsylvania at the Hotel Schenley in Pittsburgh October 28-29 by Abram F. Myers, Allied counsel, when the orzanization meets then.

In South Dakota J. B. Clinton's "flying squadron" idea of regional meetings to cement Allied Theatre Owners of the Northwest bore additional fruit last week when 25 South Dakota showmen joined the organization at a meeting held at Mitchell.

The I.T.P.A. of Wisconsin met in Milwaukee Tuesday and Wednesday and on Tuesday Colonel H. A. Cole was reelected president of the Allied Theatre Owners of Texas at San Antonio.

Book Week Tie-ups

Exhibitors again are preparing to tie up with the national "Book Week" movement, to be held this year from November 17th to 23rd, and in this connection there has been compiled a list of 152 feature motion pictures suitable for uniting theatre, library, school and club interests. The list, prepared by the National Board of Review, appears on page 51.

Argentina Producing

In Argentina, where the motion picture season starts in the second half of March in the first-run theatres, things already are looking up for next year, writes N. Bruski, the HERALD'S correspondent at Buenos Aires. This story is on page 61.

The late Mr. William Shakespeare would have been surprised no end could have have had a glimpse at the press book that Mr. S. Charles Einfeld has evolved for the use of the exhibitors of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The press book, despite its exhaustive pretentiousness, is a study in restraints, astonishingly emphatic by reason of its avoidance of the traditional blatancies which so often pass for "showmanship."

LOCALIZED ARBITRATION TO BE PROPOSED IN NOVEMBER

Local Groups Must Have Power to Enforce Decisions Delegated by Distributors and Exhibitors, Showmen Declare

Kuykendall Will Place Results of Field Meetings Before MPTOA Directorate Next Month; Code Idea Dropped

Distributing corporation managements at headquarters in New York will in November be presented by theatre owners with the first tangible plan since the NRA for establishing arbitration machinery in the field to adjudicate disputes between exhibitors and exchanges and among exhibitors themselves.

With virtually all hope gone for effecting a voluntary code out of the industry government that was legislated under the Blue Eagle, exhibitors, led by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, are at this moment engaged in a study to determine the best possible means of adjusting buyer-seller troubles through organized mutual effort.

With this in view, Mr. Kuykendall is continuing his firsthand inspection in the field from the Midwest clear through to the Pacific Coast, holding informal talks with the best exhibition minds for opinions on the necessity of such machinery and the manner in which it should operate.

That an arbitration setup of some kind is sorely needed was learned by Mr. Kuykendall before he had spent a week in the field, starting late last mouth "if only to give the exhibitor a place to go to tell someone about something he doesn't like."

From his talks with pioneer theatre operators he learned, too, that the arbitration groups must be vested with the power to enforce decisions, a power given to them locally by distributors in New York, as in the case of the branch exchanges, and by the exhibitor constituents of the exhibitor arbitrators.

New NRA Plea Reported

With the Kuykendall exhibitor organization interests proceeding to work out the solution to theatre-exchange problems, contractual and otherwise, there were recurrent reports in Washington that the Administration may yet go before Congress at the next session this winter for new NRA legislation. Administration officials were keeping close guard on statistics upon which President Roosevelt will base his decision.

The statistics, showing to what extent industry at large has abandoned wage and hour standards of the nullified codes, were flowing in to Washington from 700 special field workers, but no inkling of what they disclosed was available.

The investigation was being conducted under the President's directions, and those in charge of it expected that the results would play a large part in determining whether new legislation would be asked of the next Congress to replace the NRA.

Meanwhile, the American Federation of Labor was contending that on the basis of employment and production figures for the country, increased industrial activity was bringing longer working hours instead of more jobs. The Federation, therefore, undertook an independent survey of the situation.

LICHTMAN JOINS LOEW-METRO

Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., announced Wednesday that Al Lichtman, former president and sales manager of United Artists, would join Loew-Metro soon in an executive capacity.

Mr. Schenck said: "I consider the acquisition of Mr. Lichtman, with his wide and lifelong experience in the industry, a valuable addition to our present organization. He does not join us to replace any member of our staff."

While unannounced, it is understood that Mr. Lichtman will serve as an aid to Mr. Schenck and that his duties will in no way involve Loew theatres but will be special executive assignments for Mr. Schenck.

At the Federation's convention in Atlantic City, last weekend, Sol A. Rosenblatt, former Blue Eagle administrator, declared that adoption of A. F. of L. standards as the prevailing wage and hour rate in all localities would lead the way to industrial peace.

However, management and labor will be sounded out before any new industrial legislation is attempted by the Administration, Major George L. Berry, new coordinator for industrial cooperation, said when he invited the motion picture industry, and all others which operated under the NRA codes, to attend a round-table conference sometime soon.

Regulatory, Not Mandatory

In any event, Major Berry explained at Washington last Saturday that any recovery legislation sought by the Administration at the next Congressional session will be directed toward the regulation of competitive and labor policies rather than contemplating a return to any sort of mandatory code regulation.

Answering charges that his proposed conferences with business and labor leaders were projected for the purpose of drumming up sentiment in favor of a return to codification of industry by what virtually represented compulsion, the Major asserted that the only aim of the federal agency was to further the adoption of voluntary codes, although he did say that one of the objectives of his organization will be the development of a central point where the views of business, labor and the public may be coordinated to arrive at the best solution of long standing business problems.

Major Berry warned that the course of the Administration's move for new industrial control legislation will be directed by the manner in which business itself meets its problems.

"The question whether voluntary trade associations and voluntary codes will be strong enough to drive out 'cut-throat' competition and the 'sweatshop' operator from business without legal help, can best be answered by industrial leaders themselves facing the coming conferences," he concluded.

Localized Arbitration Held Needed

Regardless of the ambitions of the Administration to effect regulation of industry in some legal form authorized by Congress, it appears that the motion picture finally will take action on its own before the year's end.

For the successful operation of local arbitration groups, Mr. Kuykendall now finds in his field trip, there should be a purely disinterested party to sit with a fair representation of exhibitor and distributor interests. As a balancing factor, the disinterested arbitrator would be invaluable, as was proved by NRA code experience when the very life of many a local film code board frequently was saved by such a third interest.

That the new field organizations would be neither a revival of the old Film Boards of Trade, as favored by some distribution interests, nor of the old arbitration boards that operated under the Film Boards, was pointed out when the MPTOA determined that they would, instead, comprise a representation of local exchangemen empowered by home offices to take independent action on trade practice complaints locally, working with exhibitor arbitrators.

A small group in New York, such as the previous Code Authority, or any small distributor-executive circle, could not have the knowledge of local conditions essential for the settlement of most grievance cases, Mr. Kuykendall found. The NRA code workings further proved that point.

He said, as did exhibitor leaders with whom he discussed the situation, that the industry has and always will have its buyer-seller troubles, of greater magnitude than other businesses, and that that sort of grievance cannot be legislated out of existence. To his knowledge, he added, no exhibitor

EQUITY HINTS TAX ON FILM THEATRES TO HELP STAGE

Actors' Forum, Radical Group Within Association, at Same Time Criticizes the Government's 10 Million Dollar Grant

Association Charges Screen and Radio with Ignoring Plight of the Legitimate; Radio Business Shows Good Gains

Evidently intent upon exciting animosities because of its admitted failure to enlist the aid of screen and radio in rehabilitating the stage, Actors' Equity Association is waving a threatening "blackjack" over the heads of film and broadcasting interests with the suggestion implied in the question, "Will it be necessary to impose a (federal) tax on (motion picture) theatre admissions and receiving sets," the proceeds of which tax would be used to maintain the legitimate theatre in this country, in order "to awaken these interests to the necessity or the advantages of cooperating with the legitimate theatre?"

And even as Equity was condemning the screen and radio for their lack of interest in aiding the competitive theatrical business, Actors' Forum, Equity Liberal group, found much to criticize in the United States Government's $10,000,000 grant to the theatre of the drama for rejuvenation purposes. While Equity was endosing the plan "wholeheartedly," the Actors Forum was expressing general dissatisfaction with the projected Government subsidized program, especially with regard to the salaries scheduled for out-of-work actors employed in the project.

Ironically, Equity's belittling appraisal of the screen, in its relative value to the stage, came almost within a few hours of an announcement from the producing Theatre Union, in New York, that a survey among workers disclosed that whereas 54 per cent frankly admitted that they do not attend the dramatic theatre, the majority of those questioned replied that they go to the movies, and only 10 per cent confessed to never going to pictures at any time.

"Haphazard Lightnings"

"For many years Equity has preached and practiced its belief that the legitimate theatre is an instrument of education and culture the preservation of which should not be left solely to the haphazard lightnings of public interest," said a statement from Equity headquarters in New York. "And for most of that time Equity has received, at best, polite acquiescence to the theory, but no practical help from other branches of the amusement (presumably motion pictures and radio), or from educational, cultural and governmental organizations who should be most interested in its perpetuation."

Just why Equity thinks the screen and radio should further the business of their competitor, the stage, was not made clear.

Regardless, continued the Equity tirade, "It was with considerable interest that Equity read a dispatch from Belgrade, the capital of Jugoslavia, to the effect that the government of that nation plans to institute a one dinar stamp (a dinar is currently worth 2.30 cents) on each ticket of admission to a motion picture house, the proceeds of which will be used to maintain the legitimate theatre in that country. The dispatch also adds that a similar tax on radio receiving sets is in prospect.

LABOR THEATRE TO BE OPENED IN NEW YORK

A theatre to promote the social and cultural ideals of labor and present to the public an accurate picture of unionism is now being organized in New York by a number of labor unions, it was revealed last week at the fifty-fifth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor in Atlantic City. The project has the personal approval of William Green, president of the organization.

Incorporation papers for the new dramatic group, to be known as Labor Stage, Inc., have already been filed in Albany. Its work will include the formation and co-ordination on nonprofessional groups, and the sponsorship of a number of professional groups.

"Quite aside from the expediency of any such move in the United States at this time, Equity," it said, "believes this dispatch indicates that the potential value of the legitimate theatre really means something to Jugoslavia and that its acknowledgment is not an idle gesture or mere lip loyalty. It means enough so that other forms of entertainment are required to contribute to its maintenance. And that is a point which might well be taken to heart by this country, here and now.

"For, while Equity knows regretably little of the literary and dramatic heritage of the Jugoslav theatre it seems unlikely that it has the richness and variety of the drama to which the American theatre is heir. Yet," continued Equity, "lacking the conviction of its importance to succeeding generations and the courage of that conviction, American motion picture and radio interests have regarded the legitimate theatre either as a rival to be exterminated, or a field to be exploited through the advantages of superior financial power and organization. And our cultural, educational and governmental agencies have sat quietly by and watched the unequal contest with only an occasional expression of sympathy for the beleaguered theatre."

"So far," they complained, "Equity's genuine and entirely friendly overtures to motion picture and radio interests have drawn either contemptuous silence or, through their semi-official spokesmen in the trade press, sneers and allusions to the theory that the legitimate theatre, knowing it cannot sustain direct competition, is begging for its life from its conquerors."

A special mass meeting of the general membership of Actors' Equity probably will be called to consider the proposed theatre projects of the Works Progress Administration, government relief agency. The union's counsel considered the matter over the weekend after receipt of a petition of the Actors' Forum, which has expressed dissatisfaction with the WPA's projected stage-circus-vaudeville program.

At the same time last week that the Actors' Forum took up the WPA matter, several other theatrical unions in New York revealed that they, too, were harboring dissatisfied reactions with the Government as a theatrical producer. Most of the comment along Broadway in this connection was aimed at the WPA proposal to charge low admissions, which, it was felt, placed the United States in the role of a professional producer rather than a relief agency.

Too, throughout the organized acting field, there is a feeling that if producers or the Government use actors on relief wages, the Equity minimum wage standard will be undermined. Accordingly they ask that the Equity minimums of $40 weekly for senior members and $25 for juniors be instituted on relief projects. They also demand a closed shop on the projects as well as freedom from any supervision of the League of New York Theatres, which is an employer-producers' group.

Ralph Whitehead, secretary of the American Federation of Actors, composed of vaudeville and circus actors, was reported to have concluded that his group no longer regarded the Government's show project as a temporary plan and that, accordingly, he demands a minimum of $40 weekly for his constituents.

And the while Actors' Equity was expressing worriment over the condition of the stage, the radio industry, like the motion picture, saw further bright spots ahead.

This was disclosed by Orrin E. Dunlap, who, surveying the broadcasting field for the New York Times, reported: "Radio industrialists are happier than they have been since the days before their business hit rock bottom in March, 1931.

Furthermore, radio factories are reported to be busiest since 1930. The public is buying. There are now 50,000 radio factory employees, compared with a normal 40,000. "Sales are 20 per cent ahead of last year," Mr. Dunlap said, "and it seems safe to believe that the total number of sets sold in 1935 will cross the 5,000,000 mark."

To Martin Quigley

Dear Mr. Quigley:

I want to take this occasion to add my congratulations to the many which have been given you on the occasion of the anniversary of your twenty years in the service of the motion picture industry as a publisher of a fine group of trade papers.

Not only have you stood for the best ideals in motion picture trade paper publishing, but it is a matter of record that your personal efforts in the best interests of the industry have resulted in benefits for every member of our business. I distinctly remember the pleasure I received in working with you in one industry problem recently. It gave me an insight into the honest and sincere manner in which you work.

That the industry has joined in unanimously celebrating your 20th anniversary is not only a sign of its recognition of you, but also it is a sign of applause for fearless tradepaperdom.

SABATH INQUIRY MOVES TO BOSTON; VANDERLIP HITS DIRECTOR SYSTEM

Investigators Will Take Up Circuits' Reorganization on Return to New York in December, Says Chairman

Chairman Concedes It Was Not Unethical for Reorganization Committeemen to Trade in Securities

Winding up an eight-day series of meetings in New York during which it investigated many phases of the Paramount Publix reorganization and laid the ground work for a continuation of the inquiry, the Sabath Congressional Committee investigating real estate bond reorganizations transferred its activity to Boston over the weekend, with Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles next on the schedule.

The first matter to gain the committee's attention in Boston on Monday was the more than $4,100,000 worth of bonds issued by Metropolitan Buildings, Inc., which owns the Metropolitan, largest motion picture house in New England, operated by M. & P. Publix.

In the final two days of the committee's New York hearings, outstanding developments included:

Congressman Adolph J. Sabath of Illinois, chairman of the committee, announced the inquiry would extend to the reorganization of Paramount and other large circuits when it reconvenes in New York in December.

Frank A. Vanderlip, who recently resigned as a member of the Paramount board, in a letter to the committee, scored the failings of corporate administration by directorates.

Congressman Sabath finally agreed—with reservations—with Mr. Vanderlip that it was not unethical for members of a reorganization committee to trade in the securities of companies they were reorganizing.

The eight federal judges in the Southern District of New York, during a conference with committee members, agreed to submit recommendations for improvements in the reorganization and bankruptcy procedure.

Disavowal of theatre leases by holding companies in bankruptcy or receivership will be subjected to thorough study when the committee returns to New York, said Congressman Sabath. The committee has received numerous complaints from theatre landlords claiming they have suffered because of circuit bankruptcies, some unjustified, it was said. S. A. Lynch, theatre reorganization advisor for Paramount, will be sought as a witness.

Congressman Sabath said that conditions in California were "particularly rotten." It was reported that the committee eventually expects to investigate the reorganization of Fox West Coast theatres.

"More than 500 instances of theatre lease cancellations occurred in this country in the past few years under the cloak of receivership," Congressman Sabath charged. "Information in the possession of our committee indicates many of these receiverships were obtained by collusion and fraud. Frequently the companies involved were not insolvent."

The committee had evidence of a large number of irregularities in the foreclosure of theatre properties throughout the country, indicated the committee chairman. He said federal judges agreed that preventive measures should be taken.

Given an assignment to investigate real estate bond reorganizations under Section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act, the committee is taking the motion picture companies as part of a general study and is not concentrating on the film companies or theatre circuits. Congressman Sabath said one certain recommendation to the House early next year would be amendments to Section 77B placing a limitation on fees in a reorganization proceeding, and that another recommendation would suggest the curbing of "chiseling lawyers," particularly in connection with bondholders' committees.

Following a two-hour conference with the members of the federal judiciary, the Congressman said he felt certain that henceforth smaller allowances and fees would be allowed in reorganizations in the Southern District of New York. He said the judges had agreed to recognize legal representatives of the committee in reorganization hearings and had promised to submit by January 1 their recommendations.

Judges Criticized

Members have criticized federal judges for allowing high fees in reorganizations and for refusing to hear representatives of the committee on behalf of bondholders.

Congressman Sabath related that some of the judges suggested a permanent bureau as an adjunct to the court to investigate actions brought under Section 77B and to assist in protecting the rights of bondholders. The Congressman continued that such a bureau or organization, to be named by the President, the Controller of the Currency or some other high official, had been considered for a long time by the committee and would be proposed in legislation.

Congressman Sabath disclosed the judges felt that due to 77B proceedings so much extra work had been heaped upon them that they are sometimes unable to give all matters the detailed attention and consideration they deserve, and proposed a coordinator of bankruptcy and 77B action be appointed in the district and that some work be referable to referees.

The judges participating were John C. Knox, William Bondy, Francis G. Gaffey, Murray Hulbert, Julian W. Mack, Alfred C. Coxe, Henry W. Goddard and Robert P. Patterson.

Vanderlip Asks Changes

At the final hearing of the committee in the Federal building, a letter from Mr. Vanderlip, former president of the National City Bank and former Paramount director, was read in which he urged a study of the actual government of large corporations, as well as of reorganizations. Mr. Vanderlip indicated his belief that boards of directors as now constituted have outlived their effectiveness.

"I have been in years past on many important boards and I am not impressed with the efficiency of our present methods," Mr. Vanderlip wrote. "A director having an hour a week or an hour a month cannot possibly have the basis for making sound decisions in many cases. The recognition of increasing responsibility attaching to members of a board is making it increasingly difficult to secure altogether desirable men."

It is only rarely that the ordinary stockholder has any voice in choosing directors, Mr. Vanderlip said. At an earlier session, Congressman Martin J. Kennedy of New York City had offered the suggestion that some outstanding figure such as a General Hugh Johnson or Samuel Seabury be on the Paramount board to represent the mass of stockholders.

Mr. Vanderlip brought up the committee's criticism of his testimony that while he was chairman of a bondholders' committee he purchased Paramount stock, and that while he requested a fee of $50,000 for his services he admitted making a profit on the transaction. He said:

"It would seem more logical to criticize members who did not have an interest that would lead to their sole concern being the particular security which they represented. If one takes his chances and bets on what he is trying to do to improve the value of a particular security it seems to me entirely proper that he buy securities."

Congressman Sabath agreed that persons not having an interest in a business would not give it the same care as if they were interested.

"I feel, however," he added, "that the committees should not utilize inside information to buy bonds when they are down to nothing when they know that these properties can be and will be reorganized and that the values of the securities will be enhanced."

Former Judge Cites Lease

In another matter, former Supreme Court Justice Stephen Callaghan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., said that he leased two Florida theatres to Paramount, of which he is a director, while serving also as a trustee of the Prudence Company, when better bids were received as to the lease terms for the theatres in each case. Prudence is affiliatd with Paramount as a building and theatre holding company.

The former judge said the figures agreed upon reflected an advance over the sum received the preceding year. One of the theatres was in Jacksonville, the other in St. Petersburg.

William M. Greve, former president of Prudence Company, who resigned in 1929 but is now a trustee, offered further testimony concerning certain loans his company made.

Committee Hears H. T. Mintz

Opening hearings in Boston on Monday, the Sabath committee heard testimony by Herbert T. Mintz, head of Metropolitan Buildings, Inc., to the effect that the $6,000 weekly paid by Paramount Publix to the building firm up to Dec. 15, 1932, was not a rental for the Metropolitan theatre, but was to be paid only if the cash was available from the theatre's earnings. Payment ceased when Paramount entered bankruptcy.

Herbert Davis, a Boston public accountant, expressed his belief that the present reorganization plans cannot be carried out, and that the interest on new bonds would not be earned as long as the loss on the theatre continued. Last year's loss to the building firm was reported as $270,000.

SIROVICH INVESTIGATION OF THE FILMS BLOWS UP

Abrupt Ending of Hearings Follows Disclosure of Connection of Committee Counsel with Lawsuits on Patents

Attorney Berger and "Clerk" Robins Resign from Committee; Only One Film Executive, Sidney R. Kent, Is Heard

Investigation of patent pools and cross-licensing agreements in the motion picture equipment field, which began Tuesday of last week in New York, exploded Friday afternoon when, in sequel to revelations by Motion Picture Daily on Wednesday, Dr. William I. Sirovich, Congressman from New York and chairman of the House committee on patents, announced it had sufficient information and that further testimony of film executives would be "repetitious."

At the time of the adjournment only one motion picture executive, Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, had been heard. Will H. Hays, Al Lichtman, E. W. Hammons, Jack Cohn and several other film executives were at the committee's quarters in the Fifth Avenue hotel under subpoena of the committe and prepared to testify.

Decision to adjourn was reached at an executive session in which the resignations of David Garrison Berger and Robert Robins as officials of the committee were handed in and accepted. The session followed disclosure of the fact that these two men were affiliated with litigations aggregating $67,000,000 pending in the federal courts against American Telephone & Telegraph Company, Western Electric Company, Inc., and Electrical Research Products, Inc., which were the first companies investigated.

The Wall Street Journal on Saturday reported the termination of the inquiry as follows:

"Congressional investigation of patent pooling in the movie industry came to an abrupt, unscheduled halt Friday, following resignation of the committee counsel and the economic adviser on the heels of disclosure of their interest in pending litigation by private parties against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., first of the companies to be probed.

"David Garrison Berger, 31-year-old 'legal expert' for the committee, had been revealed as being of counsel in a Sherman Act case seeking $15,000,000 damages from A. T. and T., and by his own testimony in another suit a few months ago was associated with Ralph Vatner, attorney, in ten suits against the A. T. & T. totalling a face complaint value of $40,000,000.

"Robert Robins, it had been disclosed subsequent to the opening of the congressional committee hearings in New York City this week, had the same business address and telephone number as Mr. Vatner, and furthermore was formerly an officer of Duovac Radio Corp. which is currently involved in litigation against A. T. & T.

"The resignations, it is understood, followed a hurriedly called, and heated, meeting of the committee, and the decision to excuse the various movie industry executives assembled there under subpoena was agreed to by all but one of the committee members."

The facts concerning the connection of Mr. Berger and Mr. Robins, officially listed as "clerk" to the committee, with the pending lawsuits were related October 16 by Motion Picture Daily and were also presented in the October 19 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The suits were filed on the basis of alleged misuse of the patent pooling arrangements the committee set out to investigate.

At the opening session Congressman Sirovich had announced that Mr. Berger and Mr. Robins were working without compensation "for the public good," and later the committee attaches said they were serving as "dollar-a-year men."

At Friday morning's session, Congressman Randolph Perkins of New Jersey, a committee member, decried the questioning of Mr. Kent when he was being examined as to his annual compensation. The Congressman declared that questioning along this line was disturbing to business.

Perkins Clashes with Robins

When Mr. Kent left the stand, Congressman Perkins moved for permanent adjournment. At this point Mr. Robins, who was understood to be one of the committee's advisors or investigators, injected himself openly into the proceedings for the first time, and addressed the committee in opposition to adjournment, saying that 10 or more leading film executives had been subpoenaed and should be heard.

"Who are you?" Mr. Perkins asked.

When informed that Mr. Robins was "clerk" to the committee, he asked that the record of the proceedings show this identification of the committee's "investigator" and that the identity of the committee counsel also be made part of the record. The session was then hurriedly recessed by the chairman, with the understanding prevailing in the committee room that the hearing would be resumed as usual at about 2 o'clock.

Investigation Ends Abruptly

In the meantime the executive meeting was being held. Finally, at 4 o'clock the committee members took their seats and Congressman Sirovich read his official statement, which ended the motion picture investigation.

Congressman Sirovich announced that the hearing would proceed Monday morning in the Fifth Avenue hotel with an investigation of radio patent poolings. Friday's session, however, was the last.

On Wednesday Mr. Berger had taken an active part in questioning Edgar S. Bloom, president of Western Electric and Erpi, on those companies' activities in the sound equipment field, and in interrogating George E. Quigley, vice-president of Vitaphone, but on Thursday and Friday he left the interrogating entirely to the committee.

Also, following disclosure of Mr. Berger's dual position as counsel in the untried lawsuits against A T & T and its subsidiaries, it was reported that officers of the plaintiff companies who had been subpoenaed for the hearing would be excused from testifying, or if they were put on the stand would not be examined by Mr. Berger, their counsel.

Though the committee members understood that patent pools and cross-licensing agreements in radio, airplane manufacturing and oil cracking processes were also to be investigated, Congressman Sirovich, who sponsored the House resolution authorizing the inquiry, chose motion pictures as the first subject.

Mr. Kent, the last witness, testified concerning the many claims to patent validity made by various interests during the early days of sound equipment development and the reasons why Fox, Paramount, MGM and other large film companies finally elected to contract for Erpi licensing.

18 Months of Tests

The decision was not reached for 18 months, said Mr. Kent, during which a committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association continued negotiations with Erpi, at the same time conducting careful tests of many other makes of recording and reproducing equipment. Mr. Kent said the considerations leading to the decision to align with Erpi were the quality of Western Electric equipment, the desirability to have contracts with a company that could manufacture in large quantities, quickly, and at the same time continue improvement of the product; the financial responsibility of the company to protect its patents and their users, and the existence of service organization large enough to maintain the equipment after installation.

"A producing company's investment in sound equipment was so large," said Mr. Kent, "that any producing company would have been bankrupted by patent suits, if it had not contracted with a reliable equipment concern."

Mr. Kent under questioning said Erpi first asked 8 per cent of a licensee's gross but that the negotiations finally ended in a flat royalty charge of $500 a reel for recording of features and $100 a reel for shorts and news reels.

Replying to a question whether he did not think Western Electric should be required to license any manufacturer who sought to make sound equipment, Mr. Kent explained that a sound manufacturer's responsibility and resources were more important to the producer licensee than the cost of the equipment. He testified that his company's contract with Erpi did not prevent him from selling film to any exhibitor regardless of the reproducing equipment installed.

FILM INQUIRY ENDS

Concerning the proposal in Congressman Sirovich's bill to have the pooling of patents and cross-licensing registered with the Bureau of Patents, Mr. Kent said, "I think everybody's mind would be relieved if they knew to whom the patents belonged."

Mr. Kent testified that his company contributes $100,000 annually to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. While he said the amounts the member companies contribute are based on a formula "known only to Mr. Hays," he estimated the total contributions to the MPPDA as not exceeding $600,000 yearly, the members contributing in proportion to their grosses.

Mr. Kent explained that the MPPDA maintains a large staff engaged in censorship, settling internal difficulties of the industry, watching for adverse legislation, registering titles, books and stories and to some extent seeing after relations of the companies in foreign countries.

The question of registering patent pools and cross-licensing probably would not be a subject to come up before the MPPDA, testified Mr. Kent.

Sees No Objection to Pooling

In reply to a question by Congressman Charles Kramer of California, Mr. Kent said he would not object to a central pooling of sound equipment patents "if they continued the improvement of sound."

He also indicated that definite objection would be made by the film companies if A T & T or any of its subsidiaries endeavored to engage in producing because of their vast hold on the sound equipment phase of the industry. He said he was not worried about that eventuality because in his opinion the electric companies knew no more about production than the film companies did about making sound equipment.

Mr. Kent testified his annual salary was around $66,000 a year, although it varies.

Stressing the necessity for continuous improvement in sound equipment, Mr. Kent said: "Sound motion pictures today are as crude as the telephone was 20 years ago."

Denies Company Lobbying

Congressman Matthew A. Dunn, blind lawmaker from Pennsylvania, asked:

"How much money does your company spend to lobby in Washington?"

"So far as I know, I have not spent any money down there for Fox Films," replied Mr. Kent.

"Wait a minute," Mr. Dunn said, "you say you did not? That may be true, but does your company spend anything?"

"Not that I know of," was the answer.

"How in thunder are you people so successful in keeping legislation from being enacted which we believe is going to be of benefit to the people?" Congressman Dunn asked. "How is that done?"

"I should think you could answer it better than I, Congressman,"

"Do you want to know my answer?" pursued the Congressman. "My answer is that the corporations spend gigantic sums of money for that purpose."

"I am under oath, and I say we don't," replied Mr. Kent.

Proposes 'Phone Cost Reduction

Congressman Sirovich contended it would be only fair if the A T & T employed the profits made from the production of sound equipment to reducing the cost of telephone calls, since the funds for the development of sound equipment patents had been obtained from the telephone using public.

C. C. Colby, former president of the Samson Electric Company, Canton, Mass., testified his company was liquidated in 1932 when it was unable to effect an acceptable cross-licensing agreement with A T & T and subsidiaries for the manufacture of sound equipment units. He said an agreement had been offered him, the signing of which would have been equivalent to signing "our death warrant."

Pressed for an explanation, Mr. Colby explained the agreement proferred called for dissolution of the licensing benefits if royalty payments were not made within a 30-day period.

Would Restrict Utilities

Replying to questioning, Mr. Colby testified he favored federal regulation confining public utilities to the field for which they were franchised and favored the availability of patents of a company such as A T & T to any responsible company at a reasonable royalty fee.

Joseph Numero, former president of the Cinema Supplies Company, Minneapolis, testified that he had been unable to obtain licensing agreement from A T & T in 1932 and that his company is now defendant in actions by that company for infringement of amplifying patents.

After hearing these witnesses Congressman Sirovich said he believed the situation could be remedied for independent sound manufacturing concerns by making provision in his bill for the granting of licenses to outsiders by a large company developing such patents as a by-product to its main field. Representatives McFarland of Texas and Buckler of Minnesota said they, too, favored such a licensing provision.

SEC Report Shows Laemmle Holdings

Reports of stock holdings of officers and directors of corporations to the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington show that Carl Laemmle on August 31 held 7,016 shares of Universal common outright, 58,692 shares through one voting trust, 120,127 shares through another voting trust, 1,265 shares of special cumulative first preferred and 15,703 shares of second preferred.

A similar report on Trans-Lux Daylight Pictures showed that H. P. Farrington, director, disposed of 400 shares of common and at the end of the month held 9,600 shares.

Local Arbitration Proposal Up Soon

had ever gone into the courts on such matters and come out with anything left for himself, even though he won a judgment against the exchange, or against a competing exhibitor.

Seeing Coast Exhibitors

Mr. Kuykendall already has talked with owners and leaders, "both large and small," in the principal cities of the east, midwest, and south, and will follow the same procedure in the Pacific northwest, the west coast, the mountain regions, and then pick up any sections he has missed on a swing back across country.

He declined at this time to comment on the identities of the exhibitors he has talked with about the arbitration proposal or other MPTOA policies. He is making typewritten reports on all reactions and will consolidate these findings after he has covered the country. Mr. Kuykendall then will present them to the national MPTOA directorate in New York in November for final discussion and action, thence taking up the conclusions with the distributors.

That distributors themselves are now well aware of the dissatisfaction of exhibitors in the field over the workings of some trade practices is reflected by the daily reports emanating from Washington and St. Louis, where theatre owners hourly are pouring their grievances into the laps of Department of Justice agents now prosecuting distributors in St. Louis for alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade. These complaints are said to be reaching the Department from all sections of the country.

Favor Local Groups

The MPTOA leaders felt that the arbitration groups could be established in every exchange center, and with sufficient authority delegated to them by the interests which they represent, could adjudicate in joint hearings, virtually every trade practice complaint arising locally, excepting, of course, those involving national distributor policy—such as score charges and the like, which would be outside the jurisdiction of the local courts, and, therefore, would have to be settled at headquarters in New York.

It was these responses that influenced Mr. Kuykendall to make the trip to the field.

A preponderance of exhibition opinion saw distinct disadvantages in any invitation to any federal agency to take over industry regulation without compensating benefits in return. Distinct sentiment for a form of trade practice regulation which could and would be administered entirely within the industry and by the industry, preferably through local organizations, was revealed in the responses to the questionnaire and to Mr. Kuykendall.

Sentiments for some such arbitration plan are emanating from exhibitor ranks, rather than from distribution quarters. Its adoption has long been delayed, even from the standpoint of being suggested by distributors because of their fear that it would conflict with the Judge Thacher decree of six years ago which outlawed the distributors' arbitration system of that time.

5 CRITICS DIE LAUGHING!

Thank God, they've recovered now! They tell their amazing experience in the following pages. When you read these criticisms, you will agree that America will soon see the most important comedy attraction of years!

"Such lovely language!"

Hollywood Reporter says:

"Night at the Opera" a hit! Marxes hilariously funny! Production and music rate extra high. The Marxian recipe for a cacklefest, with song, rings the bell again with top-notch punch features. There is a grand opera backstage story of exceptional excellence, constantly punctuated by ribaldries of the three comics. The average of good laughs is so high and the musical features so delightful that there is bang-up entertainment for all tastes. M-G-M has given the picture a spectacularly excellent production and spread itself on a swell fiesta on the lower deck of a liner and on a backstage chase while the opera is under way that is as fresh and hilarious as the screen has seen in many a day. The many-sided Harpo is the hero of this episode, doing a flying Tarzan among the rigging in the flies with uproarious results. The opus is high-marked also by Allan Jones, whose singing, personality and good looks make him real box-office. Besides his operatic numbers from "Il Trovatore" he sings two dandy ballads, "Cosi-Cosa," by Kaper, Jurmann and Ned Washington, delivered at the fiesta with the Marx trio accompanying, and "Alone," by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed, with his singing team-mate, Kitty Carlisle. In the supporting cast there isn't a weak spot. Miss Carlisle is all that one could ask. Walter King himself is a real tenor. The Marx Brothers, will certainly build themselves into great favor as a result of this fine Thalberg offering.

"How those Variety boys talk!"

Daily Variety says:

Musical farce has been brilliantly adapted to the Marx brothers as their best offering in "A Night at the Opera". It gives the comic trio plenty leeway for their distinctive cavortings. Laugh score is equally divided between the Marx trio. Gags reel leisurely from hilarious congestion scene in Groucho's little ship's cabin, through sea dunking escapade as stowaways break from brig to public reception for phoney aviator heros, topping in wild Tarzanish climax at the opera where the patrons of romance snatch the menacing tenor off the stage to give Jones and Miss Carlisle their chance at fame. Finale is a pip of wild action back stage.

"Film Daily hates it. Ha-ha!"

Film Daily says:

A merry box-office number. Big laugh riot. A laugh fest with all types of audiences. George S. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind have supplied the comedians with excellent material. One of the most amusing sequences is on board ship, with Chico and Harpo and Allan Jones, stowaways, and manicurists, waiters and others falling over each other in Groucho's small room. Another laugh provoking scene finds Robert Emmett O'Connor, a detective, hunting the stowaways in Groucho's two-room New York apartment, only to find several beds disappearing under his nose. Of course, the biggest riot of laughs is in the final sequence, with the Marxes wrecking the opera. Chico and Harpo play baseball in the orchestra pit and then Harpo gets into the wings, on and off the ground, causing the scenery to fall in front and back of Walter King, who is singing. Direction, Aces.

Showmen's Trade Review says:

Here is a riot of laughter. In addition to the Marx Brothers, the supporting cast is exceedingly talented and their performances are sure to win applause from any audience. The tempo is fast and furious with plenty of new gags and clever wise cracks all the way through. This young singer, Allan Jones, is the hit of the show with his fine singing and pleasing personality. He looks like a new star for M-G-M. The musical background is excellent and the operatic songs well chosen for film patrons. Great popular appeal.

"Nice work, Showmen's Trade Review. You spell pretty good too!"

Motion Picture Daily says:

Great swells of laughter, rippled by windy gusts of giggles at the Marx Brothers, roll through this musical farce. The big moments audiences will repeat around the fireside are scenes in a two-by-four cabin bulging with almost half of the passenger list before a gag ends a maniacal duel of Harpo and a moth which flutters from the flowing beard of an air hero; the masquerade of the Marxes in those same beards ravished from sleeping air heroes and Chico's explanation to a welcoming committee of why the fliers took a boat; a rip-roaring finale at an opera performance with Groucho pursuing a rich widow all over the house, and Harpo going Tarzan trapezing in the flies as the backdrops change behind baffled singers. Tie the roof on tight when this one opens.

DISTRIBUTORS OPEN DEFENSE OF CONSPIRACY CASE AS U.S. RESTS

Prosecution Closes at St. Louis With Provision That Witnesses May Be Recalled, Prompting Heated Controversy

Government Uses 22 Witnesses of 40 Subpoenaed; RKO Counsel Moves for Direct Verdict of Acquittal

The United States Government, late Tuesday, on the 16th trial day, rested its prosecution in St. Louis of the federal grand jury criminal indictments against the Warner, Paramount and RKO corporations, their subsidiaries and officers, for allegedly conspiring in violation of the antitrust laws to prevent a flow of motion picture product from reaching the independent Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres of the Harry Arthur-Fanchon and Marco interests.

And now the "million dollar" battery of counsel for the distributors will undertake the defense before the middle class jury sitting in Judge George H. Moore's United States district court, climaxing a week of lively interrogation by the Department of Justice, the prosecuting agency, out of which there came the following highlight developments:

Department of Justice counsel dismissed from the blanket complaint two distributor subsidiaries: Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation and Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation.

The resting of the prosecution by the Government was done with the provision that witnesses may be recalled, causing heated controversy between opposing counsel.

Only 22 witnesses of 40 subpoenaed were used by the Government for its side.

Demurrers or notices of dismissal were being constructed for submission to the court by the defendants.

A Government witness testified that it was Warners' custom to purchase defaulted bonds on theatre properties which they wished to control.

There was much interesting testimony given in connection with meetings between factions interested in the involved theatres and distributor executives in New York.

Picking up the trial last Thursday morning in continuation of interrogations for the prosecuting United States Department of Justice, Jacob Chasnoff, attorney for the General Mortgage Bondholders' Committee, and Joseph A. Grand, attorney for the Bondholders' Protective Committee and the trustees under the first mortgages on three theatre properties, gave their versions of what transpired at a conference of interested parties, held in April, 1934, at which Warner Brothers' and bondholders' plans for reorganizing and operating the properties were discussed.

There were some differences in their recollections of what had transpired. Mr. Grand thought the meeting was April 6, 1934, while Mr. Chasnoff thought it was April 2, 1934. Mr. Grand said that the meeting resulted from a suggestion from Federal Judge Charles B. Davis that the parties make another effort to get together on a reorganization, while Mr. Chasnoff thought the suggestion referred to another meeting.

GOVERNMENT RESTS FOR SECOND TIME

The Government Wednesday re-rested its St. Louis conspiracy case against Warners, RKO, Paramount, et al., after Federal Judge Moore had permitted U. S. Attorney Hardy to reopen his case and recall Harry C. Arthur of Fanchon & Marco and Thomas Dysart of the bondholders' protective committee. Their redirect examination was to have their testimony better in the record with equal force and effects against all defendants and not one defendant. Strong objections of defense counsels to this procedure were overruled. Judge Moore denied Paramount's motion for a mistrial. Certain documentary evidence will also be brought in to apply to all defendants.

RKO counsel moved for a direct verdict of acquittal and also motioned for dismissal of the indictments so that they cannot be placed in jeopardy again on the same charge. Counsel for the other defendants will also file similar motions when court reconvenes Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Grand threw an entirely new light on why Herman Starr, Warner vice-president, apparently refused to go through with his offer to take leases on the theatres on the same basis as in the Snyder lease. Mr. Grand expressed the belief that Thomas N. Dysart, chairman of the Bondholders' Committee, misunderstood Mr. Starr's offer to relate solely to a lease, while Mr. Starr apparently meant the lease to be part of the general reorganization plan being advocated by the Warners.

Jules Levy, general sales manager for RKO Distributing Corporation, took the stand. His cross-examination had not been started when the court adjourned. In response to a series of questions by Counsel Russell Hardy, for the government, he outlined the general plan of producing, distributing and releasing motion pictures, revealed that RKO in 1933-34 released 44 pictures, 43 in 1933-34 and 52 in 1932-33, and he also identified the final draft for the 1934-35 season of a group of pictures from his company for use in the Shubert Rialto and Orpheum theatres in St. Louis.

Then, for the first time since the Government's antitrust conspiracy case began, a "complete program" was presented when John S. Leahy, counsel for Allen L. Snyder and the receivers for the Theatre Realty Company, owners of the Fox Theatre, took the stand to give his version of his conversation with Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation, in the Plaza Hotel in New York on April 7, 1934, when he undertook to point out to Mr. Depinet that RKO, through entering into a commitment to furnish its pictures to Warner Brothers in St. Louis instead of to Fanchon & Marco, was violating the Sherman Act, and that Mr. Depinet, as an individual, should not permit the corporation to compel him to do an illegal act.

Denies Criminal Action Sought

Upon cross-examination by Jacob Lashly, of counsel for RKO and for Mr. Depinet, Mr. Leahy was asked if he was the close personal friend of Harry Arthur that he had stated, and if so, why was it that he had prepared, either the same day or the next, an affidavit that subsequently found its way to the Department of Justice and in all probability will be used against Mr. Depinet in the present criminal prosecution. Mr. Leahy declared that neither Mr. Arthur nor any of his associates, including lawyers, had ever asked for or sought a criminal prosecution and that all they had asked of the Department of Justice was equitable relief, as they principally wanted pictures for their houses.

He then explained that when the Department of Justice delved into the situation and learned the facts it insisted upon presenting them before a grand jury.

Although he admitted that he had never met George J. Schaefer, Paramount sales manager, who is one of the defendants in the case, and had only talked on the telephone to him while he was in New York, on April 7, 1934, Mr. Leahy was permitted by Judge Moore to testify concerning what he said to Mr. Schaefer in that telephone conversation, explaining that it was preliminary to his subsequent hotel scene with Mr. Depinet and Harry Arthur. This room was in a suite at the Plaza occupied by Mr. Leahy, Harry Greenman, manager of the Fox Theatre, and Ed Koeln, co-receiver for the Theatre Realty Company.

Tells of Conference

Mr. Leahy told how Mr. Depinet came to the hotel in response to a telephone call "from someone," that Mr. Leahy wanted to talk to him, of how Arthur, Leahy and Depinet went into a private talk, at which Mr. Arthur explained that he and Mr. Depinet were friends of long standing and had had business deals for a period of years and that he was surprised to learn from Mr. Depinet that his company, RKO, couldn't sell Arthur anything in St. Louis.

"Depinet explained to Arthur of course there was nothing personal about it," Mr. Leahy continued. "Our relations had always been most agreeable and satisfactory, but 'I am prevented from selling you anything in St. Louis because in March (I believe he said March 15) my company entered into a contract with Warner Brothers, giving them our entire output of pictures for use in St. Louis.'

"I said to Depinet, 'Isn't that most unusual to enter into a contract so early in the year as March, usually such contracts are made in July and August?'

" 'Yes,' he replied. 'It is unusual and usually such contracts are made in July and August.'

"I then said to him: 'I have called a Mr. Schaefer, a representative of Paramount, on the 'phone, Mr. Depinet, and invited him to come up here; just as I invited you, telling him that I understood from Mr. Arthur that Paramount and RKO would not sell Mr. Arthur films for use in St. Louis although he was willing to pay as large a price as anyone, and I called Mr. Schaefer and yourself here to ascertain whether either of you knew how you were being used.'

"I informed him that I was an attorney representing two companies operating theatres in St. Louis who were desirous of using his films.

"Schaefer told me it would be no use to discuss the matter with him or for him to come to see me. I said to him, 'Do you realize that you have joined a combination in restraint of trade?' He replied: 'Well, we have consulted our attorneys and there is nothing that can be done about it.'" (At this point William R. Gentry, of counsel for Paramount, again renewed his objection to the inclusion of the alleged telephone conversation with a person Mr. Leahy presumed to be Mr. Schaefer, but was again overruled.)

"Depinet then stated that he and others had discussed the matter, and I said to him: 'Do you realize that the very purpose of the anti-trust act was to secure fair dealing and to prevent great big, powerful, rich corporations from destroying little companies?' He said that was a matter for the company's law department. Then I said if that is the way your company feels, and that is its attitude, then the whole matter will have to be called to the attention of the U. S. Department of Justice.

"He said, 'Don't blame me, I just have to go along with them.'

"I then asked him if he didn't believe it was a matter for me to meet his lawyer and discuss it. I hold him that Mr. Arthur and his company had interests all over the country and I didn't desire to bring down the vengeance of the big film companies on Mr. Arthur's head, but that I had to protect the interest of Mr. Snyder, my client, whose only interest was in the two theatres in St. Louis. He replied that it would be useless to take it up with the company's lawyer, that they had gone over the entire matter and Warner Brothers were the best customer RKO had anywhere."

Partner Represented Koplar

On cross-examination Mr. Leahy admitted that his law partner, Lambert Walther, had represented Harry Koplar in litigation against Warner Brothers in St. Louis. Jacob M. Lashly, RKO counsel, described this litigation as "bitter."

Clarence M. Hurley, former associate of the Skouras Brothers, in the operation of the involved Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres, and co-guarantor with them on certain bonds, was the next witness of the week and told of an argument betwen Spyros Skouras and Herman Starr, Warner official, in the Blackstone Hotel, February 27 or 28, 1934, at which Mr. Starr said that Warner Brothers got a "raw deal" from the bondholders' committee, that an effort was being made to force Warners out of St. Louis and that they would show the bondholders' committee and others that his company would continue to be a factor in St. Louis motion picture exhibition, and, if necessary, to maintain that position they would show first run pictures for as low as 10 cents; that they had purchased a large number of bonds which they intended to turn in and force the committee to pay, adding: "It is going to be a nasty fight and you will find yourself in the middle of it," meaning Skouras.

OMAHA TRIAL IS DUE THIS AUTUMN

A suit, charging conspiracy and restraint of trade by 28 distributor, exhibitor and individual defendants, and asking $500,000 damages, filed by Vern S. Brown, former operator of the Rialto at Missouri Valley, Ia., will come to trial in federal court at Omaha this autumn. The suit was filed last June 20.

Named on the complaint are the Omaha Film Board, all the major distributing companies, Regina Molseed, secretary of the board, the local MPTO, and numerous individuals, Austin Keough of the Paramount organization, Evert R. Cummings, district manager for A. H. Blank; the former Paramount Publix Corp. of Iowa and others.

Mr. Leahy was then asked whether at the conference with Mr. Depinet the question of obtaining pictures for Mr. Arthur was discussed, and he said that it had been, and that Mr. Depinet had said that he thought it could all be arranged. He said, "Don't take this matter up with the authorities at Washington. It will all work out all right. I believe that they will forget about it and finally allow us to sell you pictures and you will get the Paramount pictures, too."

This concluded the direct examination by Prosecution Counsel Hardy.

In his cross-examination by defense counsel ex-Senator Reed and other defendant counsel, Mr. Leahy made no attempt to minimize Harry Koplar's association with Allen L. Snyder and Harry Arthur in their operation of the various first run theatres in St. Louis, freely telling Mr. Koplar's connection as he understood it.

Mr. Leahy admitted in cross-examination that his primary purpose in calling Mr. Depinet into the conference was to obtain pictures for his clients to operate their theatres.

"Yes, and in order to secure those pictures you called an agent of a corporation, told him he was violating the law and that he had better quit violating it and give you the pictures that you wanted; that's what you were after, wasn't it?" Senator Reed asked. "Yes sir," was the response. "That's all," Mr. Reed replied, terminating his cross-questioning.

Mr. Leahy was followed on the stand by Allen L. Snyder, who merely testified that he was born in St. Louis, lived there, was an engineer by profession, was the same Allen L. Snyder who, with others, had made a bid for the leases of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres that was accepted by the bondholders committee. There was no cross-examination.

Other witnesses who followed included Cresson E. Smith, western and southern sales manager for RKO, and Hal Walsh, branch manager in St. Louis for Vitagraph, Inc. (Warners).

Argument Over Contracts

The jury was then excused until Friday morning, when the attorneys got into an argument as to whether Mr. Hardy should be permitted to introduce into the evidence a series of documents dealing with contracts entered into on December 7, 1928, by Skouras Super Theatres Corporation for Warner Brothers, First National and Paramount pictures, which contracts were canceled in July, 1932, after the Skouras company had been ousted from the three theatres for non-payment of rent.

It was the contention of Prosecutor Hardy that the cancellation was one of the earliest "overt acts" of the alleged conspiracy and that both Warners and Paramount had participated in it. He held that the long-term franchises were canceled by "a creature" of the defendants—Warner Brothers, and Paramount, to prevent any subsequent leases of the theatres from having any possible legal claim for the pictures under the contracts, although he admitted he was not contending that Fanchon & Marco had a legal right to claim pictures under them.

Counsel for the defense argued that the contracts and cancellation were isolated acts that had no bearing on the issue and that there was nothing in the record of the case to date aside from Mr. Hardy's opening statement to the jury to trace the alleged conspiracy back any earlier than early in 1933. They pointed out that after July, 1932, four different parties that had operated the theatres made no attempt to claim pictures under the canceled contracts and that no such rights existed under the terms of the picture agreements. Mr. Hardy construed the language of the agreement differently.

Mr. Hardy, in further arguing in support of the introduction of this documentary evidence, contended that it was taken by the board of Super Theatres "behind the back" of the court receiver for that corporation with the ultimate purpose in view of shutting off a supply of pictures to the theatres named should they in the final reorganization of the properties go to persons other than Warner Brothers or some firm or corporation controlled by or affiliated with them.

Judge Moore said that he could not immediately decide on the question and at the suggestion of Mr. Hardy the matter was sidetracked and the case proceeded.

Tells of Starr Conversation

J. M. Ulmer, a Cleveland attorney, then testified concerning a statement he attributed to Herman Starr, Warner vice-president, on August 14, 1933. He said that he had gone to New York to see Warner Brothers about a controversy involving the Capitol theatre in Wheeling, W. Va. He was asked by Mr. Hardy what Mr. Starr said in reference to the St. Louis theatre situation. "He said that the very situation that we were discussing was similar to the situation Warners had in St. Louis," Mr. Ulmer replied, continuing: "He said that he had been in similar situations elsewhere and knew how to handle them. That they would go out and buy up bonds and get themselves in a position where they would be able to handle the matter and force the bondholders out. That where they found the owner in a weak position financially they would get his equity by paying him a few cents on the dollar.

U. S. FINALLY CLOSES TESTIMONY

"He said that they were big and powerful enough to control the product needed for the house and we would have to deal with them, and that they had stopped the people we were dealing with from getting product, and that it would be best for us to deal with them, because they were in control.

"I told him that I didn't care what they would do in St. Louis, that so far as I was concerned I would not stand by in our situation and let him take advantage of our bondholders. You may close our theatres for a year, I said, and we may not be able to get product for the house for a year, but I will not permit you to take advantage of the bondholders and will see that they get a fair deal."

Upon cross-examination, Counsel Wood asked: "Mr. Ulmer, would you be surprised if I told you that none of the things that happened in St. Louis had transpired at the time you had your conversation with Mr. Starr?"

"I wouldn't be surprised, but that is what Mr. Starr told me that day. I have given you what he told me," was the response of Mr. Ulmer.

Mr. Wood then asked Mr. Ulmer if he had not been an attorney in connection with the case of the Cleveland Trust Company versus the Capitol Theatre Company, Inc., in which Warner Brothers had been accused of conspiracy. Mr. Ulmer admitted that he had been interested in the case in that capacity, but would not admit there had been a final court decision in favor of Warner Brothers on all the issues involved. He contended that the conspiracy charges had not been fully heard, holding that a lower court ruling in favor of Warner Brothers involved only some of the issues. Mr. Wood was prevented from introducing the court's ruling and final decree but was permitted to question Mr. Ulmer about them. In response to a question by Mr. Hardy, Mr. Ulmer said that the Wheeling case is now before the Supreme Court of Appeals for West Virginia. He denied that he told the story about Mr. Starr because he had been connected with the Wheeling litigation and said that he bore no prejudice or malice toward Mr. Starr.

Attorney Questioned

Gordon E. Youngman, attorney for RKO, was questioned concerning a letter written by Ned E. Depinet to Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation, on March 29, 1934, in connection with a commitment for RKO pictures for the Shubert-Rialto Theatre, St. Louis, and other theatres Warners might acquire in St. Louis. That letter and a similar letter sent March 28, 1934, by George J. Schaefer, of Paramount Distributing Company, to Abel Cary Thomas, of Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation, were introduced.

FEDERAL OFFICIALS RECEIVE COMPLAINTS

Twenty-five new complaints for alleged violation of the Sherman anti-trust act have been received in six days from independent exhibitors by Department of Justice officials in St. Louis prosecuting the indictments, for alleged conspiracy charged against Warners, RKO, Paramount, their subsidiaries and officers.

Maurice Schweitzer, St. Louis branch manager for Paramount, on cross-examination, said that it was customary when an exhibitor was building a new house or planned to acquire another theatre to contract in advance for films to be shown by that house. This was intended to explain why Warner Brothers, in March, 1934, obtained commitments for RKO and Paramount pictures, although the actual contracts were not signed until several months later.

Both Sides Score

Both sides scored two points Monday as the government was forced to delay closing of its case because of lengthy arguments over the admissibility of certain exhibits by Russell Hardy, prosecuting attorney. Another debate on the introduction by the government of a list of all Warner theatres was left undecided Monday when court adjourned.

As the court convened Monday for the 15th day of the trial, Judge Moore announced the first victory for Warners by sustaining objections to admitting the franchises and contracts of Skouras Super Theatres which were entered into in 1928 and canceled by Warners four years later. Two previous arguments had been held on this subject.

Clarence D. Hill, Columbia branch manager, then testified as to his duties and stated that the company distributed 37 features in 1934-35, 35 in 1933-34, and 36 in 1932-33.

Next was Clayton D. Lynch, M-G-M manager. He testified along the same line and asserted his company released 41 features in 1934-35, 39 the year previous and 44 in 1932-33. Joseph Garrison of Universal testified he has been branch head since July, 1932, that his company handled 36 features in 1934-35, 35 in 1933-34, and 26 in 1932-33. Ben B. Reingold, of Fox, said Fox had 49 pictures in 1934-35, 51 in 1933-34, and 44 the year before. William Feldstein, of United Artists, stated his company distributed 23 features last season, 17 in 1933-34, and 13 in 1932-33.

In the absence of Austin C. Keough, Paramount secretary, the company's St. Louis counsel stipulated as to the corporate setups of the various affiliated companies indicated. Louis Phillips advised the court that although mentioned in the indictment, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation never existed. In the case of Warners, Mr. Wood declared that one of the subsidiaries was mentioned by two different names and inasmuch as there never had been a company by the name of Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation this name should be scratched off the list. This was done. Jacob M. Lashly stipulated for RKO Distributing Corporation. Charters of the various companies were also placed in the record as well as the executive structures.

The second defeat on Monday for the government came when Mr. Reed objected to the introduction of Warners' financial report dated August 25, 1934, and was sustained.

Mr. Hardy said: "The government wanted to show the resources of Warners, its size and calibre and that it was capable of effectuating this conspiracy by carrying out the threats testified to by witnesses."

Mr. Reed contended that it was "irrelevant, immaterial and calculated to inflame and prejudice the jury."

Mr. Hardy countered with, "In this case the government is not making a general fact about the wealth of Warners. If this company were poor, it wouldn't have been able to make a conspiracy effective. We wish to be permitted to show the resources of Warners and the power to do the things they threatened.

"Warners threatened to use their entire resources to destroy these men and to strike terror in any small corporation," Mr. Hardy said.

Again Mr. Reed retaliated, declaring that the case mentioned by the government was a monopoly case and had nothing to do with the issue before the court. He said, "Hardy some time ago stated he was not trying to prove a monopoly and yet he cites a monopoly case.

"The question is not whether we struck terror into others, but whether we restrained trade and not whom we scared," the ex-Senator concluded.

The two government victories came in succession when Hardy attempted to introduce lists of the bondholders in Central Properties Corporation and St. Louis Properties Corporation in addition to submitting an intervening petition by Warners against the reorganization plan of the bondholders' committee for the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central. Objections by Mr. Wood in both instances were overruled.

The government finally closed its case at 11:40 A.M. Tuesday, the 16th day of the anti-trust trial against the five film executives, their companies and subsidiaries, but not before Warners had scored another point.

This came when Judge George H. Moore sustained the objection made by former Senator James A. Reed Monday to the inclusion of a list of all Warner theatres.

Five Witnesses Tuesday

That a directed verdict for each of the defendant corporations and individuals would be asked of Judge Moore when Russell Hardy rested his case was indicated Monday by defense counsel.

But five witnesses were heard Tuesday. They were called by the government to establish that without Warner Brothers, First National, Paramount and RKO pictures there was not a sufficient available supply of high class pictures to supply the needs of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central.

Judge Moore announced that he had sustained the defense objection to the introduction of the contracts of the Skouras Brothers Super Theatres Corporation, made in 1928 for Warner and Paramount pictures, and the cancellation of those franchises on July 29, 1932. Later, with much argument of counsel on various legal points, the court made these rulings: Sustained objection of defense to use of financial statement of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., to support government's contention it would show the company was big and powerful enough to carry out alleged threats to do certain things as part of the conspiracy, but did permit the introduction of a list of bond purchases made by the Warner interests between February, 1932, and March 31, 1934, totaling $300,000.

Sheehan Returns; Silent on Plans

No commitments of any kind pertaining to his future activities were made by Winfield Sheehan, former Fox production head, during his three months' vacation abroad, he said on his return to New York this week. Mr. Sheehan emphasized that the trip had been solely for vacation purposes and declined to comment on current reports linking him with production activities for various companies regardless of his specific denial that he had discussed any future business connections during his absence. Mr. Sheehan was accompanied by his wife, Marie Jeritza, singer.

It is his opinion that England now is a definite competitor for the world's film trade, the British government, press and public, furnishing loyal and practical support to their film industry. He said: "In England today there are more individual picture producing companies than in America and many millions of pounds have been freshly invested this year." "British picture production is gaining by experience and improving its entertainment quality," he added.

However, Mr. Sheehan said, "American motion pictures continue to be the popular and most pronounced entertainment in Europe. Hollywood is recognized as the world's creative amusement capital, although there is competition in the field."

On the subject of England he further declared that, "The best known and most popular authors and dramatists in England have joined the new movement and are engaged in a detailed examination and study of talking pictures' enriched position. This contribution appears certain to improve the entertainment character and story quality.

"At present, the cost of producing an average motion picture in England equals the Hollywood cost. They also face the problem of too many theatres and an excessive number of seats for the population. Throughout Europe, but especially England, Italy and Spain, the picture theatres this year have enjoyed a record prosperity, despite high taxation. A greater number of persons than ever before have paid admissions, which are generally 30 per cent higher than in America," Mr. Sheehan concluded.

Mr. Sheehan plans to remain in New York about four weeks before proceeding to the coast. Indications are that he may discuss new production associations while in New York and others on his arrival in Hollywood.

Fox "Met" Fees Face Attacks in Court

Objections to all the applications for allowances and expenses, aggregating more than $800,000, for services in the reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses were voiced at a hearing recently before Federal Judge Julian W. Mack in New York by Gustavus A. Rogers, attorney and chairman of a Fox Theatres stockholders' protective committee. Mr. Rogers contended that all the applications were excessive and many of them should be disallowed in toto by the court.

Milton C. Weisman, proponent of the Fox Metropolitan reorganization plan as receiver for Fox Theatres, also voiced objections.

RUSSIAN FILM SCRIPT BAFFLES HOLLYWOOD

Scenario writers declare that the largest number of writers ever to "work over" one script is 22. The story is "Soviet," having to do with modern Russia, which not even that many men seem to be able to present in a manner that is filmable.

Writing costs charged against the picture during its four years of "preparation" are said to be about $200.000

Films Get Equal Chance in Mexico

Paving the way for the return of American films to Mexico, Finance Minister Eduardo Suarez has announced that he will place them, along with all English pictures imported into Mexico, in the same category and on an equal competitive basis with native productions, according to a dispatch of Universal Service from Mexico City.

Rogers Memorial Drive To Start November 4

Coordination of plans for the drive for funds for the Will Rogers Memorial Commission is now being worked out in Hollywood by John C. Flinn, secretary of the operations committee. The drive will start November 4, Rogers' birthday.

Mr. Flinn arrived in Hollywood last week for conferences with California members of the commission and one of the plans being discussed is that of incorporation, in order that the commission may be perpetuated. The incorporation certificate will be filed soon in Washington, D. C., it has been indicated.

Arrangements are also being made by Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, campaign director, to open special Will Rogers Memorial accounts with 17,000 banks throughout the country to which the public may contribute.

Edward M. Fay has been named active state chairman of the Will Rogers Memorial Committee of Rhode Island by Governor Theodore Francis Green and the chief executive, himself a personal friend of the comedian, will act as honorary chairman.

National Theatre Heads To Convene Next Week

Divisional operating heads of National Theatre units, formerly Fox West Coast, will convene in New York next week for conferences on future operating policies with Spyros Skouras, president of the organization. Attending will be: Charles Skouras and Arch Bowles, California; Rick Ricketson, Denver; Elmer C. Rhoden, Kansas City; Harold J. Fitzgerald, Milwaukee; Frank L. Newman, Sr., Seattle, and David Idzal, Fox, Detroit.

AMPA Honors Sport Champions

Twelve champions of sport, presented by Thornton Fisher, himself well known in athletic circles, as master-of-ceremonies, were scheduled to be guests at the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on Thursday at Jack Dempsey's restaurant, off New York's Broadway.

At last Thursday's luncheon, Bide Dudley, theatrical critic and columnist on the old New York World and now in the same activity on Station WOR and the Mutual broadcasting chain, told the advertising and publicity directors to "pay a little attention to radio and don't let the newspapers awe you."

Asserting that radio reaches a larger audience than newspapers, Mr. Dudley pointedly expressed his opinion of the neglect of theatrical critics of the radio.

Frank Buck, principal speaker, related some of his experiences in the jungles and in shooting 120,000 feet of film for his latest picture, to be released under the title of "Fang and Claw" by RKO Radio in November.

It was "critics' day," and Julius Cohen of the Journal of Commerce spoke briefly, and on the dais also were Bland Johaneson of the Mirror, Irene Thirer of the Post, Marguerite Tazelaar of the Herald-Tribune, as well as Louis Calhern, the actor.

Gordon S. White, AMPA president, referred to the critics as "the people who pan our pictures and who pan us 52 times a year, and yet we love them." He said motion picture publicity men sometimes envy the critics' "freedom of expression."

A speaker introduced as "Dr. Igor Hodapp, famed Central European film authority," harangued the gathering in hilarious dialect, later revealing himself as Pete Mack of the National Broadcasting Company.

Boris Morros, who this week left his post as managing director of the Paramount Theatre on Broadway to join the west coast studio in a production capacity, said farewell.

Consolidated Has Quarterly Profit

For the three months ended September 30, 1935, Consolidated Film Industries' net earnings after deducting all charges including depreciation and federal taxes amounted to $345,362.25, which is equal to 50 cents per share on 400,000 shares of preferred stock outstanding and 28 cents per share on 524,973 shares of common stock outstanding.

For the nine months ending September 30, the net earnings after deducting depreciation and federal taxes amounted to $823,019.64, which is equal to $1.50 per share on the 400,000 shares of $2.00 preferred stock outstanding and 42 cents per share on the 524,973 shares of common outstanding.

Last year for the three months ending September 29, the net, before deducting federal income taxes, was $356,971. For the nine-month period the net, after deducting federal income taxes, was $1,506,212.67.

MOTION PICTURE ON THRESHOLD OF GREATEST DAY, HAYS TELLS SMPE

President Homer Tasker and Other Officers Reelected at Society's 38th Semi-annual Convention in Washington

The motion picture of the future is destined to play a part in the daily life of the nation second to nothing else in importance, members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers were told Wednesday night by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, at the banquet of the organization's thirty-eighth semi-annual convention at the Wardman Park hotel in Washington.

The industry today is on the threshold of a development which will make those of the past dwindle into insignificance, Mr. Hays said, with the three-dimension picture, natural color and perfect sound due for introduction in the not distant future.

Homer G. Tasker was reelected president at the opening session on Monday of the four-day convention, and the other officers also were reelected without opposition. They are: executive vice-president, Emery Huse; editorial vice-president, J. L. Crabtree; convention vice-president, W. C. Kunzmann; secretary, J. H. Kurlander; treasurer, T. E. Shea. The meeting lasted through Thursday.

Taking as his subject "A Vision of the New Screen," Mr. Hays said in his banquet address that much of the credit for what has been accomplished in raising the artistic level of motion pictures, as well as for that which is to come, is due to the technicians.

"Only a few years have elapsed," Mr. Hays pointed out, "since the moving shadows received a voice, and the utterly silent picture of yesterday seems like a poor crippled thing stumbling along in speechlessness, desperately trying to make itself understood by placards and pantomime.

"Your efforts," he told the engineers, "will result in developments of tomorrow, challenging the writers, directors and artists to employ their talents to the utmost to make full use of the infinite resources you put at their disposal.

Surveying fields other than that of entertainment, Mr. Hays reviewed the contributions of newsreels and short product to the historical record of our times and expressed appreciation of the inclusion of a film library in the new National Archives.

Also, he declared, the stage of technical progress has now been reached which warrants the extension of the motion picture into the field of teaching.

"We may imagine the visual surface of a screen animated with a stereoscopic background with every natural color undiminished. We may face, in a great rendition of opera, a scene more impressive in its vividness and naturalness than an opening night at La Scala or the Metropolitan, taking the finest artistry of the world to every town and city.

The convention opened with optimistic predictions voiced by Mr. Tasker, who said:

"Motion picture patrons, within the next five years, will see the practical perfection of sound in motion pictures; harmonious, true-to-life color, and stereoscopic or third dimension pictures which make every object on the screen stand out in bold relief."

Delegates were given an idea of the possibilities of third-dimension pictures by Professor C. Kennedy of Smith College, who projected still pictures on a screen which, when viewed through special glasses furnished the audience, assumed lifelike proportions.

Debate following Professor Kennedy's exposition revolved around the question whether the public would be willing to wear glasses in order to obtain the relief effect, and while it was conceded that there might be sufficient interest in such pictures as a novelty, considerable doubt was voiced as to general, every-day acceptance of this method.

Attention Centered on Color, Sound, Third Dimension and Theatre Lighting; Progress Medal to Dr. E. C. Wente

Possibilities in the field of visual education were canvassed by the engineers, following talks of government officials explaining federal interest in educational films.

Films made by the Army during the war were produced with a view not only to obtaining an historical record of the conflict, but also to their use in training officers and men, it was explained by Major M. E. Gillette.

Vast potentialities are seen in motion pictures as an educational medium, said C. M. Koon of the Office of Education of the Interior Department. Considerable success has attended the efforts to further the cause of visual education, he said, and indications are that the use of 16 mm. sound films will lead to rapid advances in this field.

Educational institutions also are interested, according to F. H. Conant of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in an explanation of the program adopted by the Institute to facilitate teaching in science and engineering.

Potentialities of color, as well as anomalies of vision—many persons being what is termed partially color blind in one respect or another—were brought out by officials of the Bureau of Standards during a session held in the auditorium of that agency.

Fundamental factors that determine the light output of the motion screen projector were discussed by A. A. Cook of Bausch & Lomb Optical Company.

Also devoting himself to projection problems, F. H. Richardson, projection engineer of New Wente, research physicist, Bell Telephone Laboratories, was awarded the Progress Medal for outstanding work in motion picture technology. This is the first time this honor has been awarded. Thomas Armat of Washington, D. C., pioneer in development of the modern motion picture projector, was presented with a scroll of honorary membership in the Society. Dr. Julian H. Webb and Dr. L. A. Jones (right), both of Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., received the SMPE Journal Award for the most outstanding paper published in the Journal in 1934. Their paper was on "Reciprocity Law Failure in Photographic Exposure".

York, who conducts the technological department in Motion Picture Herald, told the film engineers that the basic reason for the prevalence of projection faults is found in the lack of real projection departments.

Theatre lighting and acoustics were considered at length during the convention, a number of papers being read on various phases of these problems, as well as the question of air filtration.

The evolution of the principal elements of sound motion pictures may be traced back to the invention of the telephone, it was declared by E. C. Wente of the Bell Telephone Laboratories.

During the four days of the convention, the engineers took up a number of other questions, including the 16 mm. film. A demonstration in color with synchronized sound was given by H. H. Jones of Buffalo, N. Y.

The banquet was featured by the presentation of its newly created Progress Medal to Dr. Edward C. Wente, research physicist, in charge of acoustical investigations of Bell Telephone Laboratories. Presentation was made by Mr. Tasker.

The medal is to be awarded each year by the Society as recognition for outstanding inventions in motion picture technology. Dr. Wente was chosen for his work in acoustics and acoustical instruments with special reference to their application to the recording, transmission and reproduction of speech and music.

Thomas Armat Honored

An honorary membership was voted to Thomas Armat, who pioneered in projection design, on the proposal of his name for formal recognition by Glenn E. Matthews, a member of the historical committee. Mr. Matthews read a paper describing Mr. Armat's part in early developing of a projecting machine embodying an intermittent movement with a long period of rest and illumination of the pictures on the film. The first public demonstration took place in Koster and Bial's Music Hall in New York April 23, 1896.

Colored motion pictures are in keeping with the outstanding revolutionary changes in industry such as streamlined trains, Diesel engines, synthetic enamels and beer in cans, said Howard Ketcham, New York color engineer. He was of the opinion color films will replace black and white "when they embody a means of reproducing color with fidelity throughout the entire range of the visible spectrum, when color costs approximate black and white production figures and represent a minimum change in production technique." His conclusions were that the present use of color is distracting, that adequate color direction is a vital need, and that the industry is not ready for tints on a permanent basis.

Screen Brightness

One of the most important topics discussed was screen brightness. Clifton Tuttle of the Eastman Kodak Company, chairman of the SMPE's projection screen brightness committee, gave data regarding certain transmission characteristics of release prints and described the apparatus for measuring screen brightness.

Physical factors pertinent to screen brightness and a review of the existing data accumulated for 20 years were recounted by S. K. Wolf of Electrical Research Products, Inc. Screen illumination used now is rather higher than that used in the earlier days and is becoming temporarily stabilized at values approximating those recommended for interior of illuminating engineers, he said.

BLOOM ATTACKS COPYRIGHT BILL

Congressman Sol Bloom of New York, a one-time theatre man, in addressing the SMPE delegates in Washington this week, turned his fire on the Duffy copyright bill, which has passed the Senate and now is pending in the House.

If this bill is carried to the extreme to which it would permit, he said, it would mean the destruction of the motion picture industry, because in permitting the copyright of design, the copyright holders could indefinitely hold up development and production of equipment through injunction and infringement proceedings.

The laws of photometry were briefly reviewed by R. P. Teele of the United States Bureau of Standards, and D. B. Judd of the Bureau discussed color blindness. A discussion of tests on cellulose films was presented by S. E. Sheppard, P. T. Newsome and S. S. Sweet of Eastman Kodak Company.

President Tasker in his address arrived at the conclusion that Eugene Marey is the one really entitled to the designation of "Father of the Motion Picture," basing his conclusion on the fact that it is Marey who, in 1886, made the first successful consecutive photographs of motion as applied to animal life and birds and also of the planet Venus as it passed across the disc of the sun.

The entertainment value and broad appeal of American pictures are powerful factors in retaining a substantial portion of the important foreign markets, said Nathan D. Golden, of the motion picture division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. While he is convinced that "American quality films will never be submerged abroad," Mr. Golden at the same time analyzed some of the major difficulties confronting American film exports.

E. R. Geib, chairman of the membership and admissions committee, reported the addition of 288 new members, bringing the total membership, after necessary deductions, to 1,182, the largest in the Society's history.

An amendment to the constitution to extend the presidential term to two years, the same as the other officers, will be voted on by mail ballot, according to a proposal at the convention.

Among changes in the by-laws approved was one clarifying the voting powers of the various classifications of membership. Under the new by-laws only the fellows and active members have the right to vote and participate in the SMPE affairs.

Ben Shlanger, architect, gave it as his opinion that theatres in the future would not exceed 2,000 capacity for the proper presentation of standard films. A. S. Dickinson of the MPPDA told of the movement to put into effect the 2,000-foot reel throughout the industry by April 1, 1936.

Seventeen manufacturers displayed their latest equipment developments in the lobby of the Wardman Park. Dominating the scene were 16 mm. projectors for sound and silent films.

The subject of color engaged the attention of the delegates Tuesday afternoon when they adjourned to the auditorium of the United States Bureau of Standards for a discussion presided over by Lyman J. Briggs, the Bureau's director. K. S. Gibson of the Bureau was a speaker.

Two programs of feature films and short subjects were screened.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Indian-War Press Agent Comes Back

IN THE VANGUARD of a worldwide roundup of the erstwhile associates of Colonel William F. (Buffalo Bill) Cody, now being organized by Cecil Blount De Mille for his forthcoming "Buffalo Bill" Paramount production, there stands out above the others 49-year-old Courtney Riley Cooper, Missouri-born, cornfed writer of the plains. With most of the colorful old cronies of Buffalo Bill's shortly to converge on the gold-paved, luxuriously-limousined streets of Hollywood, there is sure to be a grand old reunion with Cooper, for it was Courtney Riley Cooper—ranking literary authority on the old west and biographer of Buffalo Bill, who served the illustrous old Indian-fighting army scout as press agent. Yep, even Buffalo Bill had a press agent on the plains.

It seems that, one day, some 20-odd years ago, long-and-silver-haired Cody walked into the city room of the Denver Post, routed Cooper out from under a desk—where he was trying to hide for having quoted the Colonel with wholly ungrammatical fidelity in an interview. But, rather than administering the thrashing that Cooper had expected from the well-set Cody, the Colonel commended him as the only reporter who had ever quoted him accurately. He made him his press agent on the spot.

And now the tale of the fearless plains-ridin' Buffalo Bill is to be retold on the modern talking screen, after having been repeated with some regularity, especially in the early days, since 1893, when the list of the very first motion pictures included a 50-foot subject with and about Colonel Cody himself, his Sioux Indian ghost dancers and the well-known Annie Oakley, famed as Little Sure Shot of Buffalo Bill's Wild West show.

Coincidentally, vivid events in the life of Annie Oakley, the simple Ohio backwoods girl who astounded the world with her almost unbelievable feats of rifle markmanship, are being brought to the screen this week in an RKO drama of that name, and starring Barbara Stanwyck.

Born in a log cabin in Patterson township, Darke County, Ohio, Annie at the age of nine was supporting her family by her prowess with a rifle. In five years she had paid off the mortgage on the family farm, and in succeeding years became so famous she joined the Buffalo Bill Wild West show and toured the world, giving exhibitions and defeating every man who challenged her markmanship.

Annie could split a playing card held with its thin edge toward her; could pepper a card scaled into the air 13 times before it hit the ground; could puncture dimes tossed into the air. She broke flying balls with her rifle held high above her head, and once shot steadily for nine hours, using three 16-gauge hammer shotguns which she loaded herself, breaking 4,772 out of 5,000 balls.

It wasn't a "high hat" that prompted Rubinoff, the radio maestro, to demand a "stand-in" instrument for his precious Stradivarius violin, during the making of "Thanks A Million" for 20th Century-Fox. The insurance companies demanded it fearing serious damage to the $100,000 Strad under the powerful studio lights.

Add to life's little ironies, United Artists' trade paper advertisement of a few days ago in which they reproduced the following telegram:

DENVER THEATRE HONORED BY WORLD PREMIERE SAMUEL GOLDWYN'S BARBARY COAST OPENED TONIGHT BREAKING OUR HOUSE RECORD THRILLING TO SEE LINES OF WAITING CROWDS MAKES US SING HAPPY DAYS ARE HERE AGAIN STOP NEWSPAPER AND PATRON COMMENTS HIGHLY FAVORABLE SHOULD BE GREAT SUCCESS NATIONALLY REGARDS—HARRY HUFFMAN.

The Postal telegram was reproduced in the ad to give the effect that it was tacked to an office door. Underneath it was scrawled this inscription: "Dear Mr. Lichtman, this telegram arrived just after you left for the coast. Upon your return you'll find it tacked on your door."

Well, Mr. Lichtman returned to New York from that trip to the coast, but there was no telegram tacked to the door; in fact, there was no door—in so far as United Artists was concerned there was no Lichtman.

Ironically, too, the "Barbary Coast" that was praised so highly for its box office performance by Denver Circuit Owner Huffman in his telegram, was one of the products that Samuel Goldwyn complained was not bringing him enough rental revenue, the very complaint that led to the blowup out of which came Mr. Lichtman's resignation from the United Artists presidency.

Lloyd's refusal to Disney for a $5,000,000 insurance policy on Mickey Mouse may or may not have been disappointing to Walt, but it got him another several thousand dollars' worth of press mention for nothing—which was not disappointing.

Disney simply could not resist confessing to the press that the great international insurance underwriters of Lloyd's had based their refusal on the grounds that Mickey is not a proper subect for insurance because he is "immortal."

Not in the wildest imagination of Hollywood's highly-imaginative mystery-story writers have we heard anything as weird as the Robert (Believe-It-or-Not) Ripley yarn that was spun over the NBC network the other evening, about the photograph that was imprinted on the flesh of a man struck by lightning providing a clue that saved an attending physician from jail on a theft charge. The photograph of the doctor, imprinted on an ailing client as he administered over him, furnished the physician with the alibi that he was not at the scene of the robbery, as he had been accused.

Out-Barnuming Phineas Barnum

NEW YORK'S socalled "arty" cinemaites turned out the other evening to hear Monsieur Francois Doublier lecture to the New Film Alliance at Hubbel Auditorium in Steinway Hall. Few present, if any, realized that the baldheaded Frenchmen who regaled them with stories of how at one time in the long ago negatives going through laboratory processing were actually "bathed" in bath tubs, then dried with Turkish towels, was one of the very first commercial motion picture exhibitors of the world, bringing films and portable equipment, carried on his back, to cities and hamlets of the Old World, from the Baltic Sea to the Golden Horn, some 40 years ago.

M. Doublier, too, claims the distinction of being the first newsreel cameraman, having toured Europe from 1896 to 1900, in connection with the portable performances, taking pictures of important events. After he "shot" the coronation anniversary ceremonies, or something, of Czar Nicholas, he quit, because "there were no more scenes to be photographed, no more important events to be covered." That was in 1900!

M. Doublier was an assistant in the late 1890's to Lumiere, another Frenchmen, who was sweeping the European countries with his Cinematographe invention. He was one of the Lumiere camera-showmen who, starting in the summer of 1894, began long tours through Europe with the Lumiere portable outfits.

Posters everywhere announced the coming of the great Cinematographe and the wondrous making of local pictures, which were shown a few days later to the same audience. Throngs gathered at the appointed places to see the marvel and to be in the pictures taken. The capacity of the Lumiere Cinematographe camera was about 13 meters at one loading, or 45 seconds of exposure—today they load about 670 seconds of exposure in a standard sound camera. Anyway, to insure the continued audience of large numbers, each paying admission, M. Doublier, like his colleagues, often cranked an empty camera at the crowds for hours on end.

M. Doublier attained a signal stroke of showmanship in southern Russia. When he arrived with the Cinematographe in Kiev, he found the large Jewish population tremendously interested in the revelations of the famous Dreyfus military affair in France.

The Dreyfus case at the time was a worldwide issue. Monsieur Dreyfus, a French army captain, had been falsely accused and sentenced for life to the hell hole of Devil's Island as a traitor to La Belle France. Years later, after international protestations of millions of liberals, the French Government granted him a re-trial, which brought complete vindication for the captain, his reinstatement in rank, and a decoration from the government, which apologized most profusely for the "mistake," discovered when the advocate general of the original court martial was himself found to be a spy.

It was a far greater issue than Massachusetts' Sacco-Vanzetti case, and out-Mooneyd California's 20-year-old Mooney case. So, sorting through his stocks of films on arriving at Kiev, M. Doublier selected bits of a military parade. At the head of a column was a tall, perky officer. This captain he labeled Dreyfus. Further sorting brought forth a picture of a French government building which would pass easily in Russia for the scene of the captain's trial. A long range picture of some warships at Bordeaux became in Doublier's ready fancy a picture of Dreyfus being taken away to exile and prison, disgraced, stripped of his buttons, his sabre broken in two. For a month this synthetic sensation played to a capacity business in Kiev, and thence through the whole country about.

This fiction would probably have been deemed most unseemly by the dignified Lumieres, had they known it, back at their studios in Lyon in the south of France. But Monsieur Doublier deemed it most profitable.

Today, Doublier is manager of the little Major Film Laboratories at the Fort Lee hilltop in New Jersey across from the Manhattan skyline, there continuing experimentations, this time on color in motion pictures.

Forty years in the business and never in Hollywood—Monsieur Doublier.

King Prajadhipok, of Siam, is taking a correspondence course in swimming from Hollywood. Johnny Weissmuller, Metro's Tarzan, is to be swimming teacher. He is arranging to photograph a series of his own swimming strokes, to send, with detailed explanations, to the Siamese monarch at Bangkok.

King Prajadhipok, who is intensely interested in swimming, in his little teakwood-rice-bullock-and-buffalo-growing country in the Malay Peninsula, met Johnny when he visited Culver City recently. Since then the two have corresponded. The Siamese king asked many questions about swimming, and finally "suggested," half in fun and whole in earnest, that if he had pictures of Johnny's strokes he could follow the lessons better.

Donald Woods has been working so hard in Hollywood that he has had practically no time to devote to his wife and kiddies, so they say. Finally, with a moment off, he rushed home and was so overjoyed at the sight of his wife that he gave her a tremendous hug and broke one of her ribs. That's their story.

Many an exhibitor in the large centers thinks he has plenty of hell, but even the small towner has some hard luck at times.

Paul Poag, manager in Del Rio, Texas, of Robb and Rowley's three theatres, started out the other midnight in an automobile with his wife to take a print of Will Rogers' "Steamboat 'Round the Bend" to the circuit's theatres at San Angelo for a Sunday booking. Crossing Dry Devil's River, ordinarily dry, sudden raging waters marooned them. The water came up over the hood of the car, stalling the engine. They stayed in it until the water rose over the floorboard, then got out and waded to a high spot, where they waited for 55 hours for aid from an airplane. Meanwhile, a tiny plane set down in a dry spot about 30 yards long and picked up the films.

The other day, in search of information about the status today of music in the movies, Gus McCarthy, of our Hollywood reportorial organization, wandered into the Hall of Music on Avenue A in the beautiful Fox Movietone lot in California, the Hall to which Winfield Sheehan gave such tremendous thought and labor. It is a noble building wherein all that is the last word in mechanical and scientific advancement is available to accommodate and show off the rich outcroppings of any muse. But Gus got a shock. Before his eyes was the most elaborate display of gent's toggery—suits and coats and vests—he ever saw. He thought he was in the wrong place, maybe the wardrobe building. So, outside he went and looked up the granite and cement facade, but there chiseled in the marble in letters of gold were the words: "Hall of Music."

Gus paused for a moment to squint around and then he saw another sign: It was an "A"-shaped board facing two directions, covered with sign cloth and bearing in flaming crimson letters:—"Herman Politz." Inside again and there was Herman himself, coyly waiting to take orders for suits and coats—and thereby a pants presser finally makes the grade in Hollywood, selling vests in a Hall that we remember Winnie dedicating to the "advancement of all that is noble in an art that is universal—the charm of music."

Gus is afraid of what he's going to run into at Columbia.

We have in hand many responses to the recent appeal of the Loew-owned Broadway Capitol theatre for information about the allegiance of Pitcairn Island in the Pacific—which plea was broadcast through these columns after Capitol patrons had probed further into the history of the island when it was screened in a short subject at that theatre.

"Does any nation own or control it?" queried the Capitol for its patrons. Searches through the great New York Public Library and into the State Department at Washington had failed to unearth an answer.

Pitcairn Island has grown from an uncharted, unknown spot of 150 years ago to its present size of 52 families, all bearing the names of four ancestors who mutinied on His Great Britain Majesty's warship, "Bounty."

Now, from Morris Rosenthal, of the Bridgeport, Conn., Majestic theatre, we learn that the islanders divided the place among themselves and own it, but that 25 years after the mutineers settled there the British assumed the protection of the island and it is at present under their guardianship.

Another reader, Frank Feinberg, New York, elaborates somewhat on Mr. Rosenthal's remarks, reporting that the affairs of the island are conducted by a council of seven members, with a president, who acts also as chief magistrate, and a vice-president, who is also government secretary. They are subject to "His Majesty's High Commissioner for the Western Pacific," who is at present Sir A. G. M. Fletcher.

The High Commissioner is assisted by deputies and has jurisdiction, in accordance with an Order in Council of 1893, for the purpose of carrying out provisions of the Pacific Islanders' Protection Acts of Great Britain of 1872 and 1875, and to settle disputes between British subjects living on the Pacific Islands.

Seldom does a ship pass the island, and only once every few years does one stop there. Local and radio bulletins posted on a tree trunk provide the news. Trees, fish and fields provide food and shelter. The Polynesians have gotten mixed into the little colony.

RCA Photophone Announces Combined Film-Sound Unit

A combination film projector, "High Fidelity" sound head, and lamphouse on a single casting, for use in theatres and auditoriums having no equipment, or where old equipment is to be replaced, has been announced by RCA.

According to Edwin M. Hartley, RCA Photophone manager, the combination of sound, projection and illumination in a single unit, rather than as separate systems linked together, makes possible a substantial saving in the initial expenditure, as well as in the cost of installation and maintenance.

The sound mechanism in the new equipment is identical with other Photophone soundheads utilizing the rotary stabilizer unit and optical systems. The projector is equivalent in operation to the new Super-Simplex silent projector, and was developed especially by International Projector.

Production Delayed on WLS Barn Dance Film

Production on the WLS Barn Dance Show picture has been delayed for several weeks in Chicago. The picture was originally scheduled to start this month with Charles "Chuck" Reisner directing but he was unable to leave Hollywood and the producers are now negotiating with Luther Reed to replace Mr. Reisner.

The picture will be shown in halls and auditoriums, particularly in the middle west, where the Barn Dance radio program is popular, through the WLS Artists' Bureau, on a percentage basis.

COURT CUTS $2,194,616 FROM BILLS IN PARAMOUNT REORGANIZATION

Judge Coxe Takes Two-thirds Off Total of $3,239,828 in Fees and Expenses Asked in 53 Applications

A slash of $2,194,616.67 in the total of $3,239,828.15 in fees and expenses requested in 53 applications for services in the reorganization of Paramount Publix was made by Judge Alfred C. Coxe in the United States district court in New York, who announced his decision Wednesday.

This represents a reduction of two-thirds in the total applied for and leaves the total allowed by the court as $1,045,211. Only 10 of the petitions were granted without reduction. Seventeen applications totaling $905,800 were disallowed entirely and the balance of 26 claims was reduced by $1,289,816.

Of the total allowed, $766,426.50 is for fees of trustees, committees, lawyers, experts and others, and $278,784.98 is allowed for expenses. Requests for expenses totaled $398,796.

Prior allowances for fees and expenses granted and paid aggregated $458,029. This brings the total allowed by the court to $1,503,241. In addition, Paramount Publix has disbursed for expenses in connection with the proceedings about $400,000.

Judge Coxe made the deepest slash in the application of Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, the law firm which served as counsel to the receivers and trustees through the two and one-half years of the reorganization proceedings. The firm entered the largest single application, for $700,000 in fees and $7,679 for expenses. The application was reduced to $200,000 fees and the expenses were allowed as requested. With $250,000 in fees allowed several months ago, this firm receives a total of $450,000.

Cook, Nathan and Lehman, as counsel to the Paramount stockholders' committee and to Paramount as a debtor corporation, was allowed $115,000 of the $250,000 it requested. The stockholders' protective committee's application for $170,000 in fees was denied, and its request for $170,875 for expenses was reduced.

Judge Coxe's opinion was that Barney Balaban, a member of the committee, was essentially a Paramount employee and as such not entitled to compensation for services. Maurice Newton and Gerald Brooks, other members, were disqualified by the court for compensation because they had engaged in trading in Paramount securities while members of the committee.

The same yardstick was applied to Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman of a bondholders' committee, who asked $50,000 for himself and $30,000 for four other members. Mr. Vanderlip, who had traded in Paramount bonds, was disqualified for compensation, as was Lawrence Stern's application for $7,500, for the same reason.

Applying the rule that numerous counsel who intervened for independent committees and creditors and for themselves only duplicated the services of the principal committees and that their services were of a personal nature to their clients and therefore they should look to them for compensation, the court rejected all applications of this nature, holding also that nothing of value was thus brought to the reorganization.

How Much They Claimed and What the Court Allowed Them

CALIFORNIA'S TAXES CAUSE HEARST TO MOVE

Predicts Motion Picture Folk Will Follow While Mayer Adds "I Told You So"

William Randolph Hearst, multi-millionaire owner of widely diversified interests, announced this week that California's high income taxes are compelling him to transfer his permanent address from his native California to New York, abandoning at once his San Simeon ranch and its castles, cattle and fruit orchards.

Mr. Hearst's prediction that others in California will follow, particularly motion picture folk, brought an "I told you so" from Louis Burt Mayer, production general over Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's studio at Culver City.

Seventy-two-year-old, San Francisco-born Hearst told of his plans in a letter to Variety Daily, Hollywood studio publication, and complained that with California's 15 per cent income tax, federal income taxes and the New York taxes, "plus many other taxes," over 80 per cent of his income—"in fact, it may be nearer 90 per cent"—is diverted from his own into state, municipal and federal coffers. His special aversion, however, is the California law and "its peculiar provision that if anyone, even though a citizen of another state, remains in California six months of any year, he thereby becomes for that year a citizen of California and is subject to California income taxes in addition to the taxes he has to pay in the state where he has his actual and legal residence."

Sees General Exodus Warranted

Mr. Hearst, a native son of a native son —his father, George, was a California Senator at Washington—believes that "a number of moving picture people who earn considerable salaries are unwilling to pay the high income tax of California, and are accepting engagements in the east or abroad."

He said he is "inclined to think that if some alert moving picture company should establish studios in Florida, or Delaware, or New York City, or some suitable eastern place, they could get many of the most valuable stars away from Hollywood.

"This would be better for the nation than allowing them and many leading directors to go abroad, to build up English pictures, and foreign pictures generally."

Mr. Hearst is said to be ready to depart immediately from California, arriving in New York late next week.

Louis B. Mayer said he, too, believed it is "inevitable that others will be obliged" to leave California.

Led Income Tax Fight

Mr. Mayer, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, the western affiliate of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was a leader in the political fight last spring against the proposed California income tax. He said:

"All this definitely confirms what I have expressed during recent months against excessive taxation.

"It is regrettable that the seriousness of this situation has not been realized by the majority of the people. Too many sit back and take too lightly such things until there is a crisis.

"Mr. Hearst's leaving evidences the fear in all our minds of the disastrous consequences of reckless and discriminatory tax legislation," he added. "It seems inevitable that others will be obliged to follow, regardless of their great love for this state."

The California income tax, passed after bitter argument in the legislature, was designed to raise about $10,500,000 annually along with other new levies for the state's 1935-37 budget, which passed the $400,000,000 mark.

After blocking various efforts to impose an income tax running from 25 to 50 per cent of the federal rates—which caused the Hollywood studio colony to threaten to move eastward—Governor Frank Merriam succeeded in enacting the Chatters bill calling for a levy ranging from one to 15 per cent of the income. Exemptions are similar to those under the federal income tax.

Altogether, it was variously estimated that all of California's new levies would add $93,000,000 to $115,000,000 to the state's depleted revenue every two years.

New York Unions And Circuits in 10-Year Agreement

Loew's theatre interests last weekend signed a new 10-year contract with Local 306, Operators' Union, in New York, embodying wage scale provisions agreed upon several weeks ago and providing for mandatory increases every two years on a scale to be agreed upon by a board of four arbitrators, to end the difficulties between unions and theatres that have been in existence for some time.

The contract is cancellable after seven years at the election of either party. According to the union, the pact also provides for one week's vacation with pay for every man annually. This provision was described as an innovation in labor contracts. The arbitration board will consist of two circuit and two union men and will be the final authority in the establishment of the new wage schedules at the end of every two-year period.

The new schedules provide for a rate of $1.86 per hour for neighborhood and subsequent run houses, as compared with the former $2.12½ and continuation of the $2.55 per hour rate for Broadway de luxe houses.

The statement on the signing of the contract was ascribed only to Charles C. Moskowitz of Loew's and Joseph Basson and Frank Ruddock of Local 306. It was also reliably reported that RKO theatre executives would soon reach an amicable settlement with the union.

Rathvon Named by Odlum to Handle RKO Revamping

Peter N. Rathvon, vice-president of the Atlas Corporation, has been named by Floyd B. Odlum to undertake the task of reorganizing RKO and probably will be elected president of the revamped corporation if and when he completes the reorganization.

Merlin H. Aylesworth is understood to be slated for the chairmanship of the board under the arrangement, although earlier reports indicated he would become president.

Atlas Investment Trust, of which Mr. Odlum is president, in association with Lehman Brothers, not only purchased half of Radio Corporation of America's stock and debenture interest in RKO for $5,000,000, but bought with it management as well as an option to purchase the remaining 50 per cent of the RCA holdings for another $5,000,000 within the next two years.

Originally on RCA's books at $16,000,000, writeoffs and reductions have cut the figure of the communication's interest in RKO to $14,644,614. This covers 1,259,463½ shares of common stock, or 48.86 per cent of the total outstanding, and $9,786,655 in 10-year debentures, representing 84 per cent of the total outstanding.

Immediately after it was revealed that the Atlas and Lehman interests were scheduled to take the leading part in drawing up reorganization plans for RKO, Wall Street rumors again had Paramount and RKO in closer connection.

Meanwhile, the New York Post hinted that the Odlum interests were after still a third major producing company besides Paramount and RKO. The afternoon paper said that Mr. Odlum had been purchasing secretly for some time the stock of another company, the name of which is still a secret and which will not be revealed for some time. It further stated that the reorganization plan for RKO was nearly ready for presentation to the courts.

Keith and KAO Profits Increase

Marked improvement in the condition of both the B. F. Keith Corporation and the Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation is shown in the reports of the two companies for the twenty-six weeks ending June 29.

B. F. Keith showed a profit of $132,797.73 after all charges including depreciation of $336,530.29 and the provision for income taxes of $23,975. For the same period last year the company showed a net loss of $59,198.24.

For the same period Keith-Albee-Orpheum showed a net profit of $113,408.21 after deducting $417,997.25 for depreciation and $33,625 for income taxes. Last year for the same period the company's net was $485.73.

New Standard Increased Attendance

The recent drive against indecent motion pictures and the resultant showing of better films have brought about a larger attendance at motion picture theatres, Carl A. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, said at the luncheon meeting of the Hercules Powder Company in the Hotel duPont at Wilmington, Del., this week.

152 FEATURES LISTED FOR THEATRE TIEUPS IN "BOOK WEEK," NEXT MONTH

The attention of motion picture theatre owners is again directed to "National Book Week," to be held this year from November 17th to 23rd, and in this connection the National Board of Review has made for their use in arranging appropriate programs that lend themselves to book tieups, an annual compilation of "Selected Book-Films," prepared in connection with the "Book Week" movement that is sponsored by the National Association of Book Publishers.

The procedure for effecting tieups with book stores, schools, libraries and the like is well known to the exhibitor, these exploitation mediums usually lending aid readily in furthering interest in well known books.

All films selected by the Review Committees of the National Board from September, 1934, to October, 1935, which had their source in novels or published plays and stories are included in the compilation, and in addition films having special book tie-up value, though not adaptations, are recorded.

Some 152 features are offered as likely candidates for tieups during "Book Week," 82 being films adapted from novels, 22 films adapted from published plays and short stories, 18 films based on subjects with definite book value tie-ups, and 26 former selected book-films being re-made. This list provides information for immediate and future activity with book-film programs, uniting library, theatre, school and club interests.

The order of arrangement is: Picture title, source title if different, name of the author, length in reels and the name of the distributor. The symbols preceding the title indicate: f—suitable for the family audience, 12 years and older; m—suitable for the mature audience, 18 years and older; j—suitable for the junior audience under 12 years.

Four Michigan Theatres Add Weekend Vaudeville

Four theatres in southeastern Michigan have added vaudeville to their week-end programs, with the Majestic, Wyandotte, playing it for one day, while the State at Pontiac, Majestic at Fort Huron and the Michigan at Ann Arbor, are showing three days. The last three houses are operated by the Butterfield Circuit.

Duals Show Slight Increase in Denver

Never a menace, at least as far as first-runs are concerned, double bills in Denver have increased only slightly during the past year. At present eighteen houses are using double bills, three of these only occasionally, however, with four dime and one neighborhood houses being the only ones to use them constantly. Seventeen do not double bill at all.

In some neighborhoods, notably South Denver, double billing is in the minority. In North Denver all five houses double bill at least once a week, and some of them on two programs or more a week.

In the first runs only the Paramount and the Broadway have double billed since the first of the year, each of them five times. Harry Huffman, who controls these, as well as two other first runs, two downtown subsequent runs and one neighborhood theatre, is opposed to the policy, however.

In New York Leo Brecher, operator of the Plaza Theatre in the fashionable Park Avenue district, is conducting a vote among his patrons on dual bills and the ballots so far show an eighty-five per cent vote against two pictures on one program.

Current scales and double billing are to be continued in Famous Players Canadian theatres in Canada, according to J. J. Fitzgibbons, at present in Vancouver, B. C., for a convention of British Columbia managers.

Predict Supreme Court Test on Ten Cent Scale

Predictions are being made in Minneapolis that the Shuberts' attempts in court to force film service for its ten cent admission will be carried to the U. S. Supreme Court. Attorneys for the defendants insist distributors have a right to choose customers.

The case is now under advisement before U. S. District Judge Gunmar Nordbye, who has heard testimony on a petition for an injunction to prevent distributors from carrying out an alleged conspiracy against him.

CHANCE GAMES WIN IN COURTS, IDEA SPREADS

Complaints Against Exhibitor Use Dismissed in Buffalo and Philadelphia; Practice Grows

Chance games won decisive victories on several fronts this week, courts in Buffalo and Philadelphia dismissing complaints against exhibitor users, the while the practice extended to 80 Fox West Coast theatres, to every Fox Midwest theatre and to 30 out of 40 houses in New Orleans.

Not until December will the legal status of chance games be decided in New England, and court action was further delayed in New York. New Orleans was anticipating a chance game "cleanup."

Meanwhile Affiliated Enterprises, "Bank Night" copyright owners, was proceeding to prosecute alleged copyright infringers, and at the same time threatened others.

Buffalo's local ordinance has no punitive clause, and, therefore, a test case which brought about the arrest of Max Rosing, of the Roosevelt theatre, was thrown out of city court by order of the justice.

In Philadelphia, a grand jury dismissed lottery cases against Allen Lewis, Emanuel Lewis, John Ehrlich and I. Schwartz, exhibitors, who have been using Bank Night and Lucky.

The decision strengthened the belief of Pennsylvania exhibitors that the law will not interfere with prize giveaways. The dismissed complaints had been passed on to the grand jury from the magistrates' court.

Litigation Pending in New England

The litigation in New Hampshire that is expected to determine whether Bank Night is a lottery under the laws of that commonwealth was set for hearing in the state supreme court early in December. Bank Night was recently banned by New Hampshire's Attorney-General Johnson, and a declaratory judgment is now sought.

In adjoining Maine, Bank Night is also having trouble as a result of a so-called "drive" against lotteries.

In Massachusetts, it was denied that the finding of a cash giveaway scheme a lottery in a Fall River court will have any effect on Bank Night.

Special sessions court in Brooklyn, New York, delayed until this Thursday the trial of a lottery law test case against the Winthrop theatre, represented by Milton C. Weisman, counsel for the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York.

New Orleans heard reports that a drive may be conducted by municipal authorities against chance games now so common in the neighborhood theatres in the suburbs.

Circuits Start Practice

Materialization of Fox West Coast's threat to play chance games on the wholesale because independents refused to abandon the practice in competition to Fox properties, came this week with the launching of Bank Night in 80 West Coast theatres in southern California.

At the same time, word came from Kansas City that Bank Night has been set for every Fox Midwest theatre in Greater Kansas City for the winter season. A drawing is to be held at one Fox theatre only every night, but a patron attending any one of the theatres may participate in that drawing, out of which there will come an award of $100.

In New Orleans the idea was spreading, too, some 30 out of 40 houses adopting the plan in one form or another. The downtown theatres, however, are as yet free of the practice.

Several suits against alleged infringers of Bank Night, and threats to others, came from Affiliated Enterprises, copyright owners.

Eugene Reed, Bank Night attorney, warned in New Haven that unless cases of alleged infringements in the state are adjusted shortly suits will be started. Threatened exhibitors ignored the warning.

In Minneapolis, Federal Judge Molyneux sounded the deathknell of "Jackpot" in holding that the plan infringes upon Bank Night, according to word relayed from Sam Helpern, counsel for Affiliated Enterprises.

Affiliated filed suit in the United States district court at Topeka, Kansas, charging Blair Enterprises, Inc., circuit operators, with infringement of Bank Night through operation of Cash Night.

AH WILDERNESS

MGM

This is typical American drama. Localed in a small town, it is the story of an average man, his home, family and civic life. It tells of his hopes and triumphs, his happiness and tragedy. It is, particularly, a story of a father and his son, of the high plans he makes for the boy's future, the heartache that is his when he fears the boy has gone wrong and all his grand ambitions are tumbled in the dust. Also it is the story of the boy's girl, her decenecy, honesty and love. It pulsates to the forces that, almost without exception, are part of the life of every American family, whether they live in a secluded town or a hustling, bustling big city.

Besides the merit of the story and the prestige of the performers who interpret it, there is much about this production to arouse popular and showmanship attention. The history of "Ah Wilderness" should not be overlooked. An Eugene O'Neill story and stage play, it has an emotional heart appeal not in common with several of his other works. As a legitimate stage and stock feature, it has been presented almost every place in the land. Thus there is already an advance interest of attractiveness fully as much for the masses as it has for the intelligentsia.

Regardless of the value of the story, the cast is of sufficient class to engage the attention of smart showmen. It will present Lionel Barrymore, Aline MacMahon, Eric Linden, Cecelia Parker and Wallace Beery in the main parts. Among the supporting players are Frank Albertson, Eddie Nugent, Mickey Rooney, Helen Flint, Tommy Dugan and James Donlan. Also to be seen are a number of child stars of other years, including Peggy Montgomery, Dick Winslow, Muriel McCormick and Buddy Messinger.

Direction is by Clarence Brown, who made "Anna Karenina," Garbo's current starring picture. The screen play is by Albert Hackett and Frances Goodrich.

HARD LUCK DAME

Warner

Aptly titled, this is the story of a woman pursued by a permanent jinx. With Bette Davis in the lead role, it's the yarn of an actress who, living her gaudy life to the fullest extent, continually finds herself the focal point of a strange series of glaring scandals, divorces and suicides that eventually lead to her professional ruination. A haggard, uninviting creature, something about her attracts the attention of a man who on a slumming party rescues her from a shoddy gin mill. Love taking its expected place, an emotion which she strives to stifle as she is already married, she permits her admirer to back a new play which he hopes will restore her to her former position on the stage. But a new scandal involving her and her husband intervenes to wreck the happy plans, only to have the girl get a grip on herself and begging another chance gives a performance that brings New York's theatregoers worshipping at her feet as she returns to her husband as a sure safeguard against the ruinous jinx reappearing again.

The story and screen play are originals by Laird Doyle, with direction by Alfred E. Green, who recently completed "Here's to Romance."

The cast supporting Miss Davis, whose box office value is acknowledged, is of exceptional strength. It features Franchot Tone, a fixture in many MGM pictures, soon to be seen in "Mutiny on the Bounty," as the one who falls in love with and wants to help Miss Davis. Margaret Lindsay will be seen as his fiancee, whom he eventually marries. Alison Skipworth is Tone's housekeeper who helps Miss Davis get a new grip on herself and bring about the reconciliation with her estranged husband, John Eldredge. Other players are Walter Walker, Richard Carle, George Irving and Douglas Wood.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH

Warner

Contrary to strict title significance this is not a mystery story. Essentially it is straight drama, based on an absorbing circumstance, including much that stirs the most tender emotions and finishing with a heart-touching triumphant climax that should impress any type audience. Additionally, in presenting Kay Francis in her first picture of the new season Warner program, it gives her a role which in addition to being glove fitting to her screen character should be a tremendous boost for her future appearances.

The story is a drama of mother love. It tells of a great actress, who at the pinnacle of success lives in the fear that her sordid past will rise to ruin her. The only cherished memory of that past is her little daughter, whom she keeps in secret seclusion. When her husband, blackmail bent, appears she flees London, comes to America and gradually sinks to the level of a burlesque show performer. Found by the producer who loves her, only to have her love spurned, and a newspaper correspondent who he has enlisted to assist in the search, she is brought back to England by a ruse, to re-establish herself as a glamorous toast of the stage only when she is convinced that it is her motherly duty to her child.

Sybil Jason, who made her screen debut in "Little Big Shot," is seen as the child. Paul Lukas has the role of her manager producer and Ian Keith will be seen as the correspondent who, though Miss Francis believe he is harming her, is the personality in whom she finds real love. Barton MacLane is the heavy in the role of the husband and Jessie Ralph will be seen as the child's nurse. Other players presented are Walter Kingsford, Eddie Acuff, who created a favorable impression in "Shipmates Forever," Harry Beresford, Robert Strange and Joseph Sawyer.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE

Paramount

Absorbing story content plus star value and strength of supporting cast, in addition to writing and direction credits, keynote the showmanship trend of this picture. In atmosphere, while bringing up the public enemy, crook gangster, escaped jailbirds in conflict with the g-men, established entertainment and exploitation favorites, the story is essentially a drama, rather than a flamboyant gangster picture.

Penned by Gene Towne and Graham Baker, specialists in this type of screen and reading material, who also collaborated with Louis Stevens on the screen play, the production, a Walter Wanger contribution to Paramount's program, is directed by William K. Howard, also credited with the forthcoming "Rendezvous."

Sylvia Sidney, last seen in "Accent on Youth," is presented in the title role. In the story, without knowing his identity, she marries a wanted public enemy. Jailed as an accomplice, she escapes, and after getting a job in a hospital kitchen, she meets and falls in love with a patient. Her trail picked up, the federal men believe she will lead them to the hideout of her husband. In a smashing climax, she kills her husband as he menaces her new love, to be awarded a pardon enabling her to find a happy married life.

Supporting Miss Sidney, Alan Baxter will be seen as the public enemy, and Melvyn Douglas as the person with whom she finds real love. Pert Kelton will be seen as a stool pigeon tool of the officers, who aids Miss Sidney to escape jail. The various other crook, g-men and incidental characters are assumed by Wallace Ford, Brian Dunleavy, outstanding in "Barbary Coast"; Frank Sully, Frances Gregg, Charles Waldron, William Pawley, James Mack, and others.

FRISCO WATERFRONT

Republic

This is an unusual story of how a woman inspired a man to a great ambition. Despite the sound of its title, it is not a ship or dock or wharf story. Two men, enemies, are candidates for the governorship. Both are seriously injured in an auto accident. Under the influence of anesthetics, one re-lives his life. Starting from the point where he was married, all takes place in flashback. Returning from war, the young husband is unable to readjust himself; he goes to pieces and is eventually deserted by his wife, who marries his enemy. Spurred by a desire to show both, he goes in for politics and becomes successful. As the rivals are candidates for governor, he dreams that they must combine forces, but as the other man dies, the hero is left to find that his wife took the strange course which she did in order to drive him to the possibilities she knew would be his either with or without her.

Ben Lyon and Rod LaRocque are featured as the bitter rivals in love and politics as well as business. The girl is Helen Twelvetrees, now appearing in "She Got Her Man" and "Spanish Cape Mystery." The supporting cast lists Russell Hopton, James Burke, Henry Kolker, Purnell Pratt, Lee Shumway and Norman Houston.

Story and screen play are by Norman Houston, with direction by Arthur Lubin, and the feature is a Trem Carr Production.

With the sense of the title likely to cause confusion as to the feature's character in the public mind, it appears that more than usual attention will have to be given to making the story content evident. It might be necessary, by the judicious use of carefully thought out catch lines, to feature this fact above the players and naturally above the title.

ARGENTINE PRODUCERS CANNOT ALTER BOOKS

A Buenos Aires court has ruled that the motion picture producers in the Argentine cannot purchase the film rights to a book, rewrite the plot, then use the book's title for the resultant picture and thus allow the public to believe they will see a picturization of the story. The ruling was the result of a suit brought by the author of the book called "The Interne," who claimed that the film from his book had been rewritten in an inferior manner to damage his reputation.

The court also prohibited further showings of the picture and ordered the confiscation of all copies of the film throughout the country.

New England Circuit Suits Are Revived

The present litigation of approximately $250,000 launched by the Morse and Rothenberg circuit against the Shea Circuit and the Maine and New Hampshire Theatres, Inc., Paramount affiliate, controlling some forty theatres in New England, is believed to be an outgrowth of a similar action of some four years ago. Such is the opinion of John Ford, head of the latter theatre combine.

At that time, Federal Judge James M. Lowell, now deceased, refused to allow the suit proceedings to continue because of lack of sufficient grounds, it is said.

The present action, framed on anti-trust grounds, is because of the alleged corraling of available product from the Morse and Rothenberg houses. George S. Ryan, consul for E. M. Loew and for Bank Night in recent successful suits, is heading the prosecution.

The news of the impending court action first reached Mr. Ford through an article in a trade paper, according to the executive, but until late last week he had not been served in the action, he further said.

A flurry of similar suits will doubtless become a likelihood, in view of the way that clearance board decisions have been generally scrapped in New England, if the Morse and Rothenberg circuit is at all successful in its litigation.

Dates for GTE Hearings Set by Delaware Court

The hearing on a supplemental petition filed in the chancery court in Wilmington, Del., by United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., has been set for October 31 by Chief Justice Layton.

Senator Hastings is seeking authority to enter into certain agreements with the Chase National Bank, of New York, and the Amerex Holding Corporation, in connection with their claims against General Theatres Equipment.

The hearing of plans for the reorganization of the company has also been set for November 13 by the court.

ARGENTINE LOOKS TO BETTER SEASON

But Americans Must Make Better Choice of Product to Stay in Public Favor There

by N. BRUSKI

Buenos Aires Correspondent

While the motion picture season in Argentina, south of the Equator, starts the second half of March in the first-run houses and during April in the many boroughs and subsequent-runs, prospects are rather bright for next year as the country slowly recovers.

The Argentine has had its share of the world depression and the national government as well as the state and municipal authorities have been obliged to readjust their budgets. This has played havoc with the show business as a whole in the matter of taxes and to this condition must be added a lessening of audiences. Unemployment is as much a reality in this country as elsewhere, though the problem is not as great, as we are not an industrial country.

While improvement is in the air, this season has not shown for the motion picture business the improvement that the leading men expected in comparison with the total volume obtained in 1934.

Public More Discriminating

Though the Argentine public is not as movie-conscious as the American, it is alive to its artistic values. At the same time, it is very particular as to the films, and not necessarily enthusiastic over productions that are hits in other countries. We do feel, therefore, that the American distributors, whose productions cover the greater part of Argentine programs, should make a more fitting selection of the material to be shown, and send to this country only those films that will suit Argentine taste and demands.

Predictions for 1936 point to better results than in the present season, if serious attention is given to selectivity points.

The building of new and modern theatres in the downtown district to eliminate the antiquated houses is slow, but positive improvement in our economic development; the great efforts of the Argentine showmen to provide their showhouses with better programs and modern comforts are all factors that will contribute for a successful 1936 season.

Local Industry Growing

In this country world film producers find a commendable market, but as the national film industry is slowly gathering strength, it is worthy of note that these films are placed on a comparative footing with American productions in the neighborhood houses, where they form a necessary part of programs, though they still require foreign films to keep open their doors. Future competition will evidently be greater, which means that the American producers must be alert.

Another important factor that American producers will have to consider seriously is the dialogue. When sound was a novelty, financial results were large; but it is now becoming the source of growing discontent to audiences not in a position to understand other languages than Spanish and limited to superimposed titles.

Local production eventually will take a leading place. No manager of an American major or independent company can deny that, except the first-run public, showhouses play to far greater grosses with a national production than with the best the foreign market can offer.

Though the Argentine cannot be placed on a comparative basis with the American domestic market, it is undoubtedly an excellent customer for American films. To the efficient equipment that local production already possesses, the addition of a modern High Fidelity sound truck, brought down to this country through the local distributor of Liberty Pictures, Jack Lustberg, is of considerable importance.

Likewise, new sound cameras have just arrived, and an RCA American sound engineer is en route to Buenos Aires from New York. This month an important local producer commences operations with these new sound elements, while three more local producers will alternate with the first mentioned in a day and night schedule. New studio projects are in the making. Finances are being arranged solidly throughout.

Fleischer Improves His Third Dimension System

Announcement that he has developed a third-dimension process for screen cartoons as a result of experiments extending over a period of years, was made recently by Max Fleischer, producer of "Popeye the Sailor," "Betty Boop" and other film caricatures for Paramount release.

"I have just completed a series of experiments with some new attachments to our equipment which will not only increase depth effects in our pictures by 75 per cent, but will have the effect of our characters operating well within the scene instead of in the foreground as heretofore," Mr. Fleischer reported to Paramount.

"A preliminary test has proved the new development to be practical, and I am rushing our machinists to the utmost in an effort to apply the new departure to 'Sinbad,' the two-reel color picture now in preparation."

It was said that Mr. Fleischer expects within a few weeks to receive notification from Washington that patents have been granted.

British Prefer Own Films If Quality Equals American

Story More Important Than Stars, Korda Survey Shows

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

Nine out of 10 Britons prefer British pictures to American, provided they are of equal quality. This preference, 92.03 per cent, to be exact, was registered in the first 10,000 replies in London Film Productions' study of public film tastes, by means of a newspaper questionnaire. Some very interesting conclusions as to the likes, dislikes and demands of the British public may be deduced from these presumably typical expressions of opinion.

The original questions, which were published in full-page advertisement form in national newspapers, were partly general and partly particular; entrants were asked to state views and preferences, and they were also asked to "place" specific films.

Information under the last-named heading yields an interesting table of precedence of British films, so far as conclusions of this character can be regarded as authoritative when they are, admittedly, based on a relatively small public vote and apply to films of varying release dates.

Out of the 10,000 entrants, 8,469 or 84.69 per cent had seen "The Private Life of Henry the Eighth," 7,666 (76.66 per cent) "Catherine the Great," 7,447 (74.77 per cent) "I Was a Spy," and 7,350 (73.50 per cent) "The Iron Duke." "The Man Who Knew Too Much" had been viewed by 6,710 (67.10 per cent) and various other films, due to late release (in some cases to the fact that general release had not yet been reached), had been seen by a relatively small percentage of the 10,000.

Indicates Public Likings

This rather reduces the value of a table stating the order of preference in which these films are placed by the voters. "Henry VIII" was first in this table also. On the basis that entrants chose first, second and third choices, to which three, two and one points were awarded, this subject won a percentage of 16.6 of possible points. Second in the list, however, was "The Man Who Knew Too Much," which had a percentage of 8.0, although it had been seen by, roughly, 1,700 fewer persons than "Henry VIII," being only ninth in the "films seen" table. It seems that a really definite order of merit for these films will be difficult to arrive at in the absence of uniformity of viewing opportunity. Nevertheless, the tables have value as "token" indications of public likings.

The general questions yielded some definitely interesting, and sometimes surprising expressions of opinion, though again the question arises whether general conclusions can safely be drawn from a relatively small number of replies. The chief of these questions, and a summary of the public answers, follows. (Where the total percentage exceeds 100 per cent, entrants replied: "Both" or in similar terms, and points were credited to both sides.)

Do you consider that British films have improved during the past five years? Percentages of replies: Yes, 99.5; No, 0.5.

If of equal merit, do you prefer British or American films? Percentages of replies: British, 92.03; American, 10.5. ·

Do you consider a film dull unless it has love interest? Percentages of replies: No, 88.93; Yes, 12.57.

Do you prefer films that are purely entertainment or films with a serious message? Percentages of replies: Entertainment, 66.66; "message," 54.14.

Are you interested in such subjects as "Things to Come," or "Conquest of the Air?" Percentages of replies: Yes, 80.49; No, 19.32. (These subjects may be regarded as typical of the type of production in which the love motive is absent or definitely secondary.)

Story Considered More Important

Do you consider the story of a film more important than the actors? Percentages of replies: Yes, 71.13; No, 31.18.

Do you notice the names of producers or directors of films? Percentages of replies: Yes, 65.95; No, 30.47.

Do you prefer costume pictures or modern subjects? Percentages of replies: Modern, 67.55; Costume, 53.58.

Would you like to see Shakespearean plays on the screen? Percentages of replies: Yes, 57.63; No, 41.75.

Would you like to see films in natural colors? Percentages of replies: Yes, 73.60; No, 25.78.

Want "Pimpernel" Sequel

To another question, entrants expressed a preference, by 50.12 to 35.38 per cent, for a sequel to "Scarlet Pimpernel" as against one of "Sanders of the River," but the answers to a number of other questions more particularly applying to London Film Productions have not yet been summarized. Among other things, views were requested as to the three best contemporary authors as potential screen dramatists, the three favorite British screen actors and actresses, the relative appeal of 10 film stories announced by London, and the play of Shakespeare best liked as a screen subject.

The closing date for replies to the questionnaire has been extended until October 31 and in announcing the final results London will name the winners of awards amounting to £1,100 ($5,500) for the best answers to the question: "What book, play, imaginative or historical subject, would you most like to see filmed?"

HOW THEY RANKED BRITISH PICTURES

Questionnaire entrants listed in one, two, three order of merit those British films they had seen. The following tables are arrived at by allocating three points for a first choice, two for a second and one for a third. The percentages are in relation to the total points scored by all films.

UA's British Plans Grow

United Artists, whose program in the next twelve months will be more than 50 per cent British, made a series of announcements this week which underline the coming importance of London Films' new Denham studio as a source of supply for the American market.

Murray Silverstone said he was negotiating with another new British group which intended to make six pictures at Denham and to spend £2,000,000 ($10,000,000) on them. He also announced that one of the floors at Denham would be reserved to independent units on the condition that distribution outside the United Kingdom be reserved to United Artists.

Five floors are planned at Denham, of which two will be used by London, one by Selznick, Lasky and other UA producers, and one will be available for technical work and, presumably, for Twentieth Century-Fox.

Woolf Announces Lineup

The personnel and production policy of General Film Distributors, Ltd., the new company controlled by C. M. Woolf, were announced this week. On the directorate are Sir Philip Nash, K.C.M.G., C.B. as chairman; and J. Arthur Rank, millionaire miller who also is associated with British National; L. A. Neel, financier and managing director of Capitol Films, Ltd.; L. W. Farrow, a wellknown city accountant, who represents big financial interests, and Maurice Woolf, brother of C. M.

General will distribute in the British Empire the product of Herbert Wilcox Productions; Garrett, Klement; Capitol Productions; Denham Productions; Radius Films; Cecil Films; Hammer Productions, and City Film Corporation. Its year's output is stated to be at least twenty features, of which ten will be made by Herbert Wilcox Productions. In the case of all its production affiliations, considerable finance seems to be assured and ambitious production schedules already have been announced; Garrett, Klement, for instance, has signed Anna Sten and Cary Grant and has a striking lineup of Continental directorial and technical talent.

REDS DEFEATED IN COURT TEST TO SHOW PROPAGANDA FILMS IN U.S.

Detroit Circuit Judge Affirms Police Powers Under Local Censorship Ordinance in Cinema Guild's Protest Case

Communists and other radical elements in Detroit were defeated in attempts to present propaganda films when Judge Theodore J. Richter in circuit court over the weekend denied the Detroit Cinema Guild's application for a writ of mandamus to compel the police department to permit showings of "The Youth of Maxim," which had been banned by the police as Communistic propaganda.

While there have been instances in other localities in which the exhibition of Russian-made films has been prevented by the authorities, this is the first tlime the Reds have sought a test in the courts, and the decision therefore establishes a precedent. It also affirms the broad discretionary powers of the police in enforcing the local censorship ordinance.

In a number of cities, however, theatrical and sponsored showings of Soviet films remain unmolested, while at the same time the Reds are loudly protesting such pictures as "Red Salute," which they consider "anti-Red propaganda."

Charge Pledge Violated

Charges that the release in this country of "The Youth of Maxim" violated the pledge of the Soviet government not to spread propaganda in the United States were made in Detroit, where the scheduled showing met the solid opposition of patriotic and civic organizations. It is believed hardly likely that further attempts will be made to show Soviet films in Detroit either on a theatrical or sponsored basis, though Henry Schuman, leader of the Cinema Guild, announced that an appeal probably would be taken to the Michigan supreme court.

Permit Withdrawn

The court hearing followed the action of Sergeant Joseph M. Kollar, the police censor, in withdrawing his permit for the showing at the Institute of Arts. The permit had been granted for a private showing to Guild members.

Judge Richter held the court has the right to overrule the police commissioner only when "flagrant abuse" of the power is shown, and held that no such abuse existed in this case.

The decision upheld the right of Police Commissioner Heinrich Pickert to ban films under Section 20, Chapter 70 of the compiled ordinances of 1926 providing for the rejection of pictures "if in his judgment they are indecent or immoral."

Nathaniel H. Goldstick, assistant corporation counsel, cited several authorities to prove that anything is immoral which is hostile to the welfare of the general public. He referred to the alleged banning of the Margaret Sanger birth control film

Permit for Private Showing

Fred G. Dewey, attorney for the Cinema Guild, contended: "The best proof that the film should not be banned is that the police issued a permit for its showing in the first place. The censor, on the stand, frankly admitted he revoked the permit because so much pressure was brought to bear on him by persons who did not agree with the discretion he had exercised in issuing the permit."

According to the police department, the print was confiscated when it was learned that the Guild had advertised the film with posters and handbills and was planning to admit the general public.

The police censor is of the opinion that "The Youth of Maxim," with two other Soviet films whose titles were not determined, by reason of glorifying the life of Stalin, Russian dictator, smack of Communistic propaganda.

Produced by Lenfilm, at Leningrad, one of the producing units in the state owned film industry of the Soviet Union, and distributed in this country by Amkino, "The Youth of Maxim" depicts industrial conditions and the struggles of the revolutionary workers' party in the days of the Czar.

Devoted to "Liberal Thought"

The Cinema Guild is an organization devoted largely to "the exposition of liberal thought." Among its activities is the showing of foreign-made pictures. No American films have been shown by the Guild for about a year. Usually these showings are made privately at the Detroit Institute of Arts auditorium (the local forum for liberal thought) and are attended only by Guild members who come in formal attire.

Henry Schuman, leader of the Guild, is the proprietor of a book store which purveys considerable Communistic literature. The facts that the Guild recently attempted to stop the showing of "Red Salute" (United Artists-Reliance) at the United Artists theatre, on the ground it was anti-liberal, and that the Mayfair theatre was picketed during the showing of "Together We Live" (United Artists-Goldwyn) which likewise contained anti-Red sequences, leave little doubt as to the Communist tendencies of the Guild, according to word from Detroit.

Sergeant Kollar marshaled evidence to show that the Cinema Guild actually exploits the genuinely intellectual. Several prominent Detroiters volunteered the information to the police that they were duped into becoming members without knowing the real aims of the Guild, and they now denounce the Guild and its principles. Sergeant Kollar said he had sufficient evidence to prove that the Guild is a more or less important cog in a machine whose purpose is to disseminate Communistic propaganda.

State Sedition Bill Basis

The police censor revoked the permit after holding a screening at the request of American Legion heads and other civic leaders. Also cooperating with the Detroit police in its fight to suppress pictures of this type are leaders of the Catholic church and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Officials of the Cinema Guild charged that these groups, together with the Detroit Employers Association, heads of the Detroit (Catholic) University and an organization known as the American Party, were responsible for the last-minute ban.

It was reported that Sergeant Kollar originally based the cancellation on the Dunckel-Baldwin state sedition bill which went into effect recently. The Guild's attorney protested its application in the film confiscation.

Revocation of the permit was followed by a meeting of "the Conference for the Protection of Civil Rights," which elected a committee of 10 to carry a demand to Mayor Couzens that the showing be permitted. The delegation included the Rev. J. H. Bollins, chairman of the Conference; Newton Short, representative of the Detroit Federation of Labor, and representatives from the Communist Party, the Socialist Party and several local trade unions. The conference claimed to represent 300 labor unions and organizations with a combined membership of 400,000.

New Orleans Socialist League Votes Boycott on Theatres Showing "Red Salute;" Soviet Films Invade Toledo Theatres

Radicals made capital of the ban to gain support of a petition demanding repeal of the Dunckel-Baldwin bill.

Reviewers' Opinions Vary

At a second screening of the film, arranged for Judge Richter before the hearing, 40 leading residents and public officials were reported to have expressed varying opinions. Arthur D. Maguire, attorney for the leaders of several Catholic organizations, charged "The Youth of Maxim" was Soviet propaganda constituting a breach of the Litvinoff pledge to President Roosevelt, when the United States recognized Russia, that the Soviets would not interfere with the internal affairs of this country.

On the other hand, Patrick O'Brien, former attorney general of Michigan, was reported as saying that he could see no objection to the film.

Meantime in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and other large centers Soviet-made films were being shown regularly in theatres or frequently by Red groups in auditoriums without any opposition.

Soviet Films in Toledo

The Educational Films League of Toledo, largely Red, last weekend inaugurated presentation of a Soviet film a month during the winter season. There is evidence that under Soviet-inspired auspices, such as the Friends of the Soviet Union in Chicago, Communist propaganda is being spread on the screens of a number of key cities.

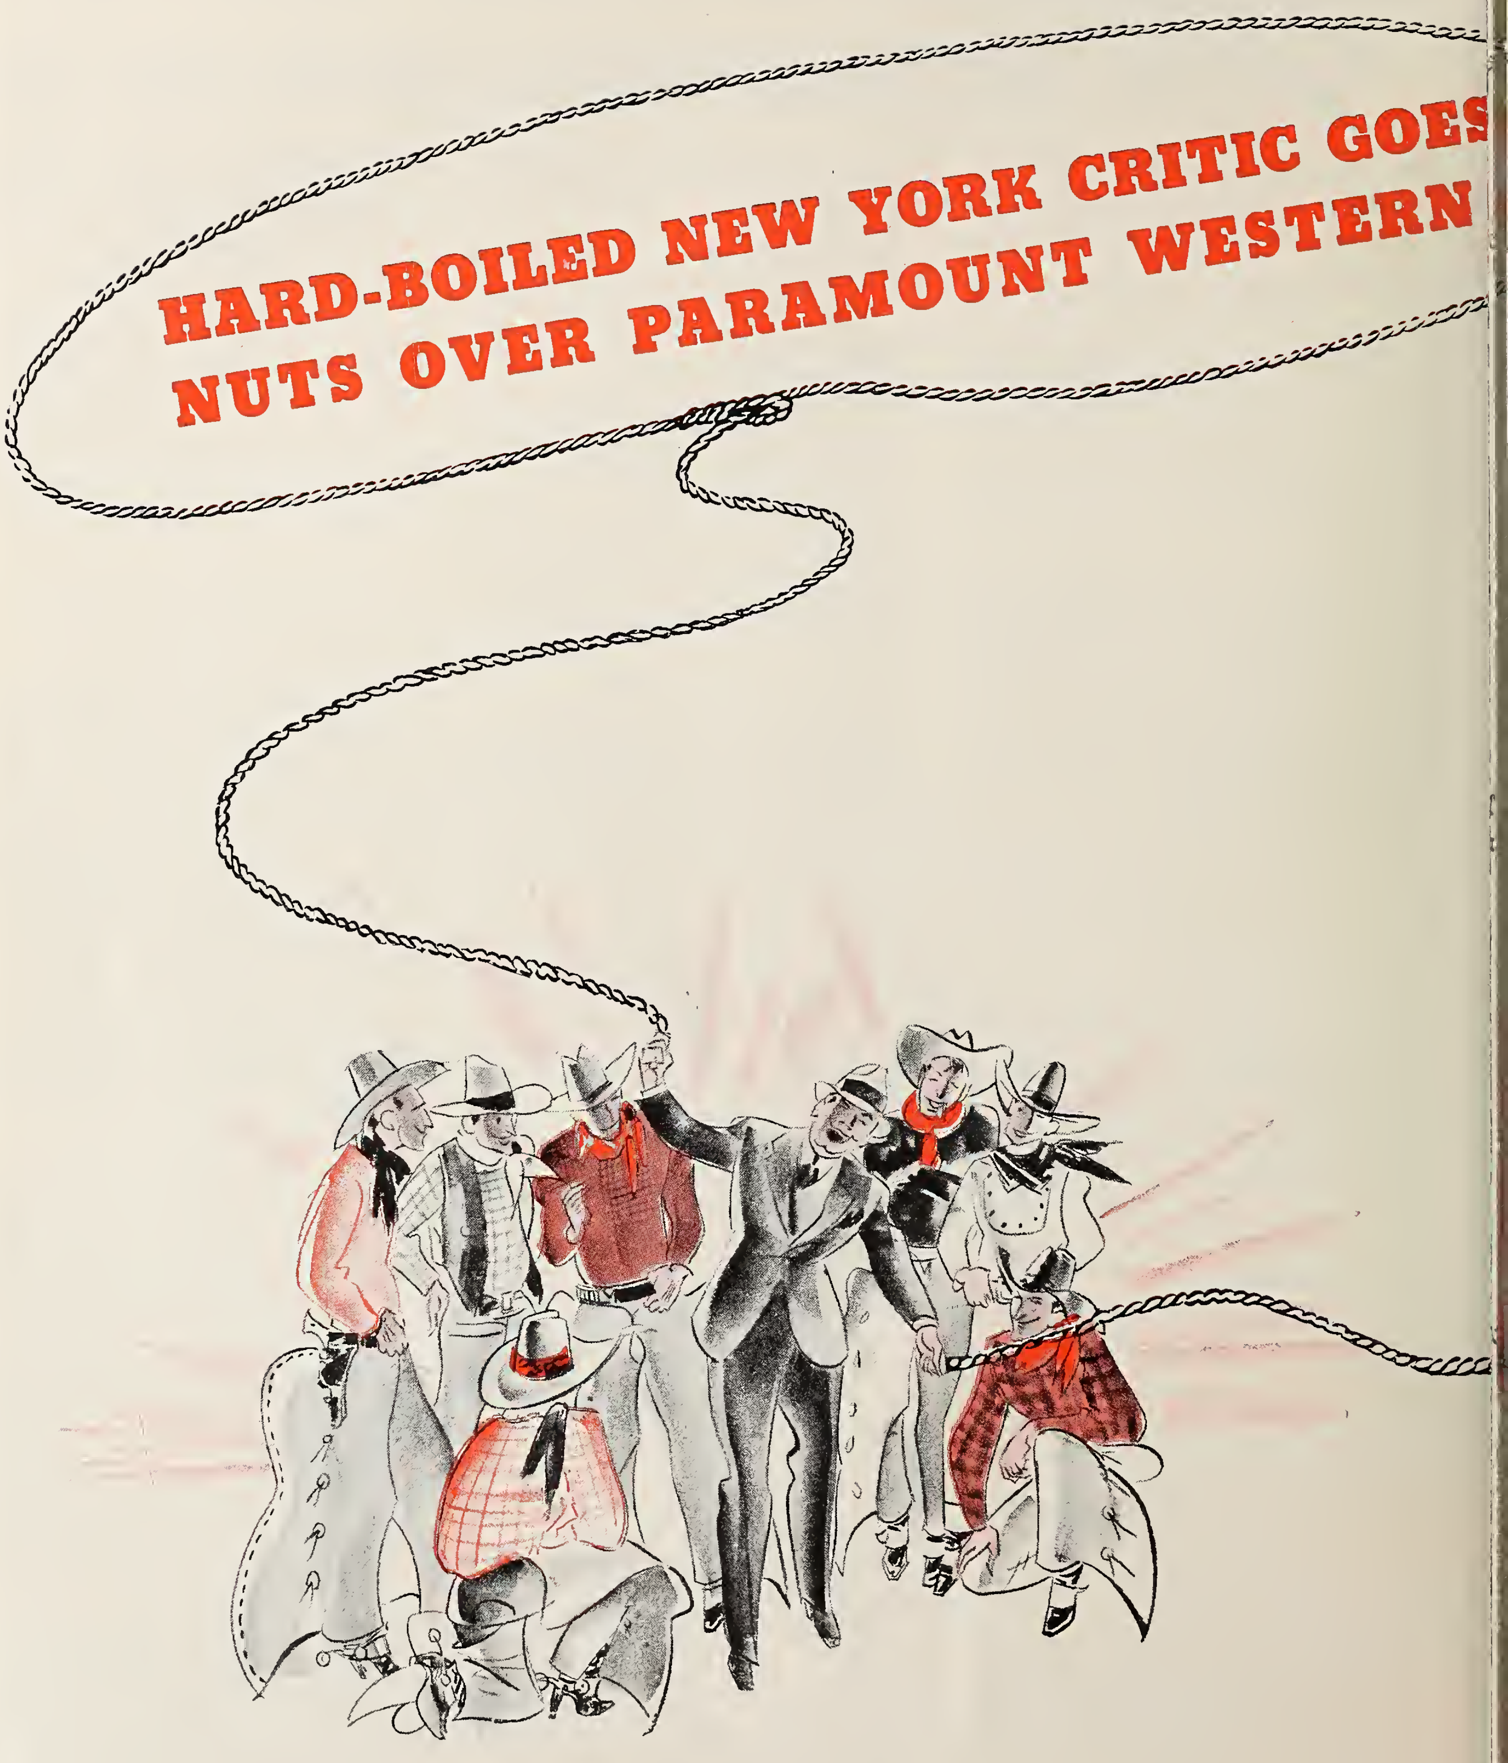
At the same time, the Reds' picketing and demonstrations at theatres have frequently taken the form of riots which have called for police action and have resulted, in New York City alone, in more than 200 arrests in recent weeks.

From New Orleans this week came word that the Young Peoples Socialist League has voted to boycott any theatre showing "Red Salute." Some of the students at Tulane University are also agitating against "Red Salute."

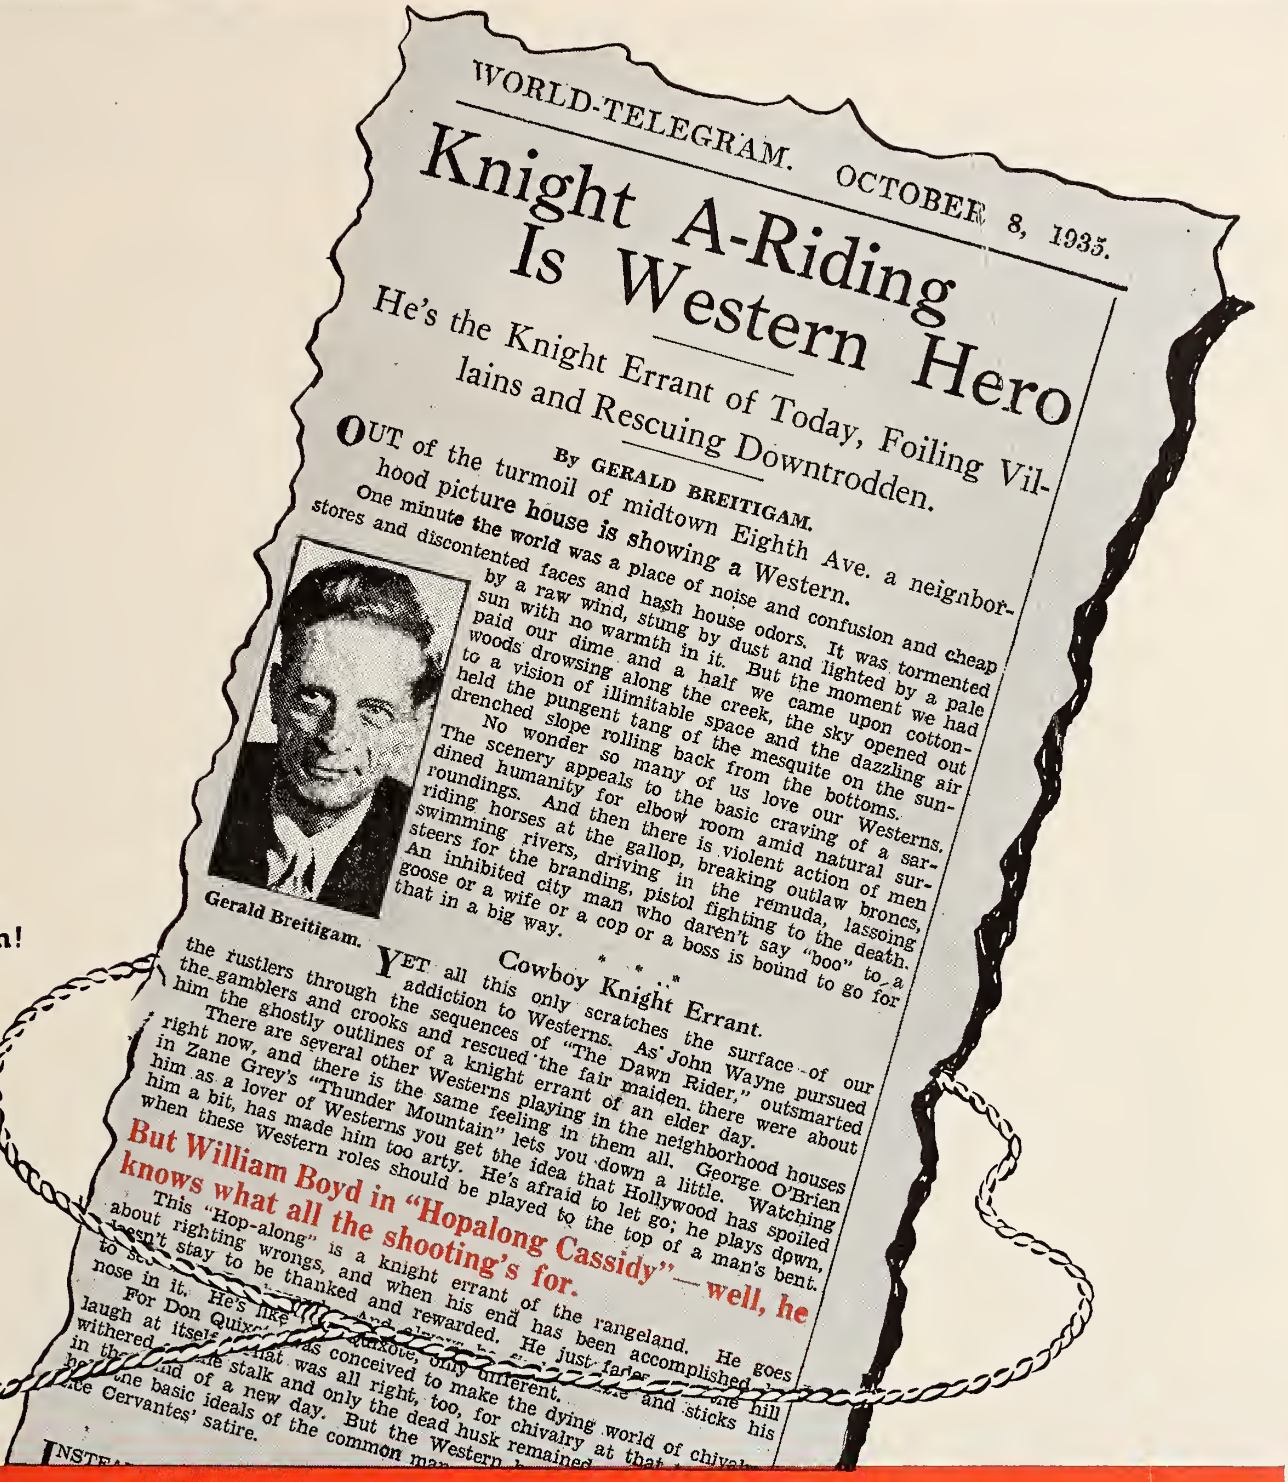
Students Picket Theatre

In New Haven, students saying they represented the National Students' League at Yale University, picketed Warner's Roger Sherman theatre in protest against "Red Salute." A police guard was on the scene. A delegation previously had been informed by Arthur Horn, United Artists exchange manager, and I. J. Hoffman, the theatre manager, that they intended to uphold the American institutions of "freedom of the screen" as well as freedom of speech.

Despite that opposition, "Red Salute" is among United Artists' large box office grossers of the season, said Monroe Greenthal, the company's advertising and publicity director.



HARD-BOILED NEW YORK CRITIC GOES
NUTS OVER PARAMOUNT WESTERN



WORLD-TELEGRAM. OCTOBER 8, 1935.

Knight A-Riding Is Western Hero

He's the Knight Errant of Today, Foiling Villains and Rescuing Downtrodden.

By GERALD BREITIGAM.

OUT of the turmoil of midtown Eighth Ave. a neighborhood picture house is showing a Western.

One minute the world was a place of noise and confusion and cheap stores and discontented faces and hash house odors. It was tormented by a raw wind, stung by dust and lighted by a pale sun with no warmth in it. But the moment we had paid our dime and a half we came upon cottonwoods drowsing along the creek, the sky opened out to a vision of illimitable space and the dazzling air held the pungent tang of the mesquite on the sun-drenched slope rolling back from the bottoms.

No wonder so many of us love our Westerns. The scenery appeals to the basic craving of a sardined humanity for elbow room amid natural surroundings. And then there is violent action of men riding horses at the gallop, breaking outlaw broncs, swimming rivers, driving in the remuda, lassoing steers for the branding, pistol fighting to the death. An inhibited city man who daren't say "boo" to a goose or a wife or a cop or a boss is bound to go for that in a big way.

Gerald Breitigam.

Cowboy Knight Errant.

YET all this only scratches the surface of our addiction to Westerns. As John Wayne pursued the rustlers through the sequences of "The Dawn Rider," outsmarted the gamblers and crooks and rescued the fair maiden, there were about him the ghostly outlines of a knight errant of an elder day.

There are several other Westerns playing in the neighborhood houses right now, and there is the same feeling in them all. George O'Brien in Zane Grey's "Thunder Mountain" lets you down a little. Watching him as a lover of Westerns you get the idea that Hollywood has spoiled him a bit, has made him too arty. He's afraid to let go; he plays down, when these Western roles should be played to the top of a man's bent.

But William Boyd in "Hopalong Cassidy"—well, he knows what all the shooting's for.

This "Hop-along" is a knight errant of the rangeland. He goes about righting wrongs, and when his end has been accomplished [illegible] [illegible]sn't stay to be thanked and rewarded. He just fades [illegible] the hill to se[illegible] and sticks his nose in it. He's like [illegible] And always [illegible] Quixote, only different.

For Don Quixote was conceived to make the dying world of chivalry laugh at itself. But the Western he[illegible] the basic ideals of the common man [illegible]ce Cervantes' satire.

MEXICO'S PRODUCTION SPURT LAID TO PRIDE AND U. S. MONEY POLICY

Depreciation of Peso, Arrival of Capable Hollywood Technicians, and Presence of Alert Business Men Also Factors

by ELGIN GROSECLOSE

Several things account for the boom in sound picture production that is currently in progress south of the Rio Grande. Basically, of course, it is because Mexicans want their sound pictures in Spanish. Hollywood inconsiderately forgot this desire when, tightening its belt for the depression, it almost completely abandoned the production of Spanish dialogue pictures.

Behind the desire for Spanish dialogue, however, may be national pride, or possibly a natural preference for the liquid accents of their own tongue to the sibilance of English. But more likely it is because a good many persons south of the Rio Grande are unable to read the subtitles—purporting to be translations of the script—which Hollywood inserts. This is a factor which cuts down the market considerably, despite the fact that the subtitles are so atrocious that no one can get much out of them any way.

But the Mexican hunger for Spanish dialogue, Mexican made, would probably have gone unfed had it not been for the coincidence of two or three unconnected events. The first of these was the monetary policy of Washington, which—because Mexican currency is tied to the American—effected a depreciation of the peso to about two sevenths of its former value. This made living, always cheap in Mexico, even cheaper. The second was the arrival from Hollywood of several very capable technicians and directors who figured that Mexico, as a result, was a better berth in which to ride out the depression than high priced America. The third was the presence in Mexico of several alert business men with pesos at their command and a vision of the possibilities of Mexico as a center for Spanish dialogue picture production.

Dozen Mexican Companies Busy

Today, there are more than a dozen Mexican companies engaged in producing sound pictures, and since 1933, when the movement began to get into swing, with the issuance of "Santa," more than sixty full length features have been produced. Most of the companies still limit their major output to travel and news items and shorts, but more and more are reaching for the prizes of the full length feature, and some, looking to the American market, are producing feature lengths in both Spanish and English editions. Among the best of the two language editions are José Bohr's "Quien Mato a Eva?" (issued in English as "Who Killed Eva?") and "Maria Elena," just released.

Most of the pictures are in the spirit of Hollywood, with westerns and gangster pictures in good demand, but here and there appear pictures with purely Mexican inspiration, and because of the sincerity with which the subjects have been attacked, and the genuineness of the effort, they bid fair to attract a wider audience. Such, for example, is "Sor Juana Inez de la Cruz," based upon the life story of the famous Mexican poetess. "Sor Juana," a costume production, achieved in certain scenes the dimensions of a spectacle, and while it revealed certain weaknesses of casting and movement, was as a whole a sustained, dramatic and thoroughly convincing production.

Newer Stars

Among the newer stars who are winning box-office—and even Hollywood—attention, must be named Andrea Palma, Consuelo Frank, Lupita Gallardo, Beatriz Ramos, Elena D'Orgaz, and the Blanch sisters—Anita and Isabellita. Andrea Palma, who won fame for her portrayals in "Sor Juana" and "El Primo Basillo," was brought to Hollywood this past summer, and she is being followed by Consuelo Frank, who is now engaged in making "Rosa de Francia" for Twentieth-Century-Fox. Andrea Palma, incidentally, is a cousin of Ramon Novarro.

Among directors must be mentioned José Bohr, Argentinian, who has had Hollywood experience and is responsible for the output of Producciones Olga. Arcady Boytler, a Russian, came over in 1933 to produce "La Mujer del Puerto," and has remained to direct a number of the best productions, including "Sor Juana" and "El Tesoro de Pancho Villa." Fernando Fuentes was responsible for some of Consuelo Frank's best work, and it was Ralph Sevilla who directed "Maria Elena" in both Spanish and English.

Equipment Simple

As to the technical side of the industry, it goes without saying that equipment is of the simplest. Cameras, lighting, and sound equipment are imported from Hollywood, and are of the best, but studios, sets, and production organization are behind the procession. Nevertheless, the results achieved might give pause to American film executives who are hypnotized with the belief that it takes money to produce movie "art."

Full length features are being made in Mexico for from fifty to one hundred thousand pesos, or from $14,000 to $28,000, which is certainly a ponderable factor when it comes to marketing output. And the Spanish dialogue market at which the Mexican industry is aiming is, it should be remembered, much larger than Mexico itself, and includes the whole Spanish speaking world. That market is, numerically, quite as large as the English speaking.

Acquire Mexican Films

The Foreign Film Exchange in Hollywood, operated by Charles Emanuel in connection with his agency for the National Theatre Gift Stamp Company, has closed a deal with La Mexicana Campania Elabaradone de Peliculas to release Mexican films, produced by that company, in the United States.

'Twelfth Night' to Follow 'Dream'

The Shakespearean cycle in motion pictures, sponsored by Warner Brothers, will next embrace the Bard's "Twelfth Night," produced by Cosmopolitan and Max Reinhardt, starring Marion Davies and probably directed by William Dieterle, following Mr. Reinhardt's production of "Road to Promise," stage play, in New York.

Warners continue to enlist "outside" support for their "Dream" premieres in the large cities, obtaining recommendations from the Women's University Club, Los Angeles; National Council of Jewish Women, California Congress of Parents and Teachers, Daughters of the American Revolution, General Federation of Women's Clubs, and the Council of Catholic Women, California, which purchased the entire Beverly Hills theatre in Hollywood for the October 29th performance, at which Bishop Cantwell will be guest.

Dr. Richard Burton, literary adviser to Warners, returned to New York after delivering a series of lectures before universities and women's clubs and the like.

The company has issued a "study guide" for use in schools. It set the Pittsburgh premiere for October 28th, at the Nixon theatre. Openings were held, attended by widespread campaigns, in Los Angeles, Detroit, Toronto, Cleveland, Philadelphia and St. Louis.

Windels Answers Tax Case

Corporation counsel Paul Windels has filed a return in the Manhattan (New York) supreme court to the application of the Bofan Amusement Company for a reduction of its assessment from $570,000 to $450,000. The Bofan company had objected to the assessment made by the Commissioner of Taxes and Assessments.

Johnson to Principal

Keith Johnson, recently assistant to J. J. Sullivan of Fox West Coast in Los Angeles, has been named sales manager of Principal Pictures by Sol Lesser, president. Mr. Johnson succeeds Louis Hyman, who joined Far West Exchanges last week.

Paramount Retains Marshall

Paramount has taken up its option on Herbert Marshall for two pictures in 1936 and it is expected his next role will be in "Reunion," dealing with spies in the World War.

The Warner Club of Pittsburgh's annual dinner dance will be held this year at the William Penn hotel November 3, one week before the Variety Club there stages its yearly "Big Top" banquet. Hariet Petitt heads the committee.

NEW SEASON WILL SPELL FATE OF AMERICAN PICTURES IN HUNGARY

U. S. Companies' Representatives Hope to Cut Further into Germany's Imports, but Face Added Government Restraints

by ENDRE HEVESI
Budapest Correspondent

The Hungarian branches of American companies have been feeling the competition of the rising local film production and face a difficult season, yet they're hopeful of improved business. During the 1934-35 season twelve feature pictures were produced in Hungary, and six of these had considerable success.. These six pictures took up much of the time of Budapest deluxe as well as provincial theatres.

Those local distributing companies which have taken up independent production as a sideline have found this most profitable because they have been in a position to compel exhibitors to buy imported films from them along with the local product. Home made pictures proved in every case good box office for the exhibitor, so he was willing to buy imports in order to get the local product, and in this way production proved profitable for the distributing firms even if no immediate profits could be made on the picture itself.

This explains the difficulty which American branches experienced in selling imported pictures, since they had no local product to help with the sale of the foreign-mades.

It also explains why distributing concerns are so keen on producing new features this season, and why they have contrived to interest outside capital in production ventures.

New pictures of 1935-36, completed by September 1, were the following:

Plain Girl, Harmonia production.
Love Dreams, Verö.
Miss President, Reflektor.
Hallo Budapest, Thalia.
Candy Store in Buda, Phoebus.
Sweet Stepmother, Hermes.
Addressee Unknown, Müvészfilm.
Grandmamma, Eco.

Pictures in course of shooting in September were "St. Peter's Umbrella," Kolor Production, and "I Can't Live Without Music," Kino, to be followed by "Smile, Please," Keleti; "Last of the Gentry," Cinema; "Queen's Hussar," Verö; "New Squire," Hirsch & Tschuk; "Beginning at Midnight," Keleti.

These fifteen films will be ready for showing by the end of the year, and about five more will be done by April, 1936.

15 Per Cent Hungarian

Twenty locally-made Hungarian-speaking films will leave a considerable mark on the market anyway, but their position was further strengthened by two edicts from Mr. Kozma, Minister for Home Affairs, issued on July 26, 1935. The first of these compels all cinemas to exhibit Hungarian-speaking films in a proportion of at least 10 per cent of all pictures shown. Half of these must be local product, while the other half may be imported, but synchronized locally in Hungarian. After Jan. 31, 1936, the proportion of Hungarian-speaking pictures shown must be at least 15 per cent, two-thirds of which may be foreign synchronized product. Further restriction of imports may follow after July 31, 1936.

Producers of original Hungarian films or synchronizations receive seven permit tickets after each film produced, as a premium. These may be sold or otherwise passed on to other persons.

The second edict rules that features over 1,200 metres of length may be admitted only on presentation of one permit ticket. In other words, the producer of one Hungarian film or Hungarian language synchronization is entitled to import seven foreign pictures on the basis of the tickets received as a premium. Thus the local branches of American producing firms, which do not produce or synchronize pictures here, are compelled to buy the permit tickets from the local distributors who also go in for production. The market price of these permit tickets is between 1,000 and 1,300 pengoes (roughly, $300), meaning that local producers get a premium of 8,000 pengoes for each picture made or synchronized here, while importation expenses for non-producing firms are increased on the average, by 1,000 pengoes a picture.

Plan Collective Action

Local representatives of American companies have repeatedly discussed measures to cope with this situation, but have taken no steps so far, since it appears that American producing firms propose to take collective action in dealing with the Hungarian government.

Obviously, the position of American concerns is made difficult on the local market. Twenty Hungarian films take up 40 weeks of the deluxe theatres' time at the very least. Plainly, it will be worthwhile to import only really first-rate American product, since the competition of locally-made pictures will be too strong for inferior imports, especially in the provinces, where Hungarian-speaking films are doubly welcome.

In spite of these handicaps American representatives are optimistic. They are hoping to sell as many pictures as they did under more favorable conditions last year, since they are counting upon a still further reduction of German imports. In 1934, the import of German films to Hungary was reduced by 21 per cent, whereas American imports increased by 8.4 per cent. There is certainly a prospect of American pictures taking the place of German to an added extent in the coming winter, but this scarcely can make up for the competition of increasing local product.

There is one more setback to American imports: the competition of foreign language pictures made partly or entirely in Hungary. These give distributors an excellent publicity weapon and they may reckon upon the added interest of the public. Two German films, made entirely in Hungary and employing much Hungarian talent, were being produced and directed by Bolváry, also a native Hungarian "Stradivari" and "Es Flüstert die Liebe." These are sure of long runs. Another German picture and an important Anglo-French feature, "Bulyba Taras," directed by Granovsky, had outside shots made in Hungary. All these get enormous gratis advertising, being in their turn excellent publicity for Hungary and a means of getting money into the country.

Local Product Becomes Increasing Source of Competition; Six Domestic Films Widely Shown; Distributors Add Production

The 1935-36 season in the theatres started in the middle of August, but open-air theatres and two or three deluxers played throughout the summer. The following American pictures were shown during summer months:

Fox: "Charlie Chan's Greatest Case," "Adorable," "Little Colonel."
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer: "West Point of the Air," "Reckless," "Age of Indiscretion," "Sequoia."
United Artists: "Sorrel and Son," "The Bowery," "Gallant Lady."
Paramount: "The Devil Is a Woman," "All the King's Horses," "Behold My Wife."
Universal: "Great Expectations," "Werewolf."
Warner Bros.: "Sweet Adeline."

"West Point," "Sequoia" and "Little Colonel" met with conspicuous success.

On the whole the 1935-36 season will be a difficult one for American producers in Hungary. It will show whether it is worthwhile for them to keep up local branches or merely to sell their product to local distributors.

A Night at the Opera

Comedy and Music

From raucous, wild, woozy comedy in action, dialogue and situations to the charm of beautiful music, there is something of unique interest in this picture. For exhibitors, big or little, either specialists or those handling everything in the same manner, the show combines and makes readily available practically every essential necessary to lure the folks up to box offices, its showmanship worth matching its entertainment merit.

No matter whether one appeals to a class or mass clientele or even the kids, there is a host of distinctive entertainment-showmanship features, all parts of a well balanced whole, which can be seized upon and made the major feature of any exploitation campaign. Comedy, naturally, is the dominating quality. In addition with fine production value accenting everything, there is class music, operatic and modernly individualistic. There's a legitimate motivating story which in its capability of stimulating human heart interest is unique in this kind of show. The action has as much movement as a hurricane and most of the dialogue is of the same character. A continuous thread of farcical melodramatic drama runs through the story. Even a bit of geometrically contrived singing and dancing spectacle has been included. Also a promising new personality, Allan Jones, is uncovered and in some instances he actually takes the show away from the featured leads. Surprising twists and developments crop up so often and speedily that interest never is permitted to lag.

For those who want comedy—new, fresh and vivid—it's Groucho, Chico and Harpo Marx, individually and collectively, as they never have been before. Groucho bosses things with his wisecracking sometimes breath-taking chatter. Chico and Harpo are characteristic as often seen, both contributing their specialties, piano and harp interludes. A few of the sidesplitting highlights are Groucho in the opening cafe sequence wherein the fuse is lighted for the ensuing mirth explosions. Follows Groucho and Chico in their contract making specialty. Then the whole three appear in the ship's tiny stateroom, jamming more people into a two-by-four than ever sardines were packed in a can. Comes the folk song spectacle sequence featuring Jones' singing, Chico at the piano (playing to kids and a delight for kids), and Harpo's harping. Then, under Groucho's guidance, the other two with Jones pose as famous visiting aviators to receive the acclaim of New York. There's the detective-baffling furniture shuffling incident and the final anti-climatic mad moments during the night at the opera—a conglomeration of slambang foolishness featuring a flying trapeze Harpo that should leave audiences limp.

For elements to intrigue the music lovers there's Kitty Carlisle in operatic solos; Jones in a folksong spectacle; the two dueting the sentimental ballad "Alone" and together in the stirring arias of "Il Trovatore."

The story is comedy melodrama. Groucho attaches himself to a wealthy dowager, angel of sick grand opera, mainly for the purpose of chiseling a slice off her bank roll. Eventually he appoints himself manager and Cupid's aid to Jones and Miss Carlisle to put the skids under jealous, temperamental Walter King, menace to the loving pair's professional and romantic future. All that is hilariously funny and musically alluring revolves around this premise.

As a combination of these, plus many other entertainment qualities, the show is an intelligent blend of what is required to amuse and the features needed to commercial it. As it combines good theatrical and marketable qualities, the incentive is there for any showman to accept what is offered, select those features which he will believe most valuable in his community and apply them.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Musical Comedy Drama

In this picture Lawrence Tibbett's singing is the principal entertainment and chief commercial feature. As the story, essentially comedy drama with a light romantic love interest contrast, is developed, every effort is exerted to capitalize the value of his voice. Naturally a musical, dealing with the grand opera phase of that theatrical quality and grand opera folk, in an atmosphere of the difficulties funny and serious encountered in grand opera production and presentation, its successful selling constitutes a problem in arousing interest and at the same time points a way to popular attractiveness.

That the intelligentsia, those who understand and appreciate the worth of finely rendered class music, will respond enthusiastically is hardly to be doubted. The mere assurance that the show offers the accomplished Tibbett at his best should take care of those folk. The problem is: what do the elements on which the picture concentrates mean to the masses of average fans? A little individual consideration, supported by an intelligent understanding of peculiarly local likes and dislikes, should provide an effective solution.

Not exclusively another backstage denouement, the motivating plot is simple. Preceded by a series of sequences establishing romance between Tibbett and Virginia Bruce and the screen characters of other players, it resolves itself into a music embellished comedy drama. Alice Brady, seen as a temperamental but untalented prima donna, tries to produce and then wreck a grand opera presentation. Highlighted by dramatic bits that emphasize Tibbett's affection for Miss Bruce and his desire to feature her in the leading role, to the amazement of Miss Brady and several finely molded comedy contributions by Luis Alberni as the manager and George Martion, Sr., as an irascible old maestro, Miss Brady walks out, taking her financial angle with her. As Tibbett is left to shoulder the entire burden of attending to production detail and starring in the show, Miss Bruce completes her romantic adventure by unwillingly revealing herself as a woman of wealth, who though anxious to obtain a career, without benefit of money provides the wherewithal that the show may go on. The finale has Tibbett singing the prologue to "I Pagliacci."

Though Tibbett sings in solo and with chorus the "Faust Trio," "Largo Al Factotum" from "Barber of Seville," "Toreador Song" from "Carmen" and the prologue, not all the music is operatic. His rendition of "On the Road to Mandalay" and the spiritual, "Glory Road," has the elements to whip up average fan attention to support that which is sure to come from the classes who react to the straight operatic features.

Likewise the comedy character of the production, with Tibbett showing improved interpretative ability, should be given more than usual attention. This quality, which the work of Miss Brady, Alberni and Marion, Sr., aids greatly, may be the means to stimulate general attention. It is suggested that while an intensive drive be undertaken to garner the patronage of the music lovers, much effort to given to extracting the elements in the picture will have wide general appeal.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Three Kids and a Queen

(Universal)

Comedy

Aimed solely at provoking laughter, this comedy, which practically eschews love interest, sticks to its premise in making its drama a source of amusement and coloring all other elements, even a serio-melodramatic kidnap sequence and a hectic anti-climax chase, with a fun stimulating quality. Semi-topical in nature, dealing with a news event of a year or two ago, its central character is an irascible old woman, deftly portrayed by May Robson, with no end of idiosyncrasies. While the first few sequences, devoted to character identification, are rather slow, the remainder of the picture moves with surprising speed, in which action and dialogue are nicely balanced.

In the yarn Mary Jane Baxter, richest woman in the world, is a tough old girl with a tender heart. Wise to the fact that her avid heir, Ralph, is only awaiting her death to come into a vast inheritance, she proceeds to spend money at a rate that assures little being left. Friendly only to her pet dog, she razes a gigantic skyscraper to turn the plot into a playground for her pet, in the meantime defeating all Ralph's attempts to have her adjudged insane. That out of the way, the picture plunges into its real entertainment and showmanship availability.

Tossed out of her carriage while riding in the park, she is picked up by three foundlings, Blackie, Doc and Flash, kids who have been adopted by Barber Tony Orsatti, and taken to his home. Scarehead newspapers breaking out with the sensational story that the world's richest woman has been kidnaped, Tony recognizes his guest. Between Tony's fear of what the law may do to him if he doesn't return her and what the scolding, ranting Mary Jane threatens to do if he does, the action is full of ridiculous hilarity. Ralph posts a big reward for the return of Mary Jane. This put a gang of real kidnapers, Benton, Stanley and Bill, on the job and they try to kidnap the old dame in earnest. But Mary Jane, Tony and the three kids are too much for them. As a wild and woolly chase full of excitement and gun play interludes, Mary Jane succeeds in foiling her greedy heir and the gangster. The finale is a happy ending with the old lady adopting the three kids.

Showmanship which, in addition to capitalizing on the drawing power of the featured names, accentuates the hectic comedy atmosphere of the attraction, looks to the best selling medium. The kind of picture that holds much interest for the more mature folks, it's one that also holds plenty to arouse the youngsters. As the gangster kidnap angle is played from a comedy premise there is nothing about it that should cause undue worry.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Moonlight on the Prairie

(Warner Bros.)

Western

Although there's a sentimental tinge to the title, this picture is little more than a further presentation of the often tried tooting, rooting, shooting, wild riding western formula with its dirty work at the crossroads counterpart. Everything is expected, there being only one departure from standard specifications—that of having the action pause a bit while the star sings. There's the brave and bold hero who, in addition to other handicaps that make the going tough for him, is also under suspicion of murder, which of course later is revealed as a crime that the villain and not the hero committed. There's the comedy relief pal for the hero. Naturally there's the girl heroine and her little son who are being defrauded out of what is rightfully theirs by the usual collection of conniving land grabbing cattle rustlers. Into this comes the hero who, to the tune of falling in love with the girl plus an eager desire to see the villains get it where they most richly deserve it, makes the last minute wild midnight ride to save the ranch, to escape a stampeding herd of wild horses, and go through the anticipated quota of shooting chase adventure scenes before the heroine, now in possession of her estate, decides to change her name to that of the hero's and make him her foreman.

Distinctly a juvenile feature, its interest is largely concentrated upon that contingent of audiences.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Waterfront Lady

(Mascot)

Action Drama

This is an unpretentious picture that contains several elements for showmanship. It is comcomposed of ingredients that are tried and true in pictures, and with a novel twist.

The film is photographed against a nautical background composed of gambling ships, harbor police, fishermen and deserted sailing ships that were once the proud rulers of the deep. Through these settings the cast moves and the character portrayals are blended into the backgrounds.

Action predominates at all times, starting off with a murder on a gambling ship, then switching to the hunt for the accused man by the combined land and harbor police, and winding up with a grand hand-to-hand slugging bee on board an abandoned vessel.

Ann Rutherford has the feminine lead, in her first starring film. Her work has production value, as has the support she receives from Frank Albertson, Barbara Pepper, Grant Withers and J. Farrell Macdonald, who handles the abundant comedy.

The story is of the flight of a young man after being wrongfully accused of a crime, his being helped by a young girl of the waterfront and their romance.

Ronny Hillyer, when a child, was adopted by McFee, and the opening of the picture finds McFee operating a palatial gambling ship with Ronny as his assistant. Ronny notices two strange men playing roulette, and when the doorman, Tom, is accused of tipping off the police; he attacks McFee and is killed with his own gun. Ronny, grabbing the gun, dives out of the window and swims ashore to protect McFee. He stumbles on a deserted shack on the waterfront where he changes his clothes and identity.

Awakening the next morning, he meets Joan O'Brien, who lives with her father on an old sailing vessel next to the shack. Joan thinks Ronny to be a friend of the shack's owner. Their romance is suddenly interrupted by the jealous Tod, who suspects Ronny's identity. Captain O'Brien has a weakness for dice, usually losing all his money every pay day. When Ronny cleans out the captain and his cronies, Joan refuses to speak to him, thinking him to be also a gambler at heart. When she discovers he merely taught her father a lesson, all is forgiven, but the bottom falls out of their romance when Tod reveals Ronny's identity after seeing his picture in a paper.

Ronny then communicates with McFee, who also has been searching for him. As Ronny is about to be rescued, the police arrive. Tod is determined to turn him over to the police. All is finally cleared up, however, when McFee reveals to the police that it was he who was fighting with the doorman, who was an undercover man for the police.—Baehler, New York.

Wings Over Ethiopia

(Paramount)

Special

Here is an exceptionally fine and topical travelogue of feature length depicting the terrain, the natives and the customs of Ethiopia. A photographic journey of the African kingdom from British Sudan by plane to Addis Ababa, there transferring to an automobile, the camera expedition continued as far inland as the motor car could go. On mules the party progressed further, penetrating the interior until the approaching rainy season forced the expedition to retrace its tracks to Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia and home of Emperor Haile Selassie.

The photography, a feature of this decidedly interesting and instructive travelogue, is excellent throughout. The narrative is both intelligent and picturesque, fitting the mood of the camera, and avoids any discussion relative to a political or propaganda nature. Filmed by a Swiss cameraman and a Swiss director, the picture is offered without prejudice and its chief selling factor lies in its timeliness.

There are closeups of the natives, their rituals, often fantastic and barbaric, intimate details concerning their home life, religious rites, marriage customs, recreation, child branding. Finally back in Addis Ababa, shown as a modern city, Emperor Haile Selassie unveils before the camera's eye the more modern of his war appliances and reviews the trained troops and chieftains, with the special distinction group, each member of whom has killed a lion in weaponless combat.

Supplementing the travelogue and the millions of words written on this African kingdom and its inhabitants these last months, Emperor Selassie with one of his characteristic observations, closes the picture when he says that his country will not be conquered until the last Ethiopian has perished.—Mooney, New York.

Comedy and Music

Farce comedy, which in itself is funny enough, but hardly of the grade to hold the attention of the more discerning audience contingents, and music are the ingredients of which this show is woven. It features a number of players whose forte is comic stuff. Individually they turn in acceptable contributions. As a whole, the production with its definite hokum harum-scarum tinge hardly jells.

COOPER'S HEROIC PRODUCTION

a suicide complex, and then figures the complex is just what he needs by marrying Rowena to Larry, to let him indulge in his window jumping. Complications arise. As Larry and the girl fall in love, a chiseling woman lawyer, Freeda, tells Carson of the deal. He and his band set up a watch over the married couple. Twist's reactions to the happenings are characteristic. The finale, preceded by a night club vaudeville show which features a remarkable bit of tap dancing by a member of Carson's band, has Freeda marrying Hugo, thereby assuring herself of a 100 per cent interest in the fortune, while the supposedly dead aunt appears to give her blessing to the match, as that is all she wanted for her nephew.

While comedy which stresses the names of Hugh Herbert, Helen Broderick and Eric Blore as well as that of Fred Keating is the outstanding commercial quality, the picture is hardly of the caliber to inspire any unusual showmanship effort. The title, however, has a meaning that can be adapted to tricky showmanship gags, inasmuch as the whole idea of the show is to have the hero beat the menacing contrivances of the band leader in assuring himself of the inheritance.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Western

Buck Jones, with his horse, Silver, plus a lot of fast driving, quick shooting, hand-to-hand fighting all against the background of the West, should be the principal selling items of this picture.

All in all, the film is typical of most of the previous efforts of the star. This time, however, the supporting cast is composed of Pat O'Brien, Frank McGlynn, Sr., Roy D'Arcy, Ruth Channing, Joseph Girard and Joan Gale. There are many tense situations in the picture, a stage coach holdup, a fight against a band of outlaws.

While the story seems to have jumped several logical sequences, the action is well-paced. The photography, particularly on the outdoor scenes, is good.

Reece Rivers' (Buck Jones) younger brother, Babe, is a constant source of worry to him because of his frequent visits to Jack Keeler's gambling house in a town near their ranch. So, thinking to keep him away from temptation, Reece leaves him in charge of the herd which he and his friend, Slim Gordon, have driven into another valley to escape dust storms.

Bates and Davilla, two crooks, discover the cattle and promptly notify Keeler, who forces Babe to give him a bill of sale for the herd to cover large gambling debts of which Reece knows nothing. After the transaction, Babe disappears and Reece does not find out about it until he tries to use the cattle as collateral for a loan, when he discovers Keeler shipped them to market.

With Slim, Reece then sets out to find Babe in the Pecos country. On the way they attempt to stop a stage coach holdup and are falsely accused of participating in it. The sheriff, however, recognizes Slim as an old ranger and the sheriff's daughter, Ruth, and Reece become mutually interested.

When the sheriff's posse start out after the bandits, Reece and Slim follow, thinking Babe might be one of them. They are too late to help Babe, who, with Bates and Davilla, the actual thieves, is caught. Bates and Davilla escape, but Babe is locked up. Reece helps him escape, but the fugitive is wounded and before he dies he confesses where the gold is hidden and that Keeler is the actual leader of the gang.

Reece then goes after Keeler, who is running away with the sheriff's other daughter, and in a wild chase finally corners the crook and shoots it out. Keeler is killed and Reece wounded. He is nursed back to health by Ruth, and the fadeout shows them well on the way to the culmination of their romance.—Baehler, New York.

Produced and distributed by Universal Pictures. Directed by Ray Taylor. Story by Cliff Farrell. Screen play by Jack Neville. Photographed by William Sickner and Allen Thompson. Running time, 60 minutes. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1016. General audience classification.

Comedy Drama

This latest Chan feature is vividly different from its immediate predecessors. While it retains all in the way of comedy, drama, the atmosphere of personal adventure and danger, suspense and the light romantic love interest contrast with which patrons have become femiliar, the main feature is weird mystery. As all the drama of such a character picture is developed, there is, however, no terror or horror. There are plenty of moments which provoke gasps and shudders, but none in which audiences should be scared out of their wits. In this connection, and in order to establish the feature as something apart from the previous Chans, the title is of unusual merit. Used in such a way that it will convince patrons that they are going to see Charlie Chan participate in a case under conditions in which he has never participated before, it should be the means of bringing all his old fans as well as many new ones.

Assigned to uncover the whereabouts of a missing heir to the Lowell family fortune, Chan is summoned to the Lowell homestead. There he runs into an amazing situation. Gage and his wife, Janice, are a pair of fortune hunters who care little for what has happened to the legitimate heir. Janice's sister, Alice, and her sweetheart, Dick Williams, only want her brother returned. Crochety Henrietta Lowell is under the dominance of a pair of spiritualistic mediums, Bowman and his wife, Carlotta. There is a menacing personality in Ulrich, caretaker of the estate.

A seance is arranged in which Chan, assisted by butler Baxter, who is frightened pink, participates. As young Lowell's dead body falls into the room at the height of the weird goings-on, eerie mystery builds to a high point. But Chan, sensing things as only he can, reveals the mediums as frauds after an attempt is made on the life of Henrietta, and uncovers Walter Gage and his wife as the greedy instigators of the crimes.

It would seem that the outstanding showmanship lead in this picture is the establishing it as something new in the Chan series. Here the significance of the title should play an important part. It might be smart to place plenty of dependence on this, featuring it in connection with Warner Oland's name as Chan and not giving the slightest tip-off as to story's context. As the action of the show gives away many of the ruses employed by fraudulent mediums, particularly a radio loudspeaker arrangement and a moving picture machine for projecting pictures, there is much that is unique which wide-awake exploiteers can turn to good advantage in whipping up a new kind of popular curiosity.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox. Directed by Gordon Wiles. Based on character created by Earl Derr Biggers. Original story by Robert Ellis and Helen Logan. Screen play by Robert Ellis, Helen Logan and Joseph Hoffman. Associate producer, John Stone. Musical direction by Samuel Kaylin. Photographed by Rudolph Mate. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1578. Running time, when seen in Hollywood. 70 minutes. Release date, January 17, 1936. General audience classification.

Soviet Russia Thru the Eyes of an American

(Imperial Pictures)

Travelogue

This travelogue takes the audience from one end of the Soviet Republic to the other, covering many interesting places on the way. It was made by Charles E. Stuart, American engineer, and should have elements of interest if audiences do not object to the apparent age of the picture.

The film undoubtedly reveals certain elements of Russian life that never have before been shown on American screens, but for the most part it is merely a succession of factories, old palaces and hairy peasants until the last two reels. Exhibitors might do well to remember that, although the release of this film is recent, it is not, in reality, a true picture of present-day Russia, apparently having been photographed several years ago, as the clothes worn by those photographed will attest.

Norman Brokenshire, radio announcer, does the off-screen dialogue, and starts by taking the audience through the city of Moscow and behind the walls of the Kremlin, where intimate scenes of Stalin, Molokov and other party leaders are shown.

The camera journeys up the Volga to Kazan and then goes into the Caucasus Mountains and Narzan, the chief city there. Tiflis, capital of Georgia, and Batum, in the oil fields, are next covered.

By far the most interesting section of the film, and the most beautiful photographically, appears next when the Crimea is shown. All the present health resorts that were winter palaces of nobles during the czar's regime are still intact and are now open to the public. Kharkov in the Ukraine is the next and final stop on the journey.—Baehler, New York.

Produced by Charles E. Stuart. Realeased by Imperial. Photographed by M. Gousser and M. Astifier. Narrated by Norman Brokenshire. Sound technician, Harry Belock. Edited by N. C. Braunstein. Musical score by Constantine Krummell. General audience classification. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, Oct. 1, 1935.

Toll of The Desert

(William Steiner)

Western

An unpretentious western, this production offers little to intrigue patrons. It has its quota of riding, shooting and hand-to-hand battling, but these sequences are far from convincing.

This will have to be sold as straight western merchandise as there are no outstanding names in the cast. Fred Kohler, Jr., plays the lead and is supported by Betty Mack, Roger Williams and Edward Cassidy.

Kohler is picked up on the desert when a small boy after Indians have killed his mother, and his father, believing the boy dead, has joined a gang of renegades. The boy's benefactor and rescuer cares for him and he grows up husky and serious minded. His desire to become a lawyer is abruptly forgotten, however, when at the request of the sheriff of the small western town, Kohler becomes a deputy with a mission to destroy the gang of which Kohler's father is now leader.

While the townspeople are celebrating Kohler's birthday the gang invades the house, robs the guests and kills Kohler's benefactor. Kohler, the sheriff and several deputies set out after the gang. Near the gang's hideabout the sheriff and his deputies leave Kohler and start back to town to form a possee. Kohler locates the hideout, but is captured. The gang leader recognizes Kohler as his son by a locket he wears, and sets him free. Kohler succeeds in besting his father in a fight and brings him back to town, where he is tried and hanged, the son unaware of the hanged man's identity.—Mooney, New York.

Produced by William Berke. Directed by Lester Williams. Original story by Allen Hall. Screen play by Miller Easton. Photography by Robert Cline. Sound recording, T. T. Triplett. Assistant director, William Nolte. Musical director, Lee Zahler. Editor, Arthur A. Brooks. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1527. Running time, 60 minutes. Release date, November 1, 1935. Confidential

Drama

An effective version of the current cycle of G-Man productions, this picture traces the course of the federal men in their efforts to break big business racketeering. With a modicum of comedy and romance this is chiefly melodrama and altogether convincing. It differs from others of the cycle inasmuch as it confines itself to the comparatively unheralded policy and numbers rackets, controlled in the story by an executive brain. The federals seek to learn the name of the big shot as the only means of getting at the source and destroying the rackets. How this is accomplished makes for interesting entertainment.

In addition to the many angles of exploitation used previously in connection with this type of picture there is another angle, that of the exposure of the numbers game, clearly explained.

The cast is headed by Donald Cook, in the role of G-Man, and includes Evalyn Knapp as the romantic interest, Warren Hymer, who sells numbers and is the principal comedy relief; J. Carrol Naish, Herbert Rawlinson and Theodore Von Eltz.

The element of human relations assumes an important function. A federal man tenders his resignation when, carrying out his orders, a confederate is killed.

Assigned to stop the racketeering that has developed out of the fertile brain of Herbert Rawlinson, Donald Cook captures a lesser light of the outfit and impersonates him. An auspicious beginnings is nullified when Cook's confederate is killed. Cook hands in his resignation, but agrees to continue on the case at the insistence of his chief. Assuming another name Cook makes a friend of Hymer, henchman of the racketeers, and gets a job selling numbers. In a cafe, headquarters of the numbers racket and where most of the later action takes place, Cook meets Evalyn Knapp, employed as a bookkeeper.

An Italian laborer, having picked the lucky numbers, presents himself at the cafe and receives his winnings, three thousand dollars. Leaving the cafe he is accosted by Naish, gunman, who entices the laborer into a room, where he murders him and retrieves the money for the racketeers. Miss Knapp, realizing what has transpired and the position she is placed in, decides to leave. She asks Cook to give up the racket and go straight, which he is unable to do. Although in love with Cook, Miss Knapp decides to have nothing more to do with him.

Kane Richmond, a college chum of Cook, barges into a tense meeting between Cook and Naish, and Naish kills Richmond. Cook denounces Naish and informs him that Richmond was the son of Rawlinson. Naish immediately calls up Rawlinson and Cook, listening to the conversation, learns that Rawlinson is the big shot, the man he has been tracking down. Rawlinson is captured, the racketeers are rounded up and Cook bests Naish in a hand-to-hand struggle. Miss Knapp learns Cook's true identity and accepts his proposal of marriage.—Mooney, New York.

Produced and distributed by Mascot. Producer, Nat Levine. Directed by Edward L. Cahn. Supervised by Victor Zobel. Story by John Rathmell and Scott Darling. Screen play by Wellyn Totman and Olive Cooper. Supervising editor, Joseph H. Lewis. Film editor, Ray Curtiss. Photographed by Ernest Miller and Jack Marta. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1472. Running time, 65 minutes. Release date, October 16, 1935. General audience classification.

March of Time

(Radio)

Interesting

Two of the outstanding subjects that are on the pages of practically every daily newspaper in the country are dramatized in the seventh release of "March of Time"—Hitler's treatment of German Jews and the resultant development of Palestine because of the tremendous influx of these people into that region, and the financial ramifications of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict. The third subject is an effort to put before audiences a pictorial version of Joseph Furnas' article, "And Sudden Death," which appeared in the Readers' Digest. This last section seemed a weak link in the chain of screen sequences.

The Hitler subject is the best of the group. It is packed with dramatic values and moves at a fast clip besides carrying a note of hope for persecuted members of the race by showing the new homeland in Palestine.

For those who haven't read Mr. Furnas' article on safety on the highways, this part of the release is apt to mean little.

The war material is extremely explanatory and undoubtedly will reveal certain aspects of the conflict that the average man on the street has not known.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Clever Critters

Novelty

This contains shots of quite a few animals in surroundings strange to them and performing feats that are not usually associated with their particular types. It is accompanied by appropriate off-screen dialogue and should prove quite interesting. Scenes include a cat acting as the mother of a brood of baby chickens, a sea lion playing several musical instruments, and elephants working in India.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Quail Hunt

(Universal)

Good in Spots

Something new in cartoon characters is the quail introduced in this Oswald comedy. The character may look more like a midget dodo bird than a quail, but that's beside the question; what really has evolved is an engaging little pen and ink figure. The antics of both Oswald and his hound dog are cut quite according to pattern for the most part, but the quail's saucy stalking of the big bold hunters freshens the whole subject.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Amateur Broadcast

(Universal)

Fair

An Oswald cartoon playing upon the trend of amateur broadcasts, this is fair entertainment. The animal kingdom is the source of supply and Oswald in the course of the broadcast presents a lamb, two kangaroos, an octopus (the one man band), and a frog. The frog brings his side arms to the mike and dares Oswald to ring the gong. The lamb, who is having his own troubles trying to reach the mike, sets off a bomb in the vicinity of the frog. The lamb gets the mike. Running time, 7 minutes.

Night Life

(RKO Radio)

Entertaining

The diversified foibles of human nature are pictured in this "Headliner Comedy" version of life in a night club. Moving from scene to scene with rapidity and featured by the singing of Gene Austin, this short has moments of high comedy and tragedy. The photography is excellent and the direction all that could be desired. In the few minutes the picture runs, the many players run the gauntlet of human emotions. There's the inebriate, who wants to hear "Mother Machree," the girl who takes poison, the boy who's arrested, the chef waiting to hear whether it's a boy or a girl, the doctor and his vacillating wife, the attendant looking for the pearl in the oyster, and many others. A very complete and entertaining short feature.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Hillbilly Love

Good Musical

This is a musical. All the tunes are of the current hillbilly type and such radio luminaries as Frank Luther, Pappy, Zeke and Elton and the Range Ramblers handle them well. The story, which merely serves as an excuse for the principals to sing, has two feuding families joining together for a wedding. Both clans have their singers who practice for the ceremony, which winds up with a bang when loaded cigars explode along with shotguns. Where this type material is liked this should be particularly well received.—Running time, 11 minutes.

On Your Radio Dial

(Universal)

Fair

The high spot of this Mentone variety show is the fast dancing of June Carr, with adept singing by the Negro quartet, the Charioteers, which would have been enhanced by less of closeup photography. Dave Schooler is master of ceremonies and orchestra leader. He also introduces Jan Pierce, tenor, Benay Venuta in songs, and Mills and Martin, comedians, with a stooge in a specialty dance—Running time, 19 minutes.

The Fox and the Rabbit

(Universal)

Likable

A thoroughly likable sketch character is Sonny Rabbit in this Color Cartune, which for the most part is entertaining, though at times the picture is held back by over-familiar situations and over-repetition. The play on measles—with red ink at one time, ketchup at another—is particularly engaging, and should register with any audience, though perhaps especially with children.—Running time, 8 minutes.

U.S. PRODUCT RETURNS TO THE TOP IN CZECH MARKET FOR NEW SEASON

Increased Activity Is Expected to Counteract the Loss Experienced in Past Year; Playdate Problem Comes First

by HARRY KNOPF

Prague Correspondent

Last season, pride of place in the totals of premières in Czechoslovakia went to German films, but this coming season presents a completely altered state of affairs. The Americans have come to the fore with a big contingent of films, which will certainly increase the choice that lies before the theatre-owner, but will create considerably greater difficulties in the fight to rent the new films to the best advantage.

To judge from preliminary announcements, we may count upon heightened film activity in all branches during the next few months. It is to be hoped that this will have a favorable effect on the cinema business, which has had to bear considerable losses during the year just past. The most important matter in this connection is the settlement, as soon as possible, of the constantly agitated question of performance-periods, so that in this coming season the film market may be definitely stabilized.

The theatre owner will hardly find it difficult to pick a good series of films for the new season. He has the choice of a large number of pictures, from many countries.

Germany Also Strongly Represented

This time, again, the German-speaking films will be strongly represented; altogether there are 100 films of German or Austrian origin, and to this figure must be added a number of German versions. Nevertheless, the total of German films on the import list is exceeded by the Americans. With 135 films they once again will occupy first place in quantity for the first time after three years. In this group Metro-Goldwyn, with 30—five fewer than the total Czech production for 1935-36—stands at the head, followed by Fox 25, United Artists 20, Paramount 20, Universal 20.

Czechoslovak production itself will maintain the height reached last year. The efforts of interested parties to liven up home production are very strong, and were crystallized again, not long ago, in the form of a regulation stating that every native producer making a Czechoslovak film will be given permission to hire out the German version of a foreign film in places with a German-speaking majority.

Hence the program of productions to be shown during the season 1935-36 falls into the following divisions:

1. Films from Germany and Austria; German versions from Hungary; German versions of films originally made in other languages.
2. German-speaking versions that the producers of Czechoslovak films will be allowed to introduce.
3. American films. These, on the basis of a bilateral agreement, may be shown in German versions in German-speaking areas, in a stated proportion to the original American versions.
4. English, French, and Russian films.
5. Czechoslovak films.

Although the arrival in force of the Americans has made a big change in the inner structure of the film renting business, nevertheless it is already possible to give some sort of review of the situation for the coming season, and of business prospects.

Big B. O. for Big Pictures

There can be no doubt that the big hits of America will be good business here, too, for the theatre owners of the large towns. In the average flat countryside, however, the prospects are not so rosy. Everything middle-rate is, all previous experience warns, doomed to be a sheer flop. This applies in an increased degree to the German-speaking areas, where the American films, apart from the German versions of worldwide successes, already referred to, will come up against the obstinate opposition of the theatre-owners. The chances of profit on the American films therefore are limited to the larger towns of the Republic.

After production had been almost at a standstill during the summer, and even the Horst studio had been obliged to close its doors, it was generally expected that a big wave of production would set in at the beginning of the autumn. And judging from first indications, this seemed to be the case. On all sides announcements were made that pointed to a considerable increase of activity. Now, however, there are signs that during the coming months it will be hard to reach the production figures of the foregoing year, unless steps are taken in responsible places. The spirit of hopefulness has given place to a certain feeling of anxiety, which is best illustrated by the fact that for the immediate future the production of only eight films, which will be made in the studio at Barrandov, can be counted upon.

Costs, Material, Foreign Films

If the reasons for this sudden stagnation are investigated, it will be discovered that it is an inevitable development feared for a long time in expert circles. The responsibility lies principally with the costs of production, which bears no relation to the profit made on the films. The producer of films himself, however, is not entirely free from blame for having chosen material rather infelicitously. And the third decisive reason is the large contingent of foreign films, in coping with which the theatre owners have had their hands full.

The enormous sums that the studio swallows up are almost more than can be borne for Czechoslovak films, on which owing to the language, alone, it is difficult to get a return on one's outlay abroad. Take the case of the Monopol studio at Barrandov. The AB here demands for one studio day the sum of 25,000 crowns. Every set-building day costs 6,000 crowns. On top of this there comes another 5,000 crowns a day for lighting. If the producer has any of the scenes he has shot shown on the screen, a further 100 crowns an hour must be paid for this privilege. For using the cutting-table the charge is 200 crowns more daily. And then there are all the inevitable expenses for developing, printing and so on.

Domestic Production Faces Obstacles of High Cost of Studio Space, Inferior Stories and Greater Foreign Competition

A short survey of the production costs of a Czechoslovak film, calculated on a basis of four set-building days and 10 film-shooting days, would present the following problem:

4 set-building days at Kč 6,000	24,000
10 film-shooting days at Kč 25,000	250,000
10 days' lighting at Kč 5,000....	50,000
24 hours' screening	2,400
8 days' cutting	1,600
	Kč 328,000

Kč 328,000 gone solely in technical expenses, without counting wages for the whole staff, outside shooting (at least a week), film material, or other urgent expenses. When the film is really finished, the total production costs would not be put too high at 900,000 crowns.

It cannot be wondered at, therefore, if nowadays a producer decides to postpone matters, or even to abandon the idea altogether.

A further contributory reason for the present glum atmosphere is the exceedingly strong offer from abroad on the Czechoslovak market. It is typical, for instance, that up to the end of this year all the playdates of the Prague cinemas are so filled up, that in August, the premiere of a Czech film had to be set in the hottest weather in order to have the film showing at one of the first-run houses.

Cohen Joining Columbia

Emanuel Cohen, one time editor of Pathe News and former vice-president in charge of production for Paramount Pictures, will shortly become affiliated with Columbia Pictures, according to their announcement. Mr. Cohen will produce a Bing Crosby picture as his first effort.

At a meeting October 18th the board of Columbia declared a 75c. dividend on the preference stock of the company, payable Dec. 2 to stockholders of record Nov. 14th.

J. D. Jones Retires

J. D. Jones, who has been manager of the Robb & Rowley Circuit's four theatres in San Angelo, Texas, has retired after spending 15 years in the industry. He was succeeded by H. L. Youngblood of Dallas, who took up his new duties last week.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

WANT CLEARING HOUSE FOR CYCLE FILMS
STUDIOS BID FOR SELZNICK INTERNATIONAL
CONSIDERING 2,000-FOOT REEL CHANGES
NINE FILMS START; ELEVEN ARE FINISHED

THAT distributors organize some form of clearing house for maximum returns on pictures of similar themes is being discussed in Hollywood circles as a possible solution of the cycle problem.

Under current conditions there often is a dead heat finish in the making of productions of much the same appeal, and then there's another race to get them into the theatres. Sometimes they are released simultaneously, with the result that audiences choose between them instead of seeing both.

Such was the case in the late cycle of G Men films. The same thing happened in the earlier cycle of gangster pictures. Now, with big musicals under way on every lot, exhibitors may look forward to rival musical properties bidding simultaneously for audience attention. The inevitable result is that both films take less than they should at the box office.

A case currently illustrative is the release of RKO-Radio's "Top Hat" at practically the same time MGM's "Broadway Melody of 1936" made its debut. Both are big musicals. Each is potentially a huge money maker.

Provided MGM's "Romeo and Juliet" were ready for release, it is unlikely that any exhibitor would dream of voluntarily booking it the same week as or shortly after Warner's "A Midsummer Night's Dream."—MILLER.

Six Films on Early California

Following the unquestioned success of Samuel Goldwyn's "Barbary Coast," six pictures dealing with early California history are now before the cameras or soon to go into production, and a seventh, Warner's "The Frisco Kid," is finished.

Nearing completion are Paramount's "Rose of the Rancho," dealing with Monterey in the 1850's, and MGM's "Robin Hood of El Dorado." Scheduled for early starts are RKO's "Mother Lode" and "Twentieth Century-Fox's "Ramona." Universal will make "Sutter's Gold," and Reliance "Yosemite."—MORRIS.

Nine Start, Eleven Finished

As the production mill moved at a faster pace in the last week than it has for the last fortnight, nine pictures were started and 11 completed. Both specials and regular features are included in the new and finished lists.

Another feature of more than usual topical interest is "Prison Farm" in which the principal players are Donald Woods, Kay Linaker and Carlyle Moore, Jr. Louis King is directing. The third feature, "Song of the Saddle," a western, stars Dick Foran with Alma Lloyd, Gordon Elliott, George Ernest, Kenneth Harlan, Pat West, Julian Rivero, Otis Harlan and Victor Potel. British Pictures Gaining in Japan

by CHIKUSHI TANI

Tokyo Correspondent

Encouraged by the recent tendency of European pictures toward ascendance in this country, British Twickenham and Butcher Empire productions are now about to make their debut on our screen. Mr. Hattori, former business manager of Nihon Gekijo, who was active in behalf of European pictures, has arranged to identify himself with Yoshimoto Komatsu, head of Mitsuba Trading Company, having its head office in San Francisco, to establish distribution of pictures of these British producing companies. It is reported that Mitsuba, which obtained sole agency for Twickenham and Butcher Empire for the entire Oriental territory covering Japan and Manchukuo, has also in contemplation the calling in to our stage of Muriel Page, attractive danseuse.

The first consignment of films to reach Mitsuba at the end of September was reported to contain "The Wandering Jew," "Bella Donna," "Broken Melody" and three others out of 60 1934-35 productions of the two concerns.

That European product is making decided inroads in Tokyo and Osaka houses is now a fact confirmed by actual figures of films censored by our Home Office. According to investigations made by our Motion Picture Association, there was a tremendous increase in the number of British and German pictures censored last year. In 1933 British pictures were reported to have totaled 19,389 meters and German 74,810, while in 1934 it was 30,783 meters British and 116,207 German. The number of Japanese and American productions censored in the last year showed not so striking an increase.

I. Kobayashi, head of the Toho theatre circuit, has started importing pictures direct from various producing companies in Europe in cooperation with PCL (Photo Chemical Laboratories), which hereafter will act as distributor of films imported by Toho, while Shockiku Company is now taking up the gauntlet against Toho by going hand in hand with Towa Shoji Company, importer and distributor of foreign pictures from England, France, Italy, Austria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Osaka is adding a new film theatre at the suggestion of the Osaka Culture Protection League, to be dedicated to advancement of student interests, the first of this sort of theatre. It is to accommodate 2,000 and will cover 700 square meters. It is to be an ultramodern building with arched roof, every seat of a folding type and the auditorium to be convertible into a gymnasium.

New Production Rivalry

A deal between Toho Eiga Gekijo (Toho Cinema Co.), big theatre circuit, and J. O. Talkie Company, regarded as a challenge to the Shochiku company, has brought a change in competition in the production field.

Under the new arrangement the production facilities of J. O. and PCL will be united. They will share directors and players, and J. O. will produce eight features, four historical productions and four musicals annually. In addition, PCL will increase its output by 20 features, making the total 28.

A school for sound film players has been started here. About a year ago a stage players' school was opened. The new school is at Ginza and is being conducted by Minoru Takata, who continues his connection with Takata Producing Company.

Change Fox Unit Name

Fox Agency Corporation has changed its name in Wilmington, Del., to the Fox West Coast Agency Corporation of New York.

New Equipment for Better 16 mm. Sound

A new optical reduction printer system for the production of 16 mm sound prints from standard sized negatives has been made available to printing laboratories by the RCA Manufacturing Company, according to Edwin M. Hartley, manager of the RCA Photophone Division.

The new system eliminates the former sound losses caused by the numerous processing steps and employs an optical system which reproduces the sound track in both the transverse and longitudinal planes, instead of only in the width as was formerly the case.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Sleepy Eye, Minnesota

Dear Herald:

This town of Sleepy Eye isn't quite as large as Chicago, but it has as many good people, according to its size, as Boise, Idaho, or McAllen, Texas. We know, for we have been in both places. The town has something like 2,500 gophers and a few from Arkansaw. The town was named after an Indian chief by the name of Sleepy Eye, who got tired of the hard winters of Minnesota and went to "the happy hunting grounds" where they have steam heat, and we were told that his remains are resting in peace in a lot adjacent to the city hall.

Sleepy Eye is a good town, that's why R. A. Palmer came here to open his Princess theatre, and his Princess theatre is largely responsible for Sleepy Eye being such a good town, and Miss Donna Palmer, who is the cashier, is probably largely responsible for the Princess doing such a good business.

Jackson is not very far from Okoboji, and Okoboji is where the lake is located where the boys fish for the big ones and go home with a few sunfish, and this is where Joe Matuska goes to fish when he isn't advertising his show at the State theatre, and the State theatre, by the way, is one of the outstanding places of the state and Joe and his theatre are largely responsible for southern Minnesota being what it is today. You ought to see the State and you ought also to meet Joe. Don't talk French to Joe for he can't understand it.

Fairmont is where the Strand and Nicholas theatres are located and they are both operated by W. L. Nicholas, with the assistance of his son Herb, and these two, together with their two theatres, are what has put Fairmont up in the front rank with Minnesota's worthwhile towns.

It doesn't make any difference which way you are going: don't ever pass up Fairmont, and be sure to go and visit these theatres and call on both of these managers and then you will understand why Fairmont is such a good town. Laverne Palmer is doorman and Marie Sherman cashier.

Ed C. Breilein of the Faust theatre at New Richland is another exhibitor who knows what it is all about.

We were in a cafe the other day and we heard a choir somewhere singing, "Joy to the world, the Lord has come. Let earth receive her King," and the waitress went and tuned in another station and we heard a crooner sobbing, "Sweetheart, you are all I want," and we ordered a glass of orange juice and she was so affected by the song that she brought us a plate of corned beef and cabbage. Good gosh all fishhooks, what's this world coming to?

MRS. J. C. JENKINS DIES AT NELIGH

Mrs. J. C. Jenkins, wife of the writer of the "Colyum" which has appeared for many years in the HERALD, died Monday night at the family home in Neligh, Nebraska, after a long illness. Funeral services were conducted Tuesday afternoon at Neligh.

The staff of Quigley Publications join the countless readers of Jaysee's "Colyum" in extending their condolences to Mr. Jenkins.

H. M. Johnson of the Unique theatre at Bricelyn got pretty hot and bothered some years ago because we came within 40 miles of him and didn't come to see him. This time we drove down there just to call on him and try and apologize for our neglect. He was playing the Caylor stock company when we called and we could hardly work our way into the house because of the crowd. We also met Mrs. Johnson and the two of 'em accepted our apology and we parted good friends. Thanks, folks, we will try and not miss you next time.

E. P. Nelson of the State theatre at Waseca was doing considerable repairing when we called. He was enlarging the seating capacity, which was an indication that he was pleasing the people with the shows he was giving them. If Waseca isn't pleased with the State and its management there must be something wrong with Waseca. We were mighty well pleased with both of them. He said that when his subscription ran out he would send us a check to renew it. We'll betcha little Fifi, and her pups, that he does it.

We are not assuming to be a critic of motion pictures, so don't get that notion in your head, but if we were a critic we would call your attention to Warner Bros.' "Little Big Shot" with Sybil Jason, Robert Armstrong, Glenda Farrell and Edward Everett Horton. Here is a cast that ranks well up to the top, and one that we should all take our hats off to.

The story has a gangster flavor to it, with plenty of comedy mixed in to keep you from reaching for your gun, and, but say Abner, we would like to say to Shirley Temple and Jane Withers that if they don't look out little Miss Jason will be pushing them off the front seat.

Jaysee, Note!

Hello, Mr. Jenkins:

Gee, you must be a wonderful person. Can't imagine anyone with so much common sense. I never miss your writeups in MOTION PICTURE HERALD and enjoy it so much, especially the September 7 issue. Best wishes.—MRS. C. G. LAWING, Southhead Theatre, Brownsville, Tenn.

There is a little girl who will endear herself to the hearts of the fathers and mothers of this country, and if she don't you can bet that the fathers will be out drinking bootleg booze and the mothers playing bridge at 10 cents on the corner. And say, Sybil, come on, honey; we are for you 100 per cent.

Next Station Stop Is Wells

Sid Keith of the State theatre at Wells said he wondered why we hadn't called on him before. Well, doggone it, Sid, we did call there once before and you had gone to Minneapolis with your dander up to clean up Film Row. We heard afterwards that you didn't do it, and we were glad of it because that wasn't a good thing to do. We should always remember, Sid, to have a forgiving spirit (or something like that).

We are not going to yell as loud as some people about the Government putting a tax of 45 cents per bushel on potatoes because we don't eat many potatoes anyhow, but boy, if they put a tax on fishing tackle and huckleberry pie you will hear us squawk loud enough to scare every blue pelican off of that "shelterbelt."

When the authorities of Minnesota found out that we were there they gave us our choice of staying there or leaving the state. We chose the latter, and when we got to Wausa, Neb., we stopped to call on our old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Gropper, who operate the Empress theatre. We have called there on several previous occasions and have been unable to find them at home.

They were having some kind of a homecoming in Wausa and the town was full of people and so was the Empress. Mr. Gropper was up in the booth operating and Mrs. Gropper in the booth selling tickets, by the yard, but they found time to visit with us and invited us to come and see them. Must be they don't know us very well. We also met Mr. and Mrs. Larson. Mrs. Larson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gropper and was assisting in taking care of the crowd. We are going to go back there some time.

We want to thank John F. Brandt of Oregon, Mo., and Vincent Hoven of Bowdle, S. D., for sending us checks and requesting us to send the HERALD to them. Thanks, boys, we have already sent in your orders, and hope that you have good luck, as we know you will.

Never mind getting the hook, Ernie, we are quitting right now.

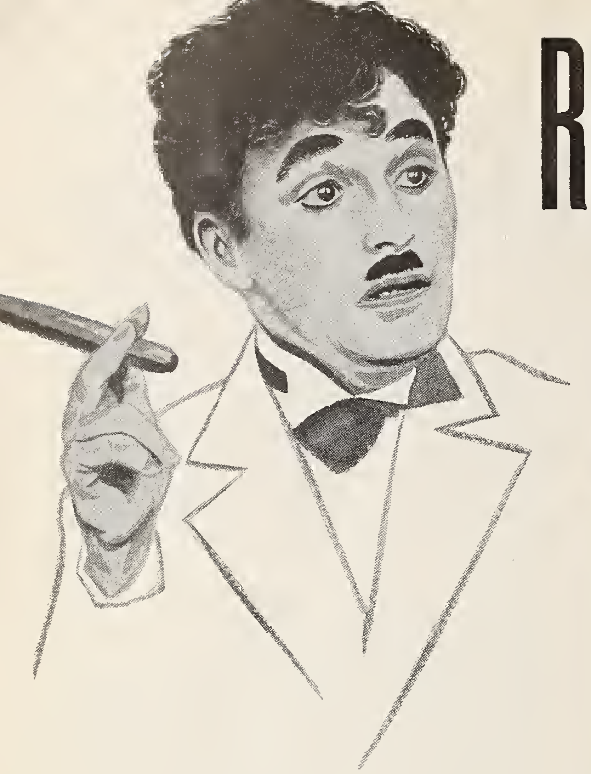
Staub to Do Two More

Ralph Staub will make two more short subjects for Warner Brothers in Hollywood before leaving that company. The first, "In Your Gondola," will be in Technicolor and will feature Henry Armetta.



REPUBLIC HAS A COMEDY TOO, MR. CHAPLIN

Charlie, we're sorry. We know that you have just finished your newest picture "Modern Times." We know they're saying it's a knockout. Charlie, we've got a comedy, too. It's called "A Thousand Dollars a Minute." And it's a honey. We've got some of the industry's best comics in it. The critics are raving about it. Do you mind if we tell the world we too have a great laugh sensation?

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Capital

FARGO EXPRESS: Ken Maynard—This did not go over so hot. It had played free at a little town north of us and we didn't find out about it until after we had it to play. Running time, 59 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Chesterfield

GIRL WHO CAME BACK: Shirley Grey, Sidney Blackmer—Good little program picture that did quite well at the box office. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Again big mouth Joe clicks and in a big way. He shows more real versatility in one reel than most so-called stars do in a whole picture. Played this against my toughest competition of the late summer to dandy business and may bring it back. Running time, 83 minutes.—Joe S. Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Great show and a real treat.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—The best picture Joe E. Brown ever made and that is saying a lot.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Joe's best to date but failed to do business up to expectations. Plenty of songs and comedy and is sure to please generally. Put this on your best spots. Running time, 83 minutes. Played October 6-8.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kansas. General patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney, Ann Dvorak, Margaret Lindsay, Robert Armstrong—Fine picture. Robert Armstrong almost as good as Cagney. He sure was good in this. Barton MacLane also good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—Not as good as most of Warner musicals but still plenty good. Business not so good on it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER: Kay Francis, George Brent—An ordinary picture that just gets by. Should be double-billed. Photography very fuzzy in spots. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 6-7.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—Enjoyed by all and drew extra business.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—A rip roaring comedy. Once again Warner Bros. devote themselves to the box office. As art, this is terrible. As a box office film attraction, it's the tops. They don't miss a chance to give you a laugh. A typical Warner cast with Frank McHugh and Allen Jenkins helping to give a very good comedy. Played October 2-4.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Thought this was good and so did the people. Though the weather rather hurt business, I think it will stand up for an extra booking anywhere. Has more close-to-the-heart stuff in it than most of Cagney's stuff.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—An excellent production with an appeal to patrons who like the better class pictures. Enough action to liven up the dialogue and please action fans.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—Wonderful acting. Not just like the book, especially the ending, but well liked. Played October 6-8.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor, Roscoe Karns—Played it late, but to good patronage. Your audience will like it even though it is old. Played September 17-18.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—A swell picture from every angle. Played it so new that I was unable to get mats for newspaper. Put it on with the smallest amount of newspaper advertising in two years and did the best business since last winter. Which makes you wonder all the more about newspaper "splashes." Twelve reels but never a dull moment. Should mop up. Running time, 113 minutes. Played October 13-15.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kansas. General patronage.

GB Pictures

CLAIRVOYANT, THE: Claude Rains, Fay Wray—Don't run this. GB couldn't tell you what this is all about. It is the poorest thing that was ever put out for a picture.—Palace Theatre, West Helena, Ark. General patronage.

Liberty

MGM

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—This one hard to figure. Might be a knockout in a big town but certainly will not get the natives in. Plenty of money spent on the production, but people are looking for entertainment, not costly productions.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kansas. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, June Knight, Eleanor Powell, Robert Taylor—It tops "Top Hat," and that's topping. Positively one of the nicest screen morsels in many a day and with the radio plugs, plus critic's raves, you are bound to clean up on this one. Running time, 102 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Una Merkel, Vilma and Buddy Ebsen—Swell musical show that has everything to make for entertainment. Pleased 100 per cent.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—A giant production that might have done good business except for night soft-ball games. Seemed to please men more than women. Should do a nice business in most spots. Running time, 89 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John Kansas. General patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—One of the best. Will please all classes. Jean Harlow's best role and both Beery and Gable great. Business above average. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 24-26.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Here's the answer to "When is a good picture not a good picture"; it was good to see but not so good at the box office. Perhaps a little too sophisticated for this small town. Played September 25-26.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Good show. Excellent singing by Harry Stockwell. Comments not so hot on Ted Lewis. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 29-30.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT: Franchot Tone, Una Merkel—Pretty good program picture. Lots of laughs and a mystery story about which you can say, "I told you so." It's moderately entertaining and Tone's name is better than you get in most programmers. If the poorest pictures are as good as this, we'll be satisfied. Played October 5.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—This one is exceptionally good; good acting and directing plus a good story that is interesting and has comedy and pathos. Our second day business better than the first day, which is exceptional these days.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—A really smart picture. The photography is outstanding. It is startlingly different from the usual run of air pictures. The massed parachute jump is rather wonderful to see, and the crashes quite realistic. Above average business. Played September 18-19.—Harland Rankin. Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario. Small town patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Joel McCrea, Maureen O'Sullivan—A murder mystery that will please all. Sets a fast pace and keeps it up until the end. Running time, 69 minutes. Played October 4-5.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

Monogram

DAWN RIDER, THE: John Wayne—Another western well liked by our regular Saturday night crowd. Running time, 62 minutes. Played October 5.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley—This is a good show, cheaply made, but it follows the old "Miracle Man" story and the public enjoyed it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HOOSIER SCHOOL MASTER, THE: Norman Foster, Charlotte Henry—Good small town program. Pulled out some of the older generation we had not seen in months.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—Not as good as "Girl of the Limberlost," but excellent family entertainment and a relief from the nauseating drinking scenes that spoil so many good pictures. Rogers competition took our crowd.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—This is what you expect after you have seen the other pictures. Just don't put into the production the polish the more substantial companies give their pictures. Story, of course, is well known, but not very good for motion picture material.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

Paramount

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Betty Furness, Robert Young, Stuart Erwin—An entertainingly different football story. It's Stuart Irwin's picture and you'll like it; it's a lesson in true friendship. Played to usual weekend business. Played September 27-28.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario. Small town patronage.

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—Extra good show. Pleased my patrons and drew fairly well.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Lyda Roberti, Burns and Allen—This was one swell show. The people came to see it and left to praise it. It is the best vaudeville show I have ever had on my screen. The story is good enough to get by but the acts are swell.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Kent Taylor, Arline Judge—Good college picture. Plenty of pep and a murderer who keeps you guessing until the last reel.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—More entertainment, cost less, did more business than "Broadway Gondolier." Just the type picture that my Sunday crowd likes. Don't sluff this one off.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kansas. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—Paramount has good pictures for 1935-36 to date.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft—Not so new but was good and got by on the Friday-Saturday date like a million. Has a real plot and fine direction, though I don't know who was to blame for it.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: Burns and Allen—Okay for Burns and Allen fans, but evidently there are not many in this territory. Failed at the box office. Personally thought it a good comedy that should have done more business. Running time, 65 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kansas. General patronage.

· HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Cesar Romero—The surprise comedy of the year. Gangsters go collegiate in the funniest thing that ever hit this theatre. Play it and laugh your head off. Played September 13-14.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—Fine little picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Walter C. Kelly, Andy Clyde, Richard Cromwell, Betty Furness—A comedy that played to a good house and pleased everyone. The Scotch and Irish brogue was well flavored, but easily understood and thoroughly enjoyable. Played October 1-2.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—Get the National Screen Service Deluxe Trailer, put out some extra paper and go to town on this one. Will do just as much business as "G Men" and will probably be as well liked. Ideal for Friday and Saturday showing. Running time, 66 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kansas. General patronage.

PARIS IN SPRING: Tullio Carminati, Mary Ellis—This is good music and other than that I can't give it much. Can't expect them all to be "Top Hats," however.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PARIS IN SPRING: Tullio Carminati, Mary Ellis—Poor picture with too much singing by a fair singer who is unknown to picture audiences. Grace Moore started out with a swell picture, but they've given this girl a poor one. No one in supporting cast who has any name value. Tullio Carminati is poison here. Played October 9-10.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Leila Hyams—I was agreeably surprised at the business this production did. It was well liked and these elderly stars seemed to please the kids. Anyway, it was a pleasant surprise to see the crowd come out and believe it will do the same for the next man.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SCOUNDREL, THE: Noel Coward, Julie Haydon, Hope Williams—This is a swell dramatization of a very unpleasant story; highbrow, and my wife went to see it twice as it is very well done and very interesting, but too heavy for my regular customers. It died the second night.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Perre, S. D. General patronage.

SHANGHAI: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young—This is a splendid picture and differs from most in its more or less tragic ending. It failed to draw at the box office, however, for unaccountable reasons, and its gross was miserable.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—This was a lot better picture than I expected and pleased everyone who came. Has a likeable cast and a clever story with good direction. Fits Friday and Saturday in my house.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—This to my audience was one of the nillest wastes of film for a high allocated picture this season. Played it a week ahead of "The Big Broadcast" and Crosby's work in this undoubtedly killed his chances (if any) in "The Big Broadcast." Running time, 63 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett, Mary Boland—Poorest Crosby we have yet played. His singing is all there it. Generally, people did not care for it. Too bad. I hear that "The Big Broadcast of 1936" is not as good as it should be. Is Paramount slipping again?—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SIX REPORTERS ENTER RANKS

In this issue of "What the Picture Did for Me" appear reports from two showmen who previously have not been contributors. They hail from Arkansas and Michigan. They are:

M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich.

Palace Theatre, West Helena, Ark.

Returning to the department this week after a long absence are four exhibitors whose names appeared regularly under reports a year ago. Welcomed back are:

Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D.

Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich.

Estes & Estes, Brooklyn, Mich.

Read the reports of these six showmen in the columns of this issue.

VIRGINIAN, THE (Re-issue): Gary Cooper, Richard Arlen, Walter Huston, Mary Brian—This is a very fine western picture and they will enjoy seeing it again, but be sure to emphasize the fact that it is merely new print of the old picture, as they have made enough of the old stories into new pictures lately that the public is not on guard without special mention and they are entitled to it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

VIRGINIAN, THE: Gary Cooper, Richard Arlen, Walter Huston, Mary Brian—Wish we had more reissues like it.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND: Gail Patrick, Dean Jagger—Usual western that will appeal only to the people who like this type of picture.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND: Gail Patrick, Dean Jagger—Not near as good as the silent version. It did not have the right actors to put it over. George O'Brien, Jack Holt or Buck Jones should have been in this to make it go over. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—This is what I would call just fair. I did all right by the box office but the people did not seem to care for the picture. The story may be well read, but it didn't seem to have draft.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—A picture that was made to order for this town and rural communities; clean, appealing and quite interesting, and it did what we expected, brought out the females 100 per cent. Played October 9-10.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario. Small town patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—I think the smart boys of Hollywood slipped something by our color people in this show. They made a dumb story into a dull picture and gave it beautiful color and the people naturally reacted against it, thinking they are against the color, but actually against the dumb story and thus the cost of colored prints is kept away from Hollywood another year and the laugh is on you.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—This picture was a distinct disappointment. The color is very beautiful, but after the first several reels, Miriam Hopkins wears you down. Pleased only about 20 per cent and drew a very poor crowd, especially the second night. Maybe I'm all wrong, but I thing Miriam should have her voice calcimined. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 29-30.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—Exceptionally good preview sold this picture and it was as good as the preview. I would like to see more of this Ann Sothern. Drew better than the average and pleased practically all. That Bill Robinson act is worth the price of admission alone. Hackneyed plot, but has that certain something which made it stand out. Running time, 77 minutes. Played October 4-5.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—As is usual in these musical comedies, there is not much of a story, but there is enough entertainment in the picture to satisfy almost any one. I consider it rather better than the average program picture. Running time, 72 minutes. Played October 4-5.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—A fairly amusing backstage story with some good numbers. We doubled this with a western and did above average business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 28-29.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Racetrack story that kept one interested and has a lot of comedy in it. Not a big picture, but good entertainment.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Too slow and draggy. Only a fair program picture. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen, Margot Grahame—This picture fails as mass entertainment because of overemphasis on the artistic fusion of photography and direction. For the minority who appreciate perfection of detail this picturization of Liam O'Flaherty's story is soul satisfying in its beauty of production. The response of the small audience was of restless indifference.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen, Heather Angel, Preston Foster, Margot Grahame—Now you can get a lot of money out of this. It is box office dynamite and you can book it for nothing from RKO, as they don't expect to get any normal small town exhibitor to run it, and then spend a little on a mimeographed letter telling the public that it is the world's worst picture, with four stars from Liberty and high rating from all critics and you think it is terrible and invite them out to judge for themselves. They'll come.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable—Only a fair program picture. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler, "Boots" Mallory—Very good western that certainly pleased our Saturday-Sunday crowd. Business above average. You can't miss on this one. Running time, 74 minutes. Played October 5-6.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

RETURN OF PETER GRIMM, THE: Lionel Barrymore—This is David Belasco's old standby and was put over by Helen Mack and Lionel Barrymore, so everyone in the audience enjoyed it. I got a tieup with a local group and put it over at the box office. It is Christian Science to a little degree, but not so as to be offensive to any religion and yet will be of real appeal to them. People liked it, though heavy.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SHE: Randolph Scott, Helen Gahagan—Opinion divided. Not so hot on the draw. Played September 12-14.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—RKO tried to make a spectacle out of a mighty good story. Picture drags considerably, and lack of action made the audience very restless. Drew less than normal business. If you don't have to play it, skip it. Played October 6-7.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: Ginger Rogers, William Powell—Sold to me as a special. However, it is a very good picture, but would not rate it more than just average entertainment. Business not so good on this one. Played August 18-19.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

STRANGERS ALL: May Robson, Preston Foster—A very good family picture, lacking in strong box office names, but very likeable if you can get them in.

They came to see the other feature, but liked this one better. Played September 25-26.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This is the best box office picture I have had this year. People sure wanted to see it and they were satisfied when they did come out and take it in. The best Monday business I have done for several years, showing that the picture pleased the Sunday crowd.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—A very good picture, but not for the small towns. Too sophisticated for our audience. Business below average for the three-day run. We expected to do very good on this one. Running time, 102 minutes. Played October 8-10.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

TOP HAT: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—It is a great show. Without a doubt one of the best made this year.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—One of the best box office bets on the market. Of course, it is a dance picture, but it seems as if everyone liked it. It is clean in every respect. The dancing by Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers is great. Running time, 105 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BLACK SHEEP: Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor—A better than average program picture with swift enough pace to hold the audience. Well liked by our patronage.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

BLACK SHEEP: Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor—A good little picture with no box office appeal.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland, "Pat" Paterson—Not as good as previous "Chan" stories. Business fair. Played September 18-19.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Wish all pictures could please as well as this one did. They still talk about it. Business very good. Played September 19-21.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles—The best Shirley has ever made. On each one we play the kid seems to draw better. John Boles makes almost as good a teammate for her as James Dunn. The music is excellent, the lines are clever, the story good and the gross fine. Played September 27-28.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor, Henry B. Walthall—What a mess! Fox had the story and evidently did not know what to do with it. Super super colossal, stupendous, gigantic, magnifico, "phooey." I'll take a good program picture for mine and I can safely say that that went for the audience, those that stayed, and as for the rest, they certainly showed that they could take it. Fox evidently sensed that it would take a lot to put the picture over, for they had the ace commentator of radio, Lowell Thomas, extolling its praises in the trailer and I'll say it needed all he had to give.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—A wonderful production. The only objection is that the picture is too noisy in spots and recorded very loud. Did not seem to have any drawing power. I call it poor advertising when they do not put the actors names on the posters, etc. I had to get some stills from the exchange to show my prospective customers that it was a modern story. Every piece of advertising just had scenes of "Hell," no stars in picture at all. Aren't there any exhibitors in New England interested enough to send in reports once in a while.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Samll town patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—This sure was "Hell" at the box office. But as a picture of Hell it was a joke. Old timers will recall the old time Dante's Inferno of some 22 years ago made by Italia, a foreign company, and it was a picture of Hell wth all its tortures that was so sensational that it clicked in a big way. But the tortures of this Fox fumble fall to the exhibitor who gets enough hell without inflicting this on him. Running time, 88 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor, Henry B. Walthall—I guess I better keep my big mouth shut about this one.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke—Putting James Dunn in inferior pictures like this won't help him. This is fair entertainment, but not meant as a class A attraction. If you have a fair feature this makes a good attratcion to double it with. Played September 24.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Way below the Rogers standard, but Will would pull a crowd in with anything. Played September 14-15.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

GAY DECEPTION: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Program picture sold as a special.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

GAY DECEPTION: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—A pleasant light comedy romance that will please audiences looking for entertainment. Lederer no favorite here and picture failed to get film rental on one day showing. Running time, 75 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kansas. General patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—A very clever picture that more than pleased our Sunday crowd. Very poor photography in spots. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 29.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

GINGER: Jackie Searl, Jane Withers—This is a swell picture for entertainment and carries as much story and box office as Shirley Temple. We did nearly Shirley Temple business on it. Played September 20-21.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

GREAT HOTEL MURDER: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen, Mary Carlisle—The title gives little indication of the comedy that threads this mystery drama. Suspense is well maintained. A good picture, so our patrons said. Played October 8-9.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—Not his type. They want him in Westerns and Fox has the yen for switching their stairs into pictures that do not suit the actor. O'Brien's reputation was made in Westerns and that is where he should stay.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini—Those that like high grade music, which is about 1% in small towns, will say wonderful, but the other 99% will give it the razzberries. This hit the lowest Sunday gross in the history of the house. Also the first time that I have had people demand their admission back.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. Small town patronage.

LADIES LOVE DANGER: Mona Barrie, Gilbert Roland—An average program picture which would have been better had Mona Barrie not attempted to act kittenish. Miss Barrie is one of several actresses on the screen who, no matter how serious their efforts, are never convincing as the coy young thing. Fair audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LADIES LOVE DANGER: Gilbert Roland, Mona Barrie—Doubled with "Ginger." It is fair entertainment, but lack box office weight on account of lack of names. Previous film with same cast was fairly entertaining, but no build-up for this one. Played September 20-21.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—As usual Shirley drew them in. Not up to some of her other pictures, but was well liked by all. One sweet little kiddie. May she always stay young. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 4-5.—Estes & Estes, Brooklyn, Mich. Small town patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple, Joel McCrea, Lyle Talbot—Good picture; well liked by all. Business fair. Not as good as past pictures by this star. Played September 21-22.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Very nice picture. We played this rather late, but it made a little money at that. This little girl is quite an actress. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—Mediocre; marred by the over-abundance of talk, and especially the socalled German comedian that ranted and raved for four solid reels without rime or reason. The old hackneyed theme of no money for production of picture and the German was it, to the extreme annoyance of the audience. Lasky has nothing to be proud of in this one. A little restraint in the reaching for comedy that did not come and it still would have been just another picture largely from age.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—Just fair. Should be double-billed. Photography poor. Running time, 77 minutes. Played September 22-23.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers Broke our record of the past couple years. Not as good as some of Will's, but plenty good enough.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—One of the greatest box-office attractions you will ever play. We could have run this one a week. Pleased everyone. Sound, story and photography fine. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 30-October 3.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

THUNDER IN THE NIGHT: Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley—A murder mystery that is above the average. Well cast and well acted. Photography poor. Played to average business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played September 27-28.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN: George O'Brien—It is a great show for those that like their act in the raw.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—Good picture. Well liked by our patrons. Business good. Played October 5-6.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—Fox can get money for the thinnest storied pictures of any producer that I know and this is one of them. It is about the status of a two-reel comedy and I think that home and the radio was very welcome to the small turn-out that came on this quickie.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

United Artists

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Jack Oakie—Here is one that is practically 100% entertainment for everyone. Quite a few people saw it through twice, so you know it's some good picture when the folks do anything like that these days.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Okie—This is a natural for a small town at the end of the week. An outdoor pictures and if you ask the writer and the audience that supported it to extra business, there should be about twelve that would be produced and have a story without the heroics that goes with most of the outdoor pictures under the name of "western." Given direction, cast and story, they will out-gross any sophisticated society drama that has ever run across our screen. I speak, of course, for the small town viewpoint. True, there is a love story running through it, but with restraint, and Gable is where he should be, in he-man stories and not the great lover. If the producers would spend as much money on outdoor pictures with names that would draw that they do on some of those that they expect the top bracket in prices they would probably be surprised at what they would do at the box office. The business done on this picture proves my point.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—This pulled in more people than any three previous U. A. pictures, including Cantor's.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young—A mighty fine production with plenty of action. Clark Gable, Jack Oakie and the dog are great. Loretta Young is miscast. This did well at the box office and pleased nearly 100 per cent. I wish they would give us more pictures like "Call of the Wild." Running time, 91 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Sothern, Merle Oberon—Maurice is history as far as my box office goes. This was a well made picture, with good music, but it didn't click and I hope they forget the foreign stars this year in Hollywood. I know my audience is willing do.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HELL'S ANGELS: Ben Lyon, James Hall, Jean Harlow—This picture is still fine. Did fairly good business for me and it pleased. Little too long. It sure won't do Harlow any good to run this. James Hall was sure good in this. Wonder whatever became of him? Running time, 15 reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomation, Ala. Small town patronage.

LES MISERABLES: Fredric March, Charles Laughton—A wonderful production from a production standpoint, a total flop at the box office. Too many of our patrons just couldn't appreciate the great acting and directing. Running time, 105 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen—About like "G Men." Good if you don't run too many.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce —Played this late, but it was a good picture which drew better than average business. Fine for the midweek or Friday-Saturday change. Played October 2-3. —Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

WEDDING NIGHT, THE: Gary Cooper, Anna Sten —The most of tbe women had a good cry and liked it. A good picture. Medium drawing power. Title against it. Played October 9.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

Universal

BORDER BRIGANDS: Buck Jones—These westerns need plenty of sborts to make a good length show. But our town is great on the shoot-'em-up variety of entertainment. Running time, 56 minutes. Played September 5.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

BORDER BRIGANDS: Buck Jones—Fair story of the Mounted Police. Nothing extra. Did not please as well as "Coyote Trails" with Tom Tyler. Jones is slipping fast here. He used to be popular.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN, THE: Karloff, Colin Clive, Elsa Lanchester—Why does a producer make such stuff? Why does the exhibitor show it? The answer is Box Office. Why do people come to see a nightmare like this? It must be the moronic tendency in most of us. They come with curiosity and go away with a bad taste to worse dreams. Does it pay?—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN, THE: Boris Karloff, Colin Clive, Elsa Lanchester—A shocker that drew well. But will the monster and his bride stay dead? We hope so. On the otber hand The Son Of Frankie sounds pretty good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario. Small town patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—One swell picture. You can't go wrong on this one. Did not draw as it should, which was no fault of the production. Recording exceptionally clear. We consider it 100%. Running time, 93 minutes. Played October 11-12.—Estes & Estes, Brooklyn, Mich. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING YOUTH: Charles Farrell, June Martel —Very timely and satisfactory football picture. Will please almost all classes regardless if they are football fans or not. Running time, 9 reels. Played October 9.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patranoge.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—Very poor picture with no drawing power. Played October 2-3.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Micb. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MOON: Ricardo Cortez, Dorothy Page—No box office appeal and very little entertainment value. Cortez might take it, but too bad for Dorothy Page. It's too hard for good talent to live down a bad start.—M. D. Warner, Liberty Theatre, Lakeview, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones—Fair western. Universal isn't doing as good with Buck Jones as I thought they would. What's wrong? Hope they do better by Jack Holt than they have by Jones. I'm looking forward to "Storm Over the Andes," Universal's first wth Holt. Why not send in your report on this picture, "Storm Over the Andes?" Seems like most of the exhibitors are failing to send in reports. Let's have more. I wish about a third of the entire publication was composed of reports from exhibitors. Take a few minutes off and send in a little criticism and a little advice to the film companies and your fellow showmen.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Very good, convincing, realistic, exciting. A fine feature of its kind. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 27-28.—Estes & Estes, Brooklyn. Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—I saved this for the World Series week and it fitted in nicely. The story is old and so is the laugh, but they both get by nicely.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Very good. Dick sings both classical and popular music equally well. Played October 6-7.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—This is the best Powell picture in some time as they left out the Busby Berkeley stuff and gave it more of a story. The music is very good and the comedy fine. It drew better than any other Warner musical since "Flirtation Walk." Played September 29-October 1.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

DON'T BET ON BLONDES: Warren William, Claire Dodd—A clever little comedy that pleased the Friday-Saturday crowd. Not rough, and yet clever and peppy.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DON'T BET ON BLONDES: Warren William, Claire Dodd—Good light comedy. The lines and situations are very funny and it's very fast moving. Average business and everyone who came liked it. Played October 5.—Robt Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney—Just another rave for the many this picture has received and deserves. Played it on our first anniversary to capacity crowds. Don't pass it up. It's a natural. Played October 4-5.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Glenda Farrell, Edward Everett Horton—Nice little programe picture. —C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies—This was a lavishly produced picture with a good cast, but they seem to have spent too much money on the production and not balf enough heart interest in the story. It fell down and didn't do our little lady any good.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Pat O'Brien, Dick Powell, Mary Astor—Not a bad show, but Dick Powell was badly miscast and did practically no singing. Pat O'Brien was very good. Played September 22-23.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Pat O'Brien, Dick Powell, Mary Astor—Usual Marion Davies, with all the stars put in the background so they won't take the play away from Marion Davies. It's a crime. Picture O. K., though, with a few registering their dissatisfaction.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: Bette Davis, George Brent—This was a dandy "G" man story with more heart interest than most of them and the cast sold you on the realness of the picture. Was good entertainment. —Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: Bette Davis, George Brent—Another story of government agents who bring the "Big Shots" to justice. Average programmer that should please. Ricardo Cortez very good as the "big shot" who defies law and order.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—This is George Brent and Kay Francis at their best and though not a big picture it did a nice business the second night, showing that those who saw it, liked it and sent others along the second night. The real scenes at the new Frisco Golden Gate bridge give it added interest to all of us.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Hugh Herbert—Another "Convention City," only not so good. Fits into any Friday-Saturday program with light stuff expected.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

COYOTE TRAILS: Tom Tyler, Ben Corbett—Good western. Better than average Tyler. If he could put on a better exhibition of fighting he would go over better here. Ben Corzett always good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

ALIBI RACKET: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Excellent short. Running time, 18 minutes.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

BASKETBALL TECHNIQUE: MGM Sports Parade —How to play basketball. Good single with slow motion of trick plays on the court. Interesting.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BURIED LOOT: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—I seldom see a short subject which makes me so enthused that I want to turn cartwheels and ring doorbells, but this midget feature is so outstanding that such apoplectic enthusiasm can be excused. It has a top-notch cast headed by Robert Taylor and a story that is original and logical. Many of our patrons expressed a preference for this type of short instead of the usual routine comedy.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FATE'S FATHEAD: Charley Chase—This is one of Chase's best comedies. It went over big with the audience.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FIGHTIN' FISH: Oddities—Very good sport reel.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FOOTBALL TEAMWORK: M-G-M Sports Parade —Another interesting football single showing Chicago Bears and some of their trick plays in slow motion.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

INFERNAL TRIANGLE: Charles Chase Comedy—This was sold us as a Charley Chase comedy, but he isn't even in it. There's nothing to this one and not a laugh in the whole twenty minutes. Eliminate it if possible. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

INFERNAL TRIANGLE: Charles Chase Comedy (without Charley Chase)—Listed in Motion Picture

Herald as a Charley Chase comedy, but it doesn't have any of the regular Roach stars. Fair comedy.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

PERFECT TRIBUTE, THE: Chic Sale Special—Chic Sale not so impressive as "Abraham Lincoln," but spirit of the piece put it over, and I received many favorable comments on it. Ran it with "Broadway Melody of 1936," and together they made a fine program.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PERFECT TRIBUTE, THE: Chic Sale—Metro Goldwyn Distributing Corp. gave us a private screening by Stanley Fisher, Detroit salesman for MGM. I think it is the finest subject I ever have seen. It certainly will create a sensation when it is released and we will play it as soon the exchange will sell it to us.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SLIGHTLY STATIC: Todd-Kelly—One of this team's best. Patsy Kelly a scream when she dances. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

TWO HEARTS IN WAX TIME; Musical Revue—If your patrons like a little music with color, this is O. K., but if they like their comedy straight, this won't do. Spot it with a comedy drama.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

EASY ACES SERIES: Have never heard a person laugh at any of these.—Herbert H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

POISONED IVORY: Edgar Kennedy Comedy—One of Kennedy's best comedies to date. Our patrons like this temperamental comedian and begin laughing when his name is flashed on the screen.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RAG DOG: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—A fair cartoon with bad color.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP AND GRAMPY: Betty Boop Cartoon—Very good cartoon comedy. The best Betty Boop we have played so far. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD EXTRA GIRL: Paramount Varieties—I have seen many a fast one pulled in my day, but in this case Paramount pulls the fastest or worse (yes, worst). This is simply an elongated trailer-plug for "Crusades." This is the limit.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

I WISHED ON THE MOON: Abe Lyman and Orchestra—Combination cartoon and band reel that was O. K. Entertaining.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

POPULAR SCIENCE: No. 1—Interesting and entertaining short in color of various new projects and inventions.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

HERMITS OF CRABLAND: Struggle to Live Series—Very good of its kind, but did not please. It seems as if the lady patrons don't go for this kind of a picture.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MAJOR BOWES AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 1—Major Bowes introduces a few of his amateurs, who aren't so hot. However, it went over O. K., with the Major's presence on the screen being responsible. Last act the best.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MAJOR BOWES AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: Will do some extra business, but not what RKO will try to make you believe.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. Small town patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: I was never sold on 20 minutes of library stuff before, but this season RKO high pressured us into taking this, and I will say my original judgment was vindicated. This one comprised war preparedness, then Father Coughlin, then closed with some more sordidness that left my patrons cold. Photography and dialogue very poor, and out of four "Time" readers who previously had asked for this, three of them said they did not blame me for not playing it before. One good late news weekly has this beat a country block. Running time, 20 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 6—Interesting. Seemed to please our "Top Hat" crowd. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

United Artists

PECULIAR PENGUINS: Silly Symphony—Good, but not worth the rental I have to pay for them. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THREE LITTLE PIGS: Silly Symphonies—Positively the best short subject on the market. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn. General patronage.

Universal

QUAIL HUNT, THE: Oswald Cartoon—Out of the ordinary. A very good cartoon. Kids "ate it up." Grownups? We'll say so. Running time, one reel.—Estes & Estes, Brooklyn, Mich. Small town patronage.

TELEPHONE BLUES: Mentone No. 11-A—One of the best two-reel musicals we played to date and it has everything. Comedy, music, dancing and singing. Give us more shorts like this. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn. General patronage.

TOWNE HALL FOLLIES: Oswald Cartoon—Good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Vitaphone

LADY IN BLACK, THE: Countess Olga Albani—Poor entertainment. You just know the Countess is in front of the camera. I guess I'll switch to singles.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

BAER-LOUIS FIGHT: A splendidly photographed fight picture which we played with a weak programmer to good business. Pleased the fight fans. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

CALL OF THE SAVAGE: Noah Beery, Jr.—Terrible. Am on the fifth episode and wish it was the last. Beery is mauled all over the place by a lion and doesn't even get a scratch. Too many animals all the time.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

Super-Serial

LOST CITY, THE: William Boyd, Kane Richmond—This serial is not so bad as we first thought. We are now running two episodes each week (both episodes on same date). Now on chapter 7-8.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

UA Takes "Gentlemen"

United Artists has closed a deal for distribution in this country of the Marcel Hellman production, "The Amateur Gentlemen," with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. and Elissa Landi. The film is now in production in England under the direction of Thorton Freeland.

Requested to File Briefs

Kay Brown Joins Selznick

Kay Brown, RKO eastern story editor, has resigned to become eastern production representative for David O. Selznick, producer for United Artists. Miss Brown also will handle stories.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 288.—This question comes from a projectionist in a large theatre in London, England, who says: "Through the courtesy of a friend I have been able to read your highly valuable 'Comments' in Better Theatres, and to study your 'Bluebook School' in Motion Picture Herald. While we have an excellent little projectionist's journal over here, your writings and 'school' are in a class (and a most valuable one) all by themselves. Why not send an article to our Journal occasionally?

"I have had an argument, the question being what is the relation of speed of the projector intermittent movement to quantity of light passed to the screen? The argument also involving the question whether the shutter sent out by manufacturers with their projector always has blades of correct width? I prefer that my name be not used in event you honor my questions by inclusion in the school list."

Answer to Question No. 282

Bluebook School Question No. 282 was: (A) Suppose in an equipment using "A" or "B" eliminators, either one of them fail during a show, what emergency measure could be taken to keep the show running? (B) Why is it important that ground connections be carefully made on all equipments in the projection room, the ground wire being connected to a cold water pipe.

The engineers collaborating in the present series of questions say:

"Usually the 'A' eliminators are rated at 12 volts and about 7 amperes. Thus if one unit fails, two 6-volt automobile batteries connected in series, might be substituted for the 'A' eliminator. If the batteries are rated at 100 ampere-hours and are fully charged, then they would last 14 hours, or more than a sufficient time to see the show through and effect repairs to the defective unit.

"As to the 'B' eliminator, a set of 'B' batteries should be obtained and substituted for the defective unit. It is exceeding good practice to become familiar with such possible emergency measures, and to know just where to make proper connections in the various circuits, to the end that when emergencies arise and a stop is threatened or comes, the trouble may be quickly and effectively overcome."

To Section B, the engineers reply:

"The iron and steel structures and all shielding in the various units must be solidly grounded to prevent possibility of hum being picked up in the low level sound circuit. Ground connections should be inspected frequently, including conduit and projector grounding, to make sure it is making good electrical connection with the ground. Corrosion will sometimes create a high resistance contact and thus largely destroy the ground."

Such a list tells us the subject is well understood. I shall print no projectionist's answer, as aside from differences in phraseology they are essentially the same.

I thoroughly agree that it is not only desirable, but essential to good work that projectionists learn how to correct these and other possible faults that arise from time to time and cut off sound. It is not at all a difficult thing to do. Just go over your equipment carefully, step by step, and decide what things may possibly happen to it. Then if you cannot yourself decide just what should be done, or where such things as the batteries suggested in the foregoing answers should be connected, a letter either to myself or to the manufacturer of the equipment will bring the desired information.

Some of the answers to this question directed where the connection should be made, but I do not regard that as safe for the reason that the information doubtless was based upon the equipment being used, whereas equipments vary and the variations might make the directions based upon one equipment, wrong for another.

I am very certain a study of the text on sound in the new Bluebook will enable those Bluebook School "students" who seldom have been able to find their names in the list of those who answer correctly, to make right answers and thus find themselves among the elect.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

WIRED FROM THE FIELD

To speed reports from key city first run theatremen on the high spots of their current exploitations, your Round Table in this issue presents a "wired from the field" service to be operated as follows:

Every other week or oftener as the case may be, managers of first runs in different cities selected by this department will be invited to wire in brief the featured ideas of their campaigns for quick publication in these pages.

Thus various top stunts put over on current attractions will be reported in the following issue of the Round Table making this information immediately available after openings for subsequent run showmen most interested in how the first runs put it over.

SELLING THE SHORT

"The page on short selling is sensational. We have had responses on this from various parts of the country." Thus writes Manager Paul Short of Dallas regarding the page of Majestic Theatre ads run in the Round Table, issue of Sept. 28. The above reaction is not unexpected for the Interstate Circuit of which the Majestic is a part devotes much effort and ingenuity to the proper and successful merchandising of the lesser screen units. For this purpose a special department functions to build programs and short subject bookings whereby these shorts are screened and placed to surround features according to type, length, etc.

How much box office value there is contained in a short subject depends upon how it is sold as much as the high quality of entertainment it presents.

A SPRIG OF LAUREL

Not exactly to be labelled a sinecure is the job of putting out regularly a theatre circuit publication that is informative, newsy and of continued interest to the various groups it seeks to serve. Thus for its refreshing brightness and week-to-week thoroughness, we place a sprig of laurel upon the moist brow of Jack Colbert, editor of the Skouras Forward, a sprightly journal that sets forth columns of box office information in addition to cheerful chatter regarding the social activities of the Skouras boys and gals in the New York, New Jersey and Long Island houses.

There is much to commend in Mr. Colbert's paper, not the least of which is that it is printed and illustrated amply upon good smooth stock. And incidentally it also does a much more efficient job of morale building than the hastily mimeographed circuit bulletin, a point to be pondered upon in sectors where pondering is indicated.

ON MEETING THE FOLKS

No inconsiderable theatre buildup was that smart idea of Manager Phil de Petro who when transferred to the M & P Jamaica, in Francis McManus' district, got out a folder to introduce himself to the folks in that sector. The advertising included photo and biog data of the manager, sincere letter of greeting, plus names and positions of every member of the personnel at the Jamaica Plains, Massachusetts, theatre.

Ben Katz, Warner Theatres Milwaukee Zone publicist, recently suggested a get-acquainted week to give the manager and staff an opportunity to get better acquainted with patrons.

The business of knowing and greeting the ticket-buyers is psychologically sound in winning new theatre friends. Frequently such friendships have done much in changing losses into profits.

HANDCUFFS FOR KIDS

Sponsored by a dental manufacturing company Bill Crouch tells us is the "I-Can-Take-It-Club" which dentists are encouraged to organize locally for the purpose of increasing business by developing the character of children. The character is developed in part by making the child patient a member of the club which entitles him to credits, ten of which win a prize.

For instance, a cleaning counts two credits as does a filling and among the prizes suggested are handcuffs and policemen's clubs.

For dentists treating children, cops' clubs and handcuffs should come in very handy—but not as prizes.

THE ONLY THOUGHT OF THIS CONTEST IS TO MATCH THE CASTS AND ATTRACTIONS CORRECTLY.

First take a sheet of paper the size as is taken up by the contest layout, then draw 10 boxes as shown below, leaving out the casts and all numbers shown inside of each box or oblong.

Let's start with "Break of Hearts" in box one, where we will give you an idea of how it's worked. Number two in box one tells us a member of the cast in "Break of Hearts" can be found in box two and since it is the first of the three numbers shown, it also tells us it is the first name in box two or Katherine Hepburn; you then place her name under "Break of Hearts" on your sheet. Let's take another, the second number in box one is number six. Number six is the second number of the three shown, so it's the second name in box six and so on.

After you have completed all ten attractions or boxes send your sheet to the contest editor of the Sun-Standard by Thursday night, Aug. 15. Accuracy and neatness will be rated highly.

Another highlight was feature story comparing opening program of theatre 20 years ago with "Broadway Gondolier," current attraction. On various nights during the week refreshments were served in lobby, topped off with promoted birthday cake and ice cream. Photostatic enlargements of wires from Blondell and Powell were displayed in Western Union windows and lobby. For street bally, Bill decked up a 20 year old car with chauffeur and couple dressed in costumes of that period with banners reading "it's worth waiting 20 years for" etc., etc.

To first 1000 women attending matinee, Powell roses were presented and painting of Marguerite Clark was exhibited in lobby with card reading "Do you remember this star. This picture was used on opening of theatre 20 years ago." Also commanding interest was 10 year old locally produced film shown with trailer calling attention to difference in pictures then and now.

"Barbary" Ball Tops New York Campaign

Plenty of ace publicity for days ahead was obtained in the promotion of a "Barbary Coast" Ball effected by the United Artists home office exploitation crew and Manager Jack Wright, of the Rivoli, for the buildup of the New York engagement.

The event was put on in a tieup with the New York American Christmas and Relief Fund, the proceeds going to that organization. Prominent society and stage names acted upon the various committees, the party rolling up a fat gross in admissions and of course publicity for the picture, mentioned in all the stories. Ticket booths were placed in Times Square and the leading ticket agencies also plugged the costume ball.

Co-op ads were arranged with Fifth Avenue department stores and "Barbary Coast" coiffures also featured, illustrated with cuts of Miriam Hopkins, and carrying theatre credits. On opening day, bannered plane circled over metropolitan football stadiums covering the six leading games of the day.

High School Papers Stress "Dream" Date

Despite the strict rule forbidding publication of publicity stories, Earl Hudson, for the United Detroit Theatres, in Detroit, as part of his strong advance campaign on Warners' "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Wilson Theatre, received an exception from the Board of Education enabling him to plant stories in 28 local high school papers as far as three weeks ahead of the opening.

Strong schedule was arranged for Dr. Richard Burton, literary adviser to Warners on the "Dream," who spoke before important cultural groups, in addition to student bodies and faculties of leading schools and universities. Dr. Burton also addressed invited audiences at the Public Library and English Speaking Union. As a further tiein, Hudson also promoted a special exhibit of rare Shakespeare volumes in the library main branch and was able to plant insert card announcing the opening.

With cooperation of bus lines in the territory, transportation agents in towns and suburbs nearby planted announcement cards in schools, churches, women's clubs, etc., calling attention to special charter parties of theatre groups to Detroit to see the film.

Hotel angles were utilized by placing of announcement cards in guest key boxes of 1200 educators of the Michigan Education Association attending a convention in Detroit. Earl also arranged for maitres d'hotel of leading hostelries to forward to charge account guests of hotels and leading club members invitations suggesting early reservations for special dinners prior to the premiere.

Other school stuff included announcements on bulletin boards in high schools and universities plus plugs on boards and lending desks at all branch libraries. All school neighborhoods and better class residential districts were extensively billed with 24-sheet stands and other paper.

Navy Technicians Aid Strand "Shipmates" Front

The New York Strand front for "Shipmates Forever" was planned by Manager Zeb Epstin with the aid of several navy men who offered suggestions as to details, most imposing unit being forward part of a United States battleship in miniature. The yard-arm of the mast had blinker signal lights built in each end. The crow's nest also contained blinker lights and the two forward fighting turrets of the battleship were reproduced in every detail even to the range sights on the 16-inch guns. Strung from the mast to the deck were strings of miniature silk signals, flags and pennants and built up under the prow of the ship were a series of waves cutout of board painted green and white giving the ship the impression of cutting through the water. High up on the front of the mast was a regulation range meter with a movable hand, which when touching one of the numbers, automatically rang a bell and in the rear of the ship were cutout clouds.

On either end of the arch were life rings with hand colored enlargements of Keeler and Powell built into the cutout center which also had an electric flasher. Title was formed of white silk rope and stretched across bottom of front arch against a blue metallic background. Keeler and Powell were built up in letters 30 inches high with a blue and silver flitter facing.

Opening night was called Navy Night with invitations to Rear Admiral Sterling and his entire staff. To lend further color, detachment of local uniformed naval reserves preceded by band and color guard paraded to the theatre.

Irv Windisch, metropolitan Warner publicist, planted eight-column strip of Ruby Keeler doing the "Shipmate's Hop" in the Journal and tied in dance halls by having them award cups to girls for best dancers.

Lobby Telephone Gag Used By Deering for "Dark Angel"

One of the outstanding stunts of Francis Deering's "Dark Angel" campaign at Loew's State in Houston, Texas, was the installation of special telephones in the lobby through tieup with telephone company, who supplied operators. Girls were kept busy during day calling homes advising of premiere. On each operator's desk was sign reading "telling the world about," etc., etc.

At special midnight screening opinion cards were distributed and later placed on panel for display in lobby. First 500 persons entering theatre received special handkerchiefs with following imprint: "You'll need this during certain scenes." Through loudspeaker at dog track, local fights and wrestling matches, picture received daily plugs.

More Ideas for Fall and Winter

Supplementing the pages of ideas contributed by the members in the Oct. 12 issue for stimulating the boxoffice in the coming months are these additional suggestions from the field. Worked by the theatremen and found successful, they are hereby set down.

Midget Telegrams

Warners have made a national tieup with Postal on a midget telegram stunt for the juvenile Sybil Jason in "Little Big Shot." The baby wires are planted in every message delivered and suggests a similar hookin locally on other starlets.

More Hallowe'en

As in previous years, J. G. Newkirk, Loew's Granada, Cleveland, plans to have a bar in his lobby with attendant dispensing cider and doughnuts. In another corner will be a witch's hut with fortune teller doing her stuff, an artist will make rapid sketches of patrons and on the stage Newkirk plans to hold his annual costume contest with cash prizes to winners. Entire lobby to be decorated with ghosts, goblins, tricky lights, etc., and John reports both the kids and adults get a kick out of the party.

Lobby Contest

To stimulate his Fall business, Julius Lamm, Palace, Lorain, Ohio, put on a lobby contest offering tickets to patrons correctly naming stars whose photos appeared on easel (see photo) and pictures in which they had appeared during 1935. A partial list of coming attractions was also included in the display.

Special Nights

With cooperation of merchants, H. L. Laurence, Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn., stores distributed special coupons with each purchase, which when presented at boxoffice with ten cents entitled bearer to regular admission. Merchants paid for difference in price. Another night, which Laurence terms "pal night," entitles patron to bring a friend along on one admission ticket. Special heralds plugging these nights are widely distributed.

Booster Night

Along the same lines, Jack Campbell at the Capitol Theatre in Brampton, Ontario, is putting on what he calls a "Merchants Booster Club Night." Stores contribute merchandise prizes in exchange for credit line in program, every person entering theatre receives a number, duplicates of which are placed in hat and drawn from stage at end of show. Three prizes are donated weekly and stunt is to run for ten consecutive weeks.

Ushers' Meetings

To encourage his staff in the merchandising of pictures, Walter Davis, Capitol Theatre, Regina, Sask., holds weekly usher meetings. A picture is assigned to each man, press book perused and each in turn presents his ideas on how the picture should be handled. Walter says the object of the meetings is to bring out ability and find the "go-getters" and not just the "seat finders."

Copy on Passes

A little innovation that Walter Davis is using at Capitol in Regina, Sask., is the printing of a special message containing institutional copy on the backs of the home office passes issued at the theatre.

Fashion Revue

Harry F. Bodie, Sixth Street Theatre, Coshocton, Ohio, enlisted the aid of society debs to act as models in a two day fashion revue held at his house. Each girl represented individual merchant, her picture appearing in store newspaper ad. Girls were introduced under merchant's trade name during revue and at the end of show, a Miss Fashion Queen was selected by votes. Twenty merchants contributed to finance the event.

Another Merchants' Night

With local merchants holding their annual fall sales, Maurice Corkery, Central Square Theatre, Cambridge, Mass., designated a certain night at which time drawing was held for prizes donated by the stores. All merchants carried window mention of special night, shopping guides were distributed in homes and lobby contained display of prizes. Only expense to theatre was $5 ad in Shoppers guide.

Sybil Jason's Party

To introduce the new star, Harry F. Bodie, Sixth Street Theatre, Coshocton, Ohio, held a special Saturday afternoon party. Extra cartoons were shown and promoted ice cream bars purported to have been a present from Sybil to the boys and girls were distributed. Show was plugged in ads and program.

Store Opening Tiein

Cooperating with A & P officials on the opening of one of their new stores, William Barron, Kenyon Theatre, Pittsburgh, promoted cost of imprinting photos of Gable with theatre name and playdates for distribution in store. Lobby display in theatre and trailer announced coffee and sandwich party in lobby. Attractive card in store also plugged stunt, which was entirely costless so far as Barron was concerned.

Doll Carriage Parade

Arranging with newspaper for their cooperation, Maurice Corkery, Central Square Theatre, Cambridge, just recently completed a successful doll and carriage parade. Department stores donated dolls as prizes and for judges, Maurice secured the President of the Ladies Auxiliary of the American Legion, Editor John English of the Boston American and other prominents. Elimination contest was held in morning and six winners picked for the final show; finalists were chosen by applause of audience.

Anniversary Celebration

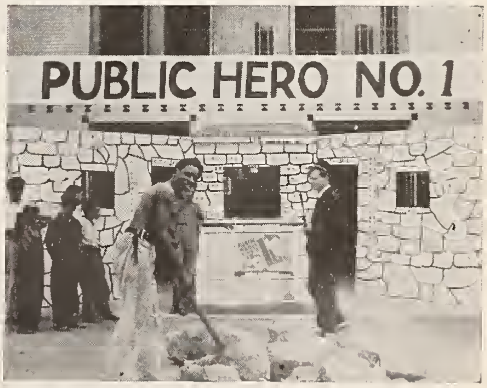
Local newspaper featured a special Loew's Granada section for J. G. Newkirk in Cleveland to celebrate the theatre's eighth anniversary. Merchants' congratulatory ads, history of theatre, stories on personnel, etc., etc., were included in this special edition. High school band paraded downtown to theatre and rendered concert in lobby. Wires from city officials were displayed in lobby and baker donated large birthday cake which was set up in lobby and surrounded by flowers, also donated.

Kid Newspaper

Another Round Tabler who is putting out a successful newspaper for children exclusively is Al Sindlinger, Appleton Theatre, Appleton, Wis. Sheet contains weekly column signed by "Uncle Al"; list of kids whose birthdays were celebrated during week and offer of guest tickets; various contests and merchants' ads for children's toggery is included. Each issue contains applications for kids to fill in to receive free copy and all children are invited to contribute to the paper.

New Season Plug

To inaugurate new season policy, Billings Booth, Winter Garden, Jamestown, together with district manager Ralph Crabill and Walter MacDowell of the Palace cooperated. Float was constructed by art department to tour streets, special preliminary ads were used weeks ahead and trailers all stressed the new season angle. Through tieup with local dairy, bottle hangers carrying message from stars on benefits of milk were distributed house to house. Special heralds using such copy slants as "Revolution starts. War grips city—gloom and despair routed by New Season," etc., etc., were also effective.



ROCK PILE. J. E. Stribling, Erie Theatre, Hugo, Okla., simulated a prison front for his "Hero" date with rock-breaking convict bally. Box office represented cell.

I Wrote This Ad at Two o'Clock in the Morning!

Too late! Should have been asleep for hours! Exhausted, befuddled; aching all over but I had to have an ad for this paper. . and that's where the trouble started!

I've a show opening Friday that is really a rarity. Two feature pictures, each one a "first" feature in larger cities, each one truly great in its own right, and both playing on the same bill at the Victory! "Every Night At Eight" and "Alice Adams."

I hate superlatives, and I guess you do too, and pictorial advertisements with the stars' names in big type and the few lines about each picture in smaller type couldn't begin to do justice to this show. I know! I've made up a dozen different ones tonight, and they all went into the wastebasket! That's why I'm so late. . so here goes, I'll just tell you in my own simple way about this show.

"Every Night At Eight" is a musical romance, more fun than all the amatuer hours put together, with a cast made to order for the picture. . . . George Raft as the dapper band leader, Alice Faye, Patsy Kelly, clowning as only a Kelly can, and Frances Langford, the singing sweetheart of the Columbia Network portraying a "sister" act, and the Three Radio Rogues whom you've heard many times. And hit tunes!. . ..wait 'til you hear "I'm In The Mood For Love," "I Feel A Song Coming On" and the others by Dorothy Fields and Jimmie McHugh! It's one of the busiest pictures ever made! Something doing every minute!

. And "Alice Adams" . . with Katharine Hepburn giving a magnificent performance. . . Fred MacMurray supporting her, and Fred Stone as the father proving himself a grand actor as well as comedian. All of the charm and romance, all of the heartache and emotion has been faithfully transcribed from this well read Booth Tarkington novel to the talking screen! You know the story to be one of "down to earth" simple people, and I'll venture that there won't be a dry eye in the house, and there will be a lump in every throat . . but you'll love it!

I seldom rave about a show, less often endorse one personally, but here is one of which I would like to shout from the housetops "This IS a show.!"

This job is done. . . I'll see you Friday! G-o-o-d-n-i-g-h-t!

Dallas Crime Show Draws Record Crowd

Over 45,000 people during the first week were estimated to have attended the crime exhibit on "Special Agent" in an untenanted store in the lobby put on by the publicity and advertising staff of the Majestic, Dallas, Texas, a week ahead and during run of the date.

Inclined shelves were placed around the walls, displaying weapons, police equipment and other paraphernalia used by criminals in crime and by law enforcement officers in their fight against crime. The local police department, the present sheriff, three former sheriffs and the local Department of Justice furnished all property used in the exhibit. Each pistol, dagger and tool was tagged with complete history of the criminal who used it and the crime committed. Everything from a sub-machine gun to an ice pick, used for murder, was displayed, including pair of knotted silk stockings used by a burglar to strangle prominent society matron. Also a hat with the top completely shot away which was worn by a deputy sheriff as he attempted to capture one of the Southwest's most notorious bad men. Apparatus and methods used in the smuggling of dope created much interest and an outfit of obsolete equipment used for prohibition "moonshine" making caused quite a bit of comment.

Uses Scene Enlargements

Above the inclined shelf, as shown in accompanying photo, life size enlargement of scenes from the picture were used with copy explaining the action of each. The same idea was used below the inclined display. A striking color scheme of white, blue and blood red added punch and power to the display. Four enlargements of "Crime" clippings from the magazine Time were used and mounted on a large panel. Display of Dallas police radio patrol system was placed in large show window.

The other window was occupied by a man in police uniform seated at a desk making announcements regarding the free display and selling the coming attraction over a loudspeaker system to the passing pedestrians. A short wave radio set on the desk also broadcast police calls over the loudspeaker. Visitors were asked to sign a serially numbered register for a special drawing.

A. D. Deason, Victor Maxwell, Lynn Harris and Ulysses Colman worked with Manager Paul Short to put over the campaign.

THE Movie REPORTER

IT is rather amusing sometimes to notice how long it takes for certain folks to add up the score and get the correct answer.

Take us theater managers for instance — we've been developing, all unconsciously, a "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" attitude . . . and for many years. So many in fact, that we could hardly realize it ourselves.

IN the sixteen years I have lived in Oklahoma City I have picked up a host of acquaintances and quite a few very good friends . . . some of them dating way back to school days at Central High . . . and during all those years it has been my boast that I never gave any of them a bum steer on any show.

No matter who asked me . . . whether Harry Lewinsohn, Tom Johnson, Stanley Draper, Scott Downey, Day Fezler, Jack Owens or Mike Monroney . . . I have always told them frankly what I thought of a certain picture, whether good or bad and my reasons for so thinking.

BUT the minute I sat down to prepare announcements for the public prints concerning new shows I became another person entirely.... I could think only in superlatives.

* * *

WELL, we're turning over a new leaf. Under the heading of "THE MOVIE REPORTER" we shall tell you frankly and honestly what we have to offer you. The superlatives are out . . . instead, we'll give you our frank appraisal of the entertainment we present to Oklahoma City, just as tho' you asked us on the street or in the locker room.

* * *

IF you catch "The Movie Reporter" in any mis-statement or exaggeration you can jump on George Henger, Bert Stern or myself . . . 'cause we'll be the guys who did it. And we will be pleased to have any suggestions or criticisms which can help us carry this thought to a higher plane of service.

Pat McGee
General Manager
Standard Theaters.

Currently, this week's discussion on the "reporter" type of advertising is devoted to opinions by E. E. Bair, Ohio, and Paul Short, of Texas, whose letters we quote from below. To the left is a one-column "reporter" ad from the Standard Theatre folks of Oklahoma City, in which Pat McGee also speaks on superlatives.

DEAR MIKE:

I wish I could sit down and talk it all over with you personally, because I am much impressed by your editorial in the September 14 issue. I feel that the whole idea is basically sound since we certainly must do something toward eliminating the superlatives that have long since ceased to mean anything to either patrons or to us. The reasoning that ads must keep pace with the product is good logic but I feel that a sharp change like "The Screen Reporter" idea must be handled with kid gloves by showmen who are equipped to do it.

Naturally the showmen who can judge a picture well enough to know will know how to handle the super stuff in campaigns without neglecting any one picture. I am wondering if the reporter idea can take care of the pictures that need the pressure campaigns. Also I am wondering if the column idea would not soon and very quickly become routine and dull if all the fine points of each situation were not first considered.

Another thing that puzzles me is how the idea would work out for the towns where there is a monopoly. There is a constant fight in the situations to keep up a competitive spirit as you know where "it's all in the family" and in towns where there is opposition, somebody might take an awful beating while the public is getting educated to the reporter idea. It seems to me to be a perfect situation for the opposition boys to really go to town with big stuff which the public will still go for no matter how well written the column would be.

I am earnestly in favor of a change, but I am not convinced that the reporter is the answer and I believe as you do that it rests with manpower.—PAUL SHORT, Managing Director, Majestic Theatre, Dallas.

DEAR MIKE:

Years before Mr. N. Schenck stated in the trade press—"that there is nothing in this business that good pictures cannot overcome"—this writer has been, and still is using the slogan at the top of this letterhead—"It's the Pictures."

Granted we have the picture to advertise. The question then arises—what kind of picutre is it, mass or class? Superlatives are necessary if one is to accept the English language in its entirety. They are part and parcel of the English language intended for a purpose, and that purpose is for description—a word picture.

Superlatives applied in the proper manner are most assuredly necessary in most instances to well prepared ad copy. Omission of the superlative on occasion of some attractions that seem outstanding—enhances the class value of the advertising. This mere omission in itself can be termed an indirect superlative. Very truly yours, E. E. BAIR, State and Ohio, Uhrichsville, O.

NEWS NOTES FROM CHICAGO SECTOR

CHICAGO'S historic Essanay studio at 1333 Argyle Street, early day production scene of moving pictures featuring Gloria Swanson, Wallace Beery, Broncho Billy Anderson, Bryant Washburn, Charlie Chaplin and many others, will be opened about December 1st as the largest sound-film studio in the midwest.

The building, remodeled and equipped with latest sound apparatus, will be the mid-western headquarters of Wilding Picture Productions, Inc., of Detroit, and will be devoted to the staging and producing of business sound films. It has studios in Hollywood and Detroit and Long Island. Temporary Chicago offices will be at 624 South Michigan avenue.

The Wilding Company was founded in 1915 by Norman E. Wilding, who still heads it. It pioneered business talking pictures in 1929 and has produced commercial sound films, ranging up to eleven-reel subjects, for clients in widely differentiated fields, including Ford, Chrysler, Packard, Hudson, DeSoto, Oldsmobile, Studebaker, Dodge, Plymouth, Standard Oil of Indiana, Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, the Kelvinator Corporation and the Norge Corporation. Production work of the same nature will be conducted in the new Chicago studios, which will be operated to serve the Middle West.

The latest Wilding activity consisted of sending technicians and equipment to London to make sound reels of Jack Hylton's orchestra at the Mayfair Club there and on the Normandie, preliminary to a series of broadcasts for Standard Oil of Indiana.

Beverly Bayne Featured

Heading the Wilding sales and service staff in Chicago is L. Mercer Francisco, who has been producing business pictures for seven years. In charge of sales is John R. Kneebone, for a number of years a member of the Chicago advertising staff of Curtis Publishing Company.

"The first commercial motion picture of which there is any record was made at the Essanay building, for International Harvester Company. Beverly Bayne was the principal actress and she appears in Wilding Productions today."

The studio director for Chicago will be selected soon. Direction at Detroit is in charge of Cullen Landis, motion picture star of the old silent film days.

COMMUNITY-AD TRAILERS

To the Editor of the Herald:

"Trailer" racketeers are busy fleecing local merchants and business houses, according to reports from theatre men all over the country.

They work a locality by selling community-ad trailers, collecting in advance and skipping with the money.

We have received over 50 letters about a salesman racketeering under the name of Filmack. Filmack has no salesman on the road.

SMASH HIT

JUDGE Super X Negative solely on the basis of its reception by users. Placed on the market only a few months ago, it is already being employed in the majority of feature productions, as well as for various purposes of a special nature. Either of its striking advantages... greater speed, generally improved photographic quality... would have justified this swift, widespread adoption. Verdict of the industry: a smash hit. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)
